

Lionel Robbins: a Life

Department of Economics and LSE Library Public Lecture

To celebrate the launch of her outstanding biography of Lionel Robbins, the Department of Economics and the LSE Library's Archives Division are delighted to present a public lecture by Professor Susan Howson of the University of Toronto. A true "Renaissance man", Robbins made major contributions to his own academic discipline, and applied his skills as an economist not only to practical problems of economic policy and of higher education (via the "Robbins Report" of 1963), but also to the administration of the visual and performing arts that he loved deeply. This lecture will examine his public activities, and demonstrate why he was such an important figure in the intellectual and cultural life in Britain in the twentieth century.

Date: 30 November 2011

Venue: The Old Theatre,
Main Building

Start: 6.30pm

Speaker: Professor Susan Howson

Chair: Professor Lord Layard

For further information, contact Emma Taverner, e.taverner@lse.ac.uk This event is free and open to all, with no ticket required.