Advancing Inter-disciplinarity in Human Rights Research: Problems and Possibilities

Tuesday 20 March 2007

Registration from 9.30am, Drinks reception from 5.30pm

Opening Plenary

'Doing Human Rights'

Professor Conor Gearty, Professor Lydia Morris and Dr Gerd Oberleitner

Human rights are inter-disciplinary by their very nature. Just as a successful enforcement of human rights depends not only on legal but also on political social and cultural mechanisms, the study of human rights draws not only on law but also on political science, sociology, anthropology and related disciplines.

Building on these insights this day long event includes keynote speeches, working sessions and time for more informal discussions. The papers presented in the working sessions will be discussed by leading academics and participants are encouraged to locate their own research within this dialogue.

Panel Themes

(Participants will attend one of the following in each session)

- Human Rights and Wartime Abuses
or
Rights-based Social Mobilisations
- The Redefinition of Sovereignty
or
Interpreting Law from a Human Rights Perspective
- Changing Dimensions of Human Security
or
The Sociology of Human Rights Actors

Presenters and academic commentators are listed online.

Registration Fee £20

(lunch and drinks reception included)

Registration forms available online.
