Report of the Director for 2004-05

2004-05 was a year of steady progress at the School. Our financial performance was again strong as in the previous two years, when our finances benefited from some unsustainable over-recruitment. We comfortably exceeded our target surplus of three to four per cent of turnover. We also pushed forward our plans to renew the campus, and to refresh our academic offerings.

We were also pleased to find that in the university rankings published by The Times Higher Educational Supplement, LSE was positioned at number 11 in the global league table, and second – behind Harvard – in the Social Sciences league.

I think anyone directly involved in Higher Education is bound to be sceptical about the precision of these rankings, but it is nonetheless better to be nearer the top of the league than the bottom.

Higher Education Act

I explained last year that, following extensive debate, we had decided in principle to charge home and EU undergraduates £3,000 for all our programmes, subject to reaching a satisfactory agreement with OFFA, the new access regulator. During the year we developed a bursary scheme, based on a sliding scale of support for students from lower-income families, which will redistribute around a third of the additional income raised from the higher fees.

OFFA approved our scheme, and the overall access agreement, so we will now proceed along those lines, when the new regime is introduced in the autumn of 2006. We are determined to ensure that higher fees do not affect the character of LSE's student body and are confident that the bursary scheme will allow us to continue to recruit good students from disadvantaged communities.

The Estate

Last year I also reported the purchase of a new building on Kingsway, which will allow a radical improvement in the quantity and quality of our research and teaching space. The project is planned for completion in the summer of 2008. During the year we appointed the architects, after a competition, as part of which staff and students voted for their preferred scheme. In the event, we appointed Nicholas Grimshaw and partners, who scored highly in both the professional appraisal and the popular vote.

Working closely with us, Grimshaw have designed the interior of the building, and we have agreed that both the Department of Law and a new Department of Management, will move into the upper floors. The lower floors will be devoted to teaching spaces, which will be used by all Academic Departments.

The new building on Kingsway has also given us the ability to plan for the future, across the campus as a whole, with far greater certainty. Some of our buildings are in urgent need of either demolition or substantial remodelling. We have developed a realistic and achievable plan which would deliver a campus able to accommodate 9,000 students, and to provide better open spaces, by 2012.

During the year itself, one milestone event was the reopening of the Three Tuns student union bar, after extensive renovation. Some say it has lost some of its dingy atmosphere and charm, an example of nostalgie de la boue, I think. It certainly seems to play as crucial a role as ever in the life of the School in its new, more hygienic state.

Campaign for LSE

To deliver the estate plan, with buildings of which we can be proud, we need to secure support from alumni and elsewhere. We also need to attract more scholarship support for students, to remain competitive with the best universities at home and overseas.

We made progress on both fronts during the year. Our first sizeable donation towards the new building came from a Thai entrepreneur, Charoen Sirivadhanabhakdi, three of whose family have been educated here. On the scholarship front, Stelios Haji-Ioannou of Easy Group, who graduated in 1987, generously committed £2m to support both 10 annual undergraduate scholarships and the development at 24 Kingsway.

Other gifts from home and overseas of £9 million during the year brought the campaign total up to £75 million. The original target for the campaign was £100 million, but of course we expect that, in future, fundraising will be a permanent feature of our activities.

Growth

I have referred to our aim gradually to increase the School's student body from 7,500 to 9,000 full time students over the next few years. That growth is unlikely to be uniform across all our programmes.

During the year the School's central management has worked with Departments to begin the process of developing strategic plans for the next five years. That process has already generated a number of imaginative ideas for new programmes which will help to refresh our academic portfolio.

Much of the growth will, we expect, come in our Masters programmes. But we also applied to the Higher Education Funding Council for more undergraduate places. While we will not get all we asked for, the indications are that we will be able to expand our domestic undergraduate programmes a little for the first time for some years. We attach importance to maintaining a strong undergraduate programme with a big domestic component. It is essential to the maintenance of the character of the School.

New Ventures

In 2004-05 itself we established a new LSE Urban Centre which will act as the focal point for urban research in the School, and will provide intellectual stimuli for the wide range of teaching programmes we already run in urban studies. We also launched a major initiative in the same area, funded by the Herrhausen Foundation, called the Urban Age. That involves a series of conferences in some of the greatest global cities, exploring the ways in which they are addressing major economic and social issues. Successful events have already been held in New York and Shanghai: more will follow, in London and elsewhere.

An Innovation Laboratory, known as Box, was launched in partnership with EDS. It is being used to provide an environment in which academics, government officials and business people can meet to reflect on problems of mutual interest and concern and seek imaginative solutions to them.

At the end of the year the School's Academic Board and Council decided, after a lengthy process of review, to set up a new Department of Management – which will incorporate five existing teaching and research units: Industrial Relations, Operational Research, Information Systems, Accounting and the Interdisciplinary Institute of Management. This is a complex merger, which will take a couple of years to implement fully. We expect that it will provide a platform on which we can develop new teaching programmes and research initiatives. We believe there are significant opportunities for the School to expand its offerings in management education.

International Links

So far, our assessment is that LSE would not benefit from the establishment of an overseas campus. It would be impossible to come close to duplicating the experience we can offer on our home turf. But we have developed an active approach to developing partnerships with other institutions, where we believe that, together, we can produce teaching or research which we could not manage on our own.

I referred last year to our work with Columbia, with the Paris School of Political Science, and with Peking University. Those relationships developed further during the year, as did the Trium Executive MBA programme we offer with New York University and the French Haute Ecole Commerciale.

The partnership with Columbia and Sciences Po looks likely to attain a new dimension in China, where we can offer programmes, both degree and customised, together. With Peking University our Summer School in Beijing doubled in size, and we have agreed to launch a two-year double degree programme in International Relations with them in 2006.

These developments reflect the particular attention the School has been paying to its position and profile in Asia, which is the source of around 20 per cent of the student body.

Quality Assurance

During the year we benefited from a more than usually substantial dose of attention from the Quality Assurance Authority. This was, in part, because we applied for Degree Awarding Powers. Hitherto LSE has awarded University of London degrees. Given the uncertain prospects for the federal university it seemed prudent to us – and indeed to other colleges of the University of London – to apply for these powers.

Helpfully, the QAA team combined their assessment with their regular institutional audit. The outcome was satisfactory to the School. We were advised that we meet the requirements to award degrees, though the audit team made some useful suggestions for improvements in our processes, which we shall take forward. We are now considering the case for seeking to exercise these powers in due course, and to award LSE degrees for the first time.

Financial Situation

Income and Expenditure

The consolidated income of the School and its subsidiaries increased 4 per cent to £135m (2003-04 £129m) for the financial year ending 31 July 2005. Tuition fee income increased by 7 per cent to £63m and Research Grants and Contracts income increased by 6 per cent to £15m.

The School achieved a surplus of £10.1m, equivalent to 7.5 per cent of gross income (2003-04, £8.8m, 6.8 per cent.) Overall, student numbers were on target but with UK and other European

Report of the Director for 2004-05

Union undergraduates slightly higher than the HEFCE agreed contract range and a correspondingly lower number of postgraduate students.

Staff costs increased by 7 per cent to £73m: 58 per cent of total expenditure. This increase includes the effects of an increase in the number of academic staff, the transfer back to the School of previously outsourced catering services, the annual pay award, additional recruitment and retention payments, increases in London Allowance and the benefits to staff of the application of the HERA job assessment process. Continuing attention to efficiency of administration and support services resulted in reductions in non-pay expenses for administration and central services.

This third consecutive year of surplus of income over expenditure in excess of the three to four per cent target range recommended by HEFCE and adopted by the School's Finance and General Purposes Committee in 2003 enables the School to embark on its infrastructure improvement programme with confidence.

Capital Expenditure

In October 2004, the School acquired the freehold of 24 Kingsway for £18m. Design work under Grimshaw is nearing completion. It is expected that redevelopment work will take 2 years from Easter 2006 and that the New Academic Building will be fully operational for Michaelmas term 2008.

The redevelopment cost is expected to be £46m, of which approximately half will be funded by grants and donations.

Income

Expenditure

In November 2004 the School acquired the freehold of the third and final tower of the former Mobil Court for £13m, with the support of funding from a £9m Science Research Infrastructure Funding (SRIF 2) grant. A £6m renewal of mechanical and electrical services, creation of 17 new seminar and lecture rooms and refurbishment in former Mobil Court towers 1 and 2 will be completed in Lent Term 2006.

Funding Council Grants

Although the School has a relatively low proportion of HEFCE grant funding, the £24.2m received together with £0.4m from the Joint Information Systems Committee (JISC) is an essential contribution to the financial viability of the School.

Report of the Director for 2004-05

Research Income

Income from Research Grants and Contracts increased 6 per cent to £15m. Research Councils account for 35 per cent of this, Government Departments, the European Community and Charities 37 per cent.

During the year work has been completed to ensure compliance with the HEFCE Transparent Approach to Costing (TRAC) guidelines, and we are submitting Research Council grant applications on a full economic cost basis from September 2005. The School welcomes the Research Council's new funding regime and looks forward to closing the gap between research funding and the full cost of the work performed. The School also welcomes the statement from the Treasury indicating that government departments will fund the full cost of research that they commission. There are concerns in some academic departments that this may result in a decrease in the overall volume of research commissioned. The funding arrangements for European Community research programmes in which the School participates remain insufficient to cover the full economic cost and the School continues to spend substantially more than its HEFCE QR grant income on fundamental research.

The School has a clear objective to recover at least the full economic cost of work done on commercial non-peer reviewed research, but also aims to continue to deliver peer reviewed research of the highest quality, recognising its importance both to teaching and to the broader social aims of the School.

Enterprise LSE Limited and subsidiary

Enterprise LSE Limited and its subsidiary, Enterprise LSE Cities Limited, are wholly owned subsidiaries of the School that exist to exploit the potential for consultancy, executive education and related activities that the School's world-class faculty offers. These subsidiaries contributed over £1 million to the earnings of academic staff and an operating surplus to the School during the year. The customised corporate executive education collaboration with Duke University, through Duke CE Limited, is proving very successful.

Residences

In September 2005, the School opened its newest 169 studio room residence, Grosvenor House, in Drury Lane, two minutes from Covent Garden and the Royal Opera House and four minutes from Houghton Street. It has immediately become the most requested residence.

The School has entered into an agreement to lease a new 360-bed hall of residence in Northumberland Avenue, within 5 minutes of Trafalgar Square, which is currently under development. The development of a 366-bed residence, to be known as Lillian Knowles House, in Spitafields is also underway in conjunction with Shaftsbury Housing Association.

A £7m refurbishment scheme for Passfield Hall residence has been committed and will take place during 2005-06.

Shortly after the end of the year, the School completed the acquisition of the freehold of the hall of residence at High Holborn, previously occupied under a finance lease. There are no current plans to sell or to enter into off-balance sheet financing for any of the current freehold or long lease residences. Following a review of residences requirements, the disposal of the houses at Silver Walk has been approved in principle, though this is unlikely to happen in the 2005-06 academic year.

Conclusion

The environment in which British Universities operate is increasingly competitive, both at home and overseas. We compete for the best students, for resources from the Funding and Research Councils, and for highly mobile teaching and research staff.

I believe LSE is well-placed to succeed in this environment. Our faculty is strong, and our profile and reputation are high. But success in practice requires a willingness to adapt and change quickly when necessary. That will certainly be the key challenge we face in the coming years.
