

Company Sponsorship

How can your organisation benefit from sponsoring an employee?

The Executive LLM is designed for working professionals who wish to invest in their future and advance their careers by attending one of the most innovative and intellectually exciting LLM programmes offered in Europe today. This programme adds significant value both to your employees and to your organisation, whilst at the same time helping you to retain your top talent and demonstrate your commitment to employee career development. Sponsoring an employee to study while still at work can bring both immediate and long term benefits:

Return on investment

As students are continuing to work while studying, they are immediately able to apply their new knowledge and skills in the workplace. It is also a way of enabling associates to engage in advanced legal study without losing the services of these associates for a whole year.

Employee retention

By sponsoring an employee on the Executive LLM programme you are strengthening your company's leadership skills, retaining your most talented employees and showing them that you value their personal development, thereby helping to increase loyalty and motivation. Furthermore, retention may be facilitated by opting to make an employee's sponsorship conditional on a period of continued employment following the completion of a module.

Expanding networks

The Executive LLM will be taught by members of the LSE Law Department, recognised globally as some of the leading academics in their fields. LSE was ranked as the UK's number one research institution in law in the last Government-led research quality assessment and is a global leader in social science research and teaching. To ensure that students learn not only from their professors but also from their colleagues we require that students on the Executive LLM programme have at least three years of relevant professional legal experience. This means that the modules can be pitched at a level that benefits students with significant professional experience and allows students to make contacts with fellow working professionals in multiple jurisdictions. In addition, students will have access to the high profile events and speakers that LSE and partner schools have to offer, providing your company with the opportunity to tap into new resources and knowledge.

Global perspectives

Students will be exposed to new ideas and share insights with classmates and faculty from all over the world. They will be able to bring real legal problems into the classroom for discussion, providing you with the opportunity to gain insights and solutions from an expanded network with a global perspective.