The Economics of Share Ownership and Incentive Pay: Findings and Policy Implications

Various Speakers

Although studies suggest value to firms investing in share schemes and incentive pay schemes the evidence is not clear-cut. It seems share ownership, in particular, operates best in combination with other HR and compensation policies, while individual incentive pay schemes have the clearest benefits in terms of labour productivity. The purpose of this seminar is to bring together academics and policy makers to consider findings from recent studies and their policy implications.

Our Urban Future: the death of distance and the rise of cities

Ed Glaeser (Harvard University)

Improvements in transportation and communication technologies have led some to predict the death of distance, and with that, the death of the city. In this lecture Professor Ed Glaeser will argue that these improvements have actually been good for idea-producing cities at the same time as they have been devastating for goods-producing places. What, then, does the future hold for our cities?

SUPERMARKETS AND THE BRITISH HIGH STREET: The unintended consequences of planning regulations

Raffaella Sadun (HBS)

In 1996, new regulations made it much harder for UK supermarkets and other retailers to develop out-of-town outlets – so-called ‘big boxes’. In part, these regulations were supposed to ‘save the traditional British High Street’ by protecting small retailers. New research by Dr Raffaella Sadun of the Centre for Economic Performance finds that they have actually accelerated the decline of independent stores.

PSI/CEP Event - The Survival and Growth of Firms: Findings and Policy Implications

Various Speakers

There is a growing literature in industrial organisation and industrial economics using micro-level firm and establishment data to test theory regarding the factors associated with survival and employment growth. This literature modifies some of the central tenets stemming from early theory, and indicates substantial heterogeneity in firms' behaviour within industries and over the business cycle. This seminar will explore the determinants of employment growth and survival focusing on factors such as size, age, R&D, technology and human capital. The purpose of the seminar is to bring together academics and policy makers to consider findings from recent studies and their policy implications.

CEP Public Lecture - Do we need more Immigrants and Babies?

Adair Turner (Chairman, Financial Services Authority)

Faced with population ageing, many commentators argue that developed countries need higher fertility, more immigration or both. But others claim that immigration is pulling down the wages of unskilled labour, and that population growth has adverse welfare consequences. This lecture will present an integrated analysis of the economics of demographic change, exploring the advantages and disadvantages of different rates of population growth.
