Citing and Referencing

Original source

In order to communicate effectively with other people, one must have a reasonably accurate idea of what they do and do not know that is pertinent to the communication. Treating people as though they have knowledge that they do not have can result in miscommunication and perhaps embarrassment.

Student's own work

Effective communication depends on a generally accurate knowledge of what the audience knows. If a speaker assumes too much knowledge about the subject, the audience will either misunderstand or be bewildered.

No, not plagiarism.

As long as you provide a citation and a reference, you can reuse tables, diagrams and images.

Sometimes we have to write long papers, but most of the time, it is unnecessary: the papers often contain long introductions more suitable for doctoral dissertations or review "state of the art" papers apparently designed to provide evidence that the author is well-read.

Yes, this is self-plagiarism.

Even your own previously submitted work must be cited and referenced appropriately. You could either quote, paraphrase or summarise, providing a citation to the original source.

Check with your course leader for advice on how to handle your own previous works.

What is plagiarism

Plagiarism is defined as presenting someone else's work as your own by:

- Cutting and pasting from other sources
- Quoting without "..." or a citation
- Paraphrasing or summarising without a citation
- Using images, tables or graphs without a citation
- Re-using own work which was previously marked
- Collaborating on what should be individual work

Forgetting to cite is still plagiarism.

If in doubt, then cite!

Plagiarism – LSE statement

"All work for classes and seminars [...] must be the student's own work. [...] Infringing this requirement or passing off the work of others as the student's own work, whether deliberately or not, is plagiarism."

LSE. (2016). Regulations on assessment offences: plagiarism. Retrieved from

What are citing & referencing

Citing

- notating when you quote, paraphrase, use an idea, or summarise from someone else
- gives the reader the original source

Referencing

- creating a list of sources you have cited
- different from a bibliography, which also includes sources you read but did not use directly in writing your text

Citing demonstrates that you...

- gathered evidence to support your ideas and arguments
- used credible, good quality sources
- read widely and at an appropriate academic level
- allows your marker to differentiate between your own work and the work of others, and to locate your sources.

When and what to cite

Within & at the end of the text when you use ideas from, or refer to, another person's work.

Applies to:

facts, figures, ideas & theories

From:

books, journals, internet, videos, lecture notes etc.

Exception:

common knowledge

How to cite – Method vs Style

Method

- Harvard method, in-text (author, date)
- footnotes
- endnotes

Style

- APA 6th
- Chicago
- Harvard
- OSCOLA
- etc.

Check your department's requirements – website, Moodle or handbook.

Caution: Harvard method ≠ Harvard style

Books example

APA

In-text: (Bryson, 1995, pp. 12-15) or (Bryson, 1995)

Chicago

In-text: (Bryson 1995, 12-15) or (Bryson 1995)

Journals example

APA

In-text: (Secker, 1997, p. 56) or (Secker, 1997)

Reference: Secker, J. (1997). The digital library: A new perspective. Journal of Documentation, 13(2), 53-65.

Chicago

Tips on preventing plagiarism

- Keep track of what you find from the beginning
- Record full details of the sources you might use
- Make good quality notes, don't just copy
- Be consistent!
- Plan in advance
- Do a little bit every day

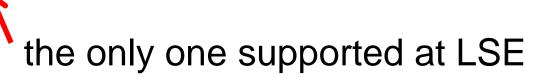

Reference management tools

Could help you be consistent and accurate when citing by:

- storing and organising your references
- ...and building a reference list as you write your text.

E.g. EndNote, Mendeley, RefME
