

PUBLIC DEBATE

Thursday 5 February
18.30-20.00

Source: <http://nationalinterest.org/feature/greece-europes-great-economic-black-hole-12036>

What do the Greek elections mean for Greece's future?

Speakers:

Dionyssis G. Dimitrakopoulos

Senior Lecturer in Politics,
Birkbeck College, University of London

Daphne Halikiopoulou

Lecturer in Comparative Politics,
University of Reading

Dimitri Vayanos

Professor of Finance;
Head of the Department of Finance, LSE

Chair:

Kevin Featherstone

Hellenic Observatory Director, LSE

The outcome of the Greek election on 25th January is being watched closely by euro-zone leaders and the financial markets. It may also prove to be a turning point in Greek politics. What are the implications for Greece's economic path?

Have the elections shifted the Greek party system decisively? What do the results mean for the political extremes and the disengaged? This panel will explore what the elections mean for Greece and its place in Europe.

VENUE: Wolfson Theater (NAB.LG.01)
New Academic Building, LSE

This event is FREE and open to all with no ticket required. Entry on a first come first served basis.

#LSEGreekElections

www.lse.ac.uk/ho