Report of the Director for 2003-04

The academic year 2003-04 was my first as Director. It was a successful year for the School. That is a tribute to the sound foundations I inherited from my predecessor Tony Giddens, whose seven year stewardship of the school was outstandingly successful. I am very grateful to him, as is the rest of the School community.

As this report shows, student demand for places at the school remains strong, our research performance was good, our financial results were healthy, and further progress was made towards the needed enhancement of quality of the teaching and learning environment.

During the year, debate at the School's Council and in other committees and fora was inevitably dominated by the Higher Education Act and particularly the issue of variable fees. Many in the student body were concerned about the potential impact of higher fees on the willingness of students from poorer families to attend university, even with the additional financial support that would be available to some of them. Others in the School community saw that variable fees offered the prospect of at last reversing the relentless decline in funding per student which has threatened the quality of university education in the UK, and the international competitiveness of our leading universities.

In the event, the Higher Education Act was finally passed in July, leaving the school to decide how to respond – whether and how much to increase fees in 2006, and how best to use the additional income generated. After some debate, a broad consensus emerged during the Summer Term. Our intention will, at the outset, be to charge £3,000 for all our undergraduate courses, and to use a third of the additional income generated on student support. As I write, details of that support package have yet to be finalised, and they may also be influenced by the terms of the access agreement we will be required to reach with the new office of fair access. But, subject to those further refinements we believe we have a sound basis on which to go forward.

There was also significant progress during the year in other areas. In the community as lively and diverse as the LSE's, it is always difficult and somewhat invidious to highlight particular developments. The following catalogue is, therefore, inevitably somewhat selective and impressionistic. I can only apologise in advance to those whose work is not explicitly recognised here: I assure them that it is no less gratefully appreciated by the Director and the Council.

Management Structure

A Council working group on Management Structure reported in June 2003, with a number of recommendations designed to streamline management processes within the School and clarify responsibilities, following the retirement from the School of the previous Director, and the long serving Secretary of the School, Christine Challis. Those recommendations were debated with the Academic Board and a number of changes were made to them, following my arrival, in response to concerns expressed by some members of the academic community.

At the end of 2003 a new structure was implemented, with regular informal meetings of the Directorate management team providing the opportunity for more coherent follow up of decisions made in the Council and other School committees. The Directorate Management Team consists of the three academic Deputy Directors, the Secretary and Director of Administration, the Director of Finance and Facilities and the Director of Business and Enterprise. Other senior officers of the School attend from time to time.

At the same time, links between the management and the academic community have been strengthened by involving the departmental Conveners in the discussion of strategic issues. There are also more regular briefings for the Vice Chairman of the Appointments Committee and the Vice Chairman of the Academic Board. It will be important, as these new arrangements bed down, to pay particular attention to communication of decisions within the School, but I am encouraged by the progress made in management over the last 12 months.

The Campus

One of the LSE's greatest assets is its location in the centre of London. That location also presents the School its biggest challenge. Property in WC2 is expensive, and maintaining a congenial campus environment at the centre of one of the world's largest and international cities is not straightforward. But over the last 12 months we have made a number of important steps forward, and I think we can now see our way towards a much more exciting and higher quality campus in the future, and one which meets the rising aspirations of our student body.

Considerable enhancements have been made to the street environment. Finally, the paving of Houghton Street has been completed, though some amenity improvements including trees and other street furniture and some outside sculptures remain to be completed. The Student Union facilities have been renovated. Some may be nostalgic for the old Three Tuns but the new facilities seem to be responding well to the changing nature of student demand for food and drink.

During the year we undertook an extensive consultation on the future of the School's estate. We canvassed a wide range of options, from a wholesale move away to another site, through to modest and incremental improvements to our existing premises. The consultation revealed little or no support for a move, so that option is now off the agenda. It also demonstrated that there was considerable concern about the implications of a major programme of upgrading our existing estate, if there were no available options for moving departments away from the centre of the campus during the years of disruption. We were therefore very fortunate that the opportunity arose at the end of the year to acquire a new building on the edge of our existing site which will allow the School to expand, in the medium term, and will make the task of renovating the centre of the existing campus much more manageable. We completed the acquisition of 24 Kingsway, which will be an important new academic building for the School, in October 2004. It will, for the first time, give the School a frontage on to Lincoln's Inns Fields, which is an exciting opportunity for improving the look and feel of the campus as a whole. We are now engaged in detailed planning of how that new building will be used and also how we can mobilise the support of our alumni community to ensure that we have the financial resources to develop it in an imaginative way. The redevelopment of the library showed what can be done with good design and some external support. Our aim is to repeat the success of that project.

The Campaign for LSE

As the financial report later shows we have made further progress with the campaign. We are particularly grateful for a gift from two alumni, Mario and Davina Francescotti, which has allowed us to redevelop the Columbia Bar as a new student catering outlet. And we have begun to generate sizeable sums to support the School in Asia. During the year we attracted a number of large donations for student support for applicants from China. Such support is important if we are to continue to attract high quality students from the region in the face of very tough competition from US universities that can deploy much larger financial resources in support of their recruitment.

As the year ended, we were beginning an important new initiative in the Campaign, oriented around support for the new building. We have reorganised our Campaign Committee, with the intention of generating greater involvement by alumni in the next phase of the work. We believe we can succeed in meeting the campaign target of £100 million but only if we can effectively mobilise the whole School community around that objective.

Partnerships

A particular feature of the development of the School's educational offerings over the last couple of years has been the growth of partnership programmes with selected universities overseas. Those existing partnerships developed well during this year, and we were able to launch promising new initiatives.

The TRIUM Executive MBA programme, offered in collaboration with New York University's Stern Business School and the HEC in Paris, goes from strength to strength, with the numbers increasing in each cohort, even though the MBA market overall is, at best, marking time. We plan to develop further programmes in cooperation with our two partners. The three institutions involved provide complementary skills and strengths.

Our collaboration with Columbia in the US is also developing well. The next venture will be a Masters in Public Administration. We plan to involve the French School of Political Science (Sciences Po) in that venture. During the year we also launched a joint International Relations degree with Sciences Po. That programme is proving attractive, particularly to students interested in a career in European Institutions.

We also made important progress during the year with the School's Asia strategy. Our aim is to raise the School's profile in the region, and to develop partnerships with excellent universities in both research and teaching. We ran a first LSE forum in Bangkok in March, building on a model which had proved successful in New York and Washington earlier. Both I and Henrietta Moore, the Deputy Director with responsibility for external affairs, visited India in March where we ran a number of well attended conferences and seminars. We launched an LSE Summer School at Peking University in August, which attracted 60 students in its first year, and will be run again in 2005. And we have identified a number of research collaborations with Universities in Beijing and Shanghai, in areas as diverse as housing policy, population studies and urban development. I will report further on progress in our Asian strategy in future years.

The Academic Portfolio

It is rightly important for any university, and particularly for one like the LSE which competes in an international market place, to keep its academic portfolio up to date. Over the last year we have taken a number of initiatives designed to do that. The new Cold Wars Studies Centre (CWSC) was brought into being during the year. It will provide advanced study and research of the Cold War, its historical origins and contemporary repercussions. It is a joint venture between the Departments of International History and International Relations.

Another area to which we devoted considerable attention in 2003-04 is Management Education. The LSE has had an Interdisciplinary Institute of Management in the School for some years, but we are not yet fully exploiting the opportunities open to us to expand in the broad field of management education. The LSE is not a business school, and we do not plan to become one, or to offer a traditional MBA. That market is highly congested already, and demand is weakening. But we identify significant opportunities for us, building on our ability to offer management education of a rigorous analytical kind, and set within a broad social sciences institution.

We have therefore established a new steering group, Management at LSE, designed to drive forward our strategy in this area. That involves strengthening our research efforts and identifying new programmes, in some cases joint programmes between different departments of the School, to strengthen our course offering.

I will report further on the progress of that initiative, which began in earnest in September 2003, next year.

Widening Participation

During the year we also reviewed the School's approach to widening participation, in other words to the recruitment of students from underrepresented and non traditional backgrounds to the School and the raising of students from those backgrounds.

During the year over 550 students took part in outreach activities run by the School. We promoted Saturday Schools, Winter Schools, Spring Schools, Student Shadowing in School and College visits; some of these programmes in partnership with outside funders such as the Sutton Trust. An evaluation of these programmes suggests that they are effective in encouraging those who participate to apply to university. The proportion of those applying to, and entering universities from those who take part in our programmes is higher than in comparable control groups who do not. Given the nature of the students we target for these programmes, it is perhaps inevitable that many of them in practice apply to universities other than the LSE. We do not regard that as a disadvantage, as long as we are being successful in raising aspirations and student confidence in their abilities.

The Council's view is that these initiatives should be pursued and, if possible, expanded. We hope that the additional income from top up fees will allow us to expand these programmes within the context of our access agreement with OFFA.

Financial Situation

Income and Expenditure

The income of the School and its subsidiaries increased 6% to £129m (2002-03 £122m) in the financial year ending 31 July 2004. Major contributors to this growth were 14% increases in endowment, investment and other income and a 9% increase in HEFCE grants to £24m (2002-03 £22m).

The School achieved a surplus of £8.8m, equivalent to 6.8% of gross income. The previous year had seen an exceptional surplus of £11.2m, reflecting significant recruitment in excess of target as a result of an unexpectedly high ratio of acceptances to offers. While well managed and resourced this placed a significant strain on academic departments and it was therefore important that 2003-04 recruitment was closer to target. In the event this objective was met and 2003-04 students numbers were marginally over target, so fee income increased by 2.5%.

Once again the School benefited from its success in the 2001 RAE exercise with a 12% increase in the research block grant fund which helped offset the 1% reduction in teaching grant income. The Finance and General Purposes Committee has adopted a target surplus range of 3% to 4% of income, recognising that additional surplus is required to fund loan repayments and capital investments and reflecting HEFCE guidelines. These investments will enable the School to continue to upgrade the estate and to ensure that our IT and Library facilities for staff and students remain amongst the best available. Finance and General Purposes Committee are working to ensure that the anticipated levels of surplus in 2004-05 and beyond fall within this target range.

Cash Flow and Capital Expenditure

Cash flow from operating activities was strong at £15.3m; the healthy inflow boosted by positive movements in working capital. During the year the School renegotiated its financing arrangements and now has a flexible £75m facility with Barclays that combines an advantageous margin with the opportunity to repay and redraw funds. This will allow us to benefit from the opportunities that our positive cash flow throughout much of the year offers.

During the year the School acquired the freehold of the George IV public house for £1.6m. As this property adjoins other School buildings, its acquisition will allow greater flexibility in estates planning over the coming years. In the meantime it will continue to operate as a licensed premises for the benefit of the School and the local community.

The School was also able to reacquire the lease on the ground floors of Columbia House and has now transformed this into a new street-level catering outlet, the LSE Garrick Restaurant, which offers a wide range of food for staff and students. Over the next three years the School will refurbish the new property at 24 Kingsway to provide 11,000sqm of high quality teaching space and academic department accommodation.

Funding Council Grants

Although the LSE has a lower dependency on HEFCE grant for income than most other institutions, it remains the second largest component of income after fees and a vital contributor to the operation and development of the School. In addition to the core-teaching grant of £7.6m (2002-03 £7.6m) and research grant of £13.2m (2002-03 £11.9m), the School received £2.0m in specific grants from HEFCE and £0.4m from the Joint Information and Systems Committee to fund IT infrastructure.

Research Income

Research income has increased marginally from £14.1m in 2002-03 to £14.2m, and contribution to research overheads has improved from £2.3m to £2.4m. The School monitors the overhead recovery rate achieved on grants to ensure it complies with the minimum overhead recovery guidelines appropriate for each contract type.

As the School received Research Council grants totalling £4.7m, representing one-third of its research grant income in 2003-04, we welcome the recognition by Research Councils that they have not, historically, funded the full economic costs of the research they have commissioned and expect that their move to correct this will significantly increase research council grant income in future years. The School also welcomes statements from the Treasury indicating government departments will also fund the full cost of the research they commission. The School plans to use these changes in funding to bring pressure to bear on other research grant sponsors to recognise the gap between the overheads they pay and the actual costs of the work we perform for them.

Enterprise LSE

Enterprise LSE Limited is the wholly owned subsidiary of the School that exists to exploit the huge potential for consultancy and similar activities that the School's world class faculty offers. During 2003-04 it established a new subsidiary, Enterprise LSE Cities Limited, to develop a consulting business that had grown up around the Cities Programme in urban planning. It also completed a successful year of partnership with Duke University's corporate education division. During the year Keith Mackrell, who as Enterprise LSE's first Chairman guided the company since incorporation, retired. The School has been fortunate to secure the services of Roger Mountford, formerly with Hambros, and now a director of the Civil Aviation Authority, as his successor.

Other Income

As part of the School's ambition to increase residences bed spaces to 4,000 so that we can offer all new students a place in residence by 2006, the School has signed contracts to develop two new halls, at Grosvenor House, Drury Lane, Covent Garden and Crispin Street, Spitalfields offering 366 bed spaces and 169 studio flats respectively. Grosvenor House should take its first students in 2005 and Crispin Street the following year. The capital requirements of these and future expansion are such that they are done in partnership with housing associations and others who provide both the funding and some of the operational services. There are no current plans to sell or to enter into off balance sheet financing for any current freehold residences.

Funding the future

Tuition fees are the single main source of income for LSE, and are expected to remain the largest component of income for the foreseeable future. Continuing to attract world-class faculty and the brightest and best students from all social backgrounds is central to our strategy and critical to our future financial and academic success. This requires that we invest in the physical environment, so that our facilities are more appropriate to the needs and expectations of staff, students and researchers and more consistent with our world-class location and reputation. It also requires that we invest in pay to address both the need to recruit and retain key staff and to enable all staff to enjoy a fair level of income appropriate for the work they do in London.

As explained earlier, the School has committed that a third of the additional revenue generated by variable fees will be used to ensure that students of the highest ability and potential are able to study at the LSE regardless of their background and financial circumstances. This continues the School's significant track record of using fee income to fund a large scholarship and student award programme – in 2003-04 the School paid £4.7m to fund its students.

Report of the Director for 2003-04

Campaign for LSE

The total in gifts and pledges for the Campaign for LSE reached £64m by the end of 2003-04. During the year there were new pledges received to the value of £8.3m: £4.4m previously pledged is now considered uncertain to be received. Cash receipts for the period were £7.7m. LSE Annual Fund achieved a new high of £286k in receipts from its alumni telephone programme and from all sources, including bequests, £681k was received in unrestricted funding for all the School during 2003-04.

Conclusion

The international environment within which a university like the LSE now operates makes it essential for the School to have the capacity to react to changing circumstances quickly. Where less than 20% of the School's income comes in the form of Government grant, and by far the largest share is attributable to student fees, we must pay particular attention to the changing interests of students, and their demands and expectations. That means being able to adapt our teaching and research portfolio quickly, and to deploy the School resources to maximum effect. I believe we are working towards a position in which we will be able to do that, but there is some way still to go.

Looking forward, the prospects for the LSE are bright. It is clear from the overall demand for our programmes that we continue to offer courses which are attractive to students round the world. With our new building we should be able to look forward to a managed expansion of the School's student numbers over the next five years. But our ambition is to grow while retaining the School's character as a close knit community of social scientists, able to benefit from the cross disciplinary interactions which that community facilitates.
