Course content: Provides a thorough grounding in the theory and recent developments in the field of private equity. Starting by examining how private equity funds are raised and structured the course will examine how private equity can be used in start-ups, in scaling-up cash flow businesses, and in restructuring firms facing financial distress. It explores the link between private and venture capital on the one hand and public securities markets on the other. The course will examine the process through which private equity investors exit their investments. The course will also give a detailed analysis of the types of finance used in private equity and an evaluation of the short and long-run performance of private equity investments. The course will include an evaluation of the performance of different types of private equity investment and a comparison with other forms of ownership will be undertaken. This course takes a rigorous theoretical examination of private equity, however also employs some case study teaching and is taught in conjunction with a range of practitioners in the field.

Teaching: 35 hours of lectures and 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Each week there will typically be a formative case study assignments (similar to summative cases). Students will also be given formative feedback on their class participation.

FM413 Half Unit Fixed Income Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Andrea Tamoni OLD M2.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics (Research), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research), MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students taking this course are expected to be familiar with the theory of asset evaluation at the level of FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets and the theory and practice of derivative pricing at the level of FM441 Derivatives.

Course content: Provides a thorough grounding in recent developments in fixed income securities pricing, hedging and portfolio management. This course provides a grounding in recent developments in fixed income security pricing, hedging and portfolio management. By the end of the course, the students will be familiar with a variety of topics, including (i) the institutions, organizations and conduct of the fixed income markets; (ii) the basic techniques to analyze and hedge fixed income products, such as "curve fitting", "bootstrapping", duration, convexity, duration-based hedging and asset-liability management; (iii) the analysis of the "destabilizing" effects related to the use of certain derivatives written on fixed income instruments; (iv) the forces, or "factors", driving the variation in the entire spectrum of interest rates at different maturities; (v) the main evaluation tools, which can be applied to evaluate a wide range of products (trees, no arbitrage trees, calibration and some continuous time models); (vi) the main fixed income products such as government bonds, corporate bonds (convertible, callable, puttable), and their evaluation; (vii) plain vanilla interest derivatives (swaps, caps, floors, swaptions, etc.); (viii) mortgage backed securities and credit risk transfers.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 problem sets in the LT.

Each week there will typically be a formative case study assignments (similar to summative cases). Students will also be given formative feedback on their class participation.

Indicative reading: The primary source for this course is a comprehensive set of Lecture Notes, tutorials and case studies, and a reading pack containing chapters from the following books; Sundaresan, S. FM414 Half Unit Cases in Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ulf Axelson OLD M3.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (part-time) and MSc in Finance and Private Equity. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Asset Markets (FM423) and Corporate Finance (FM422).

Course content: A case based course aimed at deepening the understanding of how to apply corporate finance concepts in a wide variety of business situations. In particular, we will try to build on concepts in business strategy, valuation techniques, and capital structure theories covered in previous courses, and see how to apply those tools in a systematic and rigorous way when approaching complicated real-life corporate finance problems. Examples of topics include working capital management, capital structure, risk management, real options, initial public offerings, international corporate finance, and family firms. Students will have to read up on cases before class and be prepared to discuss them interactively in class.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

10 x 3.5-hour lectures taught on an evening in LT (part-time).

Formative coursework: 5 formative case study assignments (similar to summative cases).

Indicative reading: Berk and DeMarzo, "Corporate Finance" -Around 10 case studies

FM421 Half Unit Applied Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Moqi Xu OLD 2.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics (Research), MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research), MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance A (FM431L), Corporate Finance A (FM431M) and Principles of Finance (FM212). This is an advanced applied course and a thorough understanding of the major theoretical issues and concepts is required. Students must meet one of the following pre-requisites to take this course: 1. have taken FM431 Corporate Finance A in Michaelmas term. 2. have taken the equivalent of FM212 Principles of Finance in their undergraduate degree 3. have taken a good micro-economics course in their undergraduate degree.

Course content: Provides a thorough grounding in recent developments in applied corporate finance. The course involves a study of the applied corporate finance literature and case studies. It will examine valuation techniques, capital structure and payout policy, raising capital, going public, financial risk management by firms, corporate governance, takeovers and insolvency.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in LT. This course is taught in three separate sections.

Formative coursework: Class papers and case based research are required.

Indicative reading: Articles from journals and readings from D H Chew, The New Corporate Finance: Where Theory Meets Practice (3rd edn, McGraw Hill); M Grinblatt & S Titman, Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy, (2nd edn, McGraw Hill).

Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Amil Dasgupta OLD 3.45, Prof Christopher Polk OLD 4.23 and Prof Daniel Ferreira OLD M2.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (part-time) and MSc in Finance and Private Equity. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide a comprehensive overview of firms' financial decision making. Corporate finance questions can be divided into two broad sets. Decisions regarding how to spend funds on investment projects constitute one part, usually referred to as capital budgeting. This part of the course will describe the various techniques commonly employed to assess investment opportunities. Particular attention will be given to the need to properly evaluate the risk associated with each investment project. Methods like the Adjusted Present Value or the weighted average cost of capital will be presented. The other main set of questions regards how to raise funds necessary to finance those investments. There, firms' decisions over debt/equity ratios will be analysed. Attention will be paid to differential tax treatments of debt and equity incomes. The implications of the possibility of bankruptcy will also be taken into account. The analysis will then broaden to allow for the possibility that debt/equity choices may affect how firms are run. Incentives to adopt riskier strategies as a function of overall leverage will be considered, as will the debt overhang problem. The course will also cover a number of specific topics. Firms' decisions to pay dividends will be studied. The factors behind the decision to go public, i.e. to trade securities in a public market, will then be presented. The market for takeovers and mergers will be examined, as will the topical issue of corporate Teaching: 40 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes. MSc Finance (part-time) taught MT and LT (evenings). MSc Finance (full-time) taught MT (daytime).

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: The recommended textbooks for this course are Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance 2008 and Higgins, Analysis for Financial Management, 9th Edition. Other recommended readings from relevant journal articles will be included in a study pack.

Asset Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Dimitrios Vayanos OLD 3.41, Prof Zhichao Yuan OLD M3.05, Dr Rohit Rahi OLD 3.43, Prof Mikhail Chernov OLD M3.08 and Dr Konstantinos Zachariadis OLD M3.02 Dr Igor Makarov

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (part-time) and MSc in Finance and Private Equity. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Aimed at people with a good undergraduate degree and good quantitative skills, with some knowledge of economics.

Course content: The aim of the course is to familiarise students with the workings of financial markets, and equip them with the fundamental tools of asset valuation. The course will focus on the three main asset classes - fixed income, stocks, and derivatives - giving a unified perspective of modern valuation methods. The starting point will be the present value formula. The course will then proceed to fixed-income securities, focusing mainly on government bonds. These will be valued off the term structure of interest rates, using the present value formula. The connection with the principle of no-arbitrage will be emphasized. The course will then move to stocks, starting with portfolio theory and then deriving the relation between risk and return (CAPM). The CAPM will provide a risk-adjusted discount rate that will be used to discount stocks' cash flows with the present value formula. Alternative pricing models such as the APT and multi-factor will also be covered, and the models will be applied to issues of asset allocation and portfolio selection. The last topic will be derivatives, especially futures and options. After familiarizing students with the use of derivatives, the course will cover the main valuation methods (binomial model, Black-Scholes) emphasizing again the principle of no-arbitrage.

Teaching: 60 hours of lectures. MSc Finance (part-time): taught MT, LT and ST (evenings). MSc Finance (full-time): taught MT (daytime). Formative coursework Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: The organisation of topics of the course follows closely the treatment in Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, 2nd Global Edition, Pearson International, and Bodie, Kane, and Marcus, Investments, 8th Edition, McGraw Hill. Other recommended readings and case studies will be included in a study pack.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. In class assessment (10%, 1 words) in the MT. In class assessment (10%) in the MT and LT.

FM429 Half Unit Asset Markets A

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Dong Lou

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics (Research), MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic Mathematics and Statistics knowledge. The course is self-contained but it covers a broad set of topics. Some prior knowledge of economics, finance and accounting is advised.

Course content: Aims to equip students with the fundamental concepts and tools underlying the asset markets side of modern finance. The course covers asset markets and valuation. The valuation of fixed-income securities is covered first, followed by the valuation of stocks, and derivatives such as futures and options. Concepts emphasized include the present-value formula, valuation by arbitrage, portfolio theory, the CAPM, market efficiency, and binomial and Black-Scholes models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: At least two pieces of classwork will be assessed.

Indicative reading: Z Bodie, A Kane and A Marcus, Investments, 8th edition, McGraw Hill. ISBN: 0-07-338237-X.

Full details of reading will be specified in the Course Programme and Reading List which will be distributed at the first lecture.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.

(Please note this exam is the half unit version of the examination taken on FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets).

FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Paravisini Maggi OLD M3.12 and Mr Dong Lou OLD M3.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic Mathematics and Statistics knowledge. The course is self-contained but it covers a broad set of topics. Some prior knowledge of economics, finance and accounting is advised.

Course content: Aims to equip students with the fundamental concepts and tools underlying modern finance, both in the asset markets and the corporate finance side. Provides a foundation for subsequent courses offered by the Department. In the Michaelmas Term, the course covers asset markets and valuation. The valuation of fixed-income securities is covered first, followed by the valuation of stocks, and derivatives such as futures and options. Concepts emphasized include the present-value formula, valuation by arbitrage, portfolio theory, the CAPM, market efficiency, and binomial and Black-Scholes models. In the Lent Term, the course covers corporate finance. This part starts with capital budgeting techniques, in relation to CAPM and other valuation instruments. The course then proceeds identifying the driving forces behind capital structure decisions and choices over debt and equity finance. Special consideration is given to the tax implications of those choices, the possible costs of financial distress, the incentive implications of financial decisions and the signalling impact of those for financial market participants. A final part of the course covers some specific topics in corporate finance: dividend policy, decision to go public, mergers and acquisitions and possibly (time permitting) corporate governance issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

40 hours of lectures in the MT and LT plus 20 classes in which problem sets, case studies and journal articles will be discussed. Students are expected to make presentations at these classes.

Formative coursework: At least two pieces of work per term will be assessed.

Indicative reading: J. Berk and P. DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, Pearson International Edition. Z. Bodie, A. Kane and A. Marcus, Investments, 8th edition, McGraw Hill. ISBN:0-07-338237-X

Full details of reading will be specified in the Course Programme and Reading List which will be distributed at the first lecture.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Please note this examination is the full unit version of the exams taken on FM429 Asset Markets A (H) and FM431 Corporate Finance A (H).

FM436 Financial Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Martin and Dr Amil Dasgupta
Dr Igor Makarov.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Finance (Route 1), MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical background at the level of the September Courses in Mathematics and FM458 Financial Economics Preparatory Course is assumed.

Course content: A required graduate course for the MSc Finance and Economics programme, on investors' behaviour, market equilibrium, and asset pricing. Will encompass topics in choice under uncertainty, complete and incomplete asset markets, mean-variance portfolio theory, no-arbitrage and equilibrium asset pricing, excess volatility and return predictability, intertemporal asset pricing, Black-Scholes option and other contingent claims pricing models, the term structure of interest rates under uncertainty, and the pricing of interest rate linked and other derivative securities.

Teaching: 40 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: 15 problem sets in classes.

Indicative reading: Will be based on: Teaching notes and journal articles, as well as J H Cochrane, Asset Pricing, Revised Edition, Princeton University Press, 2005.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

FM437 Financial Econometrics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christian Julliard OLD M2.18, Dr Vassilis Hajivassiliou S564 and Dr Daniel Paravisini Maggi OLD M3.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical background to the level of the course taught in September in the Economics Department (EC400) is assumed.

Course content: The techniques of empirical investigation in economics and finance. Students are introduced to recent empirical findings based on asset pricing and corporate finance models. The course includes a selection of the following topics: multivariate regression; maximum likelihood and methods of moments estimation; hypothesis testing; omitted variables and misspecification; asymptotic theory; measurement error and instrumental variables; time-series modelling; predictability of asset returns; event study analysis; econometric tests of the CAPM and multifactor models; volatility modelling; generalised method of moments estimation.

Teaching: 22 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 27 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises are provided each week and they are discussed in class.

Indicative reading: A complete reading list is available at the beginning of session. Will be based on Greene, Econometric Analysis, Prentice-Hall; Campbell, Lo & MacKinlay, The Econometrics of Financial Markets, Princeton University Press; Econometric Analysis of Cross Section and Panel Data, J. Wooldridge; selected published articles.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

FM438 Half Unit Advanced Asset Pricing

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jean-Pierre Zigrand OLD 4.22

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Financial Economics (FM436).

Course content: Advanced Asset Markets is the continuation of the asset pricing component of FM436, Financial Economics. It allows students to further explore pricing in continuous time by applying the pricing and hedging methods of FM436 to more advanced products and to more complex environments. This course is ideal for the students who would like to apply the tools of continuous time finance learned in FM436 to the pricing and hedging of advanced real-life derivatives and structured products both in complete and in incomplete markets. The following topics will be covered: i. No-Arbitrage Pricing in incomplete markets, ii. Equilibrium pricing in complete and incomplete markets, iii. Local volatility modelling, including an excursion into local time, iv. Stochastic volatility modelling, v. Endogenous risk modelling with applications to trading and derivatives pricing, vi. More exotic derivatives, vii. Volatility, correlation and dispersion trades and derivatives, viii. Multi-factor term structure modelling, ix. Term structure derivatives.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 6 hours of workshops in the LT.

Indicative reading: (this should list 5-10 readings essential readings only)

There is no textbook covering the entire material, though Bjork, ("Arbitrage Theory in Continuous Time" (Third Edition, 2009)) is recommended and Gatheral ("Modelling the Volatility Surface: A Practitioner's Perspective" (2007)) is suggested for the volatility modelling component of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM440 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Corporate Finance Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Webb OLD M3.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research) and MSc in Finance and Private Equity. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Corporate Finance and Asset Markets (FM430).

This is an advanced course; students will be expected to have a strong background in Micro Economics and be comfortable with mathematical arguments. Coverage of the material in FM430 Corporate Finance and Asset Markets is normally required as a prerequisite for this course.

Course content: Provides a thorough grounding in recent developments in the theory of corporate finance. The course involves an advanced development of theories of corporate financial policy and corporate governance, going public, takeovers and insolvency. The development of these theories involves applying the modern theories of agency, asymmetric information and game theoretic ideas. Applications of the economics of incomplete contracts to the problems of ownership and control and financial decisions will also be developed.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 3 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to problems will be expected on a weekly basis. There will also be an unassessed assignment.

Indicative reading: The Theory of Corporate Finance by Jean Tirole (Princeton University Press, 2006) covers much of the material. Some additional material can be found in O D Hart, Firms Contracts and Finance Structure (Oxford University Press, 1995) and C W Smith, The Modern Theory of Corporate Finance (McGraw-Hill, 1990). A set of lecture notes and a study pack of journal articles will be provided.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM441 Half Unit Derivatives

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konstantinos Zachariadis OLD M3.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: This is a more advanced course. Students will be expected to show some familiarity with statistics, calculus and random processes.

Course content: Provides a thorough grounding in the theory of derivatives pricing and hedging. This course develops the theories of no-arbitrage asset pricing. Particular emphasis is placed on pricing within a multi-period, mostly continuous-time, framework. A special feature of the course is its coverage of the modern theory of contingent claims valuation by PDE and martingale methods. These asset pricing-methods are applied to the pricing of vanilla and exotic options and corporate liabilities, forwards, futures, as well as fixed income derivatives. The uses of derivatives in hedging and risk-management are discussed as well.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets in classes (10).

Indicative reading: Teaching notes will be distributed. No one book covers the entire course. Books recommended include, in increasing level of difficulty, R. McDonald, Derivative Markets (2nd edn, Pearson Education, 2006), J Hull, Options Futures and Other Derivatives (5th edn, Prentice-Hall, 2003), and M Baxter & A Rennie, Financial Calculus (Cambridge University Press, 1996).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Students answer three out of four questions.

FM442 Half Unit Quantitative Methods in Finance and Risk Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philippe Mueller OLD M2.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research), MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: A background in statistics and mathematics is required. No prior programming experience is necessary but students without programming experience are highly encouraged to concurrently take FM457 MATLAB for MSc Students.

Course content: This is a graduate level course on the quantitative and statistical tools that are important in applied finance. It studies financial markets and market risk from a quantitative point of view, focusing on understanding the relationship between risk and return and on models for managing financial risks. The course brings together three essential fields: finance, statistics and computer programming. Students will be exposed to application of these tools and the key properties of financial data through a set of computer-based classes and exercises. The following topics will be covered; review of statistics and introduction to time series econometrics; modeling financial returns; an introduction to the analysis of financial data using MATLAB; volatility models; risk measures and coherence; Value-at-Risk and Expected Shortfall.

Implementing the models and tools in MATLAB is an essential part of the course and consequently, all classes are computer based. With regards to empirical work the students will learn how to deal with very practical problems such as locating financial data and processing the data to be able to analyze it in the first place. Through the computer-based exercises the students will become comfortable working with real data and they will be able to build their own toolbox of routines that can also be used outside the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Formative coursework Problem sets to be solved using MATLAB. In addition, students will have the opportunity to present the results of a problem set to the class.

Indicative reading: The core text for this course is: Jon Danielsson, Financial Risk Forecasting, John Wiley & Sons, 2011. Extra readings will be assigned for selected topics.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.

Project (20%, 2000 words) and presentation (5%) in the MT.

FM445 Half Unit Portfolio Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Zhichao Yuan OLD M3.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research), MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to cover the main topics in equity portfolio management. Some of the topics covered in the course include: Portfolio optimization techniques; Multi-factor models and their applications; Trading strategies; International portfolio management and currency hedging; Trading costs; Portfolio performance measurement and attribution; Style analysis; Mutual funds; Hedge funds. The course is based on a number of empirical applications and case studies, so that students can gain a better understanding of implementation issues related to managing an equity portfolio.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Regular classworks will be completed, handed in and marked as part of formative assessment for this course.

Indicative reading: A study pack will include lecture notes and case studies. All relevant articles will be made available during the course. Useful references are Modern portfolio theory and investment analysis, by E. J. Elton, M. J. Gruber, S. J. Brown, and W. N. Goetzmann, Wiley Press; Modern investment management, by Bob Litterman and the Quantitative Resource Group, GSAM, Wiley Press; Investments, by Z. Bodie, A. Kane, and A. Marcus, McGraw-Hill Irwin.

The 20% coursework comprises five homework assignments and one project.

FM447 Half Unit Global Financial System

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson OLD 4.20

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a strong background in microeconomics, and be comfortable with formal arguments.

Course content: This course examines the academic and policy debates on the operation of the global financial system. The course will aim to be topical, but the analysis of the issues will be based on rigorous economic arguments. The course begins with a brief overview of the history of the international financial system. Several theories of financial crises are then developed in some detail, and are assessed by reference to historical experience and the mechanics of speculative attack, including the current liquidity crisis. Special emphasis is placed on the analysis of coordination failures and their implications for economic policy. The course concludes by analysis of the current liquidity crisis in the context of the models and historical experience discussed earlier in the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to attempt the problem sets and essay questions set in the classes.

Indicative reading: Most material will be provided by the book Global Financial Systems, by Jon Danielsson, published by Pearson. Students may also benefit from a review of the material in a microeconomics textbook at the graduate level, such as J Green, A Mas-Colell & M Whinston, Microeconomic Theory.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM457 MATLAB for MSc Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jack Favilukis OLD M2.14

Availability: Intended for students taking FM442 Quantitative Methods for Finance and Risk Analysis and FM404 Forecasting Financial Time Series. There may be limited availability to other students on the MSc Finance (Full-time), MSc Finance and Economics, MSc Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc Risk and Finance and MSc Accounting and Finance programmes.

Course content: This course is an introduction to computational methods in finance; the course uses Matlab. We will begin with an introduction to basic Matlab. We will then learn how to simulate individual securities, with a special focus on the predictability and fat tails features of volatility. Simultaneously we will examine the data to test how well our models approximate the real world. Next we will move onto modeling portfolios of multiple securities and test the CAPM and the Fama-French three factor model; we will also test for long term predictability in asset prices. Finally we will use numerical techniques to price options and to construct a yield curve.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures and 7 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Teaching notes will be distributed.

Assessment: This is an additional, non-assessed computer course to supplement MSc level courses in the Department of Finance.

FM458 Financial Economics Preparatory Course

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Albina Danilova and Dr Amil Dasgupta

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Finance and Economics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to supplement the Economics pre-session course and provide students with the essential quantitative methods for the core Finance course FM436. The course will introduce foundational material essential to the study of both asset pricing in continuous time and corporate finance theory.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Indicative reading: Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus (1998), World Scientific; Shreve, Stochastic Calculus for Finance I, II

Assessment:

No formal assessment. Students will sit a mock exam based upon the material to aid learning.

FM472 Half Unit International Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elisabetta Bertero OLD M2.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance (part-time), MSc in Finance and Economics, MSc in Finance and Economics (Research), MSc in Finance and Private Equity, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other interested graduate students may also be admitted provided they obtain permission from the course leader. Permission can be requested by emailing the course leader relevant information on previous studies in finance and economics and the motivation for wanting to take the course.

Course content: This course examines key issues in international finance, focusing on recent developments and incorporating theoretical, empirical, policy and institutional dimensions. The course uses exchange rates as a unifying theme and considers them from four perspectives: theory, policy, global risk and international investors. The course examines models of exchange rate determination and related empirical evidence. It analyses the choice and coordination of exchange rate regimes, including the European Monetary Union. It examines exchange rates as one of the sources of global financial instability. It considers the risk exposure for investors arising from exchange rate volatility and its hedging with currency instruments. The course also explores the links, in each area, to current developments such as the internationalisation of the Chinese Renminbi, the EMU sovereign debt crisis, the recent financial crisis and global imbalances, forex carry trades and the high volatility of short term exchange rates.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to undertake a group research project on a given topic concerning financial crises.

Indicative reading: A selection of journal articles; background reading from a textbook such as Keith Pilbeam International Finance (Palgrave, 2006, 3rd edition)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM473 Half Unit Finance I

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Georgy Chabakauri OLD M2.15 and Mr Dong Lou OLD M3.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation, MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not open to students in the MSc Accounting and Finance and in the MSc Finance and Economics.

Pre-requisites: Students should be comfortable with 'High School' level Mathematics and simple algebra, e.g. the ability to solve linear systems of two equations and two unknowns.

Course content: New Present Value: The goals of the firm. Interaction of firms and capital markets. Asset valuation with known cash flows. Bond valuation: Term structure of interest rates. Forward rates and loans. Duration. Stock valuation: The Gordon growth model and variants. The functioning of equity markets. Risk and return: What is risk? The portfolio frontier. Capital Asset Pricing Model (CAPM) What is the price of risk? The capital markets model. Alternatives to CAPM. Market efficiency Valuation of risk cash flows. Capital budgeting. A first course in financial analysis for students with a basic knowledge of management. The course explores the way that firms and the capital market function to channel savings toward productive investments. From the investor's perspective it considers characteristics of the major financial contracts and the principles used in their valuation. It considers how investors should select their portfolios and the implications of this behaviour for pricing assets in stock and bond markets. It explores the question of whether stock markets are efficient in reflecting investors information. It applies these insights to the firm's financial management decision of whether or not to invest in a risky project and how to select among alternative investments.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Ten three-hour lecture and seminar sessions. This course is taught twice, in both Michaelmas and Lent Term. Students must either register for FM473 A which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or FM473 B which is taught in Lent Term

Indicative reading: Brealey, Myers and Allen, Principles of Corporate Finance.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM474 Half Unit Finance II

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Maria Bustamante OLD M2.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management and MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not open to students in the MSc Accounting and Finance and in the MSc Finance and Economics.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Finance I (FM473).

Course content: Capital structure and the cost of capital in efficient markets. Financial options: options payoffs, option valuation, put-call parity, binomial pricing model. Real options. Dividend policy and capital structure irrelevance. Capital structure: incentives created by corporate and personal taxes, financial distress. Signalling with dividends and capital structure. Complex securities: warrants, callable bonds, convertible bonds. Going public. This is a second course in financial analysis for students with a knowledge of the topics covered in Finance I. The course starts with the determination of the cost of capital for a firm in an efficient market. It then introduces the principles of financial options and shows how puts and calls can be priced. These tools are applied to the valuation of real options, that is, real investments where payoffs are affected by the options available to the firm in how the projects will be operated. After seeing the equivalence between the liabilities of the levered firm and financial options, the problem of capital structure and financial policy are further studied. The course closes with more advanced topics including convertible bonds and the decision of the firm to list its shares on a stock exchange.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets.

Indicative reading: Brealey, Myers and Allen, Principles of Corporate Finance.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

FM475 Half Unit Financial Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Daniel Ferreira OLD M2.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide a comprehensive overview of firms' financial decision making. The course is designed to provide an applied and practical approach to finance, enabling the students to address topical issues that modern corporations face. In particular, the course builds on concepts in business strategy, valuation techniques, and capital structure theories, and applies those tools in a systematic and rigorous way to real-life financial management problems. After a brief introduction to financial markets, the course focuses on corporate finance and business valuation. Topics such as mergers and acquisitions, initial public offerings, and leveraged buyouts will also be covered.

Teaching: Taught during module three - 10 interactive lectures of 3 hours each

Indicative reading: The recommended textbooks for this course are Higgins, Analysis for Financial Management, 9th Edition (main reference) and Berk and DeMarzo, Corporate Finance, 2008, and a pack of business case studies.

Assessment: Essay (20%, 2000 words) and project (65%) in the ST. Class participation (15%) in the LT.

FM481 Financial Econometrics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Andrea Tamoni OLD M2.09 and Dr Christian Julliard OLD M2.18

Dr Aureo De Paula

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Finance (Route 1) and MSc in Finance and Economics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Optional on MRes/PhD Economics.

Pre-requisites: Strong background in statistics and mathematics; some knowledge of Economics and Finance.

Course content: The Lent Term of FM481 is shared with FM404 Forecasting Financial Time Series.

Part 1 – Probability, Mathematical Statistics, and Asymptotic Theory, provides students with an understanding of basic concepts in probability and statistics with a view of eventual use for econometric analysis of financial data. Including Basic Probability Concepts, Random Variables, Selected Probability Distributions, Modes of Convergence, Properties of Estimators, Frequentist Hypothesis Testing and Bayesian Inference.

Part 2 - Theory and application of regression analysis, covers estimation and inference theory for regression models. The topics covered are least squares estimation, maximum likelihood estimation, instrumental variable estimation, and generalized method of moments estimation, with applications to linear models, many and weak instrument problems, limited dependent variable models, and panel data models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 36 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly classwork and problem sets.

Indicative reading:

- Cameron and Trivedi: Microeconometrics. Methods and Applications.

6,000 word dissertation in lieu of examination (90%) on a topic to be agreed with the course teacher, and coursework (10%). The dissertation option is to be chosen in only one half unit module, with its outline approved in LT by the course teacher who will act as the student's supervisor. Deadline is Monday 16 June 2014. Please note that MSc Finance and Economics (Research) students can submit a dissertation of 6,000-10,000 words.

GI400 Gender Theories in the Modern World: An Interdisciplinary Approach

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sumi Madhok COL.5.04A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture and MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities. This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course aims to enable students to: become familiar with the fullest range of gender theories with particular attention to the intersections of gender, sexuality and race; develop a critical appreciation of these different theories of gender; use gender theories to inform their appreciation of existing work in their own disciplines and in an interdisciplinary context; use the analysis of gender relations as a basis for case study evaluation and research. It is a full unit course and begins with a review of the formative influences on the development of gender theory, including the sex/gender distinction, economics and production/reproduction, theories of difference and the implications for analysis of a variety of sites including political representation, psychoanalysis and its impact on considering aspects of the social ;sexualities in a global context, theories of power and discourse, and questions raised by postcolonial theory. The course includes a number of sessions on gender, culture and global feminism, addressing issues of cultural relativism, human rights, agency and masculinities. The course considers the impact of gender analysis on key areas of social science investigation.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT. 1500 words.

GI402 Half Unit Gender, Knowledge and Research Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sumi Madhok COL.5.04A and Dr Marsha Henry COL.5.04H

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Gender Studies, MSc in Gender and MSc in Gender (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to the central issues at stake in designing and carrying out gender research at graduate and postgraduate level and beyond. The course maps the history of debates about gender and feminist research, and asks what difference it makes to take gender as the subject or object of research. Of particular concern are the ethical and political issues arising from doing gender research with respect to representing others and seeking to influence and engage with broader social contexts. Students will be introduced to debates about subjectivity and objectivity, the relationship between researcher and researched, and asked to evaluate the usefulness of particular methods and approaches. The course is interdisciplinary, introducing students to a range of perspectives on knowledge production and research practice. The course offers critiques of existing knowledge practices, and highlights the specific challenges to 'mainstream knowledge' that come from gendered and feminist perspectives. It explores how knowledge is produced and offers critical assessments of the dominant debates in gendered research practice, asking how we ensure that we conduct research ethically. Finally, the course focuses on the methodological challenges arising within interdisciplinary research. Through a discussion on methodological questions, it provides an opportunity to reflect on and synthesize a range of research design issues addressed on the course through producing and collectively evaluating student designed research proposals.

Teaching: The course is taught in weekly three-hour blocks in MT. The first two hours of each block will be a lecture and discussion session based on weekly assigned readings, followed by an hour-long 'workshop' session in which outside speakers will address dilemmas in epistemological or methodological dimensions of their research.

Formative coursework: Research Proposal (1500 words) in the MT.

Indicative reading:

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2500 words) and research project (50%) in the LT.

GI403 Half Unit Gender and Media Representation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sadie Wearing, COL.5.04D

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, Media and Culture. This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to enable students to think critically about representations of gender in a range of different media; to apply a range of theoretical and methodological approaches to the study of the media; to examine changing representations of gender in the context of wider social changes and to explore questions concerning the interpretation and use of different media and their products. The course focuses on examples largely drawn from Anglo-American media and usually includes topics such as news media and gender; gendered approaches to contemporary cinema; advertising and gender and critically explores terms such as 'postfeminism' in relation to media content. The course also considers themes such as the nature of contemporary celebrity and questions of media representations gender in relation to dimensions such as sexuality, class, race, age and (dis)ability. Students will be expected to maintain familiarity with contemporary UK media.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Lectures will incorporate audio-visual material. There will be occasional screenings of material to be discussed in class.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500-2000 words) to be submitted during class in Week 5 of the MT.

GI406 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Feminist Political Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne Phillips

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course covers some of the central debates in contemporary feminist political theory, with a particular emphasis on the legacy and usefulness of liberalism. The course focuses on debates and differences within feminist political theory, rather than justifications for, or defences of, feminist political theory. Among the problems raised are conceptions of the individual and individual autonomy; the relative invisibility of gender issues in mainstream literature on justice and equality; the tendency to conceive of equality in sex-blind terms; the tendency to presume a universally applicable set of norms. We consider the theoretical debates in relation to a number of contemporary political issues. Topics likely to be addressed include: feminism and contract, individualism and autonomy, identity politics, equality and the politics of difference, surrogacy, multiculturalism, and universalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Most of the material is in the form of articles, and a detailed list will be handed out at the beginning of the course. The following is only an indicative list: J Squires, Gender in Political Theory; C Pateman The Sexual Contract; I M Young, Justice and the Politics of Difference; W Brown, States of Injury; A Phillips Multiculturalism without Culture; C MacKenzie and N Stoljar (eds) Relational Autonomy.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words) in the MT.

GI407 Globalisation, Gender and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marsha Henry, Prof Diane Perrons and Prof Naila Kabeer.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD Human Geography and Urban Studies, MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies, MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course cannot be taken alongside GI409 Gender, Globalisation and Development: An Introduction.

Course content: This course will provide students with a thorough knowledge of two key interconnected and intersecting literatures: gender and development and gender and globalisation. The course provides students with an introduction to the history of the field of gender and development studies and globalisation and gender, in particular how globalisation is associated with widening social, spatial and gender inequalities. The course is organised into a number of themes: critical engagements and understandings of development; contemporary theories of gender, development and globalisation; global integration and development - gender, and poverty; China and India; Work, development and global divisions; Gender and security; and Issues of embodiment - sexuality, masculinity and embodiment. The second half of the course is concerned with gender and development: theorising policies and practice focusing on questions of recognition, redistribution and representation in relation to violence, reproductive rights, social protection, land rights gender mainstreaming and gender quotas. The course draws on a wide range of perspectives and considers diverse analytical tools for the analysis of gender, development and globalisation. Emphasis is placed on the analysis and theorisation of socio-economic and spatial aspects of change, particularly changes in working patterns, living arrangements, experiences and subjectivities. Empirical illustrations are provided through a series of case studies and readings of ethnographies linking global and local issues and the lives of people across the globe.

Teaching: Lectures in the MT will be 90 minutes, followed by 60 minute seminars. One week in the MT will be a 180 minute integrated lecture/seminar. Lectures in the LT will be 60 minutes, followed by 60 minute seminars.

GI410 Half Unit Screening the Present: contemporary cinema and cultural critique

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sadie Wearing, COL.5.04D

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students need to have an awareness of and interest in contemporary cultural theory.

Course content: The aims of the course are to offer students the opportunity to critically explore contemporary international cinema as a site for the interrogation and reproduction of contested contemporary social and political processes such as migration, globalisation and conflict. The course links cinematic representations to the preoccupations of contemporary cultural theory in relation to themes such as diaspora and identity, colonial/postcolonial memory, neo liberalism and cultural dislocations, religion and subjectivity and gendered violence. The course introduces students to a range of international film and will develop the critical tools for the analysis of both mainstream and marginal (or marginalised) cultural productions. It explores a range of critical and theoretical writing on film considering questions such as cinema as oppositional practice, the emergence of transnational cinema, questions of representation, global spectatorship and 'witnessing' and the affective dimensions of cinema. Indicative films are: Unknown Pleasures (dir. Jia Zhang-Ke), Persepolis (dir. Marjane Satrapi), Black Skin White Mask (dir. Isaac Julien), Waltz with Bashir (dir. Ari Folman), Cache (dir. Michael Haneke), The Road to Guantanamo (dir. Michael Winterbottom).

10 x 120 minute film screening sessions in the LT.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) including an element of film analysis in the LT.

GI411 Half Unit Gender, Postcolonialism, Development: Critical Perspectives and New Directions

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sumi Madhok COL.5.04A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture and MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: While there are no specific requirements, it is preferred that students have a background in social science or the humanities.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the growing body of scholarship that critically interrogates gender and development from a postcolonial perspective. It provides an opportunity for students to encounter and engage with canonical works within postcolonial theory in order to examine the historical and contemporary aspects of development thinking, policy and practice in relation to gender. In bringing together postcolonial thinking, gender/feminist theory and development discourse, this course combines a study of the historical/textual/cultural/political and philosophical in relation to and alongside the political-economic. The course will include readings from postcolonial texts and thinkers to critically understand coloniality, orientalism and subalternity with a view to identify these within the discourses and practices of gender and development and especially on questions of human rights, agency, representation, globalisation, and neoliberal developmentalism among others. Finally, the course will also point to new directions in contemporary theoretical thinking that have arisen in the wake of and in response to postcolonial work for e.g. writings on Empire and Multitude, Cosmopolitics/Cosmopolitanism and Transnationalism with a view to exploring how these might impact upon postcolonialism, gender and development.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) to be presented in a workshop.

GI414 Half Unit Gender and Social Policy: Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wendy Sigle-Rushton COL.5.04D

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the knowledge and theoretical tools that will allow them to critically engage with social policy issues and debates. It begins with an overview of theoretical explanations for the structure and evolution of social policies in a wide range of settings. Feminist perspectives on welfare are explored, while notions of justice, citizenship and inequality are applied as analytic tools to critically examine real world social policy issues such as micro-credit, conditional cash transfers (CCT), and the parental leave policies. The use of gender as a category of analysis is examined and attention is paid to the potentially modifying effects of categories such as race and class. Policy-making and political institutions are analysed, in part, to illustrate how assumptions (or aspirations) about gender roles and the form, function and responsibilities of the family are reflected in the framing, design, and evaluation of policies. The course also explores the gendered impact of economic on labour market opportunities and inequalities in access to economic resources.

Teaching: 30 hours of workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Essay (1500 words) in the MT.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course analyses the different ways in which gender is incorporated into national welfare states and the impact this has on particular, national structures of gender inequalities. The course covers the theory and methodology of comparative studies and their applicability to the analysis of gender, especially how well existing typologies of welfare states fare when gender is the focus of analysis, and the role of the European Union in the development of more gender equitable outcomes in EU countries. A number of key patterns of inequality and policy areas will be studied, including: the organisation of caring services; family policy; provisions for lone parents; the labour market and labour market policies; the practices and roles of men, especially regarding fatherhood; and fertility and aging. In looking at these areas students will be encouraged to contrast approaches of different welfare systems and consider the particularism of national approaches.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Essay (2000 words) due in the LT.

GI416 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Gender and Transition Societies: Politics, Policies and Patterns

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anna Plomien

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation and MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: From a gender perspective, the course brings together three dimensions - political, economic, and social - to study the process of transition from central planning economies and totalitarian governments towards models of mixed market economies and representative democracy, and in some cases to membership of the EU. The regional focus is on countries of CEE, but some comparisons will be made to cases from post-Soviet Eurasia, Russia, Latin America, and China. The course draws on theoretical, methodological and empirical and scholarship from a social science perspective, where gender is conceptualised both as an explanatory tool and as an object of analysis.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay and a seminar presentation.

GI417 Half Unit Gender, Population, and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wendy Sigle-Rushton COL.5.04E

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Although population change cannot be described, understood, or responded to without taking into account the wider -- and profoundly gendered -- social, political and economic context, feminism and gender theory have had relatively limited impact on the development and direction of the field. This course explores the implications both theoretically and practically. Examining the complex inter-relationship between population issues and policy, students will develop an appreciation of the potential contribution and impact that a feminist and gendered perspective has to offer. It will also explore the ways that feminists can use demographic tools and research to redress social and gender injustices.

Teaching: 30 hours of workshops in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of workshops in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to produce a 2,000 word essay (indicative of the kinds of questions they will encounter in the summative essay and exam) and to provide a self-assessment of the work that they have produced. This should be uploaded to Moodle in week 6 and will be returned by week 8.

GI418 Half Unit Feminist Economics and Policy: An Introduction

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Diane Perrons, Dr Ania Plomien, Prof Naila Kabeer

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course is run by the Gender Institute – an interdisciplinary institute. One of the key objectives is to bring a multi-perspectival approach to understanding of economic processes. As economic processes have a profound influence on social life, gender relations and gender equality, this course seeks to expose students interested in gender to the work of Feminist Economists.

An undergraduate level course in economics would be an advantage.

Course content: Recent decades have seen the emergence of gender equality as a key policy concern and Feminist Economics as a sub discipline. The purpose of the course is to consider the provenance and key tenets of Feminist Economics and how these ideas have been used to provide analytical understandings of gender issues with respect to economic processes and policies operating at macro and micro levels. At the macro level the course will analyse the implications of contemporary economic and financial governance from a gender perspective. At the micro level the course will analyse the economic foundations and analyses of gender inequality within employment and within the household focusing on wage and productivity differences and the gender division between 'productive' and 'reproductive' work. Gender is not the only economically significant marker of identity so it is important to analyse the intersectionality between other lines of difference, including race, social class, sexuality and migrant status. Individual well-being is also influenced by the level of development and transnational economic relations. Accordingly, the course aims to bridge the macro-micro divide by drawing together the gendered critique of existing biases in economic thinking and provide an analytical foundation for alternative approaches to policies that aim to contribute towards securing sustainable development and gender-equitable well-being.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 6 hours of workshops in the LT.

GI419 Half Unit Gender and Contemporary Social Movements

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kalpana Wilson, COL.5.04E

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The period from the 1990s onwards, which has seen the rapid acceleration of globalization and the consolidation of neoliberal policies and practices, has also been marked by a wide variety of social movements directly engaging with and challenging these processes. These movements have been characterized by new collectivities, new forms of organizing, and multiple visions of social, economic and political transformation. Exploring experiences and perspectives emerging from social movements, cutting across divisions between the 'global North' and 'global South,' this interdisciplinary course brings a transnational gender perspective to bear on these movements, the contexts in which they are located and the debates and contradictions they have generated.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

GI420 Half Unit Globalisation, Gender and Development: Policy and Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Naila Kabeer

Dr Kalpana Wilson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Management, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will provide students with a thorough knowledge of theoretical and policy debates in the field of gender and development at local, national and global levels and within a globalising context. The course is organised as a number of themed blocks focusing on questions of theorising policy and practice in the field of gender and development and paying attention to questions of recognition, redistribution and representation in relation to violence, reproductive rights, social protection, land rights, gender mainstreaming and gender quotas. Emphasis is placed on the analysis and theorisation of socio-economic and spatial aspects of change, particularly changes in working patterns, living arrangements, experiences and subjectivities. Empirical illustrations are provided through a series of case studies and readings of ethnographies linking global and local issues and the lives of people across the globe.

GI421 Half Unit Sexuality, Gender and Culture

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Clare Hemmings COL5.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities and MSc in Media and Communications. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: 'Sexuality, Gender and Culture', introduces students to historical and theoretical components of the field, and explores case studies of the development of sexual cultures, identities and social movements from the late 19th century to the present. The course provides theoretical foundations in this area through a case-study based approach. Indicative topics include: prostitution/sex work; internet and sexuality; queer theory and social movements; intersectional approaches to sexuality (through colonial and postcolonial theory). The course is interdisciplinary and demands a high level of student participation, but does not require a background in the field. It is also available as a full unit 'Sexuality, Gender and Globalisation' for which this is the first half.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 2000 word critical analysis to be submitted at the beginning of week 6; presentation of key readings with a partner in at least one seminar (with feedback).

GI422Sexuality, Gender and Globalisation*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Professor Naila KabeerAvailability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society) and MSc in Health, Community and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Course content: Sexuality, Gender and Globalisation, takes a case-study approach to questions of sexuality, gender and culture (in the first term) and a broad range of sexual formations in relation to nation and globalization (in the second). The full unit considers a variety of ways in which sexuality is central to the social sciences in today's globalised world. Theoretical approaches will be woven through the course via case study material so as not to provide a false opposition between example and approach. The course will allow a more thorough grounding in this area than the half unit, and will include a high element of student participation and group work. It is interdisciplinary but does not have a pre-requisite.Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the LT.Formative coursework: One 2500 word critical analysis to be submitted at the beginning of week 8 (MT); presentation of key readings with a partner in at least one seminar (MT); seminar facilitation with feedback (LT); submission of draft abstract for conference presentation by the beginning of week 6 (LT).Indicative reading: Laura Ann Stoler (1995) Race and the Education of Desire (Durham: Duke University Press); Cindy Patton & Benigno Sanchez-Eppler, Eds (2000) Queer Diasporas (Durham: Duke University Press); Jon Binnie (2004) The Globalization of Sexuality (London: Sage); Lisa Adkins (2002) Revisions: Gender and Sexuality in Late Modernity (OUP); Rosemary Hennessy (2000) Profit and Pleasure: Sexual Identities in Late Capitalism (New York: Routledge); David Evans (1993) Sexual Citizenship: The Material Construction of Sexualities (New York: Routledge); Laura Agustin (2007) Sex at the Margins: Migration, Labour Markets and the Rescue Industry (London: Zed Books); Jasbir Puar (2007) Terrorist Assemblages: Homonationalism in Queer Times (Durham: Duke UP); Amy Lind (2010) Development, Sexual Rights and Global Governance (New York: Routledge); Tom Shakespeare (2006) Disability Rights and Wrongs (New York: Routledge).Assessment: Essay (70%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Contemporary Disputes about Justice*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Katrin Flikschuh CON6.08Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Theory and MSc in Political Theory (Research).

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course offers a critical analysis of some of the debates about distributive justice following the publication of John Rawls' A Theory of Justice in 1971. The focus is a) on Rawlsian and post-Rawlsian methods of normative justifications in relation to distributive justice in general, and b) on the problematic extension of Rawls' domestic theory of justice to the global domain. The course begins with an overview of Rawls' theory of justice and goes on to consider some initial responses to it. However, primary focus will be on Rawlsian and post-Rawlsian global justice. Particular attention will be paid to the way in which liberal advocates of global justice introduce and deal with issues of scope methodologically and substantively. We shall consider attempted early extensions of the Rawlsian difference principle to the global domain and ensuing wider global justice debates, including human rights and arguments for humanitarian intervention. We shall ask whether scope-related issues affect the very way in which we conceive of justice, or whether they merely pose new substantive problems that can, in principle, be solved by means of the contractarian framework developed by Rawls in relation to the liberal domestic political context.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit two non-assessed essays which will be marked and commented on but which do not count towards formal assessment of this course.

Indicative reading: J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice, R. Nozick, Anarchy, State and Utopia, R. Teacher responsible: Prof Sumantra Bose CYBER

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Human Rights. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will generally be given to MSc Comparative Politics students and then to those on other programmes, who are welcome to apply but can be admitted only subject to availability of space.

Course content: This course examines the range of strategies available to states and political elites seeking to regulate national and ethnic conflict. It explores when particular strategies are employed, and under what conditions they are likely to 'succeed'. The literature drawn upon is primarily empirical political science but also includes political philosophy, policy analysis, international law and political sociology. The course materials are online on Moodle, the LSE's electronic teaching and learning system. A survey of 10 strategies of eliminating or democratically managing cultural, ethnic and ethno-national difference and conflict: genocide, expulsion, partition, secession, integration and assimilation, hegemonic control, devolution/autonomy and federalism, power-sharing and consociationalism, electoral system design, and language policy. The topic for each week is approached with reference to multiple case studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The first meeting is a set-up and introductory session, and the last a revision session.

GV465 Half Unit War, Peace and Politics of National Self-Determination

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sumantra Bose CYBER

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society) and MSc in Human Rights. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority consideration will be given to students taking the MSc

Comparative Politics and the MSc Global Politics. Students on other programmes (including MSc Human Rights, MSc Empires, Colonialism, Globalisation and MA/MSc History of International Relations) are welcome to apply, but can be admitted only subject to availability of space. Students on all programmes are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course. This course is capped at 4 groups, and admission cannot be guaranteed. All interested students must apply online as per the stipulated procedure and deadline which is Wednesday, 9th October 2013.

Course content: This course examines some of the most intractable and violent disputes over sovereignty and national self-determination in the world today, and inquires into the prospects of moving from war to peace through accommodation and compromise. The conflicts studied are drawn from the Middle East (Israel and Palestine), South Asia (Kashmir, Sri Lanka), the Balkans (former Yugoslavia and within it, Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo) and the EU area (Northern Ireland, Cyprus). Students are exposed to the specific histories and contexts of these cases but are also encouraged to think comparatively across countries and regions. The course materials are online on Moodle, the LSE's electronic teaching and learning system.

Are disputes arising from conflicting claims to national self-determination inherently of a zero-sum nature, or can they be resolved? If the latter, how? What factors drive conflict at the local level? Which sorts of institutional arrangements might be able to anchor peace settlements? Can we draw useful comparative lessons from the experience of peace processes that have sought or seek to craft solutions to this type of conflict in diverse parts of the contemporary world? What roles can international actors— influential and/or interested foreign states, regional alliances of states, multilateral institutions—play in such processes and their outcomes?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. Ten lectures and nine seminars in the MT. The first lecture is a set-up and introductory session.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to prepare and make one seminar presentation and write one unassessed essay of 1,500 words due in Week 10 of the MT.

Indicative reading: Sumantra Bose, Contested Lands: Israel-Palestine, Kashmir, Bosnia, Cyprus and Sri Lanka (2007); Edward Said, The Question of Palestine (1980); Bernard Wasserstein, Israel and Palestine (2004); John McGarry (ed.), Northern Ireland and the Divided World (2001); Sumantra Bose, Kashmir: Roots of Conflict, Paths to Peace (2003); David Hannay, Cyprus: The Search for a Solution (2005); Sumantra Bose, Bosnia after Dayton: Nationalist Partition and International Intervention (2002); Sumantra Bose, States, Nations, Sovereignty: Sri Lanka, India and the Tamil Eelam Movement (1994).

Assessment: Research project (100%) in the ST.

A 5,000-word research paper will determine 100% of the final grade. The deadline for submission of the paper is the end of Week 5 of the ST.

GV467 Half Unit Introduction to Comparative Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Woodruff CON3.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Comparative Politics (Research). This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Optional for MSc China in Comparative Perspective (space permitting). Optional for other students with the approval of Dr Woodruff.

Course content: This course serves as the 'core', compulsory course the MSc in Comparative Politics and is intended to provide an overarching theoretical and methodological backdrop for all of the diverse course offerings available to students on this programme.

The course introduces students to the field of Comparative Politics as represented in contemporary journals like Comparative Politics, Comparative Political Studies, and even Comparative Studies in Society and History, and among the various members of the Comparative Politics Group in the Government Department here at the LSE. Students examine the theoretical and methodological underpinnings of Comparative Politics, important critiques of these underpinnings, and diverse examples of 'best practice' in research and writing in this sub-field of the discipline of Politics or Political Science.

Lectures and seminar discussions focus both on important areas of research in comparative politics and methodological challenges involved. Readings treat such variegated topics of inquiry and debate in comparative politics as civil society, collective action, democracy, economic development, and ethnic conflict.

The course does not follow a 'great books' approach nor rely on a textbook. Instead, the course treats examples of real existing Comparative Politics as practiced - and published - by leading scholars in the field in recent years. These examples are chosen to cover diverse forms of comparison, diverse modes of analysis, diverse topic areas, and diverse countries and regions of the world. Cutting across these forms of diversity are a set of questions that will be addressed throughout the course. These questions concern the possibilities and limitations of various methods of comparative analysis for explaining observable patterns in politics.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Dr David Woodruff delivers the lectures for the course, whilst members of the Comparative Politics Group in the Department run the seminars.

Formative coursework: One unassessed essay of roughly 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Alasdair MacIntyre, 'Is a Science of Comparative Politics Possible?' Theda Skocpol, States and Social Revolutions. Ashutosh Varshney, 'Ethnic Conflict and Civic Life: India and Beyond.. Hall, Peter A. 'Adapting Methodology to Ontology in Comparative Politics'. Doner, Richard F., Bryan K. Ritchie, and Dan Slater 'Systemic Vulnerability and the Origins of Developmental States: Northeast and Southeast Asia in Comparative Perspective'.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Law and Politics of Regulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gordon Baldwin NAB 7.08, Prof Julia Black NAB 7.09, Dr Kira Matus CON 6.10 and Dr Elena Busuioc

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regulation and MSc in Regulation (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to give students an essential grounding in theories of regulation encountered in the legal, political science and law & economics literatures. It examines competing explanations of the origins, development and reform of regulation; the styles and processes of regulation; issues surrounding enforcement; the inter-organisational and international aspects of regulation; and questions of evaluation and accountability. Some specific cases will be explored through the medium of an additional practitioner seminar series, which will be led by experienced practitioners invited on a one-off basis. The course focuses on the following key themes: contrasting perspectives on regulation, differences in regulatory styles, dynamics and processes, regulatory standard-setting, regulatory enforcement, evaluating regulation.

Teaching: The course is taught: (a) by 20, two-hour sessions in variable format (some lecture-discussions, student-paper led discussions, debates) comprising the academic core, (b) by nine seminars on 'economics of regulation' and 'research design' in the Michaelmas term and (c) approximately five practitioner seminars, drawing on practitioners from a variety of regulated sectors.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce three written essays.

Indicative reading: R Baldwin, M Cave and M Lodge Understanding Regulation (2012); M Moran, The British Regulatory State (2003); A Ogus, Regulation (2004); R Baldwin & C McCrudden, Regulation and Public Law (1987); C Hood, H Rothstein & R Baldwin, The Government of Risk (2001); R Baldwin, Rules and Government (1994); J Black, M Lodge and M Thatcher, Regulatory Innovation, (2005); C Sunstein, Risk and Reason (2002), R. Baldwin, M. Cave and M. Lodge Oxford Handbook of Regulation (2010), M Lodge and K Wegrich, Managing Regulation (2012).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%) in the ST.

The examination will involve answering three questions out of 12.

GV498 Half Unit Multiculturalism

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Jenco CON4.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Theory, MSc in Political Theory (Research) and MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar explores the political and epistemological issues of multiculturalism, broadly understood, in contemporary political theory. After deciding on a tentative definition for "culture," we will explore how and why the concept has become so integral to normative theories of contemporary political life. In particular, we will focus on how increasing recognition of plurality within liberal democratic regimes has led to new theories of both culture and community. Along the way, we will consider normative questions such as: Should we encourage "global citizenship," or should we celebrate the local and the national? If cultures are dynamic and hybrid entities, how can they be identified and protected politically? Are there significant and legitimate differences between "the West" and "the rest"—and if so, how must our interpretive approach change as we include voices from culturally diverse groups into already-established political communities?

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are invited to write one 3000 word formative essay, due no later than week 10.

Indicative reading: Will Kymlicka, Multicultural Citizenship, Brian Barry, Culture and Equality, Chandran Kukathas, The Liberal Archipelago, Iris Young, Justice and the Politics of Difference, Homi Bhabha, The Location of Culture.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

GV499 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Political Theory, MSc in Political Theory (Research), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Regulation. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A 10,000 word dissertation is required to be submitted as part of the assessment for each Government MSc programme. The dissertation is due by the 2nd September and is compulsory.

Teaching: No teaching info

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September.

GV4A2 Half Unit Citizens' Political Behaviour in Europe: Elections Public Opinion and Identities

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Bruter CON406

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Politics and Communication, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Monday, 21 October 2013.

Pre-requisites: In order to be accepted on the course, all students must submit a research project idea by the end of the sixth week in Michaelmas term. The document should be around 2 pages in length and should at least do two things: first, indicating a course-related research topic and a specific research question and explain what makes it interesting, and second suggesting the methodology the student intends to use to answer this question empirically. If you include references to others' work (which would be a good thing to do), please also include a mini-bibliography.

Course content: This course intends to familiarise students with the study of electoral psychology and political behaviour in Europe in a broad sense. The three main objects of study in political science are institutions, policies, and citizens, and the study of political behaviour and political psychology is the field that centres on the third. A very important part of political behaviour is electoral participation and vote choice. We will explore general models of voting behaviour, electoral psychology, and participation, as well as specific aspects such as extremist politics. We will look closely at public opinion, how it is formed and how it can be studied. In the final part of the course, special consideration is given to political identities and how they are related to political behaviour.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Bruter, M. 2005 Citizens of Europe? Basingstoke: Palgrave. LeDuc, L, Niemi, R, and Norris, P. 2010. Comparing Democracies 3: Elections and Voting in the 21st Century. London: Sage. Van der Eijk, C, and Franklin, M. 2009. Elections and Voters. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan. Franklin, Mackie, et al. 1992. Electoral Change. Cambridge: Cambridge UP. Assessment: Project (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

One empirical research project on a topic relevant to the course and approved by the course co-ordinator with a word limit of 5,000 words (100%).

GV4A3 Half Unit Social Choice Theory and Democracy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joseph Mazor

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Political Theory, MSc in Political Theory (Research) and MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: No prior knowledge of social choice theory or of any specific mathematical discipline is required.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the current debates in democratic theory. The course also introduces students to key social choice theorems, such as Arrow's Impossibility Theorem and the Gibbard-Satterthwaite Theorem, which imply that making rational collective decisions may be difficult or impossible. Responses to these theorems from the normative democratic theory literature are explored. The course covers central debates in contemporary democratic theory, including deliberative versus aggregative democracy, procedural versus outcome-based or epistemic justifications of democracy, the problem of democratic citizenship, and the foundations of democratic legitimacy. While all students are required to understand the key social choice theorems introduced in the course, the focus will be on the implications of these theorems for normative democratic theory rather than their mathematical details.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to give a short presentation and to write a formative essay. Feedback will be given on this material, but it does not count towards final assessment.

Indicative reading: John Stuart Mill (1861) Considerations on Representative Government; David Estlund (2008) Democratic Authority; S Kelly (1988), Social Choice Theory: An Introduction; Amy Gutmann & Dennis Thompson (1996) Democracy and Disagreement; Christian List, "The Discursive Dilemma and Public Reason", Ethics 116(2): 362-404 (2006).

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2500 words) in the LT.

Consists of two parts: (i) a two-hour unseen written examination in the ST, accounting for 66.67% of the marks; (ii) a single essay of up to 2,500 words on a topic assigned by the course teacher or agreed with the course teacher by Week 10 of LT.

GV4A4 The Politics of Globalization

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathias Koenig-Archibugi CON4.01 and Dr David Rampton

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on the MSc Global Politics are guaranteed access.

Course content: This is the core course of the MSc Global Politics. It examines the nature, the causes and the political consequences of globalization in a variety of domains, including security, culture, the economy, and the environment. The course aims at enabling students to assess the extent of continuity and transformation in key areas of global politics.

The course content will cover the following topics though specific lecture titles may change from year to year: the contemporary debate about globalisation; changes in the nature of military power and war; the evolution of global economic governance; the globalization of migration and environmental concerns; the role of global intergovernmental and nongovernmental organizations; the nature of US power in the contemporary global order; and core issues of global ethics, citizenship and governance.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

3 additional lectures and 3 seminars in the LT on writing a global politics dissertation.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce two written essays plus two short presentations on topics assigned to them.

Indicative reading: Held, D. and McGrew, A. Globalization/Anti-Globalization, second edition, Cambridge, Polity 2007; P. Hirst, G. Thompson and S. Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

GV4A5 Half Unit International Migration and Immigration Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eiko Thielemann CON3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course has limited availability and requires that students

(regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible via the 'LSE For You' capped course management system. This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013. Students on other relevant degree programmes may attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and the written permission of the teacher responsible Course content: This course offers a theoretically informed account of the challenges posed by international migration and resulting policy responses. The focus is on the comparative analysis of immigration control policies in OECD countries.

The course is structured in three parts. The first introduces a number of theoretical models that seek to explain the dynamics of international migration, migration control and migrant integration, addressing questions such as: Why do people migrate? Why do states accept migration? The second, comparative, part deals with national public policy responses to the issue of asylum & refugees, 'illegal' migration & human trafficking and (legal) immigration. The final part focuses on the analysis of multilateral policy initiatives on migration management at the global, regional and bi-lateral level.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit two non-assessed essays.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook but the following texts are useful introductions: M Baldwin-Edwards & M Schain, The Politics of Immigration in Western Europe, 1994; A. Betts, Protection by Persuasion: International Cooperation in the Refugee Regime, 2009; A. GV4A8 Half Unit Nationalist Conflict, Political Violence and Terrorism

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Hughes CON5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may gain access subject to space. This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible. It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: How can we distinguish legitimate resistance and political violence from terrorism? What is the relationship between war and terror? What distinguishes a combatant from non-combatant? Do counterinsurgency methods based on force and the securitization of the state work? Should we erode civil liberties and democratic values to fight terrorism? What consequences follow from the prominent role of psychologists in the study of political violence and terrorism? This course attempts to answer these and similar questions by a comparative examination of the theories and ethics of political violence and the root causes, nature and types, and dynamics of violence. This course also evaluates different political and security policies and methods of conflict resolution as change agents. A number of case studies of historical and contemporary conflicts are examined to illustrate the theoretical and policy dilemmas. The course has two parts. Firstly, it examines definitions and concepts, the root causes and factors of radicalization in political violence, the ethical dilemmas, the principles and efficacy of the laws and norms of armed conflict, repertoires of political violence, and the evolution from the era of decolonization of state counterinsurgency (COIN) and counterterrorism policies. Key motifs in COIN and counterterrorism will be examined including coercive versus cooperative approaches ("hearts and minds"), the spectrum of dealing with communal resistance from genocide to cooption, policies of criminalization, and the balance between security and liberty. Secondly, it explores the key issues and debates through a number of case studies that analyse political violence and terrorism in democracies and non-democracies, including; Chechnya and Northern Ireland as nationalist secessionist conflicts, the insurgency and counterinsurgency in Iraq, and the new transnational challenges posed by Al Qaeda. Throughout the course comparisons will be made and lessons drawn from the performance of different regime types (colonial, democratic, transitional democratic, and authoritarian) in managing political violence. This is a Moodle course.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

In addition there will be at least two film screenings.

Formative coursework: One essay of 2,500 words. Students will also contribute to a group presentation.

Indicative reading: Tore Bjorgo ed. Root Causes of Terrorism, Routledge (2005); Andrew Silke ed. Terrorists, Victims and Society, Psychological Perspectives on Terrorism and its Consequences, Wiley (2003); David Whittaker, The Terrorism Reader, Routledge (3rd edn, 2007); Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars: A Moral Argument with Historical Illustrations, Basic Books (1992); Arguing about War, Yale University Press (2004); Michael Ignatieff *The Lesser Evil. Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Columbia), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Hertie), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and NUS), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in International Development, MPA in International Development (LSE and Columbia), MPA in International Development (LSE and Hertie), MPA in International Development (LSE and NUS), MPA in International Development (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE & Columbia University), MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE & Sciences Po), MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE and Hertie), MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE and NUS), MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Columbia), MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Hertie), MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and NUS), MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Public Policy and Administration (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 6 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by an external organisation. Typical clients include public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations or think tanks and NGOs. The group will have from October to February to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT.

All students must attend the opening capstone introduction session in MT. Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during MT.

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Office for Government Commerce Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Strategy Survival Guide (London: Prime Minister's Strategy Unit. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Continuous assessment (20%) in the MT.

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances.

1) A presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. The presentation must take place by week 8 of the Lent term, on a date agreed with the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation after receipt of the presentation and project report.

2) A group project report of up to 15,000 words to be submitted during the Lent Term. The report is read by academic markers and their assessment accounts for 60% of the final grade.

Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution to the group's work, to be submitted alongside the report. The reflection should be no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project. The reflections should not be included in the report submitted to the client.

Any appendices to the project report should only consist of technical data and may not contain any substantive analysis.

3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

Teaching: Students will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide guidance on this piece of work. MPA Dissertation Workshops will be held to assist in the development of the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) in the ST. Project (10%) in the MT.

1) The dissertation title, abstract, contents page and a 5 page synopsis/introduction will count for 10% of the overall dissertation mark. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their supervisor. Students will be given feedback on their abstracts. 2) The full dissertation of no more than 10,000 words will account for the remaining 90% of the overall mark.

GV4B6 Half Unit Kant's Political Philosophy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Katrin Flikschuh CON6.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Optional for MSc Political Theory, MSc European Studies: Ideas and Identities and LSE-Sciences Po Double Degree in European Studies; open to others as an outside option on request.

Course content: An introduction to and critical appraisal of Immanuel Kant's political philosophy. Despite the enormous influence which Kant's moral philosophy has exerted on debates in contemporary liberal thinking, his political philosophy has until recently been largely ignored. This is beginning to change: Kant's political philosophy is beginning to be studied in its own right. Such study shows that his political thinking diverges in many of its central aspects from contemporary liberal thinking: the impact of Kant's thought upon the latter must, therefore, be re-assessed. Through close reading and analysis of the primary texts, this course introduces students to Kant's distinctive approach to political thinking. Core texts will include selected passages from the Doctrine of Right (Part 1 of the Metaphysics of Morals); Kant's celebrated essay, 'On Perpetual Peace'; and his less well known, but no less important essay 'On the Common Saying: "This may be true in theory, but does it work in Practice".' The analytic and substantive focus will be on three interrelated themes: Kant's idea of freedom as an idea of reason; his account and justification of individual property rights; and his cosmopolitan conception of Right, or justice. Although the analytic and philosophical focus will be on Kant's own political thinking, we shall throughout compare and contrast Kant's position with contemporary Kantian liberalism.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Additional one-to-one advice sessions on assessed essay writing in ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to come well prepared and take an active role in seminar discussion. They are expected to write to short formative essays which will be marked and commented, but do not count towards formal assessment for this course.

GV4B7 Half Unit The Liberal Idea of Freedom

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Valentini

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Theory and MSc in Political Theory (Research).

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Analysis and critical assessment of conceptions of freedom in contemporary (liberal) political thinking.

The concept of freedom is often invoked in political life. Many policies and broader political agendas are justified in its name. In fact, an entire political ideology, 'liberalism' (arguably the dominant one in the Western world) appears to be built around the idea of freedom. But what, exactly, does freedom mean? Is freedom best understood in terms of absence of interference or in terms of non-domination? Is one made unfree only when one's rights are violated? Does poverty constitute a constraint on freedom? And could citizens of an authoritarian regime be described as free?

In the first part of the course, we will address these questions by analysing different prominent conceptions of freedom, including negative freedom (moralized and non-moralized), positive freedom, republican freedom and freedom understood in terms of capabilities. In doing so, we will explore the work of prominent contemporary political thinkers such as Isaiah Berlin, Charles Taylor, Philip Pettit, Robert Nozick and Amartya Sen.

In the second part of the course, we will turn to substantive debates surrounding specific liberal freedoms and their value. We will address questions such as: What are the limits of freedom of religion? Might parents withdraw children from school at a young age on religious grounds? Why is freedom of speech valuable, and what types of speech may be legitimately outlawed by the state? What justifies freedom of movement, and what constraints might be permissibly placed on it?

The overall aim of the course is to allow students to critically assess the quality and strength of the different theorists' conceptions of freedom and to deploy those conceptions in the analysis and justification of the particular freedoms defended within the liberal state.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

GV4C2 Half Unit Globalization, Conflict and Post-Totalitarianism

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Denisa Kostovicova CON4.15, Prof Mary Kaldor 50L2.06 and Dr Vesna Bojicic-Dzelilovic 50L1.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Human Rights and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The students of MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Conflict Studies and MSc in Comparative Politics have priority access to the course.

This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible. It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: The course offers a theoretically informed account of the challenges faced by post-totalitarian transition countries emerging out of totalitarian regimes in the era of globalisation, and examines them empirically in reference to examples from the Balkans, the Caucasus and the Middle East. The regions chosen are those which have experienced particular difficulties in effecting a peaceful process of transition to democracy, market economy and integration in a multilateral system. The course will start with an introduction to theories of globalisation and the reasons why the legacy of totalitarianism is different from the legacy of classic authoritarian states. The course is structured around three issue areas: political ideologies and state breakdown; transition economy and organised crime; post-totalitarian society. It looks at nationalism linked to global diasporas and fundamentalist networks, new wars in the context of international intervention, and international protectorates. Transition economy includes both an introduction to transition strategies (privatisation, liberalisation and macro-economic stabilisation) as well as the perverse effects of illegal economic networks and organised crime stemming both from the totalitarian past and the impact of globalisation. The last block of questions investigates post-totalitarian societies from the perspective of transition justice, (un)civil societies and new minorities. While analysing these issues accompanied with relevant regional illustrations particular attention is made to grasp unique aspects of post-totalitarianism triggered by the simultaneity of transition and globalisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one written essay, plus one short presentation on topics assigned to them.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students who are taking GV4C6 Legislative Politics: European Union cannot take this course.

Course content: This course provides an advanced analysis of the theory and practice of legislative politics in the United States of America.

This course provides an in-depth analysis of the theory and practice of legislative politics. In the early weeks of the course we examine interests-based and ideology-based theories of legislative politics, theories of committee and party organisation, the role of deliberations in congressional debates and hearings, and the legislative process. Later in the course, we examine the legislative process in more detail, using important episodes in US legislative politics, with topics including Depression era trade conflicts (e.g., the Smoot-Hawley Tariff of 1930 and the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934), congressional activism and partisan polarization, and social issues (abortion).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit one formative essay in week 6.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Two parts: (1) a two-hour unseen written examination in June, accounting for 67% of the mark (consisting of short reply and essay questions); and (2) an essay of 4,000 words on one of the topics, which must apply the theoretical issues to empirical data, to be submitted at the end of Week 1 of ST, accounting for the remaining 33% of the mark.

GV4C5 Half Unit Politics of Economic Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cheryl Schonhardt-Bailey CON6.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: This course provides an advanced policy-oriented analysis of the politics of economic policymaking in advanced industrialized countries and selected developing countries drawing on both contemporary, historical and comparative introduction into the politics of economic policy. It applies explicitly the frameworks of interests-based, ideational and institutional approaches to the study of economic policies. It seeks to explore both the independent and interactive effects of interests, ideas and institutions on economic policies. These policies include macroeconomic policy areas such as EMU, financial stability and financial crises, independent central banking, as well as trade policy (contemporary and classic case studies), and agricultural policy. Thus, the course examines some of the economic policies of the European Union, other advanced industrialized countries and developing countries.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Early weeks present the theoretical frameworks of interests, ideas and institutions, as applied to the politics of economic policymaking more generally. The remaining weeks focus on specific economic policies, including independent central banking, EMU financial stability and financial crises, trade, agricultural policy. Three of the course lectures will be given jointly with the undergraduate course, Politics of Money, Finance and Trade in Comparative Perspective (GV353).

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit one formative essay in week 6.

GV4C6 Half Unit Legislative Politics: European Parliament

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Alexander Herzog CON4.21

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that all students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible. It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: The course provides a theoretical and empirical analysis of legislative politics in the European Union, focussing on political behaviour and organization in the European Parliament, and the role of the European Parliament in the EU's legislative procedures.

At a theoretical level, the course will introduce the student to general theories of legislative behaviour and organization - such as the role of interests and ideology in legislative politics, how legislative parties and committees work, the use of NOMINATE to 'map' legislative voting behaviour, and how agenda-setting and veto-power rules shape policy outcomes. At an empirical level, the course will focus on the operation of the EU legislative process, behaviour and political organisation inside the European Parliament, and how the interaction between the EP, the Council and the Commission shapes EU policy outcomes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write one non-assessed short essay plus a 4,000 word assessed long-essay. The long essay should be an 'analytic narrative' of a piece of EU legislation. One of the seminars will be dedicated to explaining the essay project.

Indicative reading: S Hix, A Noury & G Roland, Democratic Politics in the European Parliament, Cambridge, 2007; S Hix & R Scully (Eds), The European Parliament at Fifty, special issue of Journal of Common Market Studies 41(2), 2003; R Corbett, F Jacobs & M Shackleton, The European Parliament, 8th edn, Harper, 2011; G Tsebelis, Veto Players: How Political Institutions Work, Princeton University Press, 2002.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

GV4C9 Half Unit Democratization and its Discontents in Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sidel CON4.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on the variegated patterns of democratization observed in Southeast Asia over the past few decades. Special attention is paid to the three democracies in the region (Indonesia, the Philippines, and Thailand), to the endurance of authoritarianism and the prospects for democracy in Burma, and to 'creeping pluralism' and 'creeping constitutionalism' in Vietnam. The course examines important trends and developments accompanying democratization in the region - in government-business relations, in local politics, in civil society, in religious practices, in inter-communal relations, and in the organization and use of violence in politics. Throughout the course, the countries examined are treated as cases suitable for analysis and comparison in the light of the broader Comparative Politics and Global Politics literatures on democratization and its discontents.

The course begins by situating democratization in Southeast Asia against a comparative historical and sociological backdrop, paying close attention to the variegated patterns of class, state, and religious formation in the region. The course compares patterns of democratization in the Philippines, Thailand, and Indonesia, while examining the constraints on democratization elsewhere in Southeast Asia. Lectures, readings, and seminar discussions then turn to key trends accompanying democratization in Southeast Asia. The trends examined include campaigns against 'corruption' and in support of 'the rule of law' and 'good governance'; social movements and struggles for popular empowerment; the democratization of religious practices and institutions; religious violence, and separatist mobilization. These trends are treated through comparative analysis of different cases within Southeast Asia and in the light of relevant theoretical literatures drawn from Comparative Politics and Global Politics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.
If more than 12 students take the course, there will be two separate seminar groups.

Formative coursework: One non-assessed 1,000 word essay due in the fifth week of the term.

GV4D3 Half Unit Local Power in an Era of Globalization, Democratization, and Decentralization

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sidel CON4.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society) and MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible. It is capped at 3 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: Over the course of the past two decades, the inter-related processes of marketization, democratization, and decentralization are said to have generated new social forces and political freedoms in localities around the world. Market reforms and village elections in China, the end of Communist Party rule in Russia and Eastern Europe, and trends of (re)democratization in Asia, Africa, and Latin America have all offered new opportunities for local people to effect change in local politics around the world. Yet academic, journalistic, and policy accounts have highlighted the rise and resilience of 'local despotisms' – "authoritarian enclaves," "bosses", "caciques", "chiefs", "clans", "local strongmen", "mafias", "warlords" – in the midst of this reworking of market, electoral, and administrative circuitries. This course focuses on this phenomenon of what scholars have come to call 'subnational authoritarianism', competing explanations for its emergence and entrenchment, the diversity of its manifestations, and various challenges mounted against its perpetuation. The goals of the course are twofold. First, the course offers a critical examination of competing accounts of and explanations for the phenomenon of 'subnational authoritarianism' in the developing world. Second, the course helps students think more carefully, critically, and creatively about local politics more broadly, and to do so with an eye towards the comparative analysis of local power structures rooted in local economies and societies. The course begins with an examination of an emerging new political-science literature on 'subnational authoritarianism' and a more established body of scholarship on clientelism and machine politics. The course then turns to case studies in diverse settings, ranging from southern Italy to China, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, and Russia, and extending to cases of 'warlordism' in contexts such as contemporary Afghanistan, Iraq, and Somalia. The readings allow students to examine and evaluate competing explanations for the rise and entrenchment of local bosses, chiefs, clans, and mafia, diverging descriptions of their modes of domination, and alternative accounts of their disappearance, evolution, or transformation in the face of economic, social, and political change. Successive weeks also explore the links between constellations in local politics on the one hand, and patterns of economic development, ethnic conflict, and religious mobilization on the other. The final weeks of the course shift attention to the efforts to challenge entrenched local power structures and to create "countervailing power" through popular mobilization, political participation, and social empowerment in localities in diverse settings across the world.

GV4D4 Half Unit The Politics of Inequality and Redistribution

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Hopkin CON5.18

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an overview of contemporary redistributive politics in the rich democracies. The objective is to explain why the distribution of wealth, income and opportunities differs so much between democratic countries with similar levels of economic development. The course draws largely on literature from the field of comparative politics, although perspectives from other disciplines - such as economics and social policy - are brought in as appropriate. The focus is on tracing the interactions between political institutions such as political parties and elections, labour market institutions, and the redistributive institutions of the welfare state. This approach is used to examine the growth of the public sector in the twentieth century, the differences between Social Democratic and Christian Democratic welfare states, the impact of wage bargaining institutions, the redistributive implications of age, gender and territorial location, and redistribution through corruption and rent-seeking. By tracing interactions between constitutional arrangements, electoral politics, and the institutions of the welfare system and the labour market, explanations can be provided for the striking differences in social cohesion and human development amongst the world's rich democracies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one non-assessed essay.

- an individual seminar presentation (ie slide set plus no more than 20 minutes talk) (10%);
- a case study analysis of max. 2,000 words in Michaelmas Term (25%);
- an essay of max. 4,000 words (60%) due at the beginning of Lent Term.

GV4D7 Half Unit Dilemmas of Equality

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may take the course with the approval of the course organiser.

Course content: The course starts with why the general question of why (or if) equality matters. It then introduces some of the major debates in the contemporary egalitarian literature: equality of opportunity versus equality of outcome; equality of what; luck egalitarianism and the distributive paradigm. In the final section, it focuses on more specific issues and dilemmas. The topics addressed this year are whether affirmative action offends principles of equal treatment; whether gender 'choices' legitimate an unequal division of labour; and who carries responsibility for addressing global inequality.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will submit a short formative essay (up to 1,000 words) and will be given feedback on this before submitting their assessed coursework

Indicative reading: D Potter et al, Democratization, J. Grugel, Democratization, Rueschmeyer, Stephens and Stephens, Capitalist Development and Democracy; J Linz and A S Stepan, Problems of Democratic Transition and Consolidation

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

GV4E2 Half Unit Capitalism and Democracy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Hopkin

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Available as an outside option and for students on other programmes with the teacher's consent.

Course content: Compatibility and incompatibility of capitalism and democracy; Constitutional restraints on economic policymaking in central banking and property rights; Democracy and economic inequality; World context and the compatibility of democracy and capitalism; Democracy and economic crisis. This course examines the uneasy interaction between the two dominant concepts underpinning political and economic institutions in advanced industrial societies. It addresses in particular questions about the relationship of capitalism to democracy, both conceptually and empirically. We consider whether democracy undermines or supports capitalism, focusing on policies relating to central banking, redistribution, and property rights. We also examine how capitalism may undermine or sustain democracy and whether contemporary international circumstances heighten the tension between democracy and capitalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit one non-assessed essay

Indicative reading: Schumpeter, Capitalism, Socialism, and Democracy. Holmes, 'Precommitment and the Paradox of Democracy'. Mill, Considerations on Representative Government. Kalecki, 'Political Aspects of Full Employment'. Olson, 'Dictatorship, Democracy, and Development'. Stiglitz, 'Central Banking in a Democratic Society'. Beard, An Economic Interpretation of the Constitution of the United States. Kenworthy and Pontusson, 'Rising Inequality and the Politics of Redistribution in Affluent Countries.'

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

GV4E3 Half Unit Democratisation, Conflict and Statebuilding

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Hughes CON5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

An optional course for the MSc Conflict Studies. Other students will be admitted subject to space. This course has limited availability (is capped), and requires that students (regardless of Department or MSc programme) obtain permission from the teacher responsible. It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: This course provides a theoretically informed assessment and critique of the debates on the relationship between democratization, violent conflict and state-building. It seeks to explain why some state-building projects have succeeded while others failed or are failing. Case studies will be drawn mostly from post-communist Europe and Eurasia, principally focusing on the Western Balkans, North and South Caucasus, and Central Asia, including Afghanistan. Themes considered include: theories and forms of state-building, democratization, nationalism and nation-state building, internal armed conflicts; conceptualising 'failed state'; nationalist mobilisation and the 'nationalising' state; 'ethnic democracies'; authoritarian state-building; colonial legacies; secessionist crises and national and ethnic conflict management; the political economy of armed conflicts; democracy promotion, international conditionality and intervention; the politics and security challenges posed by of 'frozen conflicts'. As an LSE Moodle course, most of the weekly essential readings are available on-line.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit one non-assessed essay (2,500 words) and prepare one group seminar presentation.

Indicative reading: Roland Paris and Timothy Sisk eds, The Dilemmas of Statebuilding, Routledge, 2008; David Laitin, Nations, States and Violence, Oxford, 2007; Philip G. GV4E4E Half Unit

Fiscal Governance and Budgeting

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joachim Wehner CON4.10 and Dr Paolo De Renzio.

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites, but recommended advance reading is given below.

Course content: The course examines contemporary issues in fiscal governance and public budgeting in OECD countries and elsewhere. The focus is on executive and legislative actors and the institutional structures within which they make budgetary choices. Following an introduction to theoretical approaches to the study of budgeting, topics include medium-term frameworks, top-down budgeting, fiscal rules and fiscal councils, performance budgeting, legislative budgeting, fiscal decentralisation, budget transparency, audit and accountability.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: Fiscal Governance in Europe by Mark Hallerberg, Rolf Strauch and Jürgen von Hagen (Cambridge University Press, 2009) introduces an important theoretical approach and is a good reference for several topics. The OECD Journal on Budgeting <http://www.oecd.org/gov/budget/journal> discusses current issues in applied budgeting. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

GV4E8 Half Unit

Conflict and Institutional Design in Divided Societies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Mitchell CON5.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option. Priority will be given to students on the MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for applications is Monday, 21 October 2013.

Course content: The internal resolution of serious ethnic and national conflicts almost inevitably involves some form of power sharing and/or power division (autonomy and federation). While power sharing is often invoked in normative and comparative accounts of conflict resolution, it is less frequently systematically examined. Conflict and Institutional Design (CID) is a comparative analysis of the making, maintenance and too often breaking of power sharing agreements. When and how are peace agreements negotiated? What type of power-sharing and federal designs are available? Under what conditions is power sharing likely to help contain conflict, and when does it fail? The course will pay particular attention to what happens after a power-sharing agreement is reached. We will examine the 'content' of peace agreements, spoiler attempts to undermine the peace, and the increasing use of 'transitional justice' mechanisms. The institutional focus will include analysis of electoral system design for divided societies, the dynamics of electoral and party competition within ethnic segmentation and consociational governance (power-sharing executives, legislatures and federations). While not neglecting theory and concepts, whenever possible the course will examine the quantitative and qualitative evidence on the successes and failures of power sharing.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two briefing papers on pre-selected key concepts/cases.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

The research essay will be on a topic of your choice. Having said that the topic will be discussed between each of you and myself and I must approve the topic. The research paper should ideally examine a research question using relevant concepts and theories, and must have an empirical dimension that is relevant to the themes of the course. 'Empirical' is understood in the broadest sense: your material could be a case study set in an appropriate theoretical framework, it could examine a theme with comparative case studies, it could be quantitative or qualitative. Whatever is deemed appropriate to the research question at hand. Bear in mind though that broad surveys are generally not a good idea. After all 5000 words is about half the standard size of a journal article. Much more advice about the essay will be given as the course progresses both collectively and in individual meetings with each of you. One of the aims in asking participants to write a paper is to help you to think about research questions and appropriate research design. Thus we are aiming at more than a traditional essay (which largely summarizes what significant others have said), and to begin to make the transition towards 'postgraduate research' in which you help develop new insights and/or new empirical knowledge. This should also help you when approaching the planning and writing of your MSc dissertation. Since you will be working on something that really interests you I hope that this will be an enjoyable experience. Of course it will also be challenging; but there will be an understanding that there is only so much you can do in the limited time available. As such you will not be asked to write any un-assessed essays. Instead, during the term, you will be asked to work on your research essay, which I will read, and discuss with you. This should give you a chance to revise your paper and to achieve a better plan by the end of the term. Here is how the work will be organised: 1. By the end of week 7 – e-mail directly to me), you should hand in the first part of your research essay, which should consist of a provisional title, brief statement of research topic and 'state of the art' (very short literature review), possible research question, and proposed method. This should be 2-3 pages since the aim is to advise on the appropriateness and viability of your proposed research essay. 2. Your final research essay will be due by 26 April 12pm (first day of the summer term). Note: for the final paper please return directly to the main Government office and get a receipt proving submission AND send me an electronic copy). Please note that all papers that count towards grades are electronically scanned with up to date plagiarism software. In addition to revisions to the two parts above you will now discuss your findings, and draw some conclusions. The 5000 word limit will be enforced, and is about 15-18 pages of A4 double spaced. The number of words used must be clearly stated on the cover page (the total includes main text, footnotes / endnotes and tables (but not appendices).

Approaches and Issues in Public Policy and Administration

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Edward Page CON3.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is designed to introduce MSc students to major issues in understanding public administration and policy. Students will be divided into two classes and each class will be taught for the whole 24 weeks by the same tutor (Lodge/Page). 20 of the lectures will reflect the topics to be covered in the classes which remain the focus of the course and some of the lectures will be given by other colleagues teaching on the MSc degree as well as by outside speakers. Additional Visiting Professor lectures will be arranged for the Lent term. The core of the course will consist of 20 classes (+4 revision) that will deal with key themes in Public Policy and Public Administration.. Compulsory for students on MSc Public Policy and Administration and the LSE-PKU Double Degree in Public Administration and Government.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. In addition, there will be a number of 'visiting professor' lectures in LT.

Formative coursework: Three formative essays, two in the Michaelmas Term and one in the Lent Term and a mock examination.

Indicative reading: BG Peters (2009) The Politics of Bureaucracy; CC Hood (1998) The Art of the State; M Howlett and M. Ramesh (1995) Studying Public Policy; W Parsons (1995) Public Policy; CC Hood and M Lodge (2006) The Politics of Public Service Bargains; P Cairney (2012) Understanding Public Policy.

Popular Politics in the Middle East

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr John Chalcraft CON5.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society) and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 3 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: The course aims to explore the role of popular politics in the making of the modern Middle East. The primary focus is on the Arab world but reference is also made to Iran, Israel and Turkey. We will study the origins, course and consequences of protest movements and contentious politics in the region from late nineteenth century to the Arab Spring of 2011. The material is organized by both chronology and theme, and relates to diverse forms of collective action, including religious and secular, armed and peaceful, revolutionary and reformist, ideological and survivalist, urban and rural, 'vertical' and 'horizontal'. The course addresses in particular the question of trans-nationalism, border-crossing, and the ways in which global and local forms have been intertwined in the making of political contention. We will aim to avoid either materialist or idealist reductionism, and pay attention to the problems involved in defining and identifying resistance. The course eschews (neo)Orientalist and modernist clichés alike, and draws in inter-disciplinary fashion on comparative politics, social history, anthropology, postcolonialism, and social movements theory.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: In order to develop essay skills and obtain feedback outside of formal assessment, students will complete a 2,000 word formative essay by week 6, on which they will receive feedback as to overall standard, argument, evidence, structure and style by the end of term. Students will choose one essay from a list of titles. To prepare for the 5,000 word essay, students will submit for approval a proposed title and a two-page handout summarizing the topic on which written feedback will be given. An eleventh seminar will also be held in the Summer Term as a workshop to assist students prior to the final submission of their 5,000 word essay.

GV4F4 Half Unit The Politics of Policy Advice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kira Matus CON6.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Available as an outside option where regulations permit.

Course content: Many masters graduates in public policy and administration go on to work in organizations that produce or consume policy advice. The course will look at how policy advice is commissioned, produced, managed and used. This course has three objectives: it introduces students to a range of theoretical and empirical scholarship on the issues involved in producing policy advice, it develops the communication skills required of policy analysts, and exposes them to practitioners who produce and commission advice. Students will develop their policy analysis and communication skills by working through real-world cases during the seminars and in the formative and assessed coursework.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

In addition there will be five guest speaker sessions.

Formative coursework: One formative essay (policy memo and analysis) (1500) designed to help students in developing their project work (middle of LT) and one mock examination or a second policy memo and analysis (end of LT)

GV4F5 Half Unit Advanced Study of Key Political Thinkers

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chandran Kukathas CON5.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: An advanced undergraduate course in the History of Political Thought or Political Philosophy, or following consultation with the course teacher.

Course content: This course provides an opportunity to study in depth the work of one major political thinker. It will focus on one or a few of the major works of the figure studied, and also consider the main lines of criticism of that thinker, from other contemporary figures, later political philosophers, and modern scholars and critics. It will also be important to consider issues of interpretation, particularly when there are differing controversial readings of the theorist in question. Political thinkers who might be studied would include Plato, Aristotle, St Augustine, Aquinas, Marsilius, Dante, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Rousseau, Hume, Adam Smith, Hegel, Tocqueville, Marx, and Mill. The course would be taught as a seminar in political philosophy rather than one in intellectual history. To focus would be on understanding and critical engagement with the ideas of the figure under examination rather than on the study of the historical context of their work. In 2010-11 the thinker to be studied is Jean-Jacques Rousseau.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit two formative essays of no more than 1500 words in the fifth and ninth weeks of the term.

GV4F6 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 The Philosophy and Politics of Environmental Change

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christian List CYBER and Dr Kai Spiekermann CON5.17

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course analyses political and philosophical questions arising in the context of environmental change. The approach will be interdisciplinary, and the course will engage with normative-philosophical, positive-analytical and empirical work, drawing on methodologies from political science, philosophy, economics and the natural sciences. Among the topics discussed will be climate change, overpopulation, food and water scarcity, deforestation, desertification and the loss of biodiversity. The course will address dilemmas of co-operation such as the 'tragedy of the commons', public-goods and collective-action problems, group decision making, markets for emission certificates, problems of compliance and enforcement, the role of social norms, intergenerational justice and discounting, global and environmental justice, cost-benefit analysis, decisions under uncertainty, the precautionary principle, the analysis of complex systems, and the role of the natural sciences in policy formulation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One formative essay (2,000 words) and one formally developed presentation per term.

GV4F8 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Institutions in the Global Economy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephanie Rickard CON6.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is organized around several important theoretical and empirical questions regarding the functioning of the global economy and the role of international institutions. Why do states delegate certain economic tasks and responsibilities to international institutions rather than acting unilaterally or cooperating directly? To what extent do states continue to control international organizations once authority has been delegated? To what extent do international institutions constrain national governments and their economic policies, such as trade, monetary and fiscal policy? When and under what circumstances do national governments comply with the decisions of international organizations? These questions are examined in the context of a variety of different institutions that play a role in the global economy including, for example, the World Trade Organization, the World Bank, the OECD and the International Monetary Fund.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

GV4F9 Half Unit African Politics, Wars and Violence

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Omar McDoom CON6.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics and MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will generally be given to Comparative Politics students, but students from other Government Department programmes and other LSE Departments may also be admitted subject to space.

Course content: Where does the colonial legacy end and the responsibility of Africa's own leaders for the continent's current predicaments begin? Why have the modern state, democracy, and the rule of law proved so difficult to build in Africa and are there any indigenous institutions to promote instead? Is it simply trite to say overseas development assistance has hurt Africa more that it has helped? How do we choose between the myriad explanations - natural resource abundance, high ethnic diversity, poor geography, weak state capacity, arbitrary borders, inter-group inequalities, and general poverty - in accounting for Africa's high incidence of civil wars? This course is a survey of the major issues in sub-Saharan African politics which have confronted its leaders and peoples and engaged scholars and policy-makers since the end of colonial rule. As it is a graduate-level course in comparative politics, its content is guided by the aim of encouraging students to reflect critically on these big questions and to challenge widely-held assumptions about the continent. Students will be encouraged to place the issues studied into comparative historical and regional perspective. The application of important theoretical constructs in political science to real-world issues is central to the course's ethos. The ultimate goal of the course is to equip students who seek to enter the policy-making arena with a strong theoretical foundation for looking critically at Africa's ongoing challenges and the current strategies to meet them. With these questions in mind then, the course lectures then will address the following themes: (i) The colonial legacy; (ii) The modern African state; (iii) Africa's political institutions: regime type and political culture; (iv) The causes of civil wars and communal violence; (v) The termination of civil wars and communal violence; (vi) Aid and the challenge of underdevelopment; (vii) Political liberalization, elections, and democracy; (viii) The effect of natural resources; (ix) Africa in the international system: China and the West; (x) Emerging challenges on the continent - for example environmental change and demographic transition. The course will illustrate each of these themes through country case studies. The case studies will vary from year-to-year, but the goal is to select from all the major country groupings to minimize the risk of students forming a regionally-skewed perspective on a diverse continent: west, east, central, and southern Africa will be represented. The course will also draw on a range of methodological approaches - quantitative, historical, and qualitative - though students will not need any prior specialized training in these research methods.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

The 2 two-hour seminars in the Summer Term will include a film viewing and a revision seminar.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to complete one formative essay (1,500 words).

GV4G1 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Applied Quantitative Methods for Political Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Valentino Larcinese CYBER

Availability: This course is available on the MRes Political Science and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A good knowledge of statistics and of the generalized linear model at the level of MI452.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the most commonly used methods for causal inference in the social sciences. After reviewing the rationale for simple OLS estimation, particularly focussing on the conditions for a causal interpretation of the coefficients, the course will cover matching estimators, instrumental variables, panel data, differences-in-differences, regression discontinuity, quantile regression. Students will be stimulated to think in experimental terms and the main theme will be how to replicate or get close to the experimental ideal of natural sciences by using non-experimental observational data. The lectures will present the techniques and illustrate their applications by making extensive use of the most up-to-date empirical literature in political science. The seminars (tutorials) will be conducted in a computer room and will provide an opportunity to learn how to use the methods with the statistical software Stata.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: There will be two pieces of formative work to be submitted collectively to the lecturer in the form of short essays. Students will be divided into groups of 4-5 people (groups change each time). Each group will receive a dataset and will be asked to use some specific methods to answer an assigned question.

GV4G3 Foundations of Political Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Jenco

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Theory and MSc in Political Theory (Research). This course is available on the MRes Political Science, MRes/PhD Political Science (Qualitative stream B) and MRes/PhD Political Science (Quantitative stream A). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Only available as an outside option with the permission of the MSc Political Theory convenor.

Course content: This course provides a systematic introduction to the philosophical and methodological foundations of political theory. It aims to give students a comprehensive conceptual toolbox that can be brought to bear on many different substantive problems and research questions in political theory and neighbouring fields. The course covers four broad areas: philosophy of history and the history of ideas; positive and analytical political theory; critical theory; post-structuralism and comparative political thought.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

GV4G4 Comparative Conflict Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Hughes CON5.05 and Dr Paul Mitchell CON5.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Conflict Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Compulsory core course for and entry restricted to MSc Conflict Studies students only. It is capped at 3 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: What is intra-state conflict? How should we investigate and measure political violence? What causes national and ethnic conflict and other forms of political violence and why does it take particular forms? What are the most effective means of conflict resolution? This course will introduce students to the core theoretical debates on intra-state conflict and political violence by analysing the major research in the field, both quantitative and qualitative. The course is structured around three categories of analysis and explanation: causation, dynamics and outcomes. Central themes include: the role of violence in state formation, development and collapse; theories of legitimacy, contentious politics and control regimes; the causes, dynamics and consequences of civil war; the interaction of group identities, interests and political violence; macro- and micro-analyses of conflict; and top-down and bottom-up methods for ending violent conflict, including intervention, the role of civil society, and institutional designs. The course offers students the opportunity to engage with the main methodological approaches to the study of conflict, including critical case studies, process tracing, small n and large n research, which will enhance their skills for the dissertation. In the weekly lectures and seminars the themes will be explored through a mix of theory-based readings and works which provide in-depth case studies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

GV4G5 The History and Politics of the Modern Middle East

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr John Chalcraft CON5.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Also available as an outside option where regulations permit. It is capped at 2 groups. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: This course offers an advanced, inter-disciplinary introduction to the history and politics of the Middle East and North Africa from the nineteenth century to the present. The course adopts a chronological and thematic approach to a series of key topics and debates in the history of the region, including colonial rule, nationalism, popular protest, Israel/Palestine, gender, social change, armed struggle, neoliberalism, migration, rentier states, new religious politics, bread riots, weapons of the weak, the new imperialism, and the Arab uprisings of 2011-12. The cases are drawn from a wide range of countries in the region. Students will address concrete topics and problems in relevant historical contexts in the light of important social science debates. We draw in inter-disciplinary fashion on anthropology, politics, economic history, geography, sociology and international relations. The course material will avoid and challenge clichés associated with (1) culturally essentialist and exceptionalist (neo)Orientalism, (2) Eurocentric, materialist and teleological Modernism, and (3) wholly relativist or discursively determinist Postcolonialism. We will pay particular attention to the rise and fall of political regimes, the dynamics of consent and dissent, as well as to role of trans-national, trans-regional and global forms.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 word essay to be submitted at the end of the Michaelmas Term. One mock exam essay to be completed during the Lent Term.

GV4G6 Half Unit Nationalism and Global Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Breuilly CON3.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Also available as an outside option where regulations permit. It is capped at 1 group. The deadline for receipt of applications is Friday, 11 October 2013.

Course content: In political science nationalism is often treated as preceding globalisation which in turn poses challenges to nationalism and the nation-state, leading to debates about whether these will be weakened, strengthened or transformed by such challenges. This course explores another view, namely that globalisation both preceded and shaped nationalism and nation-state formation, the relationship changing with epochal shifts in the nature of global politics. The course will be divided into three parts: conceptual, historical, contemporary. It begins by examining theories, concepts and debates about nationalism and globalisation and how to relate these to each other. It then looks at nationalism in different epochs of global politics: Anglo-French conflict, British hegemony, global imperialism, the era of world wars, the Cold War. Contemporary issues start with the collapse of the Soviet Union and how that changed global politics, and go on to consider nationalism as response to, amongst other things, western interventionism, to diaspora movements and to intra-state conflict.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Each student will write two short (1500-2000 words) formative essays and give one seminar presentation.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm 32L2.25, Dr Joachim Wehner CON4.10, Prof Torun Dewan and Prof Michael Murphy Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The policy workshop applies the analytical tools that are taught in the week-long modules of the Executive MPA to specific policy areas. Teaching is based on a series of case studies. The case studies are taught by specialists in a particular policy area and are complemented with group working sessions by the students and presentations by policy practitioners involved in the policy area.

Teaching: A three-day modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One optional mock policy exercise will be provided.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to each policy area will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 3000 words).

Assessment will consist of a 3,000 policy exercise. Policy exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

GV4H1 Half Unit Chinese Political Thought

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Jenco CON4.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at one group. The deadline for applying to the course is Friday 11 October 2013.

Course content: This course will introduce students to recurring debates and concepts within Chinese political thought, beginning with the seminal texts of the Warring States period (circa 400 BCE). Working from texts in translation, we will critically examine the variety of normative frameworks that have structured political thinking throughout 2000 years of Chinese history, including neo-Confucianism, Buddhism, and Communism. The goal of the course is to help students use Chinese thought to think critically and creatively about political and social life. Among the questions we will ask are: to what extent is Chinese thought a Confucian legacy only? Are there incompatible commitments within traditions of Chinese thinking, and how can these tensions be productive? Finally, what kinds of resources can Chinese thought bring to bear on contemporary ethical, political and economic dilemmas? This course is suitable for students interested in political theory, philosophical approaches to politics, Chinese studies, and/or the history of political thought. Readings are entirely in English and NO prior knowledge of Chinese or China is required.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework:

- One 300 word individual project on the topic "An Example of How Chinese Political Thought Applies in the World," where students will have the opportunity to comment on their ideas in seminar/class discussion and via Moodle forums (where they will be encouraged to post their full project essay after I have marked it);
- One question posted on the discussion forum on Moodle every week, 24 hours before the class meets;
- One 1500 word formative essay

GV4H2 Half Unit Contemporary India: The World's Largest Democracy in the Early 21st Century

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sumantra Bose

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Global Politics and MSc in Global Politics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given to students taking the MSc Comparative Politics and the MSc Global Politics. Students on other Master's programmes, in all Departments of the School, are welcome to apply to take the course and will be considered subject to availability of space. This course is capped at 30 students (two seminar groups). The deadline for applying online to take the course is Friday 11 October 2013.

Course content: This course provides an advanced introduction to contemporary India, the world's most populous and diverse democracy. After the first week's overview, six weeks cover the evolution of India's democracy since its founding after national independence in 1947—with a strong emphasis on political changes and transitions underway since the 1990s—and discuss current political problems and challenges. Topics include the replacement of a single-party-dominant democracy by a robust multiparty democracy, and the replacement of a relatively centralized union by a de-centred, federal democracy increasingly dominated by 'regional' parties and leaders based in one of the twenty-eight states which comprise the union. Students will learn about the great political diversity of India through comparison of the different political contexts and dynamics of several large states. Two current political dilemmas – the revolutionary Maoist insurgency in some parts of the country and the festering problem of Kashmir – are surveyed. The final three weeks explore the nature of India's growing role in the international politics of the early 21st century, focused on three key and inter-connected relationships: China-India, United States-India, and Pakistan-India. In evaluating each of these relationships, comparisons are made between the political and economic challenges faced by India and those faced by the polities of China, the United States, and Pakistan.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

GV4V8 Half Unit MPA Policy Paper

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Patrick Dunleavy CON5.19 and Dr Lloyd Gruber CON6.03

plus supervisors from MPA departments

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: MPA students to write an individually-authored MPA Policy Paper on a topic developed in consultation with their MPA supervisor. Each paper analyses a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and proposes an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. Papers cannot exceed 6,000 words and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: A title, abstract, and MPA Policy Paper proposal (of no more than 750 words in total). Students will have these items returned, with comments, within two weeks of submission.

GY403 Half Unit Contemporary Debates in Human Geography

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low STC S512

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research). This course is available on the MPhil/PhD Human Geography and Urban Studies, MPhil/PhD in Geography, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Compulsory for MPhil/PhD Human Geography and Urban students without MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies.

Course content: This is a reading seminar course, organised around key works pertinent to cities, development and human geography. While by no means comprehensive, the syllabus provided in the first week of the course will detail some key debates in geography, urban studies and development studies, which we explore in some detail over the term. The readings will reflect a range of approaches to the disciplines of human geography, urban studies and development studies, in order to convey the dynamic interplay between these three areas of scholarship. Discussions with colleagues in these areas of research, alongside readings of foundational texts, will be aimed at exploring how theory and evidence connect in critical geographical research. There will also be a component on crafting a research proposal, a necessary stage for conducting successful social scientific research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 10 hours of lectures in the LT.

10 x two-hour directed reading lecture/seminars meeting in MT and LT. Students (including those auditing the course) are expected to read, circulate critical comments, and participate actively in discussion.

Formative coursework: A 2,500 word essay and a critical reflection on one week's readings for discussion in class.

Indicative reading: A detailed syllabus will be provided at the beginning of the course, but would include works such as D Gregory et al, The Dictionary of Human Geography (5th edn), 2009; D Harvey, Social Justice and the City, 2009; D Harvey, The Enigma of Capital, 2010; N Smith, Uneven Development, 2008; D Massey, Space, Place and Gender, 1994; E Soja, Seeking Spatial Justice, 2010; R Peet and M Watts, Liberation Ecologies, 2004; J Ferguson, The Antipolitics Machine, 1994; T Mitchell, Rule of Experts, 2002; A Roy, Poverty Capital, 2010; and D Gregory and Allan Pred, Violent Geographies, 2006.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

GY404 Half Unit Topics in Local Economic Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Local Economic Development. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Geography and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A good background is required in one of the fields of management, economics, economic geography, regional and urban studies.

Course content: This course is concerned with both the theoretical underpinnings and practical implementation of specific local economic development policies. It will focus in particular on the role of international organisations in local economic development in a number of different geographical contexts. In the MT the topics are presented by the responsible teacher, whilst in the LT each topic is given by a different academic drawing on their own research in the area. Topics covered vary by year, but are likely to include: changes in competitiveness, clusters and local growth coalitions, the role of infrastructure, human and social capital and institutions.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to make presentations and participate actively in seminars.

Globalization, Regional Development and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andres Rodriguez-Pose and Prof Michael Storper

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A good background is required in one of the fields of management, economics, economic geography, regional and urban studies.

Course content: This course analyses the theory and practice of economic development focusing on response to change, stimulation of development, and methods of local or regional delivery. Term A: Theories of regional economic development, location, and trade are applied to the contemporary process known as globalization, and used to decipher this phenomenon and its effects on development, employment, and political institutions. A number of major issues for regional and industrial policy are considered, including trade, convergence/divergence, corporate power, knowledge and technology, governance, and inter-place competition. Term B: This section of the course deals with the management and institutions of local and regional economic development. It dwells on the socio-economic implications of the emergence of local and regional governments and institutions as key actors in the design and implementation of economic development strategies across the world. In particular, the first section of the course analyses the consequences for economic efficiency and equality of the gradual but relentless shift of development responsibilities from the national and the supranational to the local and regional scale, linked of political and fiscal decentralisation. The second section of the course focuses, from a theoretical and empirical perspective, on the strategies being implemented by subnational governments across the world in order to cope and redress development problems. Strategies based on the building of infrastructure, the attraction of foreign direct investment, the support to local production and the promotion of local human resources are analysed in different institutional and governance contexts. The course draws on examples from Europe, the US, Latin America, and Asia.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Local Economic Development and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simona Iammarino STC S410 and Dr Riccardo Crescenzi STC S414

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Local Economic Development and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course deals with the analysis of theoretical and institutional issues, empirical evidence, development pre-requisites and economic development policies in the context of actions to stimulate the economic development of local and regional economies.

The course is split in two parts. Both are concerned with the analysis of local economic development theories and policies. The first part of the course (GY408.1) is focused on the macro and meso-level determinants of regional and local economic development and on the design and implementation of the corresponding 'top-down' policies. The second part of the course (GY408.2) is concerned with 'bottom-up' approaches and focuses on locally initiated and managed processes which may involve a much wider range of actors in shaping and implementing local economic development initiatives.

Term A: This section of the course is generally focused on the macro and meso-level determinants of regional and local economic development and on the capacity of 'top-down' policies to exert an influence on these drivers, promoting growth and social and territorial cohesion. The course starts by examining the existing disparities in regional economic performance in a number of industrial, emerging and developing countries, illustrating the scope and justification for government intervention in this area. The course then considers how different theories and approaches to local and regional economic development identify different macro and meso determinants of economic performance and, consequently, suggest differentiated sets of 'top-down' development policies. With these analytical tools in place, the EU regional policy is used as a case study to discuss the benefits of a 'balanced' approach to the analysis, design and implementation of regional development policies, overcoming the limitations of the one-sided approaches presented in the first part of the course. In this context, special attention will also be devoted to the cases of the United States, China and India in a comparative perspective.

Term B: This section of the course is aimed at understanding the micro dimension of local economic development, that is the determinants and effects of the behaviour, strategies and choices of key economic actors: local firms, both small and large, multinational enterprises, universities and other education and research organisations, industry associations, NGOs, government agencies, etc. The study of theoretical approaches, empirical evidence and implications of the behaviour of such actors, and their interactions, will help building up the complete analytical framework to interpret the genesis of local economic and innovation systems, their dynamics and evolution over time and the policy options from a bottom-up perspective. The lectures and classes make use of an extended array of empirical examples and case studies across regions and industries, both in advanced and developing and emerging economies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 27 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the LT.

Seminar teaching involves a combination of seminars and debates.

GY410 Half Unit Economics of Local and Regional Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Riccardo Crescenzi STC S414

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Why do some regions and territories perform systematically better than others in terms of economic development and wealth? What are the key drivers of local and regional economic performance? How can local and regional economic development policies boost economic activity and improve socio-economic conditions in disadvantaged areas? Globalisation and technological change have challenged the 'traditional' answers to these questions and call for new analytical and policy tools. This course provides students with an in-depth understanding of the macro and meso-level determinants of regional and local economic development and of the policies influencing these drivers. After examining the existing disparities in regional economic performance between and within a number of advanced, emerging and developing countries, the course illustrates the scope and justification for government intervention in this area. Various theories and approaches to local and regional economic development, leading to different policy prescriptions, are analysed in order to identify different macro and meso determinants of economic performance (from innovation and human capital to knowledge spillovers and global networks). In particular, the course dwells on the regional policy of the European Union (EU) - one of the most important large-scale regional policy experiences - in order to discuss the pros and cons of existing policy tools and illustrate the benefits of a 'balanced' approach to the analysis, design, management and implementation of regional and local economic development policies in a globalising world. In this context, special attention will also be devoted to the cases of the United States, China and India in a comparative perspective.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course cannot be taken with GY465 Concepts in Environmental Regulation or GY475 Issues in Environmental Governance.

Course content: This course provides critical insights into the characteristics, processes and evolving dynamics of environmental policy, regulation and governance. In MT, the course considers the rationale for public policy intervention, and the factors that shape the influence of different interest groups over government policy making. It proceeds to examine the nature, design and performance of different policy instruments, together with the various influences governing policy implementation processes. In LT, the course highlights key themes in environmental regulation informed by the concept of multi-level governance. This concept suggests new alignments and forms of regulation within and across state borders: the themes chosen to explore this concept include collective action, international negotiations, governance beyond the state, and different rationalities of regulation (science, ethics and justice).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare one formative essay in MT. In the LT students are required to give one presentation on an agreed topic: this will be graded with feedback.

Indicative reading: While there is no one single text that covers all aspects of the course, you are strongly advised to consult the following:

Core reading, MT: D Fiorino (2006) The New Environmental Regulation, London: MIT Press; J Holder and M Lee (2007) Environmental Protection Law and Policy (2nd edition), Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; S Bell and D McGillivray (2008) Environmental Law (7th edition), Oxford: Oxford University Press. Core reading, LT: S Barrett (2005) Environment and Statecraft: The Strategy of Environmental Treaty-Making, Oxford: Oxford University Press; M Mason (2005) The New Accountability: Environmental Responsibility Across Borders, London: Earthscan; S Piattoni (2010) The Theory of Multi-level Governance, Oxford: Oxford University Press; A Randall (2011) Risk and Precaution, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; T Sandler (2004) Global Collective Action, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. Essay (25%, 3000 words) in the LT.

GY421 Half Unit Gender and Development : Geographical Perspectives

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sylvia Chant S515

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of development and/or gender in the Global South would be a distinct advantage.

Course content: An analysis of gender roles, relations and inequalities in developing world regions, with particular emphasis on the variability of these in different geographical contexts, and their intersections with poverty, especially in urban areas. Specific themes include: the incorporation of gender into development analysis and practice; indicators of gender inequality; households, families, domestic inequalities and carework; fertility, family planning and reproductive rights; health, healthcare and housing; gender divisions in urban labour markets; female labour force participation; internal and international migration; Gender and Development (GAD) policy and practice; men and masculinities in GAD.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one essay during the course as well as to prepare presentations for seminars (usually in pairs) and to be actively engaged in seminar discussions, including as discussants and rapporteurs

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course. No one book covers the entire course. However, recommended essential reading is as follows: W Benedek, E Kisaakye & G Oberleitner (Eds), Human Rights of Women: International Instruments and African Experiences, 2002; S.Chant (Ed.) The International Handbook of Gender and Poverty, 2010; S Chant & M Gutmann, Mainstreaming Men into Gender and Development, 2000; A.Cornwall, E.Harrison & A.Whitehead (Eds) Feminisms in Development, 2007; A.Cornwall and M.Molyneux (Eds) The Politics of Rights: Dilemmas for Feminist Praxis, 2008; C Jackson & R Pearson (Eds), Feminist Visions of Development, 1998; N Kabeer, Gender Mainstreaming in Poverty Eradication and the Millennium Development Goals, 2003; J.Lee & S. GY423 Environment and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eric Neumayer STC. S503, Dr Benjamin Groom KGS. K203, Dr Charles Palmer KGS. K206 and Dr Richard Perkins STC. S413

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environment and Development. This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students who have not completed a course in first year undergraduate level Economics might find it useful to audit EC100 Economics A Course content: MT: Environment-economy linkages and the concept of sustainable economic development; The 'source'-side: Resource availability for sustained economic growth; The 'sink'-side: Economic growth and the environment; Trade, investment and the environment; Measuring progress towards sustainability: Genuine Savings (GS), the Index of Sustainable Economic Welfare (ISEW) and the Genuine Progress Indicator (GPI); Technological lock-in, innovation and system transformation; Corporate social responsibility: Drivers, strategy and outcomes.

LT: The demand for and supply of energy, food, and water have important implications for resource use and the environment. They also serve as building blocks for economic development. With a focus on individuals and countries in the global south, this course aims to impart knowledge and develop critical thinking about a number of selected topics concerned with the interface between environment and development. After an introduction (week 1), Part I concentrates on two topics, which play a key role in conditioning the supply of ecosystem services, institutions (week 2) and biodiversity (week 3). Part II devotes a week each to food (week 4), water (week 5), and energy (week 6), with special attention paid to issues of contemporary policy relevance, for example, food security, climate adaptation, and the energy transition. Part III focuses on three selected topics, which cut across many of the themes covered in the first two parts of the course: biofuels (week 7); forests (week 8); and, urban (week 9). The LT concludes with a closer examination of policy used to manage some of the trade-offs between environment and development studied earlier in the course (week 10).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: MT: E Neumayer, Weak versus Strong Sustainability: Exploring the Limits of Two Opposing Paradigms, 4th edn, Edward Elgar, 2013; E Neumayer, Greening Trade and Investment: Environmental Protection without Protectionism, Earthscan, 2001. GY426 Environmental and Resource Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr C Marchiori. Other teachers involved: Dr G Atkinson; B Groom; S Mourato; C Palmer.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Environmental and resource economics is at the forefront of the response to local, national and global environmental problems. As such, it has become an essential part of the thinking and actions of national and regional governments, as well as international agencies and organizations. This course seeks to develop a rigorous treatment of the theory of environmental and natural resource economics, and to show how formal economic thinking can assist real world policymaking in areas such as climate change, ecosystem & biodiversity conservation and water resource management.

The course consists of four components which cluster together the principal areas of interest and research in environmental and natural resource economics. These are: (i) foundations of environmental and resource economics; (ii) economics of pollution control; (iii) economics of renewable and non-renewable resources; and (iv) the study of international environmental problems and agreements.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete one written assignment of 2,500 words in Michaelmas Term, on which they will receive written feedback.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. The following texts will be particularly useful: Perman, R., Y. Ma, J. McGilvray and M. Common, Natural Resource and Environmental Economics, Pearson Addison Wesley, Fourth Edition (2011), and Third Edition (2003); Conrad, J., Resource Economics, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, (2005); Kolstad, C., Environmental Economics, Oxford: Oxford University Press, (2000).

Climate Change: Science, Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Simon Dietz

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available on the MSc in Environment and Development and MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is an interdisciplinary analysis of the issue of climate change. It will begin with an overview of the science of climate change, which will be accessible to students training in the social sciences. It will go on to consider the economic, political and social implications of climate change, drawing on economic analysis, as well as insights from other disciplines such as human geography and political science.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will write one essay (unassessed), on which they will receive written feedback. The essay serves as a mock exam, there is no word limit, but students should time themselves to write it in 50 minutes.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component.

The following texts will be particularly useful: Stern, N. (2009). Blueprint for a Safer Planet. London, The Bodley Head; Stern, N. (2007). The Economics of Climate Change: the Stern Review. Applied Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kenneth Benoit and Dr Benjamin Groom

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available on the MSc in Local Economic Development and MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will provide an introduction to quantitative methods in use in modern environmental and resource economics. Emphasis will be placed on the practical use of empirical tools. This applied focus will be complemented by the investigation of assumptions and proofs that can improve the understanding of empirical results. A number of relevant applications making use of computers will be presented and, in doing so, use of a wealth of interesting and topical environmental data sets will be made. To this end, ten seminars of one hour each will be provided. During the seminars the students will gain understanding of the software STATA. Additionally, in some of the seminars, selected papers in quantitative environmental economics will be critically discussed. Again the focus will be on relevant empirical papers published in the area. The module will cover several estimators. We will start with the standard linear regression model, its assumptions, violations and testing procedures. Extensions of the Linear regression model (e.g. Two Stages Least Squares and Panel Data) will be also covered. Non Linear Models will also be presented. These include Poisson Regression; Probit; Logit; Selection Models (Maximum Likelihood); Multivariate Probit and Logit; Conditional Logit and Mixed Logit Models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Contemporary Urbanism

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Theoretical perspectives on contemporary cities, with a specific focus on the global nature of urban social and political change and development. The course will consider classic and recent theory and analysis emanating from Northern academic and policy contexts, while also challenging western-centric views of the city. In doing so, it aims to explore the mutual shapings of the differing urban experiences in these geographical contexts in a wide range of areas. In treating cities as crucibles of social, political and cultural transformation, the course will highlight the fractured and fragmented nature of the urban experience, as well as the global determinants of the contemporary city. The course will equip students interested in urban change and development to understand and consider appropriate responses to social and political aspects of cities.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

GY431 Half Unit Cities, People and Poverty in the South

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sylvia Chant

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Experience and/or knowledge of development and/or urbanisation in the South would be a distinct advantage

Course content: The course examines the patterns, processes and implications of urbanisation in developing societies, with particular reference to the survival and well-being of low-income groups, and the variability of urban life and poverty in different geographical contexts. The conceptual and empirical focus of the course revolves around strategies adopted at individual household and community levels to ensure sustainable livelihoods, and the interrelations of grassroots processes with policy interventions on the part of governments, international development agencies and NGOs. Specific themes include: trends in urban development in the 20th and 21st centuries; population and rural-urban migration; shelter and housing; land and tenure; urban services; the conceptualisation and measurement of poverty; the 'urbanisation' of poverty; the 'feminisation of poverty'; poverty reduction strategies; employment and urban labour markets; urban livelihood strategies and economic restructuring; households and gender; women-headed households; health and healthcare; participatory urban governance, civil society, and UN-Habitat agendas past, present and future.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one essay during the course, as well as to prepare seminar presentations (usually in pairs), and to be actively involved in seminar discussions, including as discussants and rapporteurs.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course. No one book covers the entire course. However, recommended essential reading is as follows: J. Beall and S. GY432 Half Unit Urban Ethnography

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gareth Jones S506

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course considers the role of ethnography to how we understand cities. We will look in detail at different types of ethnography and compare with other means of representing the city, through the novel and film, starting with Rem Koolhaas on Lagos. Specific themes will cover the urban flâneur and ethnographer, street ethnography, culture of poverty and marginality, time and waiting, bodies and sex; infrastructure and mobility, gates and the middle class; drugs, the gang and violence, and slums. The course will consider the role of ethnography in developing world cities in particular but also draw from studies of developed world. The course offers an opportunity to reflect on urban places in a way which does not reduce them to arenas for technical, policy-driven planning, and so as to consider the urban experience more broadly. The course will raise issues of methodology.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: A 2,500 word essay and a critical reflection on one week's readings for discussion in class.

Indicative reading: One or two key ethnographies will be suggested for each week supplemented by articles. J. Auyero, The Patients of the State: the politics of waiting in Argentina, 2012; J. GY438 Half Unit Cities and Social Change in East Asia

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hyun Shin S416

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course encourages students to develop their critical knowledge and comparatively understand how urban space is transformed in different social, economic and political settings, and what social implications are made upon the powerless and poor. In order to examine the process of social and spatial transformation in times of compressed urbanization, the course will draw on various examples of urban policy and practice from cities across Asia, with emphasis on newly industrialised economies in East and Southeast Asia as well as on mainland China. Focusing on urban questions in particular, the course comprises of lectures and seminars on the following themes: urbanisation and vertical urbanism; urban development and the role of the state; growth politics and urban renewal; land politics and real estate in mainland China; gentrification and neighbourhood changes; the right to the city; property-rights activism; financialisation and social change; sustainable development and future of cities. Students will also have opportunities to view and discuss various sources of audiovisual materials and documentaries related to these themes. Course Facebook page: <http://goo.gl/k7a22>

GY439 Half Unit Cities, Politics and Citizenship

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low S512

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Perspectives on contemporary urban politics. The course will equip students interested in urban change and development to understand and critically assess the variety of ways in which urban politics and policies are imagined and discussed in universities as well as in the world of policy. It will also develop their understandings of key debates and themes in contemporary urban political life.

Topics covered will include: imagining urban politics; theories of urban politics, 'globalisation' and urban political life; urban governance; civil society and urban social movements; urban dimensions of citizenship and migration; policing, violence and urban politics; urban politics and 'neoliberalism.'

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the ST.

Planning Practice and Research

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nancy Holman S514, Mr Alan Mace S509 and Prof Andrew Thornley S514

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to provide students with an understanding of the current planning issues faced by practitioners and their policy responses. This will begin with an introduction to the planning context of London and an overview of the British planning system. This will be followed by weekly sessions with invited speakers involved in planning practice and research. They will be engaged in relevant current research or be practicing planners or policy-makers from central or local government, research agencies or consultancy. The content will consist of a series of guided walks, lectures and seminars covering issues of current concern and debate within urban and regional policy and planning.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of lectures in the LT.

There will normally be 25 hours of lectures and seminars, mainly from visiting speakers, plus three study trips. These will take place throughout the year. Assessment

Assessment: There is no Assessment in this course but the content will be relevant to the assessed courses in the MSc Regional and Urban Planning Studies Programme.

GY454 Half Unit

Urban Policy and Planning

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Alan Mace S509, Dr Nancy Holman S514 and Dr Ryan Centner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides a synthesised approach to the analysis of urban policy-making and plan formulation. It will explore the way in which economic, political and social forces interact to effect policy approaches in different spatial settings. We will cover urban regeneration policy and community development as they relate to neighbourhood planning. The aim is also to gain an understanding of the causes of similarity and difference in policy approaches.

Students will undertake a group research project based on a London neighbourhood including an assessment of local planning policy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Urban Task Force, Urban Renaissance; DETR, Our Towns and Cities: The future; R Atkinson ; G Moon, Urban Policy in Britain; P Hall ; C Ward, Sociable Cities; E Blakely ; M Snyder, Fortress America; D Judd ; S Fainstein, The Tourist City; J Mannigan, Fantasy City; T Hall ; P Hubbard, The Entrepreneurial City.

Economic Appraisal and Valuation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Giles Atkinson S513 and Dr Susana Mourato S420

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is concerned with the foundations and practical use of applied economics in the context of project appraisal and policy evaluation and will include the following content. Introduction to economic aspects of project appraisal and cost-benefit analysis. Efficiency, equity and distributional concerns. Measurement of costs and benefits with a specific emphasis on practical methods to value non-market goods and services. The application of project appraisal methods to policy sectors such as transport, health and the environment. Seminars and lectures will focus extensively on applied case studies and the tools involved in the appraisal of projects by for example development agencies such as The World Bank. Examples particularly from environmental, health, development and transport policy in the developed and developing world.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures and 6 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. Emphasis will be placed on texts, case study material and state-of-the-art contributions to, for example, the literature on non-market valuation. For an overview and introduction to the main issues covered by the course, students may wish to consult the following: G Atkinson and S Mourato, "Environmental Cost-Benefit Analysis" Annual Review of Environment and Resources, 2008; AE Boardman et al, Cost-Benefit Analysis: Concepts and Practice, 2011 (chapters 1 and 2); N Hanley and EB Barbier Pricing Nature: Cost-Benefit Analysis and Environmental Policy, 2009; G de Rus Introduction to Cost-Benefit

Real Property Market Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Cheshire S405

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is available by arrangement with the teacher responsible as an option to other students on other programmes who have an appropriate academic background and an interest in real estate markets.

Course content: An examination of how real property markets operate in practice and of the analytical techniques and data available for analysts and practitioners. Specific areas of study include: the availability and structure of data sets in the context of property: problems of: price measurement; user/investment categories; professional methods of valuation (appraisal) and possible impact on price formation: creating and manipulating datasets; measuring property performance; analysis to guide portfolio selection; anticipating and evaluating investment opportunities. Specific sector case studies: industrial, retail, commercial, and residential: investment portfolio choice and management. Briefing on course project/essay. Defining research objectives and methodology in practice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

The majority of the lectures are provided by senior practitioners in real estate research and analysis. The two seminars/workshop sessions are organised by Dr Ahlfeldt late in Michaelmas term to prepare students for their projects after which time will be allocated for students to have up to 20 minute one-on-one meetings with either Professor Cheshire or Dr Ahlfeldt. In addition there will be voluntary statistical/econometric support available in the Lent term.

Indicative reading: There is no course text. CSO guides to Government Statistics; publications from Investment Property Databank and other research departments and organisations in the real property markets; Journal of Property Research, Estates Gazette.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

A 3,000 word project or essay identifying a research problem in real estate markets on a specific issue (e.g., 'The Impact of the 2008 Financial Crisis on Office Rents in Hong Kong', 'Impact of Incomes on House Prices in the UK', 'Which Side of Beijing-Tianjin High-Speed Railway Benefits Most in terms of Housing Prices?' or 'The Economic Implications of Use-Class Designations in England') which will require the student to investigate data sources, suggest techniques of data analysis and provide conclusions on the problem set. Topics must be agreed with the teachers responsible and students participate in small group seminars to prepare for their project.

GY460 Half Unit

Techniques of Spatial Economic Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steve Gibbons S511

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available on the MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development and MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: No formal pre-requisites, but students should have an understanding of statistics and applied econometrics at an undergraduate level.

Course content: The aim of the course is to develop the technical tools necessary to understand and analyse spatial economic and social phenomena and to apply quantitative techniques to analyse economic and social problems, processes and policies at the urban and regional scale. The course also provides a hands-on introduction to Geographical Information Systems and other spatial computer applications.

Topics typically include: Spatial representation, spatial data and Geographical Information Systems; spatial weights, aggregation and smoothing methods; spatial econometric models and neighbourhood effects; answering causal questions in the spatial context; spatial interaction and discrete choice models; spatial cluster and point pattern analysis; inequality, competition and diversity.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 30 hours of teaching in LT comprising computer classes, lectures, and seminars for discussion of papers. The majority of sessions will take place in a computer classroom. Formative feedback will be available on submitted answers to seminar exercises and a past exam paper.

Formative coursework: Throughout the term, students are given the opportunity to provide answers to problem sets, written answers to class exercises and computer workshop tasks, and past examination questions, on which feedback will be given.

Indicative reading: A reading list and outline is available on Moodle. Some parts of the course are covered by: A Fotheringham, C Brunsdon; M Charlton, Quantitative Geography: Perspectives on Spatial Data Analysis. Sage Publications, 2000.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.

An unseen examination of two hours (50%) and a project of not more than 2,500 words to be handed in at a specified date in the ST (50%).

GY462 Half Unit Real Estate Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olmo Silva S506A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Real Estate Economics and Finance. This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to provide students with concepts and techniques for analysing financial decisions in real estate development and investment. Topics include: basic real estate investment analysis and financial leverage; real options approach applied to real estate; real estate investment performance and portfolio considerations; fixed and flexible rate mortgage loans and mortgage payment issues; debt securitisation (secondary mortgage market & mortgage backed securities); tax transparent real estate investment vehicles (REITs); and international real estate.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. External interventions by real estate practitioners will be scheduled when feasible.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete in-class exercises and up to two take-home case-studies.

Indicative reading: Key texts are:

Brueggeman, W. B. and J. D. Fisher (2005) Real Estate Finance & Investments (13th edition or newer), New York City, NY: McGraw-Hill/Irwin; Linneman, Peter (2004) Real Estate Finance & Investments: Risks and Opportunities, (2nd edition or newer). Philadelphia: Linneman Associates.

A more detailed reading list will be handed out at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

GY464 Half Unit Race and Space

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Romola Sanyal

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD Human Geography and Urban Studies, MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This postgraduate course considers the relationship between race and space linking critical race, colonial and postcolonial studies and critical human geography. The question of race cannot be meaningfully delinked from other identity politics such as gender, class, caste and religion, hence, this course studies these in tandem with each other. We consider a series of events at the interface of racial and spatial control, through themes such as labour regimes; land, space and nature in late-Victorian colonies; imaginations of black migrants to the colonial heartland; South African apartheid; segregation and varieties of 'ghettos'; the political economy of incarceration; and problems of memory with respect to racial histories and geographies. The course uses social theory to develop a situated, comparative analysis of racial geographies in the contemporary world, drawing insight from anti-colonial and diasporic intellectual traditions, as well as recent work in colonial, postcolonial and critical race studies. We also use film and literature to help broaden a social-scientific approach to connected racial geographies in the contemporary world. The central questions of the course are: How have racial geographies been made, reproduced, and transformed in connected ways, and what critical tools are necessary for the linked work of anti-racism and spatial justice?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: A 2,500 word essay and a critical reflection on one week's readings for discussion in class.

Indicative reading: A detailed syllabus will be provided at the beginning of the course, but would include works such as CLR James, The Black Jacobins, 1989; F Fanon, Wretched of the Earth, 1963; E Said, Orientalism, 1983; K. Jackson, Crabgrass Frontier, 1985; A McClintock, Imperial Leather, 1995; Thomas Blom Hansen, Wages of Violence: Naming and Identity in Postcolonial Bombay, 2001; R W Gilmore, Golden Gulag: Prisons, Surplus, Crisis and Opposition in Globalizing California, 2005; O Yiftachel, Ethnocracy: Land and Identity Politics in Israel/Palestine, 2006; KM Clarke and DM Thomas, Globalization and Race, 2006; JN Brown, Dropping Anchor, Setting Sail: Geographies of Race in Black Liverpool, 2005; L Pulido, Black, Brown, Yellow and Left: Radical Activism in Los Angeles, 2006.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words).

GY465 Half Unit Concepts in Environmental Regulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Perkins STC. S413

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides critical insights into the nature, dynamics and practice of environmental regulation. It considers the rationale for policy intervention and the influence of different interest groups on environmental policy making. The course proceeds to examine the characteristics, design and performance of different policy instruments, together with the various influences governing policy implementation processes.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare one formative essay.

Indicative reading: While there is no one single text that covers all aspects of the course, you are strongly advised to consult the following:

Core reading: D Fiorino (2006) The New Environmental Regulation, London: MIT Press; J Holder and M Lee (2007) Environmental Protection Law and Policy (2nd edition), Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; S Bell and D McGillivray (2008) Environmental Law (7th edition), Oxford: Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

GY467 Half Unit Global Migration and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Mercer S418

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development (Management), MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to examine the relationship between migration, diaspora and development with a particular focus on migrants' and diasporas' contributions to development in the Global South. The course encourages students to develop a critical understanding of the role of different diasporas in political, social and economic development. This is achieved through (i) a critical consideration of theoretical debates in geography, sociology, anthropology and development studies on diaspora, migration and development, (ii) an engagement with contemporary migration and development policies, (iii) an examination of diasporas' developmental work including economic and social remittances, and political activities. The final part of the course examines these debates in the context of the African diaspora.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Braziel, J.E. (2008)

GY469 Half Unit Environment and Development: Ecosystem Services and the Global South

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Charles Palmer KGS2.06 and Dr Benjamin Groom KGS2.03

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Human Geography (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students who have not completed a course in first year undergraduate level Economics might find it useful to audit EC100 Economics A.

Course content: The demand for and supply of energy, food, and water have important implications for resource use and the environment. They also serve as building blocks for economic development. With a focus on individuals and countries in the global south, this course aims to impart knowledge and develop critical thinking about a number of selected topics concerned with the interface between environment and development. Structured over 10 weeks, the course is divided into three distinct parts. After introducing the course and the basic concepts to be used throughout (week 1), Part I concentrates on two topics, which play a key role in conditioning the supply of ecosystem services, institutions (week 2) and biodiversity (week 3). Part II devotes a week each to food (week 4), water (week 5), and energy (week 6), with special attention paid to issues of contemporary policy relevance, for example, food security, climate adaptation, and the energy transition. Part III focuses on three selected topics, which cut across many of the themes covered in the first two parts of the course: biofuels (week 7); forests (week 8); and, urban (week 9). The course concludes with a closer examination of policy used to manage the some of the trade-offs between environment and development studied earlier in the course (week 10).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook, which covers the content of the whole course. The following provides some indicative reading:

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

GY475 Half Unit Issues in Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Richard Perkins S413, Dr Michael Mason S510 and Dr Carmen Marchiori KGS102

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course cannot be taken with GY465 Concepts in Environmental Regulation.

Course content: This Lent Term course is designed to highlight key themes impacting on environmental regulation across different scales of governance. While the emphasis is on global and transnational policy processes, attention is also paid to the implications of these processes at regional and local scales. The organising framework of 'multi-level governance' suggests new alignments and forms of regulation which require us to consider environmental decision-making within and beyond the territorial authority of a single state. The indicative themes chosen explore distinctive challenges for multi-level governance - collective action, international negotiations, governance beyond the state, and different rationalities of regulation (science, ethics and justice). These themes, which will be explored in student-led seminars, run explicitly or implicitly through many environmental policy debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are required to make one presentation on an agreed topic: this will be graded with feedback for individual students.

Indicative reading: While there is no one single text that covers all aspects of the course, students are advised to consult the following: Core reading, S. Barrett (2005) Environment and Statecraft: The Strategy of Environmental Treaty-Making, Oxford: Oxford University Press; M. Humphreys (ed) (2010) Human Rights and Climate Change, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; M. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

GY479 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 The Urban Revolution

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course uses the concept of "urban revolution" as an organising principle to introduce students to key theories and debates related to societies undergoing rapid urban change. Course lectures examine "urban revolution" in three senses. The first pertains to Henri Lefebvre's use of the term to signify the "complete urbanization of society," a historical process by which social life, even outside of cities, becomes urbanised. This means addressing the relationship between the country and the city, the idea of the urban in historical perspective, and the relationship between urban life in the global North and South. The second treatment of "urban revolution" considers the city as a site for radical political change and social experimentation. This means studying cities as spaces of movement, resistance, and innovation, with an emphasis on urban experiments in the South. Thirdly, urban revolution is analysed in terms of the explosion of policies aimed at managing the place and function of cities in the global economy. Through these three lenses - theory, politics and policy - the course aims to equip students with a conceptual and empirical foundation for analysing globalised urbanisation, with particular attention to emerging urbanisms in the South. Topics covered may include the following: urban revolution, the right to the city, the colonial and postcolonial city, the space of the state, the politics of infrastructure, eviction and displacement, urban political ecology, urban informality.

Presidents, Public Opinion, and Foreign Policy, from Roosevelt to Reagan, 1933-89

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Using a range of secondary sources, the course explores the dynamic interaction between presidents, public opinion, and foreign policymaking in order to test a range of common assumptions about the determinants of American foreign policy in the period from 1933 to 1989. The course explores the interaction between opinion and policy in three periods: First, the Roosevelt era, with emphasis on FDR's response to American isolationism, the media and public attitudes towards Nazi Germany and the Second World War, and the influence of public pressures upon US policy. Second, the period of consensus on the Cold War, examining how Americans viewed the Communist world before, during and after the Korean War, the influence of the atomic bomb upon popular thinking, the limits of dissent in the period of McCarthyism, and the impact of public opinion upon policy-making during the Berlin and Cuban crises. Third, the period when the Cold War consensus broke down, focusing not just on the opposition to the Vietnam war and the new cleavages that emerged within US society but also on the changing nature of the American media and the very different attempts made by Nixon, Carter and Reagan to respond to this new environment.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

22 seminars of two-hours. Students are expected to keep up with readings for the weekly meetings and to participate in the seminar discussions.

Formative coursework: Students are required to produce two 3,000 word essays during the year. There will also be a mock exam (a one-hour timed essay) in the first of the two revision classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: A full bibliography accompanies the course and the teacher will advise on reading. M Small, Democracy and Diplomacy (1996); O R Holsti, Public Opinion and American Foreign Policy (1996); S Casey, Cautious Crusade (2001); S Casey, Selling the Korean War (2008); D Foyle, Counting the Public In (1999);

R Sobel, The Impact of Public Opinion on US Foreign Policy since Vietnam (2001).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

A three-hour unseen written examination in the ST. A mock examination paper will be distributed to students at the first meeting to familiarise themselves with the structure of the examination. The final examination will count for 100% of the final course assessment.

Empire, Colonialism and Globalisation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Taylor Sherman E601

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation. This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Global History, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course looks at the political and cultural history of empires and their legacy in the contemporary world. It analyses specific imperial formations, including the Ottoman, Mughal, Qing, Spanish, French and British Empires. It explores comparative and theoretical debates concerning the nature and strengths of given empires and the dynamics of their decline. In addition, the course examines the cultural history of empires, exploring notions of race, gender, modernity, and hybridity. The course also explores the extent to which the imperial past has helped to shape the processes of globalisation in the contemporary world, and includes a look at the hegemonic power of the USA in the twentieth century. In addition to sessions on individual empires, thematic sessions will include: gender and Islam in the Ottoman Empire; Court Culture and the Mughal Empire; Ethnicity in the Qing Empire; Christianity, Conversion and Hybridity in Spanish America; Race, Slavery and the European Overseas Empires; Colonial Medicine and Psychiatry in Africa; and the American Empire from the Philippines to Afghanistan. Besides these case-studies there will be general and comparative discussions of archaic and modern globalization, the technologies and ideologies of empire, and imperial legacies in both the former colonies and metropolitan societies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

The Napoleonic Empire: The Making of Modern Europe

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan E391

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations and MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Napoleonic Empire was crucial in the formation of modern Europe. Much of Europe was dominated by the Napoleonic Empire and its impact was felt across the continent and in parts of the non-European world. Through an analysis of both those areas directly incorporated into the Napoleonic empire and of those that lay beyond it, this course will examine the extent of the direct and indirect influence of this era on the development of what we understand by a modern European society and a modern state system. The course analyses how this empire was created, as well as the states and societies that it forged. The varied and sometimes contradictory elements of this era will be analysed - from the impact of the growth of secularisation, constitutionalism and the codification of laws to the beginnings of Romanticism, manifestations of early nationalism and monarchical reaction after 1815. The course will also assess the significance of both the reality and the 'myth' of empire, in the assessment of contemporary observers and also in the later nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The course will cover the following topics: the origins of the Empire; changes in armies and warfare; analysis of the changing nature of the Napoleonic Empire from the core to the periphery; the impact of the Empire on countries that remained beyond it; Europe's relationship with the non-European world during this period; the diplomacy of war and the 'system' that emerged after 1815; the impact of the Napoleonic era on the modernisation of society, the economy, law and the state; early manifestations of nationalism in the Italian and German lands, Spain and Russia; reaction against the Napoleonic 'system' after 1815. The course will also assess the significance of both the reality and the 'myth' of Napoleon and his empire, for contemporary commentators and also in the later nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write three essays. They will also be required to answer a mock examination question.

Indicative reading: A detailed Reading List will be issued at the beginning of the course.

Useful introductory works include: G. Ellis, Napoleon; G. Ellis, The Napoleonic Empire; M. Broers, Europe under Napoleon 1799-1815; S. J. Woolf, Napoleon's Integration of Europe; P. The European Enlightenment, c1680-1799

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hochstrasser E407

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia), MSc Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course will be taught by both lectures (HY315) and seminars (HY426).

Course content: The objective of the course is to introduce students to the main themes and debates of the Enlightenment through selections from the original writings of the leading political, scientific and philosophical thinkers of the period. The chronological framework of the Enlightenment is here taken to be Europe between the reign of Louis XIV and the end of the French Revolution. The Enlightenment is the period in which philosophy, history, economics and anthropology and other social sciences began to emerge as discrete disciplines independent of state and church control. The course sets out to explore the new ideas generated in these areas as a result of a fresh understanding of man's place in the physical world. The contributions of Newton, Locke, Voltaire, Montesquieu, Rousseau, Hume and Smith, among others, will be highlighted, and developed with a detailed study of selected texts as detailed on Moodle. The primary focus of the course is on philosophy and the history of political thought, not political or social history.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two essays are required of up to 3,000 words (one submitted in week 4 of MT and in week 4 of LT). There will also be a presentation from each student in LT. There will be a mock examination in the ST.

Indicative reading: A full Reading list will be provided at the start of the course on Moodle. The following represent basic introductory reading only, and students will be expected to give class presentations: T C W Blanning, The culture of power and the power of culture (2002); T Munck, The Enlightenment (2000); D Outram, The Enlightenment (1995); R Porter, The Enlightenment (2001); Anthologies: I Kramnik (Ed), The Portable Enlightenment Reader (1995).

Anglo-American Relations from World War to Cold War

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nigel Ashton E408

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course analyses the changing nature of the Anglo-American "special" relationship from its creation against the backdrop of the Second World War in Europe through to the end of the Cold War. It will illuminate the foundations of the relationship in terms of culture and ideology, and also the threat posed by common enemies in the Second World War and Cold War. The competitive dimension of the Anglo-American relationship will also be highlighted as a means of explaining instances of discord such as the Suez Crisis of 1956.

The topics covered include: Anglo-American relations in historical perspective; the creation of the Anglo-American alliance, 1939-41; competitive co-operation in war strategy and politics, 1941-45; the American "Occupation" of Britain during the Second World War; the emergence of the Cold War in Europe, 1945-49; the Cold War in Asia, 1945-54; the Palestine question; the Suez Crisis, 1956; nuclear relations and the Skybolt Crisis; Kennedy, Macmillan and the Cuban Missile Crisis; Anglo-American relations and European integration, decolonisation and Anglo-American relations since 1945; the impact of the Vietnam War; the Cultural Cold War; intelligence co-operation; Anglo-American relations in the 1970s; Thatcher, Reagan and the Cold War in the 1980s; the Falklands War; the significance of personal relations at the top; retrospect and prospects for Anglo-American relations.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course will be taught by means of 22 seminars of two hours duration during the MT, LT and ST.

Formative coursework: Three pieces of written work must be submitted by students taking this course. These consist of two essays of up to 3,000 words in length and one timed class essay.

Indicative reading: For an introduction to Anglo-American relations, students should consult the following texts: D Reynolds & D Dimbleby, An Ocean Apart: the Relationship between Britain and America in the Twentieth Century (1988); J Dumbrell, 'A Special Relationship': Anglo-American Relations from the Cold War to Iraq (2006); C Bartlett, The Special Relationship: A Political History of Anglo-American Relations Since 1945 (1992); W R Louis & H Bull (Eds), The Special Relationship: Anglo-American Relations since 1945 (1984); D C Watt, Succeeding John Bull: America in Britain's Place, 1900-75 (1984). A detailed reading list will be issued at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Western (European) diplomacy in the 1980s to the mid-1990s examining tensions, rivalries and linkages not merely between the western and communist blocs, but also within them, as well as studying the events reflecting the shift from the Cold War to the post-Cold War world. The aim is to address from a historical perspective the diplomacy of the end of the East-West conflict, German reunification, the Yugoslavian wars, European integration, and NATO enlargement. The domestic political bases of, and the political relations between, the leading figures (Gorbachev, Yeltsin, Reagan, Bush, Thatcher, Major, Mitterrand, Delors and Kohl) will be covered as well as the diplomacy of the period. Major topics will include Thatcherism; Reaganomics; Gorbachev's new thinking; the reunification of Germany; the collapse of the Soviet Union and its wider empire; the Gulf War and Yugoslavian Wars; America and her Western European partners; the Single European Act, the Maastricht Treaty and the Euro; the security arrangements of Russia and NATO after the fall of communism.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Short class papers, engagement in role play, a number of discussions on Moodle, and two 3,000 word essays during the year. There will be a one-hour timed essay in ST (Mock Exam).

The Rise and Fall of Communism in Europe 1917-1990

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anita Prazmowska E506

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will examine the rise, survival and collapse of the Soviet Communist ideology and Communist regimes based in Russia and Eastern Europe during the period 1917-1990. The course will also deal with the struggle for Communist influence in Western Europe during the same period. The course will start with the study of the Russian revolution and the civil war to the establishment of the Stalinist regime in the Soviet Union. This will be followed by the study of the history of Soviet involvement in the Second World War and the extension of Soviet influence into Eastern Europe after the Second World War. An examination of the installation of Soviet style regimes in that region will be followed by the analysis of Soviet post-war objectives and Soviet objectives towards Germany. The death of Stalin and the Soviet responses to the Polish and Hungarian events in 1956 is linked to the study of Khrushchev and the Brezhnev eras. Additionally the course analyses the extension of Communist influence into Western Europe through the Comintern and the Cominform. The course concludes with a consideration of détente, the Gorbachev period, and the collapse by the end of 1990 of the Soviet Union and other Communist regimes in Europe.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write two essays in MT and one essay and a book review during LT. A timed one hour essay is scheduled for the ST.

War Cultures, 1890-1945

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Heather Jones E508

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will cover the history of warfare from the colonial wars of the 1890s through to the end of the Second World War. It will examine how the high point of European liberalism in the political sphere in the late nineteenth century, which ushered in the age of mass politics, the nation state and the advancement of international law, paradoxically was accompanied by changing attitudes to more extreme combatant violence in wartime and increasingly all-encompassing conflicts and wartime practices, leading ultimately to 'total' war in 1939-45. The first half of the twentieth century witnessed extreme wartime violence on a scale hitherto unseen in world history, in the two world wars in particular which this course will cover in detail, but also in a host of other conflicts such as civil wars or independence struggles. How and why this period was marked by such a particular development of war cultures remains a crucial question and one that has international relevance: this was a global, not merely a European, phenomenon. This course will examine how states and societies mobilized for war by juxtaposing different conflict situations and examining how they interlinked during this period. It will focus in particular on the role and practices of combatants in armed conflict, looking at continuities and breaks in patterns of combat violence. Among the topics it will cover are: The Boer War, the Herero and Nama Genocides, the Balkan Wars 1912-13, the First World War, The Irish War of Independence and Civil War, The Greco-Turkish War 1919-23, International law relating to war 1890-1945, the Polish-Soviet War, the Russian Civil War, the Italian invasion of Abyssinia, the Spanish Civil War, the Sino-Japanese War, the Second World War and the development of forced labour during wartime, with particular discussion of both the Holocaust and the Soviet Gulag system.

The Emergence of Modern Iran: State, Society and Diplomacy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Roham Alvandi E310

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Please note that students taking this course cannot take GV4E7 Islamic Republic of Iran: Society, Politics, the Greater Middle East (H).

Course content: This course examines the emergence of modern Iran against the backdrop of Iran's political, social and diplomatic history in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It covers three inter-related topics: the history of the modern Iranian state; the interaction between state and society in modern Iran; and Iran's diplomatic history. The course is divided into three sections. The first section examines the emergence of modern Iran from the remnants of the Persian Empire under the Qajars, with a particular focus on reform, revolution and Iran's encounter with European imperialism. The second section deals with the Pahlavi era and the attempts by both Pahlavi monarchs to strengthen the Iranian state while confronting social resistance at home and asserting Iran's power abroad. The third section deals with the origins of the Iranian revolution of 1978/79 and the transformation of the Iranian state under the Islamic Republic. Here we consider how war and peace shaped the domestic politics and foreign policy of revolutionary Iran, with a particular focus on US-Iran relations and the rise and fall of the reform movement.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Course content: This new PGT course is analysing the genesis, operational work and cultural outcome of secret intelligence in 20th century. Besides it is analysing cultural, political and military aspects of the subject in all periods of the 20th century. It provides the students with the historical and cultural background of today's intelligence work. From the late nineteenth century, the growth of nationalism and social and technological change fundamentally altered the way in which wars were waged and the system of international relations. In Europe and the USA, this initiated a process of professionalization, technologisation, and scientification within the military intelligence services, also affecting the way in which they gathered registered and recorded and evaluated information. The course will start with the time around 1900 to analyse myths on espionage and treason (especially regarding public opinion, i.e. in novels or in movies), the genesis of modern intelligence services, the different nature of Secret Intelligence work of the Great Powers, and their specific cultural background in using HUMINT and SIGINT. It will culminate by discussing the influence of Secret Intelligence on diplomacy and warfare in all periods of the 20th century (pre-1914, WW I, interwar-period, WW II, Cold War, post 1990). It examines to what extent co-ordination between national secret service traditions, their various cultural representations in literature and the media, and practical intelligence work gave rise to specific national cultures of intelligence. It will also clarify to what extent and in which areas patterns of secret service work crossed national boundaries, for example, as the result of transnational interaction. The course investigates this process mainly in Britain, in the USA and in Germany but will also include to some extent France, Italy and the Soviet Union (other countries can be included, depending on the language knowledge of the students).Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.Formative coursework: They will also sit a mock exam in the summer term.Indicative reading: R J Aldrich, The hidden hand: Britain, America and Cold War secret intelligence, London 2002.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Course content: The course aims at testing three concepts of social history: class, gender and generation, to help understand the changes German society underwent in the course of the 20th century. Students should have (or acquire in preparation) a basic knowledge of modern German history. The course will not offer an overall, national master narrative from 1900 to the year 2000, but will focus on specific historical constellations, in which the meaning of those categories in public discourse as well as in social practice were challenged or changing. While one of the three categories will be in the focus of each session, the way all three interact, or other categories such as ethnicity become relevant, will be a continuous concern. The course will concentrate on the German case, but students will be encouraged, both in classroom discussions and in their written work, to take a comparative perspective.

The Cold War in Latin America

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tanya Harmer E395

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar is designed to introduce students to new historical approaches to the Cold War in Latin America. It responds to new research and debates that have arisen in recent years regarding the meaning of the Cold War in a Latin American context, its origins, who its protagonists were, the extent to which the superpowers were involved, and its significance at a local, regional, and global level. It also places particular emphasis on the role of ideas and ideological struggles; the intersection between these ideas and the challenges of modernity and economic development; the causes of revolutionary and counter-revolutionary upheaval; the manifestations of violence and its effects; and the cultural Cold War. Students will be especially encouraged to explore the intra-regional and transnational dynamics of the Cold War in Latin America. They will study how events in one part of Latin America (for example, the overthrow of Jacobo Arbenz in Guatemala, the Cuban Revolution, the Brazilian and Chilean coups of 1964 and the Central American crisis in the 1980s) impacted upon people and events in other areas of region. However, the seminar will also devote three weeks to looking at Latin America's experience of the Cold War from a global comparative perspective and exploring its experience in contrast to other parts of the Third World. Although the seminar will mostly involve intensive reading and discussion of secondary sources, students will also be encouraged to reflect on new online archival material, published writings of principal thinkers and oral histories as a means of understanding related key concepts and ideas.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write one 3,000 word formative essay in the Michaelmas Term and one formative discussion post at the beginning of the year.

LSE-Columbia University Double Degree Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tanya Harmer E602 and Dr Paul Keenan E391

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: During their first year at Columbia University, students will identify a topic for the dissertation and will submit a detailed dissertation proposal form to their LSE supervisor. They will also have undertaken substantial research over the course of the summer, have written a Dissertation Research Report before arriving at LSE and be in a position to talk in a detailed and fluent manner with regards to their dissertation. These and the completion of other formal requirements for year one of the Double Degree will be needed before students can proceed to the second year of the programme at LSE.

Course content: The individual dissertation will be supervised and assessed at LSE in accordance with the Department's MSc regulations. It will be in the form of a thesis of no more than 15,000 words. The dissertation workshop will complement this by offering three sessions on methodological topics, and 7 sessions in which the students will each present updates on their research over the summer (MT) and a 3,000 word extract from their dissertations for group discussion, evaluation and analysis (LT).

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Five two-hour seminars in MT and five one-hour seminars in LT.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course but will include the following introductory surveys: Berger, Feldner and Passmore, Writing History; D Cannadine (Ed), What is History now?; L Jordanova, History in Practice; R Evans, In Defence of History; J Tosh, The Pursuit of the Past; M Bloch, The Historian's Craft; R G Collingwood, The Idea of History.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 15000 words) in the ST.

15,000 word dissertation (100%) to be submitted in the first week of ST.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites for this course, but some knowledge of the international history of East Asia would be useful.Course content: The course looks at the origins and the political, strategic, economic and cultural consequences of the arrival of Western imperialism in East Asia. Subjects covered by the course include the clash between the Westphalian and Sinocentric international orders; the opium wars; the fall of the Tokugawa shogunate; the Japanese, Korean and Chinese responses to the arrival of the West; the history of Western imperialism in China and the rise of Chinese nationalism; the rise of Japanese imperialism; the Russo-Japanese War and its consequences; pan-Asianism, race and immigration; the Chinese revolution of 1911-12; the rise of intra-Asian trade; the effect of Wilsonian and communist internationalism; Japan's move towards aggressive expansion in the 1930s; the 'Greater East Asia' War of 1941-45.Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.Formative coursework: Students will be required to write three essays over the academic year. The second essay will be assessed and the third essay will be a mock examination.Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the start of the course, but the following provide a useful introduction to the themes, events and historiography: Shigeru Akita (ed.), Gentlemanly Capitalism, Imperialism and Global History (Basingstoke, 2002); Warren Cohen, (ed), Pacific Passage: The Study of American-East Asian Relations on the Eve of the Twenty-First Century (New York, 1996); Merle Goldman & Andrew Gordon, (ed.), Historical Perspectives on Contemporary East Asia (Cambridge, Mass. 2000); Akira Iriye, Japan and the Wider World: From the Mid-Nineteenth Century to the Present (London, 1997); Jonathan Spence, The Search for Modern China (1999); Chushichi Tsuzuki, The Pursuit of Power in Modern Japan 1825-1995 (Oxford, 2000).Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 3000 words).

A three-hour unseen examination in ST (75%) and the second essay during the academic year (3,000 words) will be assessed and make up the remaining 25%.

HY463The Origins of the Cold War, 1917-1962*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Vladislav ZubokAvailability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Course content: This course examines the origins of the Cold War and the dynamics of its rise during the period from the Russian Revolution in 1917 to the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962. It looks at long-term trends as well as specific events in order to elucidate how the Cold War originated and evolved. It deals with the Cold War as international history, covering the period from a wide variety of geographical and national angles: while some meetings necessarily centre on an individual state or a bilateral relationship, there will be others that deal with a wider region or with global trends. Intellectually, therefore, the course stresses the transformation of the field from the study of (primarily American) national foreign policy to a broader international approach.

There are seminars on the following topics: The German Question, 1917-1943; The Breakdown of the Grand Alliance, 1943-1946; The Division of Germany; The Sovietisation of Eastern Europe and the Yugoslav Exception; The Marshall Plan and the Foundation of NATO; The United States and Japan, 1945-1962; The Communist Victory in China and the Origins of the Korean War; The Korean War; Grand Strategy I: The Soviet Union and the Post-War World, 1945-1953; Grand Strategy II: The United States and the Post-War World, 1945-1953; Cold War Liberalism and McCarthyism: Anti-Communism and the Cold War in American Politics and Culture; The Sino-Soviet Alliance, 1954-1962; Indochina Wars: From the French Indochina War to the Eve of American Intervention; Eastern Europe from 1953 to the Aftermath of the 1956 Revolutions; The Berlin Crisis, 1958-1962; From the Cuban Revolution to the Cuban Missile Crisis, 1958-1962; Grand Strategy III: Soviet Foreign Policy from Stalin's Death to the Cuban Missile Crisis; Grand Strategy IV: US National Security Policy from Eisenhower to Kennedy; The World Economy and the Cold War, 1917-1962; Nuclear Weapons, Technology and the Cold War, 1945-1962; Ideology and Culture.

There are lectures covering the following topics: The Breakdown of the Grand Alliance, 1943-1946; The Division of Germany; The Iron Curtain; The Marshall Plan and the Foundation of NATO; The United States and Japan, 1945-1965; The Outbreak of the Korean War; The Sino-Soviet Alliance; The 1956 Hungarian Revolution; Technologies, Weapons, and the Arms Race; The Cuban Revolution and the 1962 Missile Crisis; Culture and Mindsets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Twenty-two two-hour hour seminars and eleven one-hour survey lectures. The twofold emphasis of the seminars is on working with primary sources and working with the historiography, in particular the recent 'New Cold War History', in order to understand how historians have interpreted (and re-interpreted) the origins of the Cold War in light of their access to new sources. The lectures are joint with HY206.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write two pieces of formative coursework during the year (the third essay is assessed, see below): one essay in the Michaelmas Term and an in-class mock examination in the Summer Term.Indicative reading: M.P. Leffler/O.A. Westad (eds), The Cambridge History of the Cold War; J.M. Hanhimäki/O.A. Westad (eds), The Cold War: A History in Documents and Eyewitness Accounts; J.L. Gaddis, The Cold War: A New History; V.M. Zubok, A Failed Empire.Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

The International History of the Balkans since 1939: State Projects, Wars, and Social Conflict

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Svetozar Rajak COL2.05D

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the history of the Balkans in the second half of the Twentieth century and on the threshold of the Twenty First century. It is not, however, designed to provide a simple historical overview of the region during this period. The course aims to integrate broader themes and interpretations of the Cold War and its legacy, and of deeper civilizational undercurrents of the second half of the Twentieth Century, with the study of the region and its only federation, Yugoslavia. To do so, it will invoke three main themes that will also facilitate insight into the interaction between the global, regional, and country specific. Firstly, the course will explore the regional and inter-bloc dynamics within the structured Cold War system by looking at the impact the Cold War had on the region and, in turn, at the influence the Balkans, in particular the Greek Civil War and Yugoslavia's conflict with the USSR exercised on the institutionalization and the dynamics of the Cold War during its nascent decade. Secondly, the course will look into the unique role Yugoslavia played in the creation of the alternatives and challenges to the bipolar structure and rigidity of the Cold War world, namely the Non-aligned Movement, and the ideological heresy, the so called "Yugoslav road to Socialism" that created a schism within one of the ideological poles of the Cold War, the Soviet Communism. Thirdly, the course will offer insight into the dramatic impact the end of the Cold War on the developments in the region, in particular on the collapse of the Yugoslav federation; at the same time, it will assess the role that the disintegration of Yugoslavia and the subsequent wars of secession had on the creation of the concepts that became the building blocks of the post-Cold War international system, namely nation-building, humanitarian intervention, international community, conflict-resolution, limited sovereignty, decreasing role of the UN, American hegemony, etc.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Throughout the academic year, students are required to write two 2,500 word essays. There will also be a mock exam (a one-hour essay) in the first of the two revision classes in the summer term.

Indicative reading: Crampton, Richard J., The Balkans Since the Second World War, (New York: Longman, 2002). Maps, History and Power: The Spaces and Cultures of the Past

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Stock E490

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: How did past societies and cultures understand the world around them? How did those societies use maps to represent physical, social and imaginative spaces? Do maps merely reflect particular mentalities and social practices, or do they actively shape the experience and perception of the world? Maps, History and Power addresses these and other questions by exploring mapping practices and spatial thought in several European and non-European contexts from the medieval to the modern periods. The course explores how past societies have used maps to serve a number of practical and ideological purposes: to express religious belief, to aid navigation and commerce, to assert cultural superiority, and to enable state formation or imperial control. Alongside readings in history and cartography, the course will make extensive and innovative use of the latest digital resources, allowing students to view and discuss historical maps from the world's great research libraries and collections.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit two 3,000 word formative essays (one per term). They will also sit a mock exam in the summer term.

Indicative reading: Jeremy Black, Maps and History: Constructing Images of the Past (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1997); David Buisseret, The Mapmakers' Quest: Depicting New Worlds in Renaissance Europe (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2003); Denis Cosgrove (ed.), Mappings (London: Reaktion, 1999); J.B. Dissertation: LSE-PKU Double Degree in MSc International Affairs

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kirsten Schulze E600

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation is an exercise in using primary source material to write on a precise topic in the history of international affairs. Although candidates may engage with relevant theories and concepts, the dissertation should be largely devoted to utilising such theories and concepts in the analysis of one or more specific historical events and should be based largely upon primary sources. Candidates should aim to include an element of originality in the conceptualising of the thesis or the treatment of evidence. The subject must fall within the syllabus of the degree and must be supervised by a member of staff in the Department of International History

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the LT. HY498 teaching is provided through HY498/499 Dissertation workshop sessions and through the individual supervision of dissertation projects by supervisors in the Department of International History. Students should use the Michaelmas Term to find, decide on, and develop a suitable dissertation topic and consider possible dissertation supervisors. Help with this process is available from the students' personal advisers. Students are then required to complete the HY498 Dissertation Proposal Form and to seek approval for their project from their dissertation supervisor. It is the students' responsibility to locate a supervisor. They should meet with the potential supervisor in late Michaelmas term (every member of staff has weekly office hours) to discuss their dissertation proposal, and then get the supervisor to sign the HY498 Dissertation Proposal Form before the deadline on 12.00 noon of Friday, 24 January 2014 at the latest. It is the students' responsibility to contact their supervisor to arrange at least one but no more than three meetings in the Summer Term to discuss their dissertation. At this stage the supervisor will be prepared to read and give feedback on a draft table of contents and a draft chapter, or a section or a detailed plan of the dissertation of no more than 1,000 words.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words (100% of course mark), including text and footnotes but excluding the cover page, the table of contents, the list of abbreviations, the bibliography and appendices. A Fail cannot be compensated, and a degree cannot be awarded unless HY498 has been passed. Two bound copies and one electronic copy must be submitted by 12.00 noon on Wednesday 3 September 2014 to EAS.E401 in the Departmental Office.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kirsten Schulze E600

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in History of International Relations and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The HY499 dissertation is an exercise in using primary sources to write on a precise topic in International History. The only formal limit on the choice of subject is that it must fall within the syllabus - i.e. it has to be a topic in International History, and the dissertation has to be a study in the discipline of history. Dissertations that represent contributions to disciplines outside history, such as International Relations or Politics, will not be approved or accepted. Dissertations must therefore be based substantially on a critical analysis of primary sources, and candidates should aim to include an element of originality in the argument and/or the treatment of the evidence. The subject must involve an element of engagement with the analysis of relations between states and/or societies; alternatively it may involve the study of the history of attitudes and/or policies in one society towards others or comparative studies involving at least two states and/or societies. The topic must not be confined purely to the domestic affairs of one society or state. The dissertation supervisor is the final judge of whether a particular topic falls within the syllabus.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the LT.

HY499 teaching is provided through HY499 Dissertation workshop sessions and through the individual supervision of dissertation projects by supervisors in the Department of International History. Management of Human Resources: Strategies and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Booth NAB4.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Human Resources. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Management, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines central issues pertinent to the theory and practice of Human Resource Management (HRM). It introduces students to a range of theoretical perspectives which underpin the ways in which organisations manage the employment relationship through the deployment of HRM strategy and policy. From a practice perspective, it reviews challenges involved in the design, implementation and evaluation of both overall HRM strategy and specific practice areas. In this respect we review HR policy and practice in the areas of recruitment and selection, training and development, diversity and work-life issues, job redesign, labour markets, retention, employee relations and voice, exit and ageing workforce, performance appraisal and rewards.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Students are expected to read widely in the appropriate journals; a detailed reading list will be provided at the start of the course. The course textbook is: Boxall, P.; Purcell, J.; & Wright, P. (2007): The Oxford Handbook of Human Resource Management, Oxford University Press. Additional textbooks of interest include: J Baron & D Kreps, Strategic Human Resources: Frameworks for General Managers, John Wiley, New York, 1999. Boxall, P, and Purcell, J. Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (40%, 2000 words) in the LT.

ID411 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 International and Comparative Human Resource Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Marsden NAB4.22

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Human Resources and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course deals with the policies that organisations adopt to deal with a range of human resource issues, and develops an international and comparative perspective. The course considers managerial human resource policies in their institutional, social and market contexts in advanced industrial countries. As an integrating perspective, the lectures analyse how different employment systems shape organisations' HR strategies and policies. The course looks at problems of human resource management in international firms, training, migration, knowledge management, rewards, equal opportunities, employment flexibility, participation, and employer collective action all within the context of different types of employment systems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Students are expected to read widely in the appropriate journals; a detailed reading list will be provided at the start of the course. ID419 Half Unit Cross Cultural Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hyun-Jung Lee NAB4.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is available on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management and Human Resources and MSc in Organisational Behaviour. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some background in psychology and organisational behaviour is useful.

Course content: The ability to communicate cross culturally and understand diverse perspectives is a necessity in order to achieve a competitive advantage in our global economy. The aims of the course are to understand the impact of culture on management; to identify the areas in which cultural differences present a challenge in managing people across cultures; and finally to become more self-aware of our cultural conditioning, individual biases and assumptions and to understand the implications these have on our interactions with people who are different from us. Understanding and Managing Cultural Diversity. International Assignments and Global Career Development. Managing Cultures in International Mergers and Acquisitions. Leading Responsibly in Multicultural Environment. Cross-Cultural Leadership. Cross-Cultural Communication and Negotiations.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST. Experiential learning is emphasised and team working is an integral part of the course. The teaching is highly participative. Students will be asked to make presentations and participate in exercise. The course is demanding of students and success depends partly upon student commitment and willingness to participate fully.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: The following reading list contains some of the main volumes and some easily accessible introductory volumes.

Most of the course reading is taken from journals. A full reading list will be issued at the start of the course. R. Steers et al.(2013), Management across cultures, Cambridge University Press; D. Thomas (2008), Cross cultural management, Sage; B. Gherke and M-T. Claes (eds.)(2013), Global leadership practices and cross cultural management, Palgrave.

ID420 Half Unit Leadership in Organisations: Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Connson Locke NAB4.16

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MPhil/PhD in Management, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Human Resources, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance and MSc in Organisational Behaviour. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is designed to provide students with the knowledge, skills and analytical capabilities needed to exercise leadership in organisations. It explores several facets of leadership and considers how leadership develops. The emphasis will be on application of theory, comparing and contrasting ideas approaches to leadership, and self-reflection.

The course examines topics such as: leadership and management; trait, behavioural and contingency theories of leadership; individual differences in leadership; leadership development; transformational and transactional forms of leadership; and issues of gender and culture.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Each two-hour session will include a combination of lecture and small group work. Students are expected to prepare for, and contribute to, the seminars. Small group work will include preparing and giving presentations, case analyses, and small group discussions.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a formative assessment based on previous exam questions. The details will be discussed in week 1. The assignment deadline will be in week 6.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the term. There is no required text. Indicative readings include:

ID423 Half Unit The Dark Side of the Organisation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Booth NAB4.01

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Management, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Human Resources, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance and MSc in Organisational Behaviour. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Organisational Behaviour (ID430), Organisational Behaviour (MG434) and Organisational Theory and Behaviour (ID200). Introductory OB course required. ID430, MG434, ID200, or equivalent course in another institution. Students will be required to write a paragraph about their motivation for taking this course.

Course content: In this seminar, students will learn about a variety of topics related to the dark side of the organisation, (e.g., substance abuse, violent/aggressive, discriminatory, and retaliatory behaviours, and unethical behaviours/corporate corruption). In organisational behaviour courses, topics covered often explore how behaviours promote beneficial outcomes for the organisation, as well as investigate the precursors to these more positive behaviours. However, not all behaviours and outcomes occurring in the workplace are beneficial and positive for employees and their organisations. Dark side behaviours typically lead to negative outcomes. Those who engage in these negative behaviours generally are aware that their actions can cause harm to others, their employer, and/or to them; hence, the instigator usually has intent. It is imperative that we more fully understand these behaviours and their antecedents and consequences so that we can identify these behaviours, as well as control, prevent, mitigate, or ameliorate their occurrences. In addition to an organisational behaviour approach to the dark side, we will also explore industrial relations perspective.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

ID432 Half Unit International Employment Relations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Cicely Ashwin NAB4.19, Dr Virginia Doellgast NAB4.05, Dr Dominick Donnelly NAB4.07, Dr Fei Qin NAB4.31 and Prof Sarosh Kuruvilla TBA

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management.

This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Management and Human Resources. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Also available as an option to students on the MPhil/PhD in Management: Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour.

Pre-requisites: A general knowledge of the social sciences is required.

Course content: The course aims to provide an introduction to the comparative analysis of employment relations at national, firm and workplace level throughout the world. It will introduce the employment relationship, the key concepts surrounding it, and the theories required to understand it. The strategies and policies of the main actors will be explored through cross-national comparative analysis. The course will also introduce the main 'models' of employment relations: the Anglo-Saxon, Japanese and European Social Models, as well as models of employment relations in the developing world.

The aim of the classes will be to provide an introduction to the comparative analysis of employment relations, and to ensure that students have both the conceptual and empirical grounding they need to take the options offered in international comparative human resource management and cross-cultural management.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures and seminars. Group working is an integral part of the course and students are expected to actively contribute to their class groups. The course is demanding of students and depends for its success partly upon their commitment and willingness to participate fully.

Formative coursework: A non-assessed essay during MT. Students also complete a class presentation

Indicative reading: F Frege & J Kelly (Eds) Comparative Employment Relations in the Global Economy, Routledge, 2013; G Bamber, R Lansbury & N Wailes (Eds), International and Comparative Employment Relations, 5th edn, Sage, 2011; R Hyman, Understanding European Trade Unionism: Between Market, Class and Society, Sage, 2001; M J Morley, P Gunnigle & DG Collings (Eds), Global Industrial Relations, Routledge, 2006.

ID433 Half Unit Negotiation Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Human Resources, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance and MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Also available as an option to students on the MPhil/PhD in Management: Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour.

Course content: This course adopts an interdisciplinary perspective to analyse negotiations, covering ideas from economics, decision sciences and psychology. The course examines cognitive psychological, game theoretic and decision analytic approaches to the analysis of negotiations. These approaches highlight the importance of interests, information, strategy and power in defining the structure and outcomes of inter-dependent interactions.

Prescriptive as well as descriptive findings from research in negotiations will be discussed throughout the course. The first part covers the basics of distributive bargaining and the importance of pre-negotiation information in the division of a fixed negotiation surplus. The second part introduces the concept of integrative bargaining. In these situations, the size of the negotiation surplus is variable. This creates challenges and opportunities that are different from those found in distributive negotiations. The third part covers some very basic game theoretic models of strategic interaction. The final part of the course concentrates on psychological mechanisms that can powerfully shape negotiation behaviour and outcomes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students, individually or in groups, will be asked to make presentations and participate in negotiation exercises.

Indicative reading: The main text, covering most of the material in the course is: Leigh Thompson The Mind and Heart of the Negotiator, 5th edn, Pearson, 2012. The following are also useful: Roger Fisher and William Ury, Getting to Yes: Negotiating Agreement Without Giving In, Penguin Books, 1981; Howard Raiffa, The Art and Science of Negotiation, Harvard University Press, 1982; Max Bazerman & Margaret Neale, Negotiating Rationally, Free Press 1992. Students will be expected to read widely in appropriate journals, and a list of references will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ID434 Half Unit Managing Diversity in Organisations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tanya Beauregard NAB4.14

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Management, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management and Human Resources and MSc in Organisational Behaviour. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The primary aim of the course is to develop students' understanding and critical awareness of issues associated with managing a workforce characterised by diversity in age, gender, race, religion, disability, and sexual orientation. The course endeavours to combine academic rigour with a practical focus on promoting equality, diversity and inclusion in the workplace, enabling students to both develop a critical understanding of relevant theoretical and empirical literature and apply acquired knowledge to specific diversity management scenarios. Seminars will require participation in group exercises designed to enhance students' appreciation of the wide range of issues associated with categorizing individuals as members of different groups, on whatever basis.

Students will become familiar with the drivers of increased workforce diversity, the psychological and sociological theories underlying discrimination and exclusion in organisations, current employment legislation related to diversity in the UK, and the barriers to equality of opportunity in the workplace for minority groups. The emphasis of the course will be on demographic diversity in the context of work organisations, in order to avoid overlap with existing offerings from other departments. Students will examine "best practice" in diversity management programmes and learn to critically assess organisational policies and practices for managing workplace diversity with regard to their ability to enhance organisational performance and avoid costly litigation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit a two-page essay outline.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Key texts include:

Kirton, G., & Greene, A-M. (2010). The dynamics of managing diversity: A critical approach (3rd ed.). London: Elsevier.

Assessment: Essay (30%, 1800 words) and class participation (10%).

Take home exam (60%) in the ST.

ID438 Half Unit Globalisation and Human Resource Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Carola Frege

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management and MSc in Management and Human Resources. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Also available as an option to students on the MPhil/PhD in Management: Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour.

Course content: This course examines the human resource management (HRM) and employment relations (ER) strategies of global corporations, with the aim of understanding both the causes of different strategic choices and the consequences of these strategies for diverse stakeholders. It takes the perspective that HRM/ER strategies are influenced by a range of variables, including internal business strategy and resources, as well as external factors such as national legislation, business systems and culture, and regional and global institutions.

In the course modules, we will:

- Evaluate the strategic choices facing global corporations, including the choice between adopting highly centralized or predominantly decentralized HR policies; HR considerations in the outsourcing and offshoring of work; and the role of HRM in managing international mergers and acquisitions.
- Analyze how institutions and culture affect compensation strategies and employee participation policies – as well as the implications of these policies for economic inequality and employee well-being.
- Analyze the factors shaping different patterns of migration and discrimination.
- Evaluate how regional institutions such as the European Union and multilateral institutions such as the ILO affect the HRM/ER strategies and policies of global firms.
- Examine how consumer pressure, coupled with corporate social responsibility programs, encourage global firms to extend their HRM/ER policies to their supply chain.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay during Lent Term and one class presentation.

ID440 Half Unit Corporate Social Responsibility and International Labour Standards

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Cicely Ashwin NAB4.19

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management and Human Resources and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Also available as an option to students on the MPhil/PhD in Management: Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour.

Pre-requisites: Any social science background.

Course content: Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is becoming an expected element of business strategy. This course critically evaluates CSR from a number of perspectives, drawing on material from a variety of different disciplines. Students analyse the emergence of CSR, its theoretical basis, the business case for the adoption of CSR programmes, as well as the social impacts of such policies. The opening lectures of the course focus on globalisation and international labour standards, and provide an understanding of how CSR relates to international regulatory institutions such as the International Labour Organisation. Subsequent lectures focus on the different aspects of CSR mentioned above, as well as topics such as comparative CSR. In terms of the impact and design of CSR policies, the course mainly focuses on issues relating to labour standards, but supplementary material on sustainability is also included. As well as traditional academic readings and case studies, students will critically examine publically available material such as corporate policies and reports. Seminars will follow a mixture of formats including group activities and presentations. The course will include one lecture from a CSR professional.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Assessment:

If you wish to satisfy the educational requirements of the Chartered Institute of Personnel Development, then it is essential that you successfully complete and pass the assessment for ID493, as described below. Students must attend the workshops and complete a company report on their 'Link' and keep a record and plan of their Professional Development for the whole year. In addition, there is a group project, which is assessed by a group presentation at the last session of MT. ID493 is not part of your MSc degree, but helps you to satisfy the educational requirements for membership of the CIPD. It is also useful if you wish to explore how theory works in practice. It provides an opportunity to explore further those issues raised in ID410.

ID496

Dissertation: Organisational Behaviour

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dissertation Supervisors

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational Behaviour. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course contains two parts: (a) Research Methods for OB and (b) Engaged Self and Scholarship workshops. Research Methods for OB: is designed to guide and support students through the process of developing an empirical dissertation. MT sessions will focus on helping students understand the expectations, identify a research question, and become familiar with the process of conducting a piece of independent research. LT sessions will focus on specific methods in particular using SPSS software. A goal of this course is to help students develop strong research and analytical skills; an important part of this skill set includes familiarity with the widely used SPSS software.

Engaged Self and Scholarship (ES&S) provides a forum for students to address the research-practice divide and develop skills to bridge that divide. It will help students develop their professional skills and professional identity. Topics include: managing the consultant-client relationship, making research relevant to practice, developing your brand, presentation skills, and time management.

Because this course is designed to build students' skill, sessions are highly interactive, with an emphasis on discussion, self-reflection, and exercises. Therefore, course readings are few and will be supplemented with practical assignments such as preparing a draft

CV or reflecting on a discussion question and preparing a short written answer for the following session.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 14 hours of lectures in the LT.

One day workshop at induction

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

The essay will be 1,500 words and will act as a literature review for the dissertation proposal.

Indicative reading: Drucker, P.F. (1999) Managing Oneself. Harvard Business Review. Rynes, S.L., Giluk, T.L., & Brown, K.G. (2007) The very separate worlds of academic and practitioner periodicals in human resource management: Implications for evidence-based management. Academy of Management Journal, 50(5), 987-1008. Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dissertation Supervisors

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management and MSc in Management and Human Resources. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the project is to:

Examine a problem or topic through a literature review and provide a rigorous analysis of that problem or topic; and/or

Examine a problem or topic through some small scale empirical research or by using information derived from secondary sources; and show ability to relate the specific to the general and the capacity to sustain a reasoned argument and draw conclusions. MSc Management and Human Resources students will develop their dissertation project with their Link company. They will explore its human resource practices and research an issue it is currently facing. A suitable supervisor will be allocated.

MSc International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management students will choose their own topic in the field of Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour which a member of faculty is willing to supervise.

Teaching: There will be a number of lectures given in the Lent Term that have been specifically designed to introduce students to theoretical, empirical and practical issues in undertaking a dissertation. There will also be a small number of programme specific sessions.

Indicative reading: Saunders, M. Lewis, P. and Thornhill, A. (2012). Research Methods for Business Students. Harlow: Pearson Education (6th. Edition). Bryman, A. (2012). Social Research Methods. Conflict and Peace Studies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Mark Hoffman OLD 2.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is intended for those interested in theoretical and practical approaches to the question of peace, the problems of conflict and violence, and responses to them particularly in the form of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The course is divided into three unequal but interconnected parts. The first part examines ideas and debates about the causes, contexts, dynamics and characterisations of conflict. The second explores and problematises the nature and meanings of peace and peacebuilding. This leads into the third section which is concerned with a critical engagement with the range of international responses to conflict associated with the discourses and practices of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The seminars explore the nexus between theory and practice. Although the course and its readings are mainly theoretical and conceptual rather than empirical, students are encouraged to apply the ideas to actual cases, past and present. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalrelations/video/IR422-CPS-video.aspx>

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

The International Politics of EU Enlargement

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM 4.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE4You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course examines EU enlargement from the point of view of International Relations. The principal aim is to understand the interplay between enlargement, EU foreign policy and wider geopolitics. With this in mind enlargement is considered both as an act of European foreign policy and as a phenomenon impacting on the foreign policies of other states and actors. The course begins with a discussion of the theoretical issues of the international dimension of EU enlargement, including: size; diversity; pace of change; reach; external reactions; and the widening v. deepening dilemma within the EU. It moves on to a broadly chronological discussion of the various phases of enlargement from 1973 to the present, examining the inputs from key Member States as well as from the EU institutions, and analysing the extent to which strategic policy-making characterised each round. In the last part of the course the attention switches to more thematic concerns: the role of the self-excluded states (Norway, Switzerland, Iceland); security, NATO and the post-Cold War European order; the geopolitical issue of Europe's final border; and the view from outsiders, such as the United States, Russia, Turkey and Morocco. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR433-EUE-video.aspx>

IR434 Half Unit European Defence and Security

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Spyridon Economides COW 2.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE4You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course examines the role of defence and security issues in European integration. It traces the evolution and nature of decision-making with respect to European defence initiatives, and examines the structures and institutions of EU defence and security. It also seeks to understand the relationship between foreign policy and security/defence policy in the EU especially in the context of transatlantic relations, the relationship with NATO and the EU's wider international profile. The course is divided into two parts. Part one provides a theoretical overview of the role of defence and security issues in European integration. It addresses the question of defence and European identity, the relationship between European defence and the national objectives of Member-States, the link between collective defence and collective security as well as the role of defence in the EU's evolution as a civilian actor in international relations. It also looks at the historical evolution of the plans, structures and institutions of European defence and security. It places this evolution in the context of the early post-Second World War era, the Cold War and German rearmament and the issues of extended deterrence, burden-sharing within NATO and the emergence of a European pillar to Western defence. Part two examines the more contemporary developments in European defence and security and concentrates on the relationship with European Political Cooperation/Common Foreign and Security Policy, moves to institutionalise defence and provisions for crisis management and conflict prevention. Included in the second part are examinations of the EU's recent ESDP mission and the implications of this on the EU's role in the world.

IR437 Half Unit Postcolonial Perspectives in International Relations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr T Barkawi, STC 5.76

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: No specific requirements but students should have a background in the social sciences or humanities.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the postcolonial turn in the social sciences and humanities and in the study of world politics. The course is based on one book per seminar. These will include classic statements on Eurocentrism and Orientalism as well as efforts to 'provincialize' Europe.

What happens when world politics are seen through the lens of empire and imperialism rather than that of the nation-state? What is the significance for world politics, and for social and political inquiry, of resistance to empire in practice and in theory? We will consider historical and contemporary answers to these questions from an interdisciplinary range of scholars.

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalrelations/video/IR437-PPIR-video.aspx>

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two short pieces of formative coursework.

IR444 Half Unit Strategy in Action

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox COL2.05A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Diplomacy and International Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: In this course we will be examining through lectures, seminars and workshops four major foreign policy decisions, the diplomatic background to each of these and the strategic thinking behind them. We will be asking the students through group exercises to prepare a strategy and policy paper relevant to the day.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

The course is taught over 48 hours. This includes 3 intense sessions - a weekend of assessing strategic decisions involving drafting and crafting papers, a second weekend of formulating strategic decisions and briefing sessions on methodology. All these will lay the foundations for the dissertation plan.

Formative coursework: Group discussion and formulation of strategy/policy papers.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 3000 words) in the LT. The formulation of a dissertation topic which must be in the form of a 3,000 word dissertation plan (100%). This should include the title, an abstract, a problem statement which should identify the features and theoretical concepts associated with the topic, the aims and objectives (including research questions or hypotheses), a literature review and the methodology. This module is taken in conjunction with IR496 Dissertation: MSc Diplomacy and International Strategy (1.5 units).

IR445 Chinese Foreign and Security Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor W. Callahan, STC 5.77

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in International Relations (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course will provide students with an historical overview of the development of Chinese foreign and security policy, the theoretical concepts used for analysing the making of Chinese foreign policy, and an up-to-date survey of China's evolving relations around the world. The first five weeks will be dedicated to providing a long historical perspective, and use a number of case studies to show how basic factors used in foreign policy analysis shape policy outcomes, including economic factors, the role of perception, geopolitical influences, bureaucratic politics, nationalism, and socialisation into the international system. The remainder of the course will involve analysing case studies on China's relations with the United States, Japan and Korea, Southeast Asia, South Asia, Russia and Central Asia, Australasia and the Pacific Islands, the EU, Africa, Latin America, the Middle East. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalrelations/video/IR445-CFSP-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete three 2,000 word essays during the course and will make two presentations to the seminar. It is permissible for the presentations to be on the same topics as the essays.

IR447 Half Unit Political Economy of International Labour Migration

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Covadonga Meseguer

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Many of the papers that will be read use statistical methods. Students are expected to at least be able to read and interpret statistical work.

Course content: The mobility of workers is one of the pillars of globalization. However and surprisingly, international political economists have paid less attention to the political causes and consequences of international migration in comparison to that paid to other aspects of globalization such as trade or finance. In this course, we shall employ a political economy perspective to study the historical evolution of migration policy, the relationship between trade and migration, and the political causes and consequences of migration flows. I shall place special emphasis on the study of the political consequences of migration for sending (rather than receiving) countries. We shall also pay attention to an important capital flow associated to international migration: remittances. Rather than focusing on the economic/developmental consequences of remittances, we shall discuss how remittances impact political outcomes as diverse as democratization, the survival of dictatorships, political clientelism, corruption, political participation, and political accountability.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write one book review choosing between the ones below. The review is due in Week 6 (2000 words). IR448 Half Unit American Grand Strategy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Peter Trubowitz

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will explore American foreign policy at the broadest level of analysis - the level known as grand strategy. The course will showcase the main theoretical perspectives that inform the study of US grand strategy and apply them to historical and contemporary cases of American statecraft. In this connection, we will assess the relevance of the US experience for theorizing about power politics and the implications of alternative theories for thinking critically about American behavior. Students will gain an appreciation of the debates and controversies that animate the study of US foreign policy, as well as of the unique challenges posed by making foreign policy in the American political, economic, and cultural context.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two short essays on questions posed by the instructor. Students will be required to give two in class presentations.

IR449 Half Unit Conflict and Peacebuilding

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Mark Hoffman OLD 1.09 and Dr David Rampton CON 3.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research) and MSc in International Relations Theory. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: A basic background knowledge of the subject would be an advantage.

Course content: This course is intended for those interested in theoretical and practical approaches to the question of peace, the problems of conflict and violence, and responses to them particularly in the form of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The course is divided into three unequal but interconnected parts. The first part examines ideas and debates about the causes, contexts, dynamics and characterisations of conflict. The second explores and problematises the nature and meanings of peace and peacebuilding. This leads into the third section which is concerned with a critical engagement with the range of international responses to conflict associated with the discourses and practices of liberal peacebuilding and statebuilding. The seminars explore the nexus between theory and practice. Although the course and its readings are mainly theoretical and conceptual rather than empirical, students are encouraged to apply the ideas to actual cases, past and present.

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR422-CPS-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One 2,000-word essay, marked by the seminar teacher. One two-page outline of assessed essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading guide will be provided at the first meeting. IR450 International Political Economy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Stephen Woolcock CLM 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in Management and MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available on an optional basis to a limited number of students on MSc Management, with enrolment subject to staffing resources, the completion of a hard copy application form available from room CLM 6.08, and permission of the teachers responsible.

Course content: An advanced introduction to concepts and contending approaches in international political economy, and an overview of the evolution of international economic relations since the late nineteenth century.

This course is the core course for MSc International Political Economy. It aims to introduce students to various approaches to the study of international political economy (IPE), and to apply theories to important historical and contemporary empirical issues. The first part of the course introduces students to the main theoretical concepts in and methodological approaches to political economy, emphasising the overlap between international and comparative approaches. After surveying the main schools of thought in the subject, it examines more recent theoretical developments, including the comparative and domestic approaches that have become increasingly prominent in the literature. The second and third parts of the course address the political and economic history of the international political economy since the Industrial Revolution. The issues covered in this part include particular events such as the 1930s economic depression, the issue of economic development, the construction and evolution of international economic regimes and institutions, and contemporary issues related to 'globalisation'. Previous background in international relations, international economics, comparative politics and history is helpful but is not a requirement. Students with no previous background in the subject should read Walter and Sen, Analyzing the Global Political Economy (2009), Oatley, International Political Economy and Ravenhill, Global Political Economy by the end of the first term.

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR450-IPE-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

There will be a lecture course (IR450.1) on International Political Economy commencing in week one of the MT, with an examination preparation and expectations lecture in week 2 of ST. Students will be assigned to International Political Economy seminar groups (IR450.1A) which accompany the lecture series; each seminar group will be run by a teacher involved in the MSc IPE programme. A supplementary series of 14 lectures on Introduction to Some Concepts in Economics will also be given as part of IR450.1, explaining the law of comparative costs, purchasing power parity, the quantity theory of money, the balance of payments and other concepts currently used in the literature. This supplementary lecture series is primarily intended for those with little or no background in international economics and is not examinable.

Formative coursework: Three 2,000-word essays will be set and marked by the seminar teacher.

Indicative reading: It is advisable to begin reading before the lectures start, and the following general texts are recommended. A more complete source-list is provided in the course outline. Oatley, International Political Economy (2012); Ravenhill, Global Political Economy (2011); Walter and Sen, Analyzing the Global Political Economy (2009); J Frieden & D Lake (eds), International Political Economy (2009); J Frieden, Global Capitalism (2006); Robert Gilpin, Global Political Economy (2001); Susan Strange, States and Markets.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Students will be asked to answer three out of 12 questions.

IR451

Politics of Money in the World Economy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr S. Hager CLM 4.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This course is designed as a component of the study of a global system in which the management and mismanagement of money and finance are matters of fundamental consequence, for both international relations and domestic politics. It is intended to be of particular relevance to students specialising in international political economy. This is a course in applied political economy theory. It deals with the basic concepts regarding the creation, use and management of money and finance in the global system. Students are then introduced to international monetary relations over the past one and a half centuries. Issues covered include the use of national currencies as international money, the politics of exchange rate adjustment, the operations of banks and other institutions in international money and capital markets, the evolution of global financial markets, the relationship between states and markets in the arena of global finance, international monetary cooperation, and the choices of monetary and financial policies open to developed and developing countries. The course emphasises that contemporary issues, such as financial crises, financial regulation and the politics of IMF conditionality, are best understood in a broader theoretical and historical context. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR451-PMWE-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of lectures, 4 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

One lecture course (IR451.1) and one seminar course (IR451.2). Lectures begin in the first week of MT and continue in the LT.

Seminars begin in the third week of the MT and continue in the LT. A series of 14 additional lectures (held in MT and early LT) are given as part of IR451.1, Introducing Concepts in Monetary Theory and International Monetary Economics. Students intending to take the course are expected to attend these lectures unless they already have a strong background in monetary economics. An 'Examination Techniques and Preparation' lecture will be held in week 2 of ST as part of the IR450 lecture series.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to make presentations on topics of their choice and to write three 2,000-word essays, to be marked by the seminar teacher.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus, but the following general works provide a useful introduction: B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital (2008); A Walter and G Sen, Analyzing the Global Political Economy (2009); A Walter, World Power and World Money (1993); R Gilpin, The Political Economy of International Relations (1987), Chapters 4 & 8; S Strange, Mad Money (1998); J Frieden & D Lake, International Political Economy: Perspective on Global Power and Wealth, section IIIC; C Randall Henning, Currencies and Politics (1994); T. Porter, Globalization and Finance (2005); D Andrews (ed), International Monetary Power (2006).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

There is a three-hour formal examination in the ST based on the lecture course and work covered in the seminars. The paper contains about 12 questions, of which three are to be answered.

The Political Economy of International Trade

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leonardo Baccini LCH 2.08

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: The study of the choice of trade policy and the institutional context in which it takes place. This course investigates how theories of emphasising distributional interests and institutions can explain trade policy choices. Particular emphasis is placed on giving students an understanding of the fundamental models of political economy. The course then applies these various issue-areas of trade policy, among them the role of the GATT and the WTO, regional trade agreements, trade in services, and the relationship between trade and foreign direct investment. While there is no formal pre-requisite for the course, it would be preferable for students to have already completed an introductory course in microeconomics and basic knowledge of quantitative analysis. Students without a previous background in quantitative methods can attend lectures from M1451 and M1452

Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR457-PEIT-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

A series of 20 lectures (IR457) and 18 seminars (IR457) based on student presentations. Lectures begin in week one of the MT and seminars begin in the third week of the MT. Fourteen lectures on Introduction to Some Concepts in Economics will also be given as part of IR450.1, explaining the law of comparative costs, purchasing power parity, the quantity theory of money, the balance of payments and other concepts currently used in the literature. These lectures, starting in week one of the MT, are highly recommended for MSc IPE students without any background in economics.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: The bulk of this course will be taught using journal articles. In addition, students will find it useful to consult several overview texts on the political economy of trade and the workings of the global trading system, among them Paul R. Krugman, Maurice Obstfeld, and Marc Melitz (2011), International Economics, 9th ed. Prentice Hall; Bernard M. Hoekman and Michel M. Kostecki (2010), The Political Economy of the World Trading System, 3rd edition, Oxford University Press; Douglas A. Irwin (2009), Free Trade Under Fire, 3rd edition, Princeton University Press; and Robert Feenstra (2004), Advanced International Trade: Theory and Evidence, Princeton University Press. A detailed reading list will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (40%, 3000 words) in the LT.

IR460 Not available in 2013/14 Comparative Political Economy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lauren Phillips CLM 4.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Political Economy (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Global Politics, MSc in International Affairs (LSE and Peking University), MSc in International Political Economy, MSc in International Political Economy (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The comparative study of democratic institutions and economic policy choice. This course will investigate how theories emphasising distributional interests and domestic institutions can explain economic policy choices. Particular emphasis will be placed on giving students an understanding of the use of quantitative methods in political economy research. A third main objective will be to show how similar theories of political economy can be applied to both OECD and developing country cases. While there will be no formal pre-requisite for the course, it would be preferable for students to have already completed an introductory sequence in microeconomics and macroeconomics. Students without a previous background in quantitative methods can attend lectures from MI451 and MI452. Watch a short introductory video on this course: <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/internationalRelations/video/IR460-CPE-video.aspx>

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit three 2,000-word essays over the course of MT and LT.

Indicative reading: "The bulk of this course will be taught using journal articles. In addition, students will find it useful to consult several overview texts in political economy. Allan Drazen, Political Economy in Macroeconomics and Adam Przeworski, Susan Stokes & Bernard Manin, Democracy, Accountability, and Representation are good references."

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Course content: The course focuses on the role of Islam in world politics, posing two inter-related questions: First, how can we explain the varying nature and strength of Islam as a discursive and mobilisational force in international relations? Second, how should we understand the impact of changes in international relations on the institutions, authority structures, and identities associated with Islam? In this course, the approach to these questions is comparative. The course begins with an examination of the distinctive transnational structures of Islam as compared with another major world religion: Christianity. The emergence and trajectory of Islam as a force in international relations since the late 19th century are examined across successive periods in world history. The course covers the rise of transnational Islamist networks from the late Ottoman era through the tumultuous years of mass mobilisation in the interwar era, demobilisation with the formation of new nation-states in the early Cold War era, and the revival of Islam in world politics by the 1970s with the Iranian Revolution and developments elsewhere in the Muslim world. But most of the course covers the contemporary post-Cold War era, examining the varying role of Islam in diverse regional settings - Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Europe - and in the contexts of globalization and democratization, mass migration, separatist struggles and regional conflicts. Close attention is paid to the role of Saudi Arabia and Iran in the global politics of Islam, to Sunni-Shi'i conflicts, and to the question of Israel and Palestine. The course also focuses important cases like Al Qa'ida and the Taliban in Afghanistan and Pakistan, as well as Chechnya, Iraq, and Somalia, as well as important trends in Western Europe, including the UK.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. Professor Sidel will be solely responsible for the lectures and the seminars. Students will be divided into seminar discussion groups at the beginning of the course.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit three essays of 2-3,000 words in length over the course of the year for evaluation and comment by Professor Sidel. Whilst these essays will not be included in the formal assessment, they will help students to focus their energies on specific topics of particular interest to them and to receive feedback and guidance from Professor Sidel.

The course is available as an outside option.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the Student Statement box on the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Course content: This seminar course provides an introduction to the study of genocide. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, it explores major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role(s) of genocidal campaigns in international politics, inter alia, their origins, development, and termination; the manner of their perpetration, progression, and diffusion; their impact on the maintenance of international peace and security; their consequences for the reconstruction and development of states and the building of nations; and their adjudication in domestic and international courts and tribunals. Empirical cases to be discussed include Australia, Cambodia, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, East Timor, Nazi Germany, Guatemala, Iraq, Northern Ireland, the Ottoman Empire, Rwanda, Uganda, the Soviet Union, Sudan, and the former Yugoslavia, among others. The course is designed to equip students with the analytic tools necessary for making sense of the evolution of the international system from the nineteenth century to the present and for critically assessing the promise and limits of responding to collective violence.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One x 2,000 word essay.

IR481 Half Unit Europe, the US and Arab-Israeli Relations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Federica Bicchì CLM. 4.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in International Relations Theory, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students are required to obtain permission from the Teacher Responsible by completing the online application form linked to course selection on LSE for You. Admission is not guaranteed.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of post-1945 world history of the European Union governance system and of Middle Eastern politics is required.

Course content: The course focuses on the foreign policy of the EU and of EU member states towards Arab-Israeli relations (with a special emphasis on Palestinian-Israeli relations), in comparison with the US foreign policy. The main focus will be on the European perspective, but it would be impossible to analyse this subject without taking into account the US position and, to some extent, Transatlantic relations. After an overview of Palestine during the British mandate, the course will cover the period from 1948 to nowadays with a particular emphasis on contemporary issues. The British mandate on Palestine. The partition of Israel and the birth of Israel. Early support for Israel. The Suez crisis. The evolution of European and US policy towards Israel. The Global Mediterranean Policy. The 1973 war, the energy crisis and the Euro-Arab Dialogue. The Venice Declaration. The US and European contribution to the Arab-Israeli peace process in the 1990s. The Euro-Mediterranean Partnership and the Union for the Mediterranean. Regionalism as a policy. Democracy promotion in the Middle East. The Arab Spring and its consequences for Arab-Israeli relations. Recent initiatives and their relevance.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two 2,000-word essays during the course, to be marked by seminar teachers. These do not count towards the final mark.

Indicative reading: Students will be expected to read widely in appropriate books and journals. A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. The following provide a general background to the topic: Bicchi, Federica, European Foreign Policy Making toward the Mediterranean, New York: Palgrave (2007); Fawcett, L. (2009) International Relations of the Middle East, Oxford: Oxford University Press; Lesch, David, ed. The Middle East and the United States. Boulder: Westview (2007), 4th ed. Nonneman, G. IR496Dissertation: MSc Diplomacy and International Strategy (1.5 units)*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Cox COL2.05AAvailability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Diplomacy and International Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.Course content: The dissertation will address a topic in the social sciences drawn broadly from the three core courses. This will normally be a library based dissertation. The topic should make central use of concepts in the study of diplomacy and strategy and should demonstrate a good understanding of these concepts and implications. The dissertation will draw on empirical topic areas but should also demonstrate a high degree of conceptual originality. Guidance on standards of presentation will be given in the handbook and conform to the standard laid down for MSc dissertations in the International Relations Department. The subject and title of the dissertation must be approved by the dissertation supervisor.Teaching: Arrangements for supervision. Students will receive advice on how to choose a topic and how to write a dissertation from the dissertation supervisor in two 1.5 hour workshops and two 1.5 hour individual supervision sessions.Formative coursework: To be confirmed.Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 15000 words) in the LT.

A 15,000 word dissertation (100%) to be submitted in September 2013. This course is taken in conjunction with IR444 Strategy in Action (H).

Using the dissertation plan (IR444), the dissertation will include an introduction, theoretical framework, a literature review and methodology followed by chapters, conclusion and bibliography.

IS416 Half UniteHealth: Policy, Strategy and Systems (modular)*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.Pre-requisites: Students should have an appreciation of information management and systems development and implementation issues, and some understanding of healthcare systems. Selected readings will be provided for students who require this background understanding as part of the pre-session reading programme.

Course content: This course explores the principal issues faced by healthcare policy makers and healthcare organizations as they plan for and implement substantial healthcare information systems and infrastructures. The course considers systems oriented towards both administrative and clinical activities. The course is organised as follows: A survey of the history of computer-based systems in healthcare and some comparison with other sectors. The evolution and current state of information systems in primary and secondary care with international comparisons. The electronic patient record and national information infrastructures for health. The development of healthcare policies for systems and infrastructures. Assessing the transformative potential of health information systems. Issues of systems implementation. Selected application domains including electronic prescribing and medicines management, telehealth and telecare, new patient roles. Issues of evaluation and building of an evidence base.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures, 12 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

3 two-hour lectures, 6 two-hour seminars and 2 one and a half hour project essay workshops during a modular study week.

Formative coursework: Seminars are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the pre-session reading materials. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students will complete a formative writing assignment on which written feedback will be provided.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words).

One 5,000 word individual essay on an approved topic (100%). This is the same course as IS415 but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

IS417 Half Unit Global Sourcing and Management of Business and IT Services

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leslie Willcocks NAB3.23

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: None, but a basic understanding of sourcing principles and of management in organizations is useful. A short study pack of selected readings will be provided for students who require this background understanding

Course content: The course focuses on global sourcing strategies and practices of corporations and government agencies. It examines these in Europe, Americas and Asia Pacific in the context of increasing globalization of organizational intent, capabilities and sources of service supply. The course provides an understanding of how international business is pursued, convergence and differences across organizations and countries, business strategies and 'fit' with IT governance and sourcing approaches, and how sourcing of business and IT services is managed, focusing especially on outsourcing and offshoring decisions and implementation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on weekly class preparation and participation. There is a mock examination.

IS418 Half Unit Convergence and Information Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides an overview of the theories and models associated with the diffusion of the internet, media convergence and the development of large cross-corporate communication infrastructures. An essential aim of the course is to advance the understanding of the background developments against which information has increasingly emerged as carrier of new economic ventures and a crucial means for developing new organizational and business offerings. The course also aims to provide an account of alternative models of producing and distributing services (for example, open source software, wikipedia) that do not any more need to rely on the mediating role which markets have normally assumed. These models both contrast and complement market-mediated ventures.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack. Written formative feedback is provided on weekly class preparation and participation. There is a mock examination.

IS470 Half Unit Innovation and Information Systems: Concepts and Perspectives

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Chrisanthi Avgerou NAB3.22 and Dr Shirin Madon CON8.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course explores the theoretical foundations for the study of organizational and social innovation and the particular role of information systems in such change. It integrates concepts and perspectives of innovation from a range of disciplines. In completing this course students should be able to draw critically from existing theories in order to address issues of technology-based innovation, organizational change and information systems management. The lectures cover literature related to three broad themes: innovation and organizational change; information technology and organizational change; and information technology innovation and socio-economic change. For each of these themes we identify and discuss relevant theoretical concepts and perspectives. The discussion of the theories is structured in terms of technical/rational and socially embedded approaches. In addition we provide five formative sessions on essay preparation.

Teaching: 16 hours and 30 minutes of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students will complete a formative essay of 2000 words on which feedback will be provided. A mock examination, with questions from IS470, IS471 and IS472 is held in January.

IS471 Half Unit Innovating Organisational Information Technology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Sorensen NAB3.11 and Dr William Venters NAB3.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation. This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A basic knowledge of computing, including hardware and software. Students are expected to have a basic understanding of the challenges of implementing and managing information systems in organisations. A short study pack of selected readings will be provided for students who require this background understanding.

Course content: The course provides students with a practical and theoretical insight into the processes and practices of developing contemporary Information Systems. The course reflects the diversity of contemporary information systems contexts; discussing how we should manage the development of complex Internet enabled systems and services. The course focuses on new technologies and practices including cloud and grid computing, open-source development, Software as a Service, Web2.0 mashups, mobile and ubiquitous information technology, technology to support knowledge work, innovating customer relationship management, mediating mutual adjustment and mass-scale mediated communities. The changing architectures of information systems towards an Internet based cloud are key themes of the course. Attention is however also given to the development of traditional ERP and information management systems which remain important in enterprises. Particular attention is given to problem structuring and problem design issues within such complex settings using Soft Systems Methodology and the Unified Modeling Language as a toolkit. Agile methods form a core part of the teaching, with Extreme Programming, Rapid Application Development and Internet-speed development contrasted with development formalism such as the Rational Unified Model and Capability Maturity Models. To ensure that students gain practical experience we include a two-week intensive "bootcamp" group project in which outside consultants present a "real-world" case study of systems development and the groups undertake to rapidly analyse and design a proposal for a technical solution. This allows students to support their theoretical understanding with a strong practical experience of the pressures and difficulties of systems development today. The "bootcamp" group project provides a realistic experience of developing systems within a consulting role, and is supported by classes and question and answer session and online discussion. Students gain an understanding of the benefits and difficulties of working within a small team under pressure.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 5 hours of seminars and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students discuss articles, practice systems development techniques, and critically evaluate their success. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. There is also a mock exam in January shared with IS470 and IS472.

IS472 Half Unit Global Strategy, Management and Information Systems

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leslie Willcocks NAB3.23 and Dr Stephen Smithson NAB3.31

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A basic understanding of business strategy and management and a basic knowledge of information and communication technologies. Students are expected to have a basic understanding of the challenges of implementing and managing information systems in organisations. A short study pack of selected readings will be provided for students who require this background understanding.

Course content: The main focus of this course is to examine contemporary global strategies and management practices of corporations and government agencies across the world. In the context of Ghemawat calls 'semi-globalization' we examine how to analyse corporate and business strategies, competitiveness, and how organizations set up and manage structures, processes, human resources, and technologies to deliver on their objectives. Following through on this theme and context the course focuses more specifically on the social, managerial and political issues involved in the introduction and operation of information and communications technologies in organisations. The course analyses critically the opportunities and risks attached to the development and utilisation of information and communications technologies in contemporary organisations. The aim is to educate and inform future managers about strategy, management and information systems in the context of increasing globalization, and to establish the key choices and practices impacting on organizational and individual performance. Case studies are used to demonstrate the key issues. Topics covered include: Global strategic management; corporate and business level strategies; industry competition; competing through resources and capabilities; value creation; management functions, IS strategy and sourcing; IS projects, risk management and organisational change; role and governance of the IS function; IT-enabled business process (re)design; infrastructure; business and IS evaluation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 2 hours of seminars and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. A mock examination, with questions from IS470, IS471 and IS472 is held in January.

IS479 Half Unit Information Systems for the Public Sector: Digital Government and Service Innovation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antonio Cordella NAB3.30 and Prof Patrick Dunleavy CON5.19

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation, MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Digital government and digital public sector services are the result of the widespread adoption of ICTs, Web processes and social media in public sector organisation - which cumulatively transform and may 'productize' the nature of public services delivered to citizens. This course covers the recent and likely-future major organizational and technology change processes in the government sector. Core topics include: the distinctive aspects of the public administration context for technology-enabled innovation; digital government and public sector reform; public sector ICT innovation and public value creation; the use of ICTs to streamline public services as part of wider business process changes; measuring and growing productivity via digital changes; 'digital by default' services and social media in government; and next-generation shifts to EDGE (Essentially Digital Governance).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 4 hours of workshops in the LT.

10 two-hour lectures, 10 one-hour seminars and 4 one-hour project essay workshops.

Formative coursework: One 1000-word formative essay to be submitted in week 7. Seminars are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on class participation.

IS480 Half Unit Information Technology and Service Innovation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Sorensen NAB3.11 and Dr William Venters NAB3.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course aims to give the students theoretical and practical insights into the key issues informing the design of contemporary information technology (IT). The course relates the diversity of contemporary IT developments to organisational innovation and emphasises the increased complexity of this challenge with ubiquitous and pervasive technologies affording intimate everyday experiences relying on digitisation and convergence of device functionality, data, content, systems, services and infrastructures. This complexity, which has emerged within the past couple of decades both offer possibilities for innovation, but also significant risks. Mobile and ubiquitous IT will feature as an illustrative example of IT innovation throughout. Throughout the course small groups of students will describe an existing complex real-life set of services and suggest design improvements, sensitised by theoretical elements from the course. Subsequently, each individual group member will write a reflective essay based on the group discussions. Topics addressed will be: Digital infrastructure innovation; Digital platform strategies; Designing technology affordance diversity; Understanding technology performances; Individual interaction intimacy; Amplified teams; The technological organisation; Global crowd innovation with IT; Global technology innovation tussles; Business innovation with information technology. The weekly seminars will consist of presentations and discussions offering students opportunity to critically reflect on theoretical and pragmatic issues related to the subject matter of the course, such as; the IT artifact and ecosystem, the role of IT in business innovation, understanding the paradoxes of technology performances, intimate technology experiences, IT mediated team-working, the IT-enabled organisation, innovating global IT mediated crowds, innovation as organisational tussles, and the role of IT-based innovation for business development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on class participation.

IS485 Half Unit Management and Economics of E-Business

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Smithson NAB3.31 and Dr Antonio Cordella NAB3.30

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. It is available as an outside option to other MSc students.

Pre-requisites: None, but a basic understanding of information systems within organisational contexts is assumed. Students are expected to have a basic understanding of the challenges of implementing and managing information systems in organisations. A short study pack of selected readings will be provided for students who require this background understanding.

Course content: The course discusses managerial, economics and innovation aspects of online business. History and foundations of online business are introduced to discuss the managerial challenges of the different e-business practices: Business-to-consumer (B2C) and Business-to-business (B2B) systems; e-marketing; intermediation; e-procurement; and IT in supply chain management. Economic theories, such as transaction costs and principal agent, are used to discuss the impact of e-business on market structure and organisation. The course introduces practical and management aspects of the impact of diverse technologies on interorganisational relationships, new organisational forms, such as networked organisations, and electronic markets. Strategies for e-business innovation including web 2.0 and similar developments are also discussed.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles from the course study pack and case studies. Formative feedback is provided through class presentations and a formative essay of 1000 words on which feedback will be provided.

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: All members of the Information Systems and Innovation Group are involved in dissertation support.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of information systems. The dissertation is a quantitative or qualitative investigation in the field. It may be either a theoretical or empirical piece of research. Students must obtain the approval of their advisor before embarking on any research. The course IS490 Study Skills and Research Methods provides background material on undertaking dissertation work. Arrangements for supervision Advisors will normally be allocated according to student dissertation proposals. The dissertation advisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research. Referencing Details on Group requirements for referencing and paraphrasing and the presentation of the dissertation are given during the IS490 Study Skills and Research Methods course. Students with any queries on this area should contact their dissertation advisor or the MSc Tutor.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Three paper copies of the dissertation must be handed in to the IS Group on a specified date in late August/early September. An electronic version of the dissertation must also be submitted. Penalties will be applied to any late submission. The word limit for the dissertation is 10,000 words. The dissertation is critical to assessment on the programme.

LL400E Half Unit European Capital Markets Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Niamh Moloney

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option. Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the EU's regulation of the capital markets. It considers the harmonized regulatory regime which applies to capital market actors across the Member States and which supports the integrated market. The topics covered include: the rationale for integration and the role of law, the evolution of the integration project, the Financial Services Action Plan, and the Lamfalussy Report; the deregulation, liberalization, harmonization, and re-regulation mechanisms used to integrate and regulate the EU market; market access and the passport for investment services; the Markets in Financial Instruments Directive 2004 and regulation; the liberalization of order execution and the regulation of trading markets; the UCITS mutual funds regime; retail investor protection; the prospectus and disclosure regime; and the institutional structure for law-making and for supervision. It also covers the EU's financial crisis reform programme and the new European Securities and Markets Authority. Course coverage may vary slightly from year to year.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided in advance for each seminar. Sample texts include: Moloney, EC Securities Regulation, 2nd edition (2008); Chiu, Regulatory Convergence in EU Securities Regulation (2008); Skinner (ed), The Future of Investing in Europe's Markets after MiFID (2007); Ferrarini and Wymeersch (eds), Investor Protection in Europe. Corporate Law Making, the MiFID and Beyond (2006); Ferran, Building an EU Securities Market (2004); Avgerinos, Regulating and Supervising Investment Services in the European Union (2003).

LL401E Half Unit The Law of Armed Conflict

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course covers the law governing the conduct of hostilities (jus in bello, also known as the law of armed conflict or international humanitarian law). The course will take a critical approach to the international regulation and facilitation of armed conflict. As well as the laws governing the means and methods of warfare ('Hague' law) and the 'protected' groups hors de combat ('Geneva' law), the course will cover 'lawfare' more generally: the recourse to law as a means of waging war. It will also look at the law of belligerent occupation.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 1500 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the first seminar. See, in particular: Yoram Dinstein, The Conduct of Hostilities under the Law of Armed Conflict, Adam Roberts & Guelff, Documents on the Laws of War; A.V. LL403E Half Unit International Human Rights: Concepts, Law and Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon V503

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course is concerned with the international protection of human rights and its relation to a range of current global problems. The course draws on the international law and practice of human rights to examine how we might best understand the contribution and limitations of human rights to addressing contemporary ills. Through the consideration of a range of standards and thematic issues, participants will learn about, and critically analyse, human rights concepts, norms, institutions and actors. The course begins by studying the ideas and objectives that underpin the post-1945 human rights legal order and then turns to assess the United Nations and regional architectures and standards of international human rights. We build on this foundation to examine a variety of human rights topics and to consider how international law in these areas has developed and is being applied. The lectures will explore civil and political rights, economic social and cultural rights, 'third generation' rights, the rights of particular groups as well as a selection of current issues. Subjects may include: the prohibition of torture and the war on terror; the right to privacy; the right to food; the right to self-determination; the right to development; the rights of indigenous peoples; women's human rights; transnational corporations and human rights; human rights and poverty, and; human rights and the environment.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL404E Half Unit European and UK Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB6.12

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course has two parts. In part one the origins, development and current standing of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms are considered. The primary focus will be on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, though the cases of other jurisdictions will also be referred to where appropriate. The course will analyse the Convention from the perspective of selected rights within it, but will also engage with the subject thematically, subjecting such concepts as the 'margin of appreciation' and proportionality to close scrutiny. The goal of this part of the course is to give students a good critical understanding of the Convention, the case-law of the Strasbourg court and the Convention's place within the constitutional and political structure of 'Greater Europe'. The second part of the course is made up of a detailed study of the UK Human Rights Act. The origins and the political background to the Act will be explained, and the structure of the measure will be fully elaborated, relying on the text of the Act itself but also on the burgeoning case law that accompanies the measure. This part of the course will identify the principles that underpin the UK Act and explain its proper place in British law. It will also explore the wider constitutional implications of the measure, looking at its effect on the relationship between courts and Parliament. Linkages with the broader European framework discussed in the first part will be made by students through their reading and through class-engagement.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Jacobs and White, The European Convention on Human Rights 5th edn (OUP, 2010) and/or Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 2nd edn (Oxford, 2009). Also useful is Mowbray, Cases and Materials on the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2012). Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (Cambridge, 2009), Hickman Public Law after the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010) and Gearty, Principles of Human Rights Adjudication (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL405E Half Unit Dispute Resolution and Advanced Mediation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB7.15

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The principal focus of the course is upon methods of resolving disputes other than adjudication. The course brings together theory and observation of practice and is divided into two parts. In the first section students examine what motivates people to enter into disputes and the range of outcomes they seek, the history of the "informal justice" movement and the transformation of attitudes to dispute resolution in the UK and beyond. The emphasis in this part of the course is also on looking at the two primary forms of dispute resolution, negotiation and mediation. In the second part of the course specialist practitioners work with the class in exploring the interface between theory and practice and the different dynamics of disputes and their resolution in specific subject areas such as commercial law, community disputes, international law and family law. The course is designed to complement the option on Commercial Arbitration.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: The book which will be of most use to buy is Roberts and Michael Palmer's 2005 (second edition) Dispute Processes: ADR and the Primary Forms of Dispute Resolution, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. It is recommended that every student purchases a copy of this book.

Students will also find it useful to access the following books which provide important context for debate about the civil litigation system and negotiation tactics:

Genn, Hazel, (2009) Judging Civil Justice (The Hamlyn Lectures) Cambridge, Cambridge University Press.

Roger Fisher and William Ury (2012) Getting to Yes: Negotiating an Agreement Without Giving In by Random House.

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL406E Half Unit Regulation of Financial Markets I

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Julia Black NAB7.09

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course examines the regulatory structures governing financial markets and investment services. It covers the main principles of international, EU and UK financial regulation, with the aim of developing a critical understanding of the dynamics and conceptual framework of financial regulation. The course does not aim to provide a detailed comparative account of financial regulation across countries, but international comparisons may be made where these are useful. In this context, students are encouraged to draw on their knowledge of their own national systems of regulation in making comparisons, and to apply the analytical perspectives suggested to those systems. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial services and markets, rather than on private law and transactional aspects. No previous knowledge of financial market regulation or background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. Indeed, the course provides a good background for further study of both financial and economic law and economic analysis of law. For non-lawyers, a willingness to engage in legal analysis will be necessary, although a legal background is not required. The course might be regarded as complimentary to a number of other courses, including Law of Corporate Finance or International Financial Law and Practice I & II.

-Overview of financial markets, institutions and instruments

-Rationales and techniques of financial regulation

-Regulatory architecture: global, EU and UK

-Macro and micro prudential regulation

-Financial stability and crisis management

-Regulation of intermediaries

-Market abuse and insider dealing

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time (for each half unit)

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed during the course and essential materials will be made available to the students, where possible. In addition, the students will be invited to do independent reading. Good general introductions to financial markets and their regulation include: A Turner et al, The Future of Finance: The LSE Report (2010); H Davies and S Green, Global Financial Regulation (2nd edn, 2010); S Valdez and P. Molyneaux, Introduction to Global Financial Markets (6th edn, 2010).

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL407 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Media and Communications Regulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

The course might be regarded as complimentary to a number of other courses, including Law of Corporate Finance or International Financial Law and Practice I & II.

The syllabus for Part II includes the following topics:

- What is financial stability?
- Macro-prudential supervision- emerging strategies & techniques
- Micro-prudential supervision & the Basle capital adequacy regime
- Crisis Management & Bank Resolution
- Public safety nets and the problem of moral hazard
- Regulating Credit Rating Agencies
- Regulating Hedge Funds
- Regulating Derivatives and derivative markets
- Regulation of Market Infrastructure

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed during the course and essential materials will be made available to the students, where possible. In addition, the students will be invited to do independent reading. Good general introductions to financial markets and their regulation include: A Turner et al, The Future of Finance: The LSE Report (2010); H Davies and S Green, Global Financial Regulation (2nd edn, 2010); S Valdez and P. Molyneux, Introduction to Global Financial Markets (6th edn, 2010).

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL408E Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Law: Institutions

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jo Murkens NAB7.31

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course examines the central issues in comparative constitutional law across a range of jurisdictions and from a variety of perspectives. Although precise topics to be covered may vary from year to year, the main sections of the course will deal with: constitution-making, constitutional forms, constitutional adjudication and constitutional borrowings. The overarching objectives of the course will be to analyse the methodological and conceptual challenges posed by comparative study of constitutions and to reflect on the cultural, ideological and transformative dimensions of contemporary constitutional discourse. Topics to be examined include: (1) constitutionalism and constituent power (2) constitutional forms (presidential and parliamentary systems; unitary and federal arrangements) (3) constitutional courts and constitutional adjudication (4) constitutional borrowings (transnational litigation, borrowing and the migration of constitutional ideas).

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: There is no set book for this course. All materials will be made available in advance on Moodle.

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL409E Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Law: Rights

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course examines a range of controversial issues in human and constitutional rights law from a comparative perspective. These issues include: abortion; euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide; gay sex and sodomy; religion in the public sphere; affirmative action; hate speech and denial of the holocaust; obscenity. We will approach them by comparing and contrasting judgments from courts all over the world, with a certain emphasis on cases from the U.S. Supreme Court, the Canadian Supreme Court, the South African Constitutional Court, the European Court of Human Rights, the U.K. Supreme Court, and the German Federal Constitutional Court. The goals of the course are, first, to introduce the students to the jurisprudence of those extremely powerful and influential courts, and, second, to invite them to think about and critically analyse some of the most controversial, difficult, and important rights issues of our time.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly case-based; however, interested students may find the following book helpful: V Jackson and M Tushnet, Comparative Constitutional Law, 2nd edition, 2006.

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

Course content: The traditional financial market sectors of commercial banking, derivatives, capital markets and asset management are converging in practice, but their academic analysis is still largely sector-based. This course offers a cross-sectoral, functional analysis, permitting students to grasp the big picture. It highlights certain anomalies in differing legal treatment of the respective sectors, and considers key trends. The course provides an overview of the substantive law aspects of international financial and business transactions. It is designed to be as topical as possible, and the content may change in the light of developments. While the precise topics covered will vary from year to year they typically will include the following:

- The logic and the players of the financial market. The creation and allocation of risk. The distinction between 'Law' and 'Regulation'.
- The reasoning and sources of financial law and regulation. The role of European financial law and regulation. The role of international law. Understanding the financial crisis.
- Banks and their nature. Assets and Liabilities. Deposit taking and bank loans. Money market instruments. Rank of creditors in bank insolvency. Syndicated loans.
- Raising capital. Primary market and secondary market. Issuance of debt securities (bonds). Issuance of Eurobonds. Issuance of equity (shares). Investment funds, alternative funds.
- Security interests. Fix and floating charge. Financial collateral. Reprehypothecation. Conflict-of-laws problems.
- Guarantee, indemnity, insurance and derivatives. Types of derivatives. The rise of derivatives. Recharacterisation risk. Standard documentation.
- Netting and set-off. Relation to insolvency law. Importance for derivatives, repos, securities lending. Conflict-of-laws analysis. Cross-jurisdictional problems.
- Structured finance, securitisation and asset-backed securities. The rationale behind it. Risks.
- Transfer of financial instruments. Stock exchanges. Trading and settlement of securities. Intermediated securities. Conflict of laws and cross-jurisdictional problems. Derivatives clearing.
- Regulatory arbitrage in respect of financial transactions.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

LL412E Half Unit International Economic Law I

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Lang NAB6.19

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to the field of international economic law: its principles, rules, practices, and institutions, and the debates which attend each. The course focuses on the public international law rules and institutions which govern international trade. Students will be given a grounding in the jurisprudence of the WTO, but will also be introduced to interdisciplinary material on the broader political, economic, institutional and normative contexts in which international economic law operates. Key themes will include the question of 'development' and developing countries, the role of expertise in global economic governance, and institutional aspects of judicial international dispute settlement. Students will be expected to engage with the principles and practice of international economic law both at the technical level, and at the level of critical reflection.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.34

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the theory and practice of international arbitration, one of the most important mechanisms for settling disputes arising from commercial cross-border transactions. The focus is mainly on English arbitration law, which is put into a comparative perspective and contrasted especially with French law, which highlights the antagonism between Paris and London as the rival centres for international arbitration. Special attention is given to the applicable international treaties, the problems of conflicts of laws, and the different types of institutional and transnational rules that may have to be taken into consideration in an international arbitration. This course prepares for 'Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration'.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL416E Half Unit Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.34

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course aims at giving students who already are acquainted with the fundamentals of arbitration the possibility to go into depth into selected problems of international commercial arbitration. The course is designed to allow intense discussions of these problems in order to raise the sensitivity for the issues at stake and to lead to a research oriented approach. Despite its academic outset, the course is highly relevant for those wanting to specialise in arbitration practice, as the theoretical problems have a most significant impact on practical solutions. The course will treat a selection of topical contemporary issues of international commercial arbitration, such as the role of internationally mandatory rules of law, arbitration & insolvency, the scope of the competence-competence principle; arbitration and fraud and corruption, or the enforcement of awards set aside abroad. The course seeks to be as topical as possible, so that content may change in the light of developments.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: G. Born, International Commercial Arbitration - Cases and Materials (Kluwer 2011); id. International Commercial Arbitration (Kluwer 2009); N. Blackaby / C. Cases and doctrinal articles for each topic

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL417E Half Unit International Commercial Contracts: General Principles

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.34

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course treats what can be called the general part of transnational contract law, i.e. the general principles of law which are of relevance in any kind of international contract, be it sale, construction, shipping, financing, or joint venture. These general principles relate to contractual formation and negotiations, interpretation, transversal general principles, changed circumstances and hardship, agency, third parties, assignment, self-help and set-off, direct performance and damages and penalties. At present, such contracts are governed either by uniform rules of international conventions or by the national laws applicable by virtue of conflict of law rules. The course puts the existing national and international solutions in a comparative perspective so as to work with the sources of such generally accepted principles. Where there are divergences between existing solutions, the course focuses on the elaboration of new efficient solutions that are internationally acceptable and have the potential of becoming general principles in the future. For these purposes, special attention is given to the UNIDROIT Principles on International Commercial Contracts and the European Principles of Contract Law. Other national laws, however, are drawn upon from time to time. Students are also encouraged, in both examination and classes, to reflect upon the similarities and differences between their own national laws and the UNIDROIT Principles.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: S. Vogenauer & J. Kleinheisterkamp, Commentary on the UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts (OUP 2009); H. Kötz, European Contract Law (OUP 1997); K. LL418E Half Unit Comparative Corporate Governance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Gerner Beuerle NAB5.08

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course will focus on the role of boards of directors in large public companies and groups of companies. It will deal with the legal regulation of agency problems arising between the board and shareholders as a class; between the board/majority shareholders and minority shareholders; and between the board and other stakeholder groups, notably creditors and employees. Although the main focus will be on board and shareholder relationships, the aim of the course is to develop and apply a framework of analysis which illuminates relations between the board and all stakeholder groups. The course will be taught largely on a comparative basis, focusing on English, US and German law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Reading will be prescribed for each seminar. Preliminary reading can be found in P. Davies, Introduction to Company Law (OUP, 2nd edition 2010), chapters 5-9; R. Kraakman et al, The Anatomy of Corporate Law (2nd edition 2009); D. Kershaw, Company Law in Context: Text and Materials (OUP, 2nd edition 2012), chapters 5 and 6.

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL419E Half Unit Law of Corporate Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eva Micheler NAB7.35

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the private law rules governing how companies raise finance. The issues covered include e.g. capital structures, identifying and protecting shareholder rights, issuing shares, initial legal capital and alternatives, dividends, reduction of capital and share buy-backs, reform and moving to a solvency test and financial assistance. The course will focus on English Law but reference will be made to the relevant EU rules.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL420E Half Unit International Law and Climate Change

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course covers the international law dealing with climate change with a view to assessing how risks and uncertainties caused by climate change are governed and allocated in different legal regimes. The course adopts the stance that the political and legal questions raised by climate change cannot be addressed by reference to climate change law (or indeed international environmental law) alone. Climate change gives rise to a series of profound problems touching upon a range of bodies of law (international economic law, human rights law, state responsibility inter alia) in a complex political and ethical environment. In approaching climate change as a concrete concern relevant to these various bodies of law and practice, the course will address the normative and/or ethical bases for choosing between actions designed to prevent and/or manage climate change and its consequences, and the theoretical concerns raised by the 'fragmented' nature of international law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Rosemary Rayfuse and Shirley Scott (eds.), Climate Change and International Law, Edward Elgar (2011); Stephen Gardiner, Simon Caney, Dale Jamieson and Henry Shue (Eds.), Climate Ethics: Essential Readings, Oxford University Press (2010); Patricia Birnie, Alan Boyle, Catherine Redgwell, International Law and the Environment, Oxford University Press (2009); Nicholas Stern, The Economics of Climate Change: The Stern Review, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press (2007); IPCC, Fourth Assessment Report, Cambridge University Press (2007); Stephen Humphreys (ed.), Climate Change and Human Rights, Cambridge University Press (2009); Larry Lohmann, Carbon Trading, Dag Hammerskjöld Foundation (2006); Lavanya Rajamani, Differential Treatment in International Environmental Law, Oxford University Press (2006).

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL422E Half Unit Media and Communications Regulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: This course provides a comparative and generic introduction to key issues in the regulation of media and communications, focusing on economic, commercial and content regulation of the print media, broadcasting, telecommunications and internet industries. Consideration is given to the nature of and choice between alternative modes of regulation in light of perceived regulatory goals. Topics covered include: legal and regulatory protection of reputation and privacy; advertising regulation; rights creation and management; (international) trade in media services; public service broadcasting and impartiality controls; cross-media ownership regulation; public value and state aid controls; competition regulation in the media sector; regulation and liberalisation of telecommunications networks.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of mass media publication (principally the press, the broadcast media, and institutionalised Internet publication). The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media publication practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines potential restrictions on publication that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests considered are those in reputation (defamation), privacy, and confidentiality. The key public interests considered are the integrity of the judicial process (contempt and reporting restrictions), the impartiality of political representations, the avoidance of offence (obscenity and religion), national security, and the protection of children.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Fenwick and Phillipson, Media Freedom Under the Human Rights Act (OUP, 2006); Robertson and Nicol, Media Law (Sweet & Maxwell, 5th ed 2007), Tugendhat and Christie, The Law of Privacy and the Media, (OUP, 2002 and 2006 SUPP), Barendt, Freedom of Speech (OUP, 2nd ed 2005), Nicol, Millar and Sharland, Media Law and Human Rights (OUP, 2009); Cram, A Virtue Less Cloistered: Courts, Speech and Constitutions (Hart Publishing, 2002).

Assessment:

Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

Course content: This course examines the legal and administrative regulation of newsgathering and content production practices undertaken by journalists and others working in the media sector. The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media newsgathering practise, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines a number of newsgathering practices that are either facilitated or proscribed by law and/or other forms of regulation. These include protection of sources (in general; vis-a vis police and security interests; payment of sources); access to information held by the state (official secrets; news management; freedom of information); access to the justice system (secret justice / physical access to courts); access to court documents; technology and the courts - text-based reporting and broadcasting; access to prisoners); media-police interaction; harassment and media intrusion, and surreptitious newsgathering practices (hacking, tapping and subterfuge).

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

LL425E Half Unit Competition Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course is a comprehensive study of the main features of competition law. While the focus is on EU competition law, reference will be made to the laws of other jurisdictions (e.g. the United States and the UK) when these offer relevant points for comparison. The first part of the course examines the history and aims of competition law. It considers the role of economic analysis and its limitations in the light of non-economic considerations. The second part is a review of the major substantive fields: restrictive practices; the regulation of monopolies and dominant positions; distribution and cooperation agreements and merger control. The third part addresses the public and private enforcement of competition law.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: Whish and Bailey Competition Law (7th edn, 2011); Jones & Sufrin, EC Competition Law: Cases and Materials 4th ed (2010); Geradin, Layne-Farrar, and Petit, EU Competition Law and Economics (2011); Monti, EC Competition Law (2007); Bellamy & Child European Community Law of Competition (6th edn, 2007); Faull & Nikpay, The EC Law of Competition (2007).

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL426E Half Unit Theory of Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option. Available to Executive LLM students only. This course will be offered on the Executive LLM during the four year degree period. The Department of Law will not offer all Executive LLM courses every year, although some of the more popular courses may be offered in each year, or more than once each year. Please note that whilst it is the Department of Law's intention to offer all Executive LLM courses, its ability to do so will depend on the availability of the staff member in question. For more information please refer to the Department of Law website.

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to the philosophy of human rights and theoretical issues in human rights law. The emphasis is on a combination of law and theory; to this end, each seminar will rely on a mixture of cases from various jurisdictions and theoretical and philosophical materials. The overarching questions to be examined are to what extent current philosophical theories of human rights can illuminate our understanding of the cases and legal doctrines, and to what extent the cases and doctrines can help improving the theoretical and philosophical understanding of human rights. Topics to be discussed will include: Negative and Positive Freedom; Theories of Human Rights; Ronald Dworkin's Theory of Rights; Balancing and Proportionality; Rights Inflation; Human Rights and Judicial Review I (The American Perspective); Human Rights and Judicial Review II (The European Perspective); Absolute Rights.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

Indicative reading: The course will rely on both cases from various jurisdictions and articles and book chapters from authors including Amartya Sen, Ronald Dworkin, Robert Alexy, James Griffin, Matthias Kumm, Jeremy Waldron and Frances Kamm.

Assessment: Either a take-home examination or 8,000 word assessed essay (100%).

LL427E Half Unit Constitutional Law and Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Poole NAB7.19

Course content: In this course, we will explore the regulation of mergers, acquisitions and corporate restructurings in Europe. The course will examine the available legal techniques for the combination and restructuring of business operations in Europe, with a particular focus on cross-border transactions. Areas covered will include corporate mobility (company "migration") in Europe, domestic and cross-border mergers, de-mergers, spin-offs, public takeovers, and the European Company, and how it is used for business restructuring and reorganisation. Particular attention will be paid to the interaction between the relevant legal concepts and the economic and financial environment firms operate in. References will also be made to the application to companies of the Treaty provisions on freedom of establishment and free movement of capital.

Content overview:

- The market for corporate control, corporate ownership structures and transaction structures for takeovers and restructurings in Europe
- European takeover regulation
- Domestic mergers
- Divisions & spin-offs
- Cross-border mergers in Europe
- Employee participation (board-level co-determination) in Europe and its relevance for corporate transactions
- The European Company (SE)
- Introduction to taxation of corporate transactions and tax-related drivers and incentives for intra-group reorganisation and company migration

Course content: Member States of the EU are not free to award subsidies to their national companies or to support them in a comparable way (by, inter alia, securing favourable supply conditions to the companies, granting loans at favourable rates or providing unlimited guarantees). In the wake of the recent financial crisis, for instance, bailout measures adopted across the EU had to be cleared by the European Commission in accordance with Articles 107 and 108 TFEU. The first part of the course explores the economic rationale underpinning the control of State aid in the European Union (the reasons why similar regimes are not implemented at the national level in federal countries facing similar dilemmas, such as the United States, will also be explored). The second part examines (i) the notion of State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU and (ii) the conditions under which measures falling under the scope of that provision may be deemed compatible with the internal market. The third part provides an overview of the application of the law in some sectors (including the financial and the communications sectors) or for some purposes (e.g. research and development, regional aid). Finally, the fourth part is devoted to the procedural aspects of the discipline.

Teaching: 24-26 hours of contact time.

Formative coursework: Students will have the option of producing a formative exam question of 2000 words to be delivered one month from the end of the module's teaching session by email.

LL438E Half Unit Commercial Remedies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Solene Rowan NAB 7.26

Availability: This course is available on the Executive LLM. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The objective of the course would be to provide students with a detailed understanding of remedies in a commercial context. It would consider remedies for breach of contract and torts. The focus of the reading would be on case law and doctrinal writing. Here is a very rough breakdown of the topics that I intend to look at: Session 1 would be an introductory session. It would put the next 11 sessions of the course into context. The particular focus of attention would be on breach of contract and the commission of torts. Session 2 would consider compensatory damages for breach of contract. Compensatory damages is the most common remedy in contract. It therefore makes sense to look at this remedy first. Session 3 would be on compensatory damages for torts. Again, compensatory damages is the most common remedy in tort law and it should be studied early on in the syllabus. Session 4 and session 5 would look at remedies that compel performance. Session 3 would be devoted to actions for an agreed sum (debt actions) and specific performance, a remedy that aims at keeping the contract 'alive'. Session 4 would look at remedies that aim to prevent or compel the undoing of a wrong, namely injunctions. Injunctions are relevant to the law of contract and tort law. Session 6 would consider termination for breach of contract. This is a remedy which is very significant in practice as it puts an end to the primary obligations between contracting parties. Session 7 would look at restitution for wrongs. The focus would be on restitutionary damages in contract and tort. Session 8 would be devoted to punitive damages (in contract and tort law). This is a topical issue as there has been much debate recently on whether punitive damages, which are available in tort law, should be introduced in contract law. Session 9 would consider agreed remedies. Particular focus would be given to penalty clauses, specific performance/injunction clauses, restitution clauses and 'cost of cure' clauses. Session 10 would be comparative in character. They would look at the approach followed in common law jurisdictions (in particular the United States and Australia) and in civilian jurisdictions (in particular Germany and France).

Teaching: 24-26 hours

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. Formative assessment opportunities will be provided (essay or problem questions)

Indicative reading: Rowan, Remedies for Breach of Contract: A Comparative Analysis of the Protection of Performance (OUP 2012) Burrows, Remedies for Torts and Breach of Contract (3rd edn OUP 2004). The topic for the Long Essay must be selected by the student early in the LT in consultation with their Academic Adviser and the Course Leader and must be approved by the Programme Director.

LL468 Half Unit

European Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB6.12

Along with a Teaching Fellow (tba).

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will provide an overview of the origin, development and current standing of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Its primary focus will be on the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, though the cases of other jurisdictions will also be referred to where appropriate. The course will analyse the Convention from the perspective of selected rights within it, but will also engage with the subject thematically, subjecting such concepts as the 'margin of appreciation' and proportionality to close scrutiny. The goal of the course is to give students a good critical understanding of the Convention, the case-law of the Strasbourg court and the Convention's place within the constitutional and political structure of 'Greater Europe'. This course complements Human Rights Law: The HRA (LL469) but is entirely self-standing and can easily be taken without that course.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay

Indicative reading: There are two texts that cover the ground of the course and to which reference will be made: Jacobs and White, The European Convention on Human Rights 5th edn (OUP, 2010) and Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 2nd edn (Oxford, 2009). Also useful is Mowbray, Cases and Materials on the European Convention on Human Rights 3rd edn (Oxford, 2012). A strong European perspective is to be found in van Dijk, van Hoof, van Rijn and Zwaak (eds), Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights 4th edn (Intersentia, 2006).

The course will involve textbook reading but will primarily entail analysis of case-law read for the seminar and discussed in class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least five questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL469 Half Unit UK Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB6.12

Along with a Teaching Fellow (tba).

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will be made up of a detailed study of the UK Human Rights Act. The origins and the political background to the Act will be explained, and the structure of the measure will be fully elaborated, relying on the text of the Act itself but also on the burgeoning case law that accompanies the measure. The course will identify the principles that underpin the Act and explain its proper place in English law. It will also explore the wider constitutional implications of the measure, looking at its effect on the relationship between courts and Parliament. The course complements Human Rights Law: the European Convention on Human Rights (LL468) but can be taken separately from it.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (Cambridge, 2009); Hickman, Public Law After the Human Rights Act (Hart, 2010); Gearty, Principles of Human Rights Adjudication (Oxford University Press, 2004). While these books will be referred to, students will also be expected to read cases: they will receive a detailed Reading list for each topic.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least five questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL475 Half Unit Terrorism and the Rule of Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Conor Gearty NAB6.12

Along with a Teaching Fellow (tba).

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Conflict Studies, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is available across all courses and potentially suitable for all but is particularly designed for LLM, MSc Conflict Studies, MSc Human Rights students.

Course content: This course will provide a theoretical and historical introduction to the concept of terrorism. It will critically consider definitions of terrorism, and analyse the relationship between terrorism and the right to rebel, and the right to engage in civil disobedience. The historical development of the idea of 'terrorism' from the late eighteenth century through to the present will then be traced, with the emphasis on locating the practice of political terror in its political and military/quasi-military context. The role of international law generally and international human rights law in particular in the context of terrorism and anti-terrorism action will be considered in detail. The course will teach the material in context, so the subject will be analysed by reference to particular situations where necessary, eg Northern Ireland, the Palestine/Israel conflict and the post 11 September 'war on terror'. The aim of the course is to give the student a good critical understanding of this most controversial of subjects, and also to impart an understanding of the role of law in shaping the fields of terrorism and of counter-terrorism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: There is no set text though reliance is made on the work of authors such as Richard English, Adrian Guelke, Lawrence Freedman, Igor Primoratz, Paul Wilkinson and the course teacher Conor Gearty. Students will receive a detailed Reading list for each topic, which will include legal cases from time to time. A recommended text will be Gearty, Liberty and Security (Polity Press, February 2013).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This subject is examined by one two-hour paper, composed of at least five questions of which two must be attempted. There will be a fifteen minute reading time during which the exam paper may be written on.

LL499 Dissertation: MSc Regulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: Compulsory on MSc Regulation and MSc Regulation (Research).

Assessment: A 10,000 word dissertation is required to be submitted as part of the assessment. The dissertation is due by the 1st September.

LL4A1 LLM Subject Area Specialist Research Seminars

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Various.

Contact Ms Mandy Tinnams, NAB 6.08

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A series of ad hoc one-hour seminars running during MT and LT. The programme changes annually, with sessions given by distinguished visiting academics, practitioners and other experts on issues related to their specialist interests. The aim is to expose LLM students to a wider range of material than is possible in many of the taught courses, and to explore and challenge some of the issues and themes that are currently controversial. Most sessions will run as seminars rather than public lectures, with students expected to interact with the seminar speaker and with each other.

Teaching: Weekly or fortnightly one-hour sessions during the MT and LT.

Assessment: Not assessed, although many sessions will be directly or indirectly related to material considered in other assessable LLM courses.

LL4A5 Half Unit Investment Funds Law in Europe

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mrs Vivien Prais NAB6.02

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the law and regulations governing collective investment funds in the UK and selected European jurisdictions (e.g. Germany, Italy, Sweden, Ireland and Luxembourg) and also relevant EU regulation. It will include a study both of investment funds law of the countries selected and a comparative assessment of the development and current features of the collective investment fund industry in the European context. Topics covered include: historical development of investment funds law in the UK and the respective European countries selected, with particular emphasis on the investment vehicle; a comparison of types of funds developed with emphasis on recent changes and innovation; the regulation of the establishment and marketing of collective investment funds, including UCITS, REITS and ETFs; taxation of investment funds; the effect of EC law, particularly the UCITS Directive of 2009.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided in advance for each seminar. Sample texts include: Hill, A Practitioner's Guide to Authorised Investment Funds (2010); Sin, The Legal Nature of the Unit Trust (1997); Adams, The Split Capital Investment Trust Crisis (2004); St. Giles, Managing Collective Investment Funds, 2nd ed. (2003); Blair, Blackstone's Guide to the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (2009); Moloney, EC Securities Regulation (2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4A6 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Climate Change and International Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course covers the international law dealing with climate change with a view to assessing how the harms associated with climate change are governed and allocated in different legal regimes. The course adopts the stance that the political and legal questions raised by climate change cannot be addressed by reference to climate change law or international environmental law as a whole. Climate change gives rise to a series of profound problems touching upon a range of bodies of law (international economic law, human rights law, the transnational governance of energy and resources, and state responsibility inter alia) in a complex political and ethical environment. In approaching climate change as a concrete concern relevant to these various bodies of law and practice, the course will address the normative and/or ethical bases for choosing between actions designed to prevent and/or manage climate change and its consequences, the development imperatives in much of the world, and the theoretical concerns raised by the 'fragmented' nature of international law. Projected seminars include: climate change science; politics; ethics; theory of international law; international environmental law; trade and investment law; human rights law; climate technology diffusion; food security.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Rosemary Rayfuse and Shirley Scott (eds.), International Law in the Era of Climate Change, Edward Elgar (2011) Stephen Gardiner, Simon Caney, Dale Jamieson and Henry Shue (Eds.), Climate Ethics: Essential Readings, Oxford University Press (2010); Nicholas Stern, The Economics of Climate Change: The Stern Review, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press (2007); IPCC, Fourth Assessment Report, Cambridge University Press (2007); Stephen Humphreys (ed.), Climate Change and Human Rights, Cambridge University Press (2009); Larry Lohmann, Carbon Trading, Dag Hammerskjöld Foundation (2006); Lavanya Rajamani, Differential Treatment in International Environmental Law, Oxford University Press (2006); Margaret Young (ed.), Regime Interaction in International Law: Facing Fragmentation, Cambridge University Press (2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4A8 Half Unit International Law and the Use of Force

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Christopher Thomas NAB6.03 and Dr Devika Hovell NAB6.32

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: This half-unit course examines the law relating to when it is permissible to use force (jus ad bellum). The aim of this course is to develop an understanding of the principles of international law that regulate the use of force in international society. It concentrates on the prohibition of resort to force in Article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter and the exceptions to that prohibition. It looks in detail at the right of self-defence, humanitarian intervention and the responsibility to protect, pro-democratic intervention, the protection of nationals and the criminalization of aggression. The use of force by or with the authorization of the United Nations is also considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the first seminar. See, in particular: Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence (5th ed, 2011); Gray, International Law and the Use of Force (3rd ed., 2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4A9 Half Unit Law in War

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys NAB5.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: This course covers the law governing the conduct of hostilities (jus in bello, also known as the law of armed conflict (LOAC) or international humanitarian law (IHL)). This course can be taken alone or together with LL4A8: International Law and the Use of Force. The course will take a critical and historical perspective on the international regulation and facilitation of armed conflict. It covers both the laws governing the means and methods of warfare (sometimes known as 'Hague' law) and those regarding 'protected' groups hors de combat ('Geneva' law) in times of armed conflict and occupation. The course will further consider the practice of 'lawfare' more generally: that is, recourse to law as an aspect of waging war.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of submitting a 2,000 word essay. Students are requested to choose from past exam papers and submit by the end of week 3.

Indicative reading: Required text: Yoram Dinstein, The Conduct of Hostilities under the Law of Armed Conflict (Cambridge, 2004). Indicative reading: David Kennedy, Of Law and War, (Princeton, 2006); Geoffrey Best, War and Law Since 1945 (Clarendon Press, 1997); Roberts & Guelff, Documents on the Laws of War (Oxford, 2000).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AA Half Unit Global Copyright Policy: Contemporary Issues

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation, and Trade Law; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law; Intellectual Property Law, Legal Theory. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Students must take Principles of Copyright Law (LL4N6) in parallel with this course unless exempted by the course convenor.

Course content: The aim of this course is to subject global copyright policy, as reflected in the treaty and trade arrangements that underlie national copyright laws, to critical examination. The focus is on the arguments that have been advanced to justify and oppose the rapid recent expansion of copyright laws across the world, and how policy is being shaped by the technologies, institutions, discourses and investment strategies that sustain the global information industries. Discussion will be theoretically informed but organised around particular topics of contemporary concern. These will include, for example, the enforcement policies that have emerged in response to online copyright 'piracy', the policies that are buttressing the spread of end-user licence agreements as crucial legal instruments for structuring access to lawful digital content, and the policies that constrain the freedom of States to devise exceptions to copyright that meet domestic economic, social and cultural priorities.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Yochai Benkler, The Wealth of Networks (Yale UP 2006); Ronald Bettig, Copyrighting Culture (Westview Press, 1996); James Boyle, The Public Domain (Yale UP, 2008); Laurence Helfer and Graeme Austin, Human Rights and Intellectual Property: Mapping the Global Interface (Cambridge University Press, 2011); Tarleton Gillespie, Wired Shut: Copyright and the Shape of Digital Culture (MIT Press 2008); David Hesmondhalgh, The Cultural Netanel, Copyright's Paradox (OUP 2008); Peter K. Yu (ed.), Intellectual Property and Information Wealth: Issues and Practices in the Digital Age (Praeger, 2007) (Vol. 1).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AB Half Unit Law and administrative procedures in the EU

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Carol Harlow

Professor Richard Rawlings

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Public Management and Governance and Master of Laws. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is open to students with and without a law degree.

Students of public administration are welcome. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou. Specialisms: EU law and Public Law.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of the structure of European Institutions is desirable. It is not essential to have studied either EU law or administrative law. Guidance and introductory reading is provided for those who are new to these subjects.

Course content: The objective of our course is to reflect on issues that are of interest and concern to administrative lawyers within the framework of a particular polity, the EU. We shall watch the development of an appropriate administrative law for the EU - a challenging task! Central to modern administrative law systems and to EU administration are directive principles of good governance, sponsored by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) through its SIGMA programme sponsored by the European Commission. These values are central to the Commission White Paper on European Governance (2000) and are now incorporated in the Lisbon Treaty and European Charter of Fundamental Rights (ECFR), which creates a right to good administration. The course deals with EU administration in the sense both of administration by the European Commission and agencies, shared administration with Member States acting on behalf of the EU and in the increasing number of administrative 'networks' with which the EU cooperates. It aims to identify and evaluate the principles and values of administrative law and their application to EU administrative procedures. Objectives:

- To instil knowledge of public administration outside the state and more particularly in the EU
- To promote knowledge of modern administrative law and its problems
- To encourage group learning
- To promote spoken facility
- To familiarise students with comparative administrative law materials and teach research methods

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

This is a joint UCL/LSE course, open to students of each. It is separately examined according to the examination regulations of each institution. It is taught at the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies in Russell Square.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit a 2,000 word essay during the course, to be returned with detailed comments. Note that student participation and group cooperation is very important in this course and opportunities will be provided for student presentations with feedback.

Indicative reading: The recommended text, C Harlow and R Rawlings, Process and Procedure in the EU (Oxford: Hart Publishing, 2013) is available electronically. Two excellent reference books, P. Craig, EU Administrative Law (Oxford: OUP) 2nd edn, 2012 and H. Hofman, G Rowe and A Turk, EU Administrative Law and Policy (Oxford: OUP, 2011) are available in LSE, UCL and IALS libraries. There is also much legal periodical literature in: the Common Market Law Review, European Law Review European Law Journal, European Public Law and European Review of Public Law (ERPL) and many political science journals: Journal of European Public Policy, Journal of Common Market Studies and West European Politics. All these journals are available in the IALS and college libraries and on line. There are also useful on line journals, notably the German Law Journal and Italian Journal of Public Law and sets of papers, such as the Jean Monnet working papers (see weblinks).

Many additional materials are easily accessible through the websites of the EU. References to these are given throughout the course and a general list of weblinks and blogs is provided.

Relevant writings by the teachers include: R Rawlings, 'Engaged Elites. Citizen Action and Institutional Attitudes in Commission Enforcement', 6 European Law Journal 4 (2000); C Harlow, 'Francovich and the Problem of the Disobedient State', 2 European Law Journal (1996); 'Three Phases in the Evolution of EU Administrative Law' in P Craig & G de Burca, The Evolution of EU Law (Oxford, 2nd edn, 2011); C Harlow and R Rawlings, 'Accountability and Law Enforcement: The Centralised EU Infringement Procedure' 31 European Law Review (2006) 447; 'Promoting Accountability in Multi-Level Governance: A Network Approach' (2007) 13 EUJ 542; and 'National Administrative Procedures in a European Perspective: Pathways to a Slow Convergence?' (2010) 2 Italian J of Public Law 215.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AC Half Unit Legal Accountability and Redress of Grievance in the EU

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Carol Harlow

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Public Management and Governance and Master of Laws. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is open to students with and without a law degree. Students of public administration are welcome. A knowledge of the structure of European institutions is desirable. Specialisms: EU law and Public Law. The course will be available in 2013-4. This course is capped at 30 students.

Pre-requisites: To enrol in this course, it is normally essential to have studied Law and administrative procedures in the EU. Otherwise the student will not possess the institutional structure on which redress of grievance is premised.

Course content: The objective of our course is to reflect on issues that arise for lawyers from the exponential growth of transnational systems of administration, which are not necessarily amenable to the traditional machinery for administration. We focus on the rapid judicialisation of public administration but focus on a particular supra-national polity, the EU. GSSC 12/34 15 May 2013 Objectives:

- To instil understanding of public administration outside the state and more particularly in the EU
- To promote understanding of problems for modern administrative law in the context of globalisation
- To study inter-court relationships in the context of the EU
- To encourage group learning
- To promote spoken expertise
- To familiarise students with comparative administrative law materials and teach research methods

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit a 2,000 word essay during the course, to be returned with detailed comments. Note that student participation and group cooperation is very important in this course and opportunities will be provided for student presentations.

Indicative reading: The recommended text, C Harlow and R Rawlings, Process and Procedure in the EU (Oxford: Hart Publishing, 2013) is available on line. Two excellent reference books, P. Craig, EU Administrative Law (Oxford: OUP) 2nd edn, 2012 and H. Hofman, G Rowe and A Turk, EU Administrative Law and Policy (Oxford: OUP, 2011) are available in LSE, UCL and IALS libraries.

A comprehensive, multi-disciplinary literature survey by A Stone Sweet, The European Court of Justice and the Judicialization of EU Governance, Yale online Living Reviews in EU Governance (2010) is available free online.

There is also much legal periodical literature: the Common Market Law Review, European Law Review European Law Journal, European Public Law and European Review of Public Law (ERPL) and many political science journals: Journal of European Public Policy, Journal of Common Market Studies and West European Politics. All these journals are available in the IALS and college libraries and on line.

There are also useful on line journals, notably the German Law Journal and Italian Journal of Public Law and sets of papers, such as the Jean Monnet working papers (see weblinks). Relevant writings by the teachers include: C Harlow, Accountability in the European Union (Oxford: Oxford University Press) 2002; 'Accountability as a Value for Global Governance and Global Administrative Law' in G Anthony et al (eds), Values in Global Administrative Law: Essays in Honour of Spyridon Flogaitis and Gerard Timsit (Hart Publishing, 2011); 'Three Phases in the Evolution of EU Administrative Law' in P Craig & G de Burca, The Evolution of EU Law (Oxford, 2nd edn, 2011); 'Composite decision-making and accountability networks: the case of counter-terrorism asset-freezing measures' (2013) Yearbook of European Law (forthcoming). Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AD Half Unit Rethinking International Law I: International Law and Contemporary Problems

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB7.14

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is part of the Public International Law specialism. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: There are no prerequisites, but please note that students wishing to take Rethinking International Law II: International Legal Thought must have taken this course.

Course content: This course is designed for students who have already had some exposure to public international law and wish to deepen their understanding of the international legal dimensions of contemporary problems. Each week the relation will be explored between international law and a different global issue or theme. The latter are likely to include: war; terrorism and counter-terrorism; poverty and development; governance; territory and statehood; humanity; and collective memory. Course readings will encompass both legal literature and writing by scholars from other disciplines, such as geography, anthropology, philosophy, and literary studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Readings likely to be set include: D. Kennedy, Of War and Law (2006); S. Pahuja, Decolonising International Law: Development, Economic Growth and the Politics of Universality (2011); B. Rajagopal, International Law from Below: Development, Social Movements and Third World Resistance (2003); and S. Marks, The Riddle of All Constitutions: International Law, Democracy and the Critique of Ideology (2000).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Students are expected to have done the set reading and be willing to participate in seminar discussion.

LL4AE Half Unit Rethinking International Law II: International Legal Thought

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB7.14

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is part of the Public International Law specialism.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Rethinking International Law I: International Law and Contemporary Problems (LL4AD).

Course content: This course builds on Rethinking International Law I: International Law and Contemporary Problems, exploring debates about the historical development, contemporary character and future prospects of international law, and about the diversity of approaches to its study. Among the questions we are likely to consider are: what is at stake in the controversy over whether international law is 'really law'? What is the relation between the history of international legal thought and the history of such other global phenomena as colonialism and capitalism? What theoretical reference-points are used by international legal scholars today, and what are the implications of these for analysis, policy and action?

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Students are expected to have done the set reading and be willing to participate in seminar discussion.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each seminar on Moodle. Readings likely to be set include: M. Koskenniemi, The Gentle Civilizer of Nations: The Rise and Fall of International Law 1870-1960 (2002); A. Anghie, Imperialism, Sovereignty and the Making of International Law (2005); and S. Ratner & A-M Slaughter, Symposium on Method in International Law, American Journal of International Law (1999).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AF Half Unit Principles of Global Competition Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo NAB7.18

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research) and Master of Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This module provides an overview of the main common aspects of competition law regimes around the world. This is a discipline that has gone through a remarkable process of expansion in the past two decades and is now a feature of the legal systems of a growing number of jurisdictions. Instead of focusing on a particular regime, the module puts an emphasis on the fundamental debates underlying the adoption and evolution of the law. Examples drawn from the US and EU law will be generally used by way of illustration, but references to other regimes are made where relevant. The topics addressed include the following:

The topics addressed include the following:

- Competition Law and Economics
- Cartel agreements
- Vertical restraints
- Unilateral conduct: predatory pricing
- Unilateral conduct: tying and bundling
- Unilateral conduct: refusal to deal
- Merger control: horizontal mergers
- Merger control: vertical and conglomerate mergers
- Institutions and enforcement

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Whish, Competition Law (7th edn, 2012); Jones & Sufrin, EC Competition Law: Cases and Materials (4th edn, 2010); Geradin & Elhauge, Global Competition Law and Economics (2nd edn, 2011); Hovenkamp, The Antitrust Enterprise (2005).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AG Half Unit Competition Law: Challenges and Prospects

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo NAB7.18

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms:

Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Prior knowledge of Competition Law is desirable, but not essential.

Course content: This module addresses some of the most topical and intellectually challenging aspects of contemporary Competition Law. The emphasis will be put on EU Competition Law, but developments from other jurisdictions, and in particular from the US, are discussed where relevant. This module examines, first, how increased reliance on economic analysis in the past two decades has transformed the discipline. This is probably nowhere as apparent as in the law applying to unilateral conduct; and in the field of vertical restraints. The module also covers some of the major substantive developments in the field, and in particular the application of the law in high-technology markets and in recently liberalised industries. Topics include the following:

- Article 102 TFEU: case law and Guidance
- Vertical restraints
 - Agreements restricting parallel trade: past and future
 - Online distribution and EU Competition Law
- Competition Law in High-Technology Markets
 - Standard-setting and Competition Law
 - Competition Law and the Licensing of Technology
 - Search Engines and Competition Law: EU and US
 - Competition Law and Innovation
- Competition Law and Sector-Specific Regulation
 - The application of EU Competition Law to network industries
 - The interface between Competition Law and Sector-Specific Regulation: EU and US solutions compared

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Whish, Competition Law (7th edn, 2012);

Jones & Sufrin, EC Competition Law: Cases and Materials (4th ed, 2010); Geradin & Elhauge, Global Competition Law and Economics (2nd edn, 2011); Hovenkamp, The Antitrust Enterprise (2005).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4AH Half Unit Comparative Company Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Gerner Beuerle NAB 5.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students (or two groups of 30 students each, i.e. 60 students depending on demand). This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Corporate and Securities Law; International Business Law..

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed UK Corporate Law (LL4CF).

Students should either have studied company law of a common law legal system at undergraduate level or take LL4CF UK Corporate Law beforehand.

Course content: Course content This course will examine topical issues of corporate law on a comparative basis. It does not intend to present a comprehensive overview of the corporate law of any particular jurisdiction, nor does it constitute a self-contained introduction to corporate law. Rather, we will identify economic conflicts created by the use of the corporate form, notably agency problems between shareholders, the management, and other corporate actors, and discuss solutions to these conflicts developed by different jurisdictions and legal traditions. We will draw on, and compare, three of the most important legal traditions of the world: common law, the German legal tradition, and the French legal tradition. We will analyse the relevant statutory provisions and case law of German and French company law and make references to US and UK law, but we will not examine the latter two jurisdictions in any level of detail. The course will then assess the comparative effectiveness of the solutions found in the jurisdictions analysed. We will generally engage in a qualitative evaluation of the advantages and disadvantages of the different regulatory strategies, but we will also refer to quantitative studies in the literature that examine the correlation between regulatory approaches and financial variables such as the cost of capital of a business. Finally, the course will attempt to identify the determinants of corporate law, discuss general trends and trajectories, and explore concepts such as legal origins and path dependence. Topics include:

- Comparative methods in company law; the economic structure of the corporation in comparative perspective
- Types of business association in different legal families and their formation
- Financing the corporation in different jurisdictions
- Board structure and allocation of decision rights within the corporation; minority protection
- The managerial agency problem I: duty of care and the business judgment rule
- The managerial agency problem II: related-party transactions and corporate opportunities
- Strategies to address the agency problem between the company and the creditors: duties, exceptions to limited liability, and insolvency law
- Determinants of corporate law, trajectories and trends; legal origins

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading

LL4AJ Half Unit Insolvency Law: Principles, Rescue and Reconstruction Processes

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Sarah Paterson

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Corporate and/or Commercial Law. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course focuses primarily on registered companies and is concerned with the principles and policies underlying the legal treatment of insolvency and corporate rescue. The course considers how the nature of the problems raised by insolvency varies and is dependent on the legal identity of the insolvent (for example, whether the insolvent is a company with limited liability or an individual running a business) and the course examines the legal responses to these problems. The formal legal procedures available for dealing with companies in distress are analysed as are informal approaches to corporate failure. Topics include: Introduction: Aims and Objectives. Outline of insolvency procedures. The administration of insolvency processes: insolvency practitioners, the Insolvency Service and turnaround professionals. Causes of corporate failure/Who goes bankrupt? Corporate Rescue Procedures: informal rescues. Corporate Rescue Procedures: formal procedures. Business rescues - comparative approaches: USA, Chapter 11.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

LL4AV Half Unit

Global Trade Governance: Contemporary Issues

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Lang NAB 6.19

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. LLM Specialisms. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovations and Trade Law, Public International Law, International Business Law.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Foundations of International Economic Law (LL4B1).

Course content: The aim of this course is to allow students with a particular interest in global economic governance to explore a greater diversity of topics than is possible in one term only. At one level, this involves covering a greater range of WTO agreements, including this TBT Agreement, Subsidies Agreement, SPS Agreement, the GATS, TRIPs and others. In addition, however, there is a much greater emphasis in this course (as compared to the Core Principles course) on using issues of contemporary trade governance to explore broader questions concerning the modalities of contemporary economic governance at the global level. Core themes of concern will include: international legal pluralism; the role of knowledge practices and the aesthetics of expertise in international economic governance, international economic law 'after the crisis', the emergence of new 'developmentalism' and its prospects, and spaces and modalities of contestation in contemporary global economic governance. Class Schedule (Indicative) 1. The WTO and global food governance 2. Contemporary issues in subsidies regulation 3. Intellectual property 4. Technical regulations 5. Trade remedies and contingent protection 6. From multilateralism to regionalism 7. The new developmentalism 8. Expertise in global economic governance 9. Fragmentation and international legal pluralism 10. Revision class

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists and class outlines for each week are available through the Moodle page for this course. You are expected to come to class having read the Essential Reading for that week, all of which is readily available either in electronic form, or in hard-copy in the library. The items listed under Further Reading will assist those of you who wish to research more deeply into a particular topic, either in the context of exam preparation or the writing of a dissertation.

The textbook for this course is Lester and Mercurio, World Trade Law: Text, Materials and Commentary (2nd ed, 2012). You must also purchase a copy of The Legal Texts: The Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, (Cambridge University Press, 1999). This contains most of the basic documents required for the course. An unmarked version of this text will be the only text allowed into the examinations. Students should ensure that they refrain from marking the text.

You may find it helpful to own or have ready access to a copy of Van den Bossche, The Law and Policy of the World Trade Organization: Texts, Cases and Materials, 3rd ed., (Cambridge University Press, 2013), and/or Trebilcock and Howse, The Regulation of International Trade, 4th ed., (Routledge, 2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Selected Topics in International Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susan Marks NAB 7.14, Dr Margot Salomon TW2 11.01F and Prof Christine Chinkin NAB 6.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Public International Law, Human Rights Law

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Foundations of International Human Rights Law (LL4AW).

Course content: Building on the foundations provided in LL4AW, this course explores the international protection of human rights through a range of contemporary topics. The course examines legal and institutional efforts to confront deprivation, indignity and violence, along with the rights of particular groups, such as refugees and indigenous peoples. Recurring questions will be: in what ways do international human rights help to alleviate global problems involving suffering and in what ways do they instead serve to sustain the conditions for those problems' occurrence? How might we understand the contribution of human rights to addressing current ills, and what are their particular limitations? Through the study of key concepts, norms, processes and debates, students will be encouraged to develop an informed and critical assessment of the significance of human rights as a force for emancipatory change. Topics may include:

- Human Rights and Counter-terrorism
- The Prohibition on Torture in Question
- Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
- Violence Against Women
- Human Rights and Armed Conflict

LL4AY Half Unit International Tax Systems

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB 7.33

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: International Business Law, Taxation.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students should have at least a basic knowledge of a tax system of a country (not necessarily the UK) or be studying LL4Z1 Business Taxation.

Course content: This course examines how taxation applies to transactions in the international context, and considers tax law that operates at the international and supra-national levels. The focus is on rules that operate at an international or supra-national level, though we will look at some domestic rules that are important to international taxation and that can be found in a number of important tax systems. The course will look at a series of international transactions, starting with the very basic example of an export and import of goods and culminating with the treatment of some complex and artificial structures. The features of tax systems will be studied through these transactions, particularly those features found in double tax conventions and in the law of the European Union. In the first part of the course this will be supplemented by introductions to some key foundation concepts that are needed in the study of international taxation. Throughout the course examples will be drawn from the tax systems of a range of countries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

This will be based on a format of lecture-discussions with the possibility of guest speakers where appropriate and depending on numbers.

Formative coursework: Students are asked to submit two 2,000 word essays.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle.

LL4BC Half Unit Policing and Police Powers

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Reiner NAB6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Public law, Legal Theory.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: The police are a central part of the criminal justice system and of the State's formal machinery for maintaining order and enforcing law. It is difficult to underestimate their importance in the process of criminal law enforcement and social policy more generally. Nonetheless the police are only one aspect of the more general institutions and processes of policing. There is a burgeoning research, policy-oriented and theoretical literature analysing the nature and functions of policing. Policing and police powers are central focal points for debate in the politics of criminal justice, as well as one of the fastest-growing areas in academic research and publishing within criminology. This course will review the extensive research literature. It is a pre-requisite for course LL4BD which examines contemporary issues and policy developments about policing in recent years. 1. The nature and functions of 'policing'. What is the role of the police in the State and legal system? The pluralisation of policing, and the relationship between the police and other aspects of policing. 2. The historical development of policing. Theoretical debates about the explanation and interpretation of changes in policing in modern times. 3. Police work and the impact of police organisations. Particular stress will be laid on issues of police discretion, culture, discrimination, and the measurement and enhancement of 'effectiveness'. 4. The characteristics and dynamics of police organisations. Particular attention will be paid to questions of management, personnel issues, and 'canteen culture' ie informal organisation. 5. Specialist aspects of policing organisations, notably criminal investigation, and the control of public order, will be examined. 6. The relationship between State and 'private' forms of policing. 7. The legal powers of the police. Police powers and the controls over their exercise will be analysed, with particular reference to The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and its impact. 8. Police accountability and control. Who guards the guardians? The complaints system and the debates about police governance will be discussed. 9. The role of police organisation in the formulation of law and criminal justice policy. The politics of police representative associations, and their role as pressure groups for legal and policy change. 10. Policing and the Mass Media. The representation of the police and policing in the mass media will be analysed, and its implications assessed.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: General surveys of the field include: T Newburn (Ed), Handbook of Policing, 2nd, Ed. (2008); R Reiner, The Politics of the Police (4th edn, 2010). Useful collections of research and policy papers include: T Newburn (Ed), Policing: Key Readings Willan 2004; R Reiner (Ed), Policing Vols I and II Dartmouth (1996); J.Peay and T.Newburn eds.: Policing: Politics, Culture and Control (2012). Detailed Reading lists for each topic will be provided.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4BD Half Unit Policing: Contemporary Issues and Controversies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Reiner NAB6.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following specialisms: Criminology and Criminal Justice, Public law, Legal Theory.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Policing and Police Powers (LL4BC).

Course content: The police are a central part of the criminal justice system and of the State's formal machinery for maintaining order and enforcing law. LL4BC offered a survey of the research literature on the functioning and governance of policing organisations. This course builds on that by analysing and discussing contemporary controversies, issues and policy developments. The list of topics will include: 1) Specialist forms of policing: a) Homicide investigation b) Rape investigations c) Public order d) Drugs policing e) Transnational policing f) Private policing 2) Diversity and policing: especially gender, ethnicity, sexuality. 3) Policing and social justice: discriminatory use of police powers such as stop-and-search. 4) Innovations in policing tactics: notably community, zero-tolerance, problem-oriented, intelligence-led policing. 5) Developments in police governance: Police and Crime Commissioners, the Independent Police Complaints Commission. 6) Alternative policing models. There will be scope for students to suggest issues of particular interest each year.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: General surveys of the field include: T Newburn (Ed), Handbook of Policing 2nd Ed. (2008); R Reiner, The Politics of the Police (4th edn, 2010). LL4BE Half Unit Principles of Financial Regulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Julia Black NAB 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance and Master of Laws. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is capped at 90 students. This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Banking Law and Financial Regulation, Corporate and Securities Law and International Business Law.

Course content: This course examines the principles of financial regulation and the dynamics of the regulatory structures at the international, EU and UK level. The aim is to develop a critical understanding of the changing conceptual framework for financial regulation, and an awareness of its practical operation. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial services and markets, rather than on private law and transactional aspects.

No previous knowledge of financial market regulation or background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. Indeed, the course provides a good background for further study of both financial and economic law and economic analysis of law. The course might be regarded as complementary to a number of other courses.

The syllabus includes the following topics:

- Dynamics of financial crises
- Economic theories of financial markets
- Sociological theories of financial markets
- Shifting rationales of regulation
- Dynamics of regulation at the global, EU and national level (focusing on the UK)
- Regulation inside firms including the corporate governance of financial institution
- Strategies of supervision and enforcement.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

There will be 10 two-hour seminars in up to 3 parallel groups (each with a maximum of 30 students) and one revision seminar. A number of guest lecturers may also be invited to give lectures on their specialist areas.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed during the course and essential materials will be made available to the students electronically where possible. In addition, the students will be invited to do independent reading. Good general introductions are A. Turner et al, The Future of Finance: The LSE Report (2011) and D. Tarullo, Banking on Basel (2008) and E. Avgouleas, Governance of Global Financial Markets (2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4BF Half Unit Regulating for Financial Stability

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Julia Black NAB 7.09 and Dr Philipp Paech NAB 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance and Master of Laws. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Banking Law and Financial Regulation, Corporate and Securities Law and International Business Law

Course content: This course focuses on the micro- and macro-prudential regulation of financial institutions and the financial system. It examines the prudential regulation of banks, bank resolution schemes, the regulation of shadow banking and other regulatory attempts to ensure financial stability. The focus will be on the regulation of national and international aspects of financial institutions and the financial system, rather than on private law and transactional aspects.

No previous knowledge of financial market regulation or background in economics is required for those wishing to follow this course. For non-lawyers, a willingness to engage in legal analysis will be necessary, although a legal background is not required.

The syllabus includes the following topics:

- Rationales for macro and micro prudential regulation
- Development of banking regulation
- Resolution of failing banks
- Shadow banking including hedge funds
- Credit rating agencies
- Derivatives trading
- Clearing and settlement

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

There will be 10 two-hour lectures, plus 'follow-up' classes if numbers exceed 30. A number of guest lecturers may also be invited to give seminars on their specialist areas.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed during the course and essential materials will be made available to the students electronically where possible. In addition, the students will be invited to do independent reading. Good general introductions are A.

LL4BG Half Unit Philosophical Foundations of European Union Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Wilkinson NAB 6.28

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

For the LLM (Specialisms: European Law, Legal Theory, Public Law, Human Rights Law)

Course content: The course examines philosophical and theoretical underpinnings of various areas of European Union law: the nature of the EU and its legal order, its relationship to international law, the place of fundamental rights and their relationship to market freedoms or the idea of European economic constitution, which underlies the law of the Internal Market. It offers the students a deeper understanding of the structures and systems that inform EU law and thus allows them to better understand, analyse and critique EU (law).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: J Dickson and P Eleftheriadis (eds), Philosophical Foundations of European Union Law (OUP 2011); J Habermas, The Crisis of the European Union : A Response (Polity 2012); P Lindseth, Power and Legitimacy: Reconciling Europe and the Nation-State (OUP 2010); A Moravcsik, The Choice for Europe:

LL4BK Half Unit Corporate Crime

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jonathan Fisher

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Banking Law and Financial Regulation Corporate and/or Commercial Law Corporate and Securities Law Criminology and Criminal Justice International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on crime committed within the commercial and business environment. The law is responding to the challenges presented by corporate crime; as the primary vehicle for commercial activity, unacceptable corporate practices are increasingly made the object of criminal sanction and causes of action in civil law. The course considers the principles of corporate criminal liability and the consequences of conviction for a corporation. The exercise of prosecutorial discretion in corporate crime cases, with a consideration of options such as deferred prosecution agreements, is examined in the context of multi-agency and cross-border investigations. The course proceeds to address the enormous challenges in the international fight against corruption. As well as exploring the nature, extent and consequences of corruption, the course examines international responses and their implementation into domestic law. In addition, the course considers other significant areas of potential corporate criminality involving accounting misstatements, cartels and tax offences. The multiple tensions triggered by internal investigations into corporate criminality are also explored in the context of a director's duties to preserve the company's assets in a manner consistent with disclosure obligations owed to its stakeholders and the financial markets. The increasing emphasis placed by the law on a company's obligation to prevent the occurrence of corporate crime is also examined. The course concludes with an exploration of the various ways in which a corporation can be abused by fraudulent trading and trading whilst insolvent, and as well as by organised criminals to conceal the proceeds of their criminal activity. There is no overlap between this course and the course on Financial Crime in the Lent (second) Term.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

The first half of the session is lecture format, the second half seminar format. Students have an opportunity to work with other students in the presentation of seminars. There is one revision session in the summer term.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Reading is prescribed for each lecture and seminar. There are no core textbooks available for the course; however, all the reading material is available from resources easily accessible through LSE Moodle, LSE Electronic Library and the internet. Preliminary reading is not required but for an understanding of the areas covered in the course students may read Wells: Corporations and Criminal Responsibility, 2nd edition, 2001, Oxford University Press; Gobert & Punch: Rethinking Corporate Crime, 2003, Butterworths LexisNexis; Green: Lying, Cheating and Stealing: A Moral Theory of White Collar Crime, 2005, Oxford University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4BL Half Unit Financial Crime

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jonathan Fisher

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Banking Law and Financial Regulation Corporate and/or Commercial Law Corporate and Securities Law Criminology and Criminal Justice International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on financial crime committed within the commercial and business environment and explores current perspectives in the detection, investigation and prosecution of these cases in the wake of the global financial crisis. The introductory session explores the taxonomy of financial crime, examining the nature and extent of financial crime, its social and economic impact and the perceived ambivalence to the prosecution of financial crime offenders. The course explores a definition of fraud through a consideration of notions of dishonesty and deception, examining the role of consent and the interaction between the criminal law and civil law notions of property and trust. Cybercrime is the most prevalent way in which fraud is committed today. In addition to exploring its nature and scale, the course considers how the criminal law is deployed to combat cybercrime. The engagement between financial crime and the global financial crisis is a critically important topic and the course examines offences such as insider dealing and misleading the financial markets. In addition, the course explores the potential criminality of other practices such as manipulating the financial markets, short selling and reckless risk taking. International initiatives to promote asset confiscation and penalise money laundering have featured heavily in the fight against financial crime. The course examines the tensions which arise when these initiatives are implemented into domestic law. Finally, the course explores the difficulties encountered by the enforcement authorities when investigating financial crime cases and the potential incompatibility between the exercise of compulsory interrogation powers and privacy issues. The course concludes with a session on the principles of sentencing in financial crime cases. There is no overlap between this course and the course on Corporate Crime in the Michaelmas (first) Term. Corporate Crime is not a pre-requisite for this course.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed The Legal Protection of Inventions (LL4BM).

Course content: Over the last two decades patent law has moved from an obscure, arcane subject to being the main stay of national and international debates spanning issues as wide ranging trade-related coercion, the capacity to innovate through imitation and the impact of curtailing access to new technologies. Contemporary patent law is now at the heart of the so-called smartphone wars, synthetically generated life, genetic diagnostics and the affordability of life-saving drugs. Building on an understanding of patentability and infringement, this course will the challenge of inducing innovation while promoting competition through patent law within specific technologies and industries. This course will critically examine UK, European, US and International patent law and policy from different perspectives. The history of patent law, justificatory theory, innovation policy, the public domain, international economic and political frameworks, institutional features and technology cycles are indicative of the themes that will be used to frame the discussion in seminars. Topics covered will include: Contemporary and historical justifications for patents; The role of patents in the biotechnology industry; Software, open innovation and patents; The public domain and open biology; The global pharmaceutical industry and patents; The research use exception; Patent law and

LL4BP Half Unit Current Issues in Intellectual and Cultural Property Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Pottage NAB 7.21

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, Master of Laws and Master of Law (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law; Legal Theory and Competition, Innovation and Trade Law

Course content: This course takes a broadly historical, theoretical and contextual approach to the study of intellectual and cultural property law. It focuses on a set of topical questions that illuminate paradigms, institutional models and social and economic formations that cut across the diversity of intellectual and cultural property regimes; questions about the nature of property in intangible things, about the implications of the transnational expansion of intellectual property forms and institutions, about the role of comparative analysis in the study of intellectual property, or about how regimes forged in the era of industrialization have adapted to new modes of production and distribution. These expansive questions are not asked in abstraction. Seminars will focus on specific case studies of institutions, transactional forms and social effects. Many of these studies are chosen for their topicality, so the contents of the course will evolve from year to year, but seminar topics might include: the emergence of new regimes of open source biotechnology, the evolution of non-conventional trade marks such as scents, textures and shapes; the effects of regime-shifting between different international frameworks for the regulation of questions of intellectual property; the bases of emerging markets in cultural property and heritage; the re-emergence of old tensions between droit d'auteur and copyright in the context of open source licensing or human rights negotiations; the nature of 'negative spaces' (the fashion industry, magicians, manga and stand up comedy) within the otherwise pervasive order of intellectual property; the nature of the link between legal incentives and technological innovation; the usefulness of economic models in understanding the proprietary value of patents. The object of the course is to introduce key themes in critical debates about intellectual property, and to offer a set of conceptual resources that might be drawn upon in more specialized LLM courses in intellectual property.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

LL4BQ Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Trade Mark Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law

Pre-requisites: None, but is a pre-requisite for LL4BR

Course content: Trade marks are the most widespread (and widely litigated) species of intellectual property. This foundation course examines issues arising out of the registered protection of trade marks in the UK and EU, against the backdrop of international and comparative developments. The subject matter of trade mark protection has expanded to include sounds, scents, shapes, movements and pure colours. Similarly, the scope of protection has extended to protect not just the origin indication function but also guarantees of quality and brand image. Marks are simultaneously perceived as valuable assets for their proprietors, key components in competitive markets and effective shorthand for enabling expressive or critical agendas. Along with in depth analysis of legislation and case law, we reconsider the rationale of trade mark protection from various interdisciplinary vantage points such as economics, marketing, sociology, history and linguistics. Topics covered include: an introduction to national, regional and international trade mark registration systems; the background of unfair competition law; registration requirements; absolute grounds and relative grounds of refusal of registration; the scope of trade mark rights; the tests for infringement - confusion and dilution; exceptions and defences.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Core Textbook - L Bently and B Sherman Intellectual Property 4th ed (OUP, Oxford 2013) [Forthcoming] Students will be expected to read widely in designated journals and books. Extensive use of trade mark registry materials is made such as references to live registrations as test cases, examiners' decisions, registry works manuals and practice notices. All of the recommended cases and journal articles are available in electronic form and additional materials will be made available on the Moodle website which supports this course. LL4BR Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Brands and Trade Marks: Contemporary Issues

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Trade Mark Law (LL4BQ).

Course content: The legal concept of the trade mark as an indication of commercial origin is giving way to the commercial/marketing concept of the brand as a valuable asset and repository of cultural meaning. Brands are valuable, but are they solely the creation of the trade mark owner? To what extent is consumer participation recognised? Against this backdrop, we focus on current issues and unresolved controversies in the comparative law of trade marks. We explore tensions between trade mark law's internal doctrinal logic and other competing values or interests, by situating brand protection within social, economic and cultural contexts. Topics include: Trade marks on the internet (domain names; search engine keywords such as Google adwords; intermediary liability for parties like eBay); comparative advertising; parallel importation and competition law concerns; parody, critique and free speech interests; publicity rights and the celebrity image; prohibitions on tobacco advertising; protection of the London Olympics 2012 symbols; branding from the perspectives of marketing, psychology and consumer culture theory.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

LL4BT Half Unit Cultural Property and Heritage Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB 7.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course looks at cultural property and heritage law from legal, social theoretical and practice-oriented perspectives. It provides an overview of existing and emerging cultural property and heritage legislation (domestic and international). We will be looking in particular at the development of cultural property legislation in the 20th century and emerging international cultural property and heritage initiatives under the auspices of the UN and UNESCO. Topics to be covered include the origins of cultural property law, the problems in defining cultural property and heritage, current issues and cases in repatriation and restitution of cultural objects, the National Trust and other heritage protection regimes, and intangible cultural heritage. The course also addresses the creation and management of museums and heritage sites, primarily within the UK, but also including sites in North and South America, Europe and Asia. We consider how the issues that we've identified throughout the course arise in the ongoing construction, protection, and (primarily economic) uses of heritage. Along with specialist seminars, the course includes visits to museums and contact with practising experts in the field.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

LL4BU Half Unit Art and Antiquities Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB 7.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: This course engages in a discussion of specific cases and issues regarding acquisition, ownership, and restitution of antiquities and works of art, and the problems that arise in regulating markets in art, antiquities and cultural artefacts. We will look at domestic (UK and US) and international legislation regulating the art and antiquities trades. Against this legislative background, the course examines important cases in disputes regarding looting and provenance of antiquities, and questions of commodification and sale of cultural artefacts and antiquities, including the issues that arise in the operation of the art market (dealers, museums, collectors and auction houses). 'Art Law' is a specialized area of practice and an emerging area of theory and scholarship. We will look at some of the cases and theory of art and law, including the practices of dealers and auction houses in valuing (and mis-valuing) art for sale; the recent developments in addressing the restitution of art taken during the Nazi era; museum loans and the cross-border movement of art; the restoration and conservation debate(s) and then turn to a scholarly and interpretive approach to the issues that arise in considering the art market. 'Antiquity Law is an engagement with the problems of the market(s) in antiquities and the legal and ethical burdens on the participants in this trade. We will look at the practices and constraints that arise in the context of both private purchasers/dealers and museums acquiring antiquities. We will focus on the case that the government of Italy brought against Marion True, the erstwhile Curator of Antiquities at the Getty Museum, and we will consider how that ground-breaking prosecution changed some of the practices in this area, as well as added to the toolbox for nations seeking repatriation of cultural objects. We will also return to the questions that arise in dealer, auction house and museum policies more generally. Finally, practitioners in these areas, museum and auction house professionals, archaeologists, and art experts will be contributing to the seminars on the emerging legal issues in this area.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

LL4C2 Half Unit World Poverty and Human Rights

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon TW2 11.01F

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Some knowledge of public international law is required.

Course content: This course examines world poverty and inequality from the perspective of international law aimed at the protection of human rights. Drawing on rights and obligations, the course considers the duties of states and other actors and the ways in which they may be implicated in the deprivation which has 2.7 billion people concentrated in the South unable to exercise their minimum essential levels of human rights. While the approach to the course is largely normative and conceptual, it will explore its findings in relation to players and institutions that impact positively or negatively on human rights today, as well as examine the application of legal standards and developments to some areas of outstanding concern. Topics to be covered may include:

- Poverty as a human rights issue
- Human rights, economics and development
- The right to development and claims against the public international order
- The scope and content of the obligation of international cooperation
- The work of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
- Human rights and the World Bank, IMF, WTO, international investment, and international finance
- Interrogating the Millennium Development Goals.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

LL4C6 Half Unit Advanced Issues of International Commercial Arbitration

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.34

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Fundamentals of International Commercial Arbitration (LL4C5).

Or a course on arbitration in previous studies or solid practical experience in the field.

Course content: This course aims at giving students who already are acquainted with the fundamentals of arbitration the possibility to go into depth into selected problems of international commercial arbitration. The course is based on student presentations and intense discussions of these problems in order to raise the sensitivity for the issues at stake. The course is highly relevant for those wanting to specialise in arbitration practice, as the theoretical problems have a significant impact on practical solutions. The course will treat a selection of topical contemporary issues of international commercial arbitration, such as the law applicable to arbitration agreements; the scope of the competence-competence principle; the role of internationally mandatory rules of law arbitration & insolvency, arbitration and fraud and corruption,; or the enforcement of awards set aside abroad. The course seeks to be as topical as possible, so that content may change in the light of new developments.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One group presentation in the seminar and an essay of 2,500 words.

Indicative reading: G. Born, International Commercial Arbitration - Cases and Materials (Kluwer 2011); id. International Commercial Arbitration (Kluwer 2009); N. Blackaby & C. LL4CA Half Unit

Law and Social Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Flessas NAB 7.27 and Dr Umberto-Igor Stramignoni NAB 7.17

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research) and Master of Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. LLM Specialisms This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialism: Legal Theory Course content: This course explores the role of law in society. Much has been written on the theme of law and society, and much of what has been written is itself implicated in the process of legal studies. This course begins elsewhere. By means of a set of interlinked case studies it addresses some quite fundamental theoretical questions about law and society: what exactly do we expect, or enact, by the deployment of law in emerging or new social and technological contexts? As new 'epidemics' (for example, 'the obesity epidemic') or identities (for example, 'third gender') come into focus in the modern world, 'law' becomes implicated, and is often central, in their construction as social phenomena. This course explores how law and social theory evolve and operate both in tandem and in conflict in these new areas. Law operates as a discourse, technique, form or set of institutions; to what extent are its functions understood by the claimants that expect law to legitimise (or otherwise) emerging social and technological constellations? Although the course is organised in terms topics or questions, rather than authors or texts, it will renew engagement with a number of now classic authors while at the same time exploring newer theoretical and historical scholarship on the spatiality of modernity.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The seminars will be conducted Dr Flessas, Professor Alain Pottage, and other members of the Law Department.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

LL4CB Half Unit Modern Legal History: Private Law and the Economy 1750-1950

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof. Michael Lobban

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Law (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

LLM Specialisms This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory.

Course content: This course will examine how the common law aided or hindered economic growth in the era between 1750 and 1950, by focusing in particular on the development of doctrines of private law. The course will concentrate on a number of themes and topics. It will begin with a discussion of the nature of the common law, and the modes of common law reasoning, to establish what kind of legal system economic actors were dealing with. It will then look at the developing law of contract, to explore how far the ideology of 'freedom of contract' assisted growth. It will further explore the law relating to civil wrongs (including the law relating to compensation for accidents and pollution) and unjust enrichment (particularly in the context of business failures). It will also explore some specific topics, including the law relating to corporate enterprise, bankruptcy and insurance.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

LL4CC Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Commercial Remedies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Solene Rowan NAB 7.26

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws. This course is not available as an outside option.

Specialisms: Corporate and/or Commercial Law; International Business Law

Course content: The objective of the course would be to provide students with a detailed understanding of remedies in a commercial context. It would consider remedies for breach of contract and torts. The focus of the reading would be on case law and doctrinal writing. Here is a very rough breakdown of the topics that I intend to look at: Session 1 would be an introductory session. It would put the next 11 sessions of the course into context. The particular focus of attention would be on breach of contract and the commission of torts. Session 2 would consider compensatory damages for breach of contract. Compensatory damages is the most common remedy in contract. It therefore makes sense to look at this remedy first. Session 3 would be on compensatory damages for torts. Again, compensatory damages is the most common remedy in tort law and it should be studied early on in the syllabus. Session 4 and session 5 would look at remedies that compel performance. Session 3 would be devoted to actions for an agreed sum (debt actions) and specific performance, a remedy that aims at keeping the contract 'alive'. Session 4 would look at remedies that aim to prevent or compel the undoing of a wrong, namely injunctions. Injunctions are relevant to the law of contract and tort law. Session 6 would consider termination for breach of contract. This is a remedy which is very significant in practice as it puts an end to the primary obligations between contracting parties. Session 7 would look at restitution for wrongs. The focus would be on restitutionary damages in contract and tort. Session 8 would be devoted to punitive damages (in contract and tort law). This is a topical issue as there has been much debate recently on whether punitive damages, which are available in tort law, should be introduced in contract law. Session 9 would consider agreed remedies. Particular focus would be given to penalty clauses, specific performance/injunction clauses, restitution clauses and 'cost of cure' clauses. Session 10 would be comparative in character. They would look at the approach followed in common law jurisdictions (in particular the United States and Australia) and in civilian jurisdictions (in particular Germany and France).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course. Formative assessment opportunities will be provided (essay or problem questions)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Gerner Beuerle NAB 5.08 and Mr Edmund-Philipp Schuster NAB 6.30

Pre-requisites: There are no formal prerequisites, but some understanding of European law and EU law-making is of advantage.

Course content: This course will examine the EU harmonization programme for companies. It will analyse the framework of primary EU law within which companies and national legislators must operate (the Treaty provisions on the right of establishment and the free movement of capital), as well as secondary measures of EU law regulating companies and relevant soft law initiatives. The course will also deal with the most important European forms of company, notably the SE (Societas Europaea or European Company) and investigate the implications that corporate mobility within the EU has for regulating companies at the national level. Topics include:

- EU company law harmonization programme
- 1st Company Law Directive: formation and disclosure
- Right of establishment: primary and secondary establishment, transfer of seat, jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice (in particular: Centros, Überseering, SEVIC, Cartesio, VALE)
- Free movement of capital: golden shares jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice, BAA, KPN/TPG, VW; proportionality principle in the EU
- 2nd Directive and capital structure: minimum capital; payment for shares; publicity; distributions; stock repurchase; increases in capital and capital reductions; serious loss of capital; case law interpreting the 2nd Directive; reform initiatives (e.g., SLIM Working Group)
- Corporate governance regulation in the EU: abandoned 5th Directive; Recommendation on the role of non-executive or supervisory directors of listed companies; remuneration policies;

Shareholder Rights Directive

- European Company Law Forms: European company (SE) and European private company
- State of European company law harmonisation; potential for regulatory competition and regulatory arbitrage

LL4E6 Half Unit International Dispute Resolution: Courts and Tribunals

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Devika Hovell NAB6.32

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The former Prosecutor of the Yugoslav Tribunal, Richard Goldstone, resolved that: 'it seems to me that if you don't have international tribunals, you might as well not have international law'. The proliferation of international courts and tribunals has certainly contributed to the development and enforcement of international law, but it also raises a number of questions: Is international law too political to be enforced by courts? Too uncertain? What is the relationship between courts operating on the world stage? Should domestic courts have primacy over international courts when it comes to the prosecution of international crimes? Does there need to be a system of precedent between courts enforcing international law to prevent fragmentation? Are domestic courts bound to follow the judgments of international courts? The course will examine the history and controversies surrounding the role of judicial bodies in international dispute resolution. It will focus on the International Court of Justice and a variety of specialist tribunals in international criminal law, trade law, human rights and arbitration, as well as the growing role of domestic courts in international dispute resolution.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

LL4E8 Law in Society: A Joint Course in Law and Anthropology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Pottage NAB 7.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society. This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research) and Master of Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course offers a foundation in those elements of anthropological and social theory essential to an understanding of law in society. This course draws on anthropological themes and texts to develop an innovative perspective on contemporary legal norms and institutions. It aims to document legal institutions and practices as concrete ethnographic phenomena, focusing on the techniques of writing and documentation, the legal production of persons and things, and the legal framing of institutions. It combines abstract social theory with concrete ethnographic method in the study of ritual, kinship, property and communicative technologies in formal law. The course may include the following topics: Law, anthropology, and the production of the social: an introduction to the links between legal and anthropological scholarship, exploring juridical concepts of power, agency and social personality and anthropology's models of society; Legal and political ritual: selected theoretical analyses of modern legal ritual examined against the background of anthropological debates concerning the general nature of ritual; The communication of power in writing: the representation and construction of social institutions in administration; Legal time and evidence: ethnographic analysis of narrative, evidence and proof in different legal cultures; Persons and things: legal forms of personification and objectification in systems of ownership and inheritance, with particular attention to the law governing reproductive resources; Legal collectivities, the modern corporation and its others: ethnographies of the social and legal construction of collective agency; The uses of anthropology in law and politics: the role of anthropology in contemporary contests over indigenous title, cultural property, common property resources, and alternative dispute resolution.

LL4F1 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Secured Financing in Commercial Transactions

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: An examination of the proprietary and security aspects of commercial transactions. This course considers the significance of property and the special protection the law affords to proprietary interests (mainly in movable property). It examines various types of commercial transactions involving the transfer of property, the use of property, the taking of security and certain quasi-security transactions having a similar effect to security. It explores the different types of security and other transactions that may be available in the context of various types of asset, as well as priority issues when there are conflicting interests. The course will also consider proposals for reforming the law and alternative approaches that might be taken. The course is based upon the principles of English law but reference may also be made to other systems of law and to international initiatives sponsored by Unidroit and UNCITRAL.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed during the course. For preliminary reading on the basic principles see M Bridge, Personal Property Law (3rd Edn.) (especially chapters 6-7); M Bridge, The English Law of Real Security [2002] European Review of Private Law 483-508, and E McKendrick, Goode on Commercial Law (4th Edn) (especially chapters 22-25).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

One two-hour open book examination paper.

LL4F2 Half Unit The Law and Practice of International Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joanne Braithwaite NAB6.33

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the legal issues which arise in international financial markets based in London. It is a good fit with LL4H4 (Financial Law), though this is not a pre-requisite. This course looks at the various transactions and structures which are widely used in the financial markets, such as derivatives, securitisation, syndicated loans and Eurobonds. With an emphasis on private law, it considers the relevant legal, commercial and regulatory background and the risks and protections available to participants in these markets. The course is based upon an analysis of the relevant issues under English law with some reference to other systems for comparative purposes. Where possible, several of the lectures will be attended by practitioners who will participate in the discussions, and the course ties in well with the LLM evening seminars in financial and corporate law. The course will be underpinned by discussion of the legal principles involved in international finance, but the case studies referenced will be topical. In this sense, the content of the course will be adapted to the fast moving developments affecting international markets in capital and in risk (for example, in recent sessions the course has examined the legal basis of prime brokerage relationships, the related Lehman Brothers litigation and the ongoing regulatory reform of the OTC derivatives markets, including the new requirement of mandatory CCP clearing).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one essay, which may be completed in exam conditions.

Indicative reading: Examples of texts which will be referenced on the course: L Gullifer and J Payne, Corporate Finance Law: Principles and Policy, Hart 2011; J Benjamin, Financial Law, Oxford University Press, 2007; A McKnight, The Law of International Finance; R Cranston, Principles of Banking Law. A full reading list will be distributed during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Assessment is by closed book written examination (100%) which students sit in the summer term. The exam is two hours plus 15 minutes reading time.

LL4F3 Half Unit Mergers, Acquisitions and Restructurings in Europe

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Edmund-Philipp Schuster NAB6.30

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 90 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: In this course, we will explore the regulation of mergers, acquisitions and restructurings in Europe. The course will examine the available legal techniques for the combination and restructuring of business operations in Europe, with a particular focus on cross-border transactions. Areas covered will include corporate mobility in Europe, domestic and cross-border mergers, de-mergers, spin-offs, public takeovers, and the European Company, and how it is used for business restructuring and reorganisation. Particular attention will be paid to the interaction between the relevant legal concepts and the economic and financial environment firms operate in.

Content overview

- The market for corporate control, corporate ownership structures and transaction structures for takeovers and restructurings in Europe
- European takeover regulation
- Domestic mergers
- Divisions & spin-offs
- Cross-border mergers in Europe

International Dispute Resolution: Non-Adjudicatory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christine Chinkin NAB6.15

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: International Dispute Resolution: Non-Adjudicatory Processes is concerned with the way in which conflicts or potential conflicts, both between states and with other participants in the international arena, can be peacefully managed and resolved. The course considers the options available for the peaceful settlement of international disputes. It will examine the general obligation under international law to settle disputes peacefully, focussing particularly (but not exclusively) on non-adjudicatory means of international dispute settlement, such as negotiation, inquiry, mediation and conciliation. Using controversial case studies (including those relating to peace processes), the course will examine the respective advantages and disadvantages of these various mechanisms, the interplay between them, and the factors that influence their effectiveness. It will also explore some of the theoretical issues that underpin international dispute resolution.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete one 1,500 word essay during the course.

Indicative reading: J Collier & V Lowe, The Settlement of Disputes in International Law Institutions and Procedures (Oxford, 1999); J Merrills, International Dispute Settlement (5th ed, Cambridge, 2011); C. LL4F9 Half Unit

Legal Research and Writing Skills

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jacobus Bomhoff NAB 6.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This half unit course on Legal Research and Writing has: (i) A taught component focusing on research and writing skills; and (ii) A 10,000 word stand-alone dissertation, to be written in a substantive law area of the student's choice. The two components will be carefully integrated. Over the course of this half unit, students should gain a better understanding of: (a) The nature of research in general; the distinctive features (if any) of legal research and the range of questions and research methodologies to be found within legal scholarship (b) Doing legal research, including research design, resource identification and searching for relevant materials; legal referencing and citation skills. (c) Writing skills, relating to both the process of writing, as well as the end product; presenting findings to different audiences etc. Representative topics include the following, where L = Lecture and S = Seminar delivery: 1. What is research? What are the distinctive features of legal research? [L] 2. Theoretical approaches to legal materials [L + S] 3. Research methodologies in law, including comparative law [L] 4. Resources for legal research (an overview of the library resources and practical, lab-based sessions on effective database searching) [L + S] 5. Developing an argument in writing [L + S] 6. The iterative nature of legal writing (as described by a member of the Law Department illustrating this with versions of one of their own research papers) [L] 7. Identifying good writing (identifying effective legal writing from the MT syllabus and discussions around why the student liked it) [S] 8. Single page poster presentations of the proposed dissertation - effective communication of the key ideas behind the dissertation [S]? 9. An interactive Questions and Answers seminar - divided into subject-specific streams (e.g. international law; commercial law; media law, IT & IP law) [S]

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: The formative coursework will consist of an interactive, week-by-week Moodle form which students will have to complete before the relevant seminar. The tasks on the form will be designed to assist the student in designing their 10,000 word dissertation outline. See Section 3.3 above for further details.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

LL4G6 Half UnitInternational Commodity Sales*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.Course content: The course is concerned with the international sale of goods where English law is the applicable law by virtue of well-established standard form contracts used extensively in the trade, such as GAFTA 100 (a CIF contract form). English law plays a dominant part in the international sale of commodities, especially in the case of dry commodities (wheat, soya etc) produced in North America and transported to a northern European destination. It is usually the case that such contracts have no physical connection with England. There is a rich case law dealing with sales on FOB, CIF and similar terms and there are interesting comparisons to be drawn between forward physical sales and futures sales. Interesting questions are also posed by the intersection of various allied contracts concluded to give effect to the international venture, notably, sale, letters of credit, insurance and carriage (or charter parties). Extensive consideration is given to the UCP600 Customs and Practice on Documentary Credits 2007.Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.Indicative reading: Michael Bridge, The International Sale of Goods (Oxford, 3rd ed 2013); Michael Bridge, The Sale of Goods (2nd ed 2009); A Slabotsky, Grain Contracts and Arbitration (Lloyd's London, 1984); M Bridge (ed), Benjamin's Sale of Goods (Sweet & Maxwell, 8th ed 2010); D Morgan, Merchants of Grain (Penguin, 1980); E McKendrick (ed), Goode on Commercial Law (Penguin, 4th ed 2010); International Chamber of Commerce, Incoterms 2010; International Chamber of Commerce, UCP Rules on Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (UCP600, 2007). LL4H2 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Media Law: Regulating Publication

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of mass media publication (principally the press, the broadcast media, and institutionalised Internet publication). The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media publication practice, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines potential restrictions on publication that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests considered are those in reputation (defamation), privacy, and confidentiality. The key public interests considered are the integrity of the judicial process (contempt and reporting restrictions), the impartiality of political representations, the avoidance of offence (obscenity and religion), and national security.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

10 weekly two-hour seminars in MT. The course is also supported by a series of specialist seminars with outside speakers, and by an online discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students must submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 1,500 word essay.

Indicative reading: Fenwick and Phillipson, Media Freedom Under the Human Rights Act (OUP, 2006); Robertson and Nicol, Media Law (Sweet & Maxwell, 5th ed 2007), Doley and Mullis (eds), Carter Ruck on Libel and Privacy (6th edn, Lexis Nexis, 2010), Warby, Moreham and Christie (eds) Tugendhat and Christie: The Law of Privacy and the Media, (2nd edn, OUP, 2011), Barendt, Freedom of Speech (OUP, 2nd ed 2005), Nicol, Millar and Sharland, Media Law and Human Rights (OUP, 2009); Cram, A Virtue Less Cloistered: Courts, Speech and Constitutions (Hart Publishing, 2002).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words).

LL4H3 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Media Law: Regulating Newsgathering

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the legal and administrative regulation of newsgathering and content production practices undertaken by journalists and others working in the media sector. The course is introduced with consideration of a number of themes that underpin the rest of the syllabus: the role(s) of the media in society (including conceptions of the 'public interest'); the main social, technological and regulatory influences that shape media newsgathering practice, and rights jurisprudence (in particular, the freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law). The course then examines a number of newsgathering practices that are either facilitated or proscribed by law and/or other forms of regulation. These include the protection of sources and journalistic materials; 'cheque-book journalism' (including payments to witnesses and to criminals); access to information held by the state (freedom of information); access to courts and legal documents; media-police interaction; harassment and media intrusion, and the regulation of surreptitious newsgathering practices (hacking, tapping and subterfuge).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

The course is also supported by a series of specialist seminars with outside speakers, and by an online discussion forum.

Formative coursework: Students must submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 1,500 word formative essay.

LL4H4 Half Unit Financial Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Philipp Paech NAB7.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The traditional financial market sectors of insurance, commercial banking, derivatives, capital markets and asset management are converging in practice, but their academic analysis is still largely sector-based. This course offers a cross-sectoral, functional analysis, permitting students to grasp the big picture. It highlights certain anomalies in differing legal treatment of the respective sectors, and considers key trends. The course provides an overview of the substantive law aspects (UK, EU and international) of international financial and business transactions. The focus is mainly on broad principles and policy issues rather than a detailed examination of statute, case law and drafting. However, where appropriate, legal concepts and market practice will be explained by reference to case law and other legal sources. The course is designed to be as topical as possible, and the content may change in the light of developments. While the precise topics covered will vary from year to year they typically will include the following:

- Introduction:
 - o Logic and players of the financial market
 - o Overview of types of financial transactions
 - o Reasoning and sources of financial law and regulation
 - o The types of risk and the role of financial law
 - o European and global legal and regulatory architecture
- Taking risk through funded positions
 - o The nature of banks, deposit taking, loans, syndicated loans
 - o Issuance of debt securities, eurobonds and equity
 - o Investment funds
 - o Cross-comparison of funded positions, common patterns and differences
- Taking risk through simple positions
 - o Guarantee and insurance
 - o Derivatives and credit default swaps
 - o Structured finance, securitisation, asset-backed securities
 - o Cross-comparison and the risk of recharacterisation
- Mitigating risk through net and asset-backed positions
 - o Set-off and netting
 - o Security interests, quasi-security and financial collateral
 - o Insolvency policy and preferential treatment of financial firms

- Cross-jurisdictional analysis
 - o Private international law analysis in financial law
 - o Example 1: intermediated securities and cross-border collateral
 - o Example 2: cross-jurisdictional netting
 - o Common patterns and difficulties

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

The course will comprise a two hour weekly lecture and, depending on student numbers, small group follow-up seminars.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit a 2,000 word essay during LT. A voluntary mock exam is offered in ST.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be made available on Moodle prior to teaching.

LL4H7 Half Unit Foundations of Legal Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: Drawing on major themes of modern European philosophy, this course re-frames the questions that have been taken as defining jurisprudential inquiry: What accounts for the foundations of legal orders and their durability across space and time? How and why do legal norms change? What explains the normativity of law? What is the connection between sovereignty and legal validity? Is there a connection between democracy and legal validity? Is it part of the definition of a legal norm's validity that it advances morality or the common good? Is it part of law's essence that it institutionalizes individual rights, and if so, which ones? Throughout, these questions are addressed in relation to the philosophical tradition that links Kant, Hegel and Habermas; hence the focus of the course is on how, and how far, modern law enables the realisation of the ideals of autonomy and mutual recognition.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

LL4J1 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Critical Perspectives on Legal Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Foundations of Legal Theory (LL4H7).

Course content: The aim of this course is to consider aspects of the phenomenon of law that have arguably been insulated from critical scrutiny by traditional jurisprudence. The questions structuring the seminars will accordingly include the following: What are the material conditions for law's existence as a legitimate structure of authoritative norms? What are the connections between law and other modalities of power that are not encoded in the form of sovereignty? Are the forms of subjectivity and mutual recognition institutionalized by the legal order always linked with progressive social change, or can they also be complicit with processes of domination and exploitation? Most fundamentally: Is law actually necessary for individual and collective self-determination? These questions are approached from a variety of critical perspectives, including Marxist, post-Marxist and poststructuralist perspectives.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Amy Allen, The Politics of Our Selves: Power, Autonomy and Gender in Contemporary Critical Theory (Columbia University Press 2007); Luc Boltanski, On Critique: A Sociology of Emancipation (Polity Press 2011); Diana Coole and Samantha Frost (eds.) New Materialisms: Ontology, Agency, and Politics (Duke UP 2010); Mitchell Dean, Governmentality: Power and Rule in Modern Society 2nd ed. LL4K2 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Law of International Economic and Financial Sanctions

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jonathan Fisher and Dr Rachel Barnes

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of public international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: To examine the development and practice of States' use of economic and financial sanctions against other States and non-State entities from a legal perspective. The course will consider both unilateral measures by individual States and multilateral programmes most notably those established by the UN Security Council and the European Union; the various modes of implementation and enforcement of these programmes on trans-national levels and within domestic legal systems; issues arising in public international law and for fundamental human rights; and the effects on third parties, both in terms of the regulatory costs for businesses and charities and the humanitarian issues for civilian populations and persons connected with targeted entities.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Students are expected to contribute to class discussions and to give at least one seminar presentation during the term.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 word essay.

Indicative reading: Most source materials are available in the LSE electronic library and access will be facilitated through Moodle.

Additional resources are available on the internet. There is no core set text, although it is recommended that students obtain a copy of Alexander K., Economic Sanctions: Reassessing Public Policy (Palgrave MacMillan, 2007) ISBN 978-0230525559. LL4K4 Half Unit The International Law of Self-Determination

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Irving

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of international law is useful but not essential.

Course content: This course will provide a general introduction to the doctrine of self-determination in international law. Self-determination will be historically contextualised from its intellectual progenitors in the Enlightenment through to its political birth at the 1919 Paris Peace Conference and its formal induction into international law by virtue of the 1945 UN Charter. Both the detail of the doctrine's content and the dynamic governing its development will be explored. The relationship between self-determination and state formation (including decolonisation and secession), minority rights, aboriginal rights, women's rights and the nascent right to democratic governance will be central topics. Reference will also be made to the interplay between self-determination and economic rights, including permanent sovereignty over natural resources, the right to development and the "third generation rights" movement more generally. Self-determination's influence upon the international rules governing the use of force will be discussed, but these rules will not be a primary focus. Upon completion of the course students will be in a position to legally analyse contemporary fact patterns and to identify both strengths and weaknesses in the existing legal framework. Students will have considered new and novel approaches to self-determination and will be able to situate the doctrine in relation to international law and human rights. Those taking the course will gain an appreciation for self-determination's particular contribution to political and economic liberty.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Introductory reading: Crawford, James, "The Right of Self-Determination in International Law: Its Development and Future" in Alston, Philip, ed., People's Rights (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001) 7. Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words).

LL4K5 Half Unit International Commercial Contracts - General Principles

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp NAB7.34 and Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: Firm knowledge in contract law and/or international sale of goods from previous studies.

Course content: The course treats what can be called the general part of transnational contract law, i.e. the general principles of law which are of relevance in any kind of international contract, be it sale, construction, shipping, financing, or joint venture. These general principles relate to contractual formation and negotiations, interpretation, transversal general principles, changed circumstances and hardship, agency, third parties, assignment, self-help and set-off, direct performance and damages and penalties. At present, such contracts are governed either by uniform rules of international conventions or by the national laws applicable by virtue of conflict of law rules. The course puts the existing national and international solutions in a comparative perspective so as to work with the sources of such generally accepted principles. Where there are divergences between existing solutions, the course focuses on the elaboration of new efficient solutions that are internationally acceptable and have the potential of becoming general principles in the future. For these purposes, special attention is given to the UNIDROIT Principles on International Commercial Contracts and, where appropriate, the European Principles of Contract Law. Other national laws, however, are drawn upon from time to time. Students are also encouraged, in both classes and examination, to reflect upon the similarities and differences between their own national laws and the UNIDROIT Principles.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 word essay after week 6 on previous exam questions (choice of 1 out of 3).

Indicative reading: S. Vogenauer & J. Kleinheisterkamp, Commentary on the UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts (OUP 2009); H. Kötz, European Contract Law (OUP 1997); K. Beale et al., Ius Commune Casebook on the Common Law of Europe: Cases Materials and Text on Contract Law (2nd edition, OUP 2010); T. Kadner Graziano, Comparative Contract Law (Palgrave 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4K6 Half Unit International Uniform Sales Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The course concerns sales conducted on the basis of the United Nations Convention on the International Sale of Goods 1980 (CISG). Nearly eighty countries accounting together for two-thirds of the world's export trade, have so far adopted the CISG, which has generated an enormous primary and secondary literature, a great part of which is available on the internet. It has been incorporated as domestic law in Israel and Norway and has also very largely informed the Chinese Contract Law of 1999. The CISG is a most important piece of legislation in the continuing development of international contract law. It has been influential in the development of European sales law (the Directive on the Sale of Consumer Goods and Associated Guarantees) and of the Common Frame of Reference. The experience of the CISG brings out all of the issues arising from attempts to create uniform, transnational private law. Attention will also be given to the Unidroit Principles of International Commercial Contracts (2nd ed 2004) so far as they may be used to supplement the CISG. (This course complements LL4G6 International Commodity Sales).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: M Bridge, The International Sale of Goods (Oxford, 3rd ed 2013); J Fawcett, J Harris and M Bridge, International Sale of Goods in the Conflict of Laws (Oxford 2005); C Bianca and M Bonell, Commentary on the International Sales Law (Giuffrè, 1987); I Schwenzer (ed), Schlechtriem and Schwenzer: Commentary on the UN Convention on the International Sale of Goods (CISG) (Oxford, 3rd ed 2010); S Kröll, L Mistelis and P erales Viscasillas, UN Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods (2011); J Honnold, Documentary History of the Uniform Law for International Sales (Kluwer, 1989); H Flechtner (ed), Honnold: Uniform Law for International Sales (Kluwer, 4th ed 2009); P Huber and A Mullis, The CISG (2007). Plus a substantial list of articles and cases.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Note that students taking this course and LL4G6 International Commodity Sales (H) will sit one 3-hour exam in the ST: LL4E5 International Sale of Goods.

LL4K7 Half Unit Mental Health Law: The Criminal Context

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jill Peay NAB6.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course aims to integrate a practical and theoretical understanding of mental health law, as it relates to mentally disordered offenders. It is not intended to provide a comprehensive understanding of the detail of the relevant law in England and Wales, but rather aims at broader conceptual understanding of the problem areas that are likely to bedevil law relating to mentally disordered offenders across many jurisdictions. The course makes reference to both the Mental Health Act 1983 and the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: J. Peay (2010) Mental Health and Crime, Routledge. P Bartlett & R Sandland, Mental Health Law. Policy and Practice, Oxford University Press. This is to be published in a new edition in October 2013.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Law and the HolocaustThis information is for the 2013/14 session.*Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the relationship between law, legal pathology, and the origins and implementation of the events known as the Holocaust. Students will explore the lessons for legal theory and practice arising from Hitler's rise to power under the Weimar Constitution, the legalization of the Nazi racial-biological worldview through eugenics and anti-Jewish legislation, the differential treatment of citizens and non-citizens in parallel anti-Jewish legal programs in Vichy France and elsewhere, the challenge to our conceptions of legal and moral responsibility that is presented by the idea of 'administrative massacre', and the question of how the Nazi legal era has been represented in mainstream jurisprudence. By studying the sequential moments of legal and institutional pathology that provided the context for the persecution of the Jews – loss of meaningful constitutionalism or constitutional values, loss of legal rights, loss of citizenship, loss of the standards of the rule of law, loss of the status of the legal subject as a bearer of dignity, amongst others – students will have the opportunity to think deeply about the significance of these pathologies for our understanding of what law is, what law should be, and what conditions are required for law to mediate power rather than merely provide a vehicle for its expression. The crucial role played by legal thinkers and legal actors in the Nazi project will be a key reference point, as will the question of the adequacy of our scholarly resources to the task of illuminating the complex questions and connections that a study of law and the Holocaust presents.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

LL4L5 Half Unit Socio-legal Theory and Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB7.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Law (Socio-Legal Theory). This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Proposed +4 ESRC PhD students registered in the law department (and in other departments with permission).

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course will explore the interface between social theory, methodology and socio-legal practice. After an initial engagement with literature on the history, scope and nature of doctrinal, realist, critical and socio-legal approaches to law, the course will focus on seminal empirical studies of law and legal phenomena. In particular students will be asked to identify how specific theoretical frameworks for research have influenced choice of methodology, methods and the subsequent interpretation of data. Empirical studies exploring central legal concepts such as rights, regulation, access to justice, judgment, neutrality, due process and equality will be selected for in-depth analysis. An important feature of the course is that authors of leading socio-legal research outputs will be invited to lead 'master classes' in order to discuss the intellectual origins of their work and how this impacted on design and implementation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to prepare a poster presentation outlining the theoretical framework, methodological choices, ethical implications and practical obstacles for a research project they would like to undertake. The 'ideas map' they present will be used as a plan for the formal summative assessment. Each student will present their poster to the class before week seven of the term and will receive detailed feedback on their presentation by the end of the same term. This will give students the time to reflect on the comments made before writing up their ideas in their course dissertation. A fuller version of the presentation will later be submitted as the coursework component of the course. This is an unusual form of assessment for law students but is used extensively in other disciplines. Students will be directed to websites which provide guidance in preparing a poster presentation and will also be given the opportunity to study examples of posters collected by the course convenor.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

The essay will take the form of a research proposal (100%).

LL4L6 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Theory of Human Rights Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some knowledge of human rights law of any jurisdiction may be helpful, but is not essential. A knowledge of philosophy is not required.

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to the philosophy of human rights and theoretical issues in human rights law. The emphasis is on a combination of law and theory; to this end, each seminar will rely on a mixture of cases from various jurisdictions and theoretical and philosophical materials. The overarching questions to be examined are to what extent current philosophical theories of human rights can illuminate our understanding of the cases and legal doctrines, and to what extent the cases and doctrines can help improving the theoretical and philosophical understanding of human rights. Topics to be discussed will include: Negative and Positive Freedom; Theories of Human Rights; Ronald Dworkin's Theory of Rights; Balancing and Proportionality; Rights Inflation; Human Rights and Judicial Review I (The American Perspective); Human Rights and Judicial Review II (The European Perspective); Absolute Rights.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: The course will rely on both cases from various jurisdictions and articles and book chapters from authors including Amartya Sen, Ronald Dworkin, Robert Alexy, James Griffin, Mattias Kumm, Jeremy Waldron and Frances Kamm.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4L7 Half Unit Advanced Mediation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB7.15

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Legal Theory. This course is capped at 60 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Pre-requisites: Students wishing to take Advanced Mediation must have taken The Theory and Practice of Dispute Resolution

Course content: This course examines the various models of mediation and the contexts in which each is used. It also considers contemporary debates about power in mediation. Practicing mediators will be invited to a number of the classes in order to facilitate discussion of the interface between theory and practice. Topics include 1. Distinguishing between different models of mediation e.g., facilitative, evaluative, narrative/transformational and transactional 2. The cultural context of mediation 3. Gender and mediation 4. Power and mediation 5. The lawyers role in mediation 6. Case studies of the use of mediation in particular fields may include commercial, family, personal injury international and community mediation. 7. The shift towards compulsory mediation The course is designed to complement the options on Commercial Arbitration and Advanced Negotiation and Mediation and The Theory and Practice of dispute resolution.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Seminars will take the form of a mini lecture followed by in-depth discussion of the reading. In addition students will undertake a series of role play exercises and analyses of filmed mediations in which they are asked to explore the interface between theory and practice.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Simon Roberts and Michael Palmer's 2005 (second edition) Dispute Processes: ADR and the Primary Forms of Dispute Resolution, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press; David Luban, Settlements and the Erosion of the Public Realm, 83 Geo LJ 2619 1994-5; Abel, Richard L (1982) 'The Contradictions of Informal Justice', in Richard L. LL4N6 Half Unit Principles of Copyright Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Anne Barron NAB6.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms:

Competition, Innovation and Trade Law, Corporate and/or Commercial Law; Information Technology, Media and Communications Law; Intellectual Property Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSE for You.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to copyright law aimed at those who have not studied the subject in detail before. The starting point will be UK copyright law (as shaped by relevant EU Directives and international agreements), but US, French and German law will serve as occasional bases for comparative analysis. Topics to be covered will include the history and evolution of copyright, copyright's protected objects ('works') and subjects (authors, publishers and producers of works), the principles governing the ownership and exploitation of copyright, and the nature and scope of copyright protection.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Estelle Derclaye (ed.) Research Handbook on the Future of EU Copyright (Edward Elgar: Cheltenham, 2009); Mireille van Eechoud et al., Harmonizing European Copyright Law (Kluwer, 2009); Paul Goldstein and Benrt Hugenholtz International Copyright: Principles, Law and Practice 2nd ed. LL4S1 Half Unit Cyberlaw

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Murray NAB7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines and discusses topical issues in relation to the law of the internet and other digital information devices (iPhones etc.). It opens by examining the issues relating to network regulation or control by addressing questions such as "can the internet be regulated?" and "who is competent to police online content and activity?" It concludes its examination of structural controls by examining the highly topical and politically charged issue of enshrined network neutrality: by asking the question: should Internet Service Providers be allowed to vary service conditions by types of content? Students taking the course will be expected to develop knowledge and understanding of the different values brought to bear in the regulation of ICT and communities and the factors leading towards choices of particular values, regulatory institutions and process. Such knowledge and understanding will operate both at the theoretical level and the level of particular examples of regulatory regimes.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students should submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Murray, Information Technology Law: The Law and Society (OUP, 2010); Edwards & Waelde (eds), Law and the Internet 3rd ed (Hart, 2009); Murray, The Regulation of Cyberspace (Routledge, 2007); Lessig, Code Ver, 2.0 (Basic Books, 2006); Zittrain, The Future of the Internet (Penguin, 2009); Benkler, The Wealth of Networks (Yale UP, 2007); Sunstein, Republic.com 2.0 (Princeton UP, 2009).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL4S2 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 E-Commerce Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Murray NAB7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course is to introduce students from a legal background to the specialised legal structure which surrounds e-commerce. The course looks at the specific problems an e-commerce start-up must overcome in order to begin trading, including arranging hosting agreements, designing terms and conditions of service and delivery, and arranging distribution agreements. From here the course will develop to examine the problems of more mature e-commerce businesses including jurisdiction, payment systems and rules on marketing and privacy. Special classes on internet auctions and social networks will complete the analysis. The course is designed to act as an interface between ICT law and commercial law and practice in that it examines in detail the close sub-set of online transactions which are clearly commercial in nature.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students should submit an essay plan and working bibliography for the assessed essay. All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Murray, Information Technology Law: The Law and Society (OUP, 2010) Edwards & Waelde (eds): Law and the Internet 3rd ed (Hart, 2009) Hörnle: Cross-Border Internet Dispute Resolution (CUP, 2009) Charlesworth: Key Concepts in E-commerce (MacMillan, 2007) Dickie: Producers and Consumers in EU E-commerce Law (Hart, 2005) Wang: Law of Electronic Commercial Transactions: Contemporary Issues in the EU, US and China (Routledge, 2010)

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words).

LL4S4 Half Unit Digital Rights, Privacy and Security

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Orla Lynskey NAB6.23

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou

Course content: While the development of the information society brings about significant economic and societal benefits, by treating the personal data of individuals as a valuable trading commodity it also raises fundamental rights concerns. In response to these concerns the EU has recognised a "right to data protection" in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and is currently remodelling the legal framework applicable to personal data processing in the EU. Moreover, other key global actors including the Council of Europe, the OECD and the US are currently discussing amendments to their legal regimes in this field. The proposed reforms suggest a first movement towards a shared global vision of whether, and how, personal data processing should be regulated in the information society. However, given the exponential increases in the amount of personal data processed globally such a movement may appear to be outdated, and even quaint.

This course will therefore critically evaluate the current and proposed legal frameworks applicable to personal data processing. Students will be introduced to techniques and technologies for monitoring and gathering personal data in the information society and the legal framework applicable to this personal data collection in a number of jurisdictions, including the EU, US and the UK. In order to bring key issues to life, a number of cases studies will be considered, for instance the application of data protection rules to online behavioural advertising, user-generated content on social networking sites and to ambient technologies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to take part in a mock exam session.

Indicative reading: Murray: Information Technology Law, The Law and Society (OUP, 2010) Edwards & Waelde (eds), Law and the Internet 3rd ed (Hart, 2009) Carey, Data Protection: A Practical Guide to UK and EU Law 3rd ed (OUP, 2009) Mayer-Schönberger, Delete: The Virtue of Forgetting in the Digital Age (Princeton UP, 2009) Solove, Understanding Privacy (Harvard UP, 2009)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This is an open-book exam.

LL4S5 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Piracy, Content and Ownership in the Information Society

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Andrew Murray NAB7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: One of the most contentious and complex areas of online activity is the conflict between content providers and consumers. Providers spend considerable amounts on developing and delivering a variety of content, including entertainment content, branded content and business content. Consumers often erroneously, feel "information ought to be free" and take content without payment, an activity known as piracy. This is an embedded schism in internet society and this course will examine key flashpoints including: proprietary vs. open software; file sharing and aggregation; trade mark disputes including ADR for domain name disputes; software patents and the database right. At the end of the class students should have a valuable insight to, and understanding of, the legal foundations of these disputes and the attempts of regulators to broker a resolution. This class will take a critical approach to both the problem and the proposed legal/regulatory solutions.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to contribute to a series of class and online exercises, and to submit to one one-hour mock exam.

Indicative reading: Murray: Information Technology Law: The Law and Society (OUP, 2010) Edwards & Waelde (eds): Law and the Internet 3rd ed (Hart, 2009) Bently and Sherman: Intellectual Property Law 3rd ed (OUP, 2008) Lessig: Free Culture: The Nature and Future of Creativity (Penguin, 2005) Lessig: Remix - Making Art and Commerce Thrive in the Hybrid Economy (Bloomsbury, 2008) Boyle: The Public Domain: Enclosing the Commons of the Mind (Yale UP, 2009) Netanel: Copyright's Paradox (OUP, 2010)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4Z1 Half Unit Business Taxation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Roxan NAB7.25 and Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB7.33

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: The course is suitable both for those who have not studied taxation before and for those who have. It is strongly recommended for those who are studying LL4CJ Comparative Corporate Taxation, LL4CK Taxation of Corporate Transactions and who have not studied taxation previously.

Course content: This course looks at how businesses are taxed in the UK. The course focuses on the key elements of the taxation of the income of businesses, including:

corporation tax and the nature of taxes on companies capital gains taxation partnership taxation

tax relief for losses

taxation of dividends and other distributions capital allowances - relief for depreciation

The course is suitable for students who are interested in taking one course in taxation, including students who have not studied taxation before. It can usefully be combined with LL4Z2 Principles of Taxation, and will be a good background course on UK business taxation for students taking Taxation of Corporate Transactions who do not yet have a sufficient background in UK taxation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading Tiley, Revenue Law; Lee, Revenue Law Principles and Practice; Salter, Lee and Snape, Revenue Law: Text and Materials. Legislation: Tolley's Yellow Tax Handbook, or CCH The Red Book. Current editions need to be used. Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Relevant legislation may be taken into the examination room (Tolleys Yellow Tax Handbook or CCH The Red Book) if un-annotated.

LL4Z2 Half Unit Principles of Taxation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Eduardo Baistrocchi NAB7.33

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: The course is suitable both for students who have not studied taxation before and for those who have. It is particularly recommended for students who have not studied taxation previously, and who are studying any of the other tax courses offered at LLM/MSc level.

Course content: This course looks at how tax systems work and the principles that lie behind tax systems. Topics covered include the reasons for taxation and the main types of tax, how income is taxed, how the tax administration operates, the interpretation of tax legislation and tax avoidance. The course uses examples from the tax systems of the UK and other countries to illustrate the issues discussed. The course is suitable for those who have not studied taxation before, as well as for those with a background in tax who are interested in studying the principles of taxation in greater depth.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Appropriate readings from journal articles and from books including: Messere et al., Tax Policy: Theory and Practice in OECD Countries; Tanzi and Zee, Tax Policy for Developing Countries; Victor Thuronyi, Comparative Tax Law; James and Nobes, The Economics of Taxation; Mirrlees et al., Tax by Design. Further materials include: Morse and Williams, Davies Principles of Tax Law; Kay and King, The British Tax System; Ault and Arnold, Comparative Income Taxation: A Structural Analysis; Thuronyi, Tax Law Design and Drafting; Avi-Yonah, Sartori and Marian, Global Perspectives on Income Taxation Law. Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course via Moodle.

Recommended preliminary reading Victor Thuronyi, Comparative Tax Law (Kluwer Law International, 2003)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4Z3 Half Unit Consumption Taxes

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Roxan NAB7.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: The course is suitable for students who are interested in taking one course in taxation, including students who have little previous background in taxation. It can usefully be combined with LL4Z2 Principles of Taxation, and it provides a suitable background course for LL4Z4 VAT in the European Context. In the sixty years of the existence of value added taxes, they have spread to all corners of the globe to become one of the most importance sources of government revenue. This course will examine the nature of value added taxes, whether called VAT, GST or another name. VATs will be compared with other methods of taxing consumption, including other sales taxes and progressive expenditure taxes. The course will also look at the distinction between taxing consumption and income and the redistributive effects of taxing consumption. The course then considers the main features and problems raised by VATs and GSTs, including defining the taxpayers and the amount subject to tax, international transactions and VATs in federal jurisdictions, and problematic issues such as input tax credits. Examples will be drawn from the European Union VAT and from taxes in other countries.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading Schenk and Oldman, Value Added Tax: A Comparative Approach; Ogley, Principles of Value Added Tax: A European Perspective; Ebrill, The Modern VAT; Alan A. Tait, Value Added Tax: International Practice and Problems; Mirrlees et al., Tax by Design; McClure, The Value Added Tax: Key to Deficit Reduction?; James and Nobes, The Economics of Taxation; Tanzi and Zee, Tax Policy for Developing Countries. Detailed reading lists will be provided during course via Moodle.

Recommended preliminary reading Ogley, Principles of Value Added

Tax: A European Perspective (Interfisc Publishing, 1998); or Alan A. Tait, Value Added Tax: International Practice and Problems (IMF, 1988).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4Z4 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Value Added Tax in the European Context

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ian Roxan NAB7.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Law and Accounting, Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Pre-requisites: This course is suitable for students who are taking LL4Z3 Consumption Taxes, or who already have some experience of EU direct or indirect taxation or of a VAT or GST system.

Course content: The focus of the course will be on the European Union VAT as it operates in the United Kingdom. A significant part of the course will be devoted to EU legislation and jurisprudence. The course will begin with an introduction to key concepts of VAT, including supplies of goods and services, taxable persons and transactions, the rate structure, and consideration for supplies. The course will then examine in more detail a range of the most important aspects of VAT, including topics such as the deductibility of input tax and the treatment of exemptions, the taxation of international transactions and transactions between member states, VAT and financial services.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: Terra and Wattel, European Tax Law; Ogley, Principles of Value Added Tax: A European Perspective; Farmer & Lyal, EC Tax Law; Roxan, 'VAT Supplies of Services: A Definition in Search of a Meaning'; Millar, 'Illusory Supplies and Unacknowledged Discounts: VAT and Valuation in Consumer Transactions'. Students will be expected to acquire either the Tolley's Orange Tax Handbook, or The Green Book (CCH) for the current year. Students will be provided with detailed outlines and reading lists for the course via Moodle.

Recommended preliminary reading Terra and Wattel, European Tax Law (Kluwer); or Ogley, Principles of Value Added Tax: A European Perspective (Interfisc Publishing, 1998); or Farmer & Lyal, EC Tax Law (Oxford).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

A two-hour formal written examination (100%). Candidates will be permitted to take into the examination room unannotated copies of the Tolley's Orange Tax Handbook or CCH The Green Book.

LL4Z5 Half Unit EU State Aid Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo NAB7.18

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be relevant to the following LLM specialisms: Competition, Innovation and Trade; Corporate and/or Commercial Law; European Law; International Business Law.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: Member States of the EU are not free to award subsidies to companies or to support them in a comparable way (by, inter alia, granting them loans at favourable rates or by providing unlimited guarantees). In the wake of the recent financial crisis, for instance, bailout measures adopted across the EU had to be cleared by the European Commission in accordance with Articles 107 and 108 TFEU. The first part of the course explores the economic rationale underpinning the principle of the incompatibility of State aid with the EU internal market (the reasons why similar regimes are not implemented at the national level in federal countries facing similar dilemmas, such as the United States, will also be explored). The second part examined (i) the notion of State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU (that is, the range of measures that are subject to ex ante control by the European Commission) and (ii) the conditions under which such measures may be declared to be in the interest of the EU. The third part provides an overview of the application of the law in some sectors (including the financial and the communications sectors) or for some purposes (e.g. research and development, regional aid). Finally, the fourth part is devoted to the procedural aspects of the discipline.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to produce one 2,000 word formative essay during the course.

Indicative reading: Quigley, European State Aid Law and Policy (2nd Edition, 2009); Bacon (ed), European Community Law of State Aid; Heidenhain (ed), European State Aid Law (2nd Edition, 2010); EC State Aid Law - Liber Amicorum Francisco Santaolalla Gadea (2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4Z6 Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Law: Institutions

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jo Murkens NAB7.31 and Prof Michael Bridge NAB6.21

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines the central issues in comparative constitutional law across a range of jurisdictions and from a variety of perspectives. Although precise topics to be covered may vary from year to year, the main sections of the course will deal with: constitution-making, constitutional forms, constitutional adjudication, and constitutional borrowings. The overarching objectives of the course will be to analyse the methodological and conceptual challenges posed by comparative study of constitutions and to reflect on the cultural, ideological and transformative dimensions of contemporary constitutional discourse. Topics to be examined include: (1) constitutionalism and constituent power (2) constitutional forms (presidential and parliamentary systems; unitary and federal arrangements) (3) constitutional courts and constitutional adjudication (4) constitutional borrowings (transnational litigation, borrowing and the migration of constitutional ideas).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: There is not set book for this course. All materials will be made available in advance on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4Z7 Half Unit Comparative Constitutional Law: Rights

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB7.01

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course examines a range of controversial issues in human and constitutional rights law from a comparative perspective. These issues include: abortion; euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide; gay sex and sodomy; religion in the public sphere; affirmative action; hate speech and denial of the holocaust; obscenity. We will approach them by comparing and contrasting judgments from courts all over the world, with a certain emphasis on cases from the U.S. Supreme Court, the Canadian Supreme Court, the South African Constitutional Court, the European Court of Human Rights, the U.K. Supreme Court, and the German Federal Constitutional Court. The goals of the course are, first, to introduce the students to the jurisprudence of those extremely powerful and influential courts, and, second, to invite them to think about and critically analyse some of the most controversial, difficult, and important rights issues of our time.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly case-based; however, interested students may find the following book helpful: V Jackson and M Tushnet, Comparative Constitutional Law, 2nd edition, 2006.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

LL4Z9 Half Unit Banking Law

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joanne Braithwaite NAB6.33

Availability: This course is available on the Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped at 30 students. Students must apply through Graduate Course Choice on LSEforYou.

Course content: This course focuses on the private law of banking as it relates to the core banking activities not covered elsewhere on the LLM (ie, on courses about the financing activities of banks and the regulation of banking activities). In particular, we look at the deposit-taking relationship, and the legal issues surrounding bank payment services. The course aims to be both domestic and international in perspective, though the emphasis will be on English law. Topics include: 1. The deposit-taking relationship; 2. Money, transfers of money and payment; 3. Bank payment methods: funds transfers; 4. Third party claims and liabilities of banks as payment service providers; and 5. Bank payment services in international trade.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to submit one essay, which may be written in exam conditions.

Indicative reading: For introductory purposes, students are referred to Ellinger, Lomnicka and Hare, Ellinger's Modern Banking Law (5th ed, 2011), Cranston, Principles of Banking Law (2002). Full reading lists will be distributed during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA400 September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mihail Zervos and Dr Luitgard Veraart

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to review some key concepts of finance and probability and to discuss a range of mathematical definitions and techniques that set the agenda for the Financial Mathematics MSc as a whole. Also, this course will incorporate an introduction to programming with C++. This course is composed of two components: The first component is concerned with the common mathematical background that is assumed by the MSc Financial Mathematics and addresses some aspects of the mathematical theory that is central to the foundations of the programme: a review of sets and set operations, functions and inverse functions is first developed; probability spaces, random variables, distributions, expectations and moment generating functions are then discussed; special emphasis is placed on the binomial, the normal and the log-normal distributions; the concepts of conditional probability and conditional expectation as random variables are introduced using intuitive arguments and simple examples; stochastic processes, martingales, the standard Brownian motion and the Poisson process are introduced; Itô's formula and Girsanov's theorem are discussed on a formal basis. The second component is an introduction to programming with languages such as C++.

Teaching: 40 lectures and classes over two weeks during September, prior to the start of the academic year, and 3 support lectures in MT. There will be an informal examination (this is for the maths component only).

Formative coursework: Exercises are assigned and form the basis of class discussion.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided for the mathematics component of this module. For the programming elements of the pre-session, we will use Derek Capper, Introducing C++ for Scientists, Engineers and Mathematicians, Springer 2001. For those with prior programming experience, a standard reference book on the C++ programming language is Bjarne Stroustrup, The C++ Programming Language, Addison Wesley, 1997.

Assessment:

This course does not form part of the degree award.

MA402 Half Unit Game Theory I

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bernhard Von Stengel COL 4.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

It is not available to students who have taken Game Theory (MA300) or Game Theory I (MA301).

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) and Mathematical Methods (MA100).

Course content: The course examines the theory of games and its applications in economics: Game trees with perfect information, NIM, combinatorial games. Backward induction. Extensive and strategic (normal) form of a game. Nash equilibrium. Commitment. Zero sum games, mixed strategies. Maxmin strategies. Nash equilibria in mixed strategies. Finding mixed-strategy equilibria for two-person games. Extensive games with information sets, behaviour strategies, perfect recall. If time permits: The Nash bargaining solution. Multistage bargaining.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises are set and marked.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. Supplementary reading: K Binmore, Playing for Real: Game Theory CUP, 2007; E Mendelson, Introducing Game Theory and Its Applications

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA407 Half Unit Algorithms and Computation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Julia Boettcher

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is compulsory for students on the MSc Applicable Mathematics who are not taking MA421 Advanced Algorithms; it is optional for students on the MSc Applicable Mathematics who take the advanced course.

Pre-requisites: Good general knowledge of mathematics, including familiarity with abstract concepts. A willingness to cope with technical details of computer usage, and with a rapid introduction to programming.

Course content: Introduction to programming in Java. Introduction to the theory of algorithms: running time and correctness of an algorithm. Recursion. Data structures: arrays, linked lists, stacks, queues, binary search trees. Sorting algorithms. Greedy algorithms. Dynamic programming.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 20 hours of seminars, 9 hours of workshops and 9 hours of help sessions in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises are set and marked. Many of these will require implementation of programming exercises in Java.

Indicative reading: T H Cormen, C E Leiserson, R L Rivest and C Stein, Introduction to Algorithms; R Sedgewick, K Wayne, Introduction to programming in Java; D Flanagan, Java in a Nutshell.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours and 30 minutes) in the main exam period. Project (25%) in the MT.

MA408 Half Unit Discrete Mathematics and Graph Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Allen

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should be taking the course MA407 Algorithms and Computation or have taken an equivalent course to provide a basic knowledge of algorithms, and should have experience with proofs and proof techniques used in pure mathematics.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to discrete mathematics, particularly graph theory. Emphasis will be placed on the algorithmic aspects of the area.

Topics to be covered include: Brief Introduction to discrete mathematics and graph theoretic terminology; Ramsey's Theorem; matchings and Hall's Theorem; graph search algorithms; minimum spanning trees; stable marriages and the Gale-Shapley Theorem; network flows and the Ford-Fulkerson Theorem; connectivity and Menger's Theorems; graph colouring and Brooks' Theorem; spectral graph theory and random walks.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 10 exercises in the MT.

Weekly exercises are set and marked.

Indicative reading: Norman L. Biggs, Discrete Mathematics, Oxford University Press; T H Cormen, C E Leiserson & R Rivest and C Stein, Introduction to Algorithms, Cambridge University Press; R Diestel, Graph Theory, Springer; H S Wilf, Algorithms and Complexity, Prentice Hall.

Several of these texts are available online. More information, plus additional notes, will be provided during the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (25%) in the LT.

MA409 Half Unit Continuous Time Optimisation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Adam Ostoja-Ostaszewski

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Course content: This is a course in optimisation theory using the methods of the Calculus of Variations. No specific knowledge of functional analysis will be assumed and the emphasis will be on examples. It introduces key methods of continuous time optimisation in a deterministic context, and later under uncertainty. Calculus of variations and the Euler-Lagrange Equations. Sufficiency conditions. Pontryagin Maximum Principle. Extremal controls. Transversality conditions. Linear time-invariant state equations. Bang-bang control and switching functions. Singular control. Dynamical programming. Control under uncertainty. Itô's Lemma. Hamilton-Jacobi-Bellman equation. Verification lemma. Applications to Economics and Finance: Economic Growth models, Consumption and investment, Optimal Abandonment. If time allows: Black-Scholes model.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures and 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: A full set of lecture notes will be provided. Reference will be made to the following books: E R Pinch, Optimal Control and the Calculus of Variations, Oxford Science Publications; G Leitmann, Calculus of Variations and Optimal Control, Plenum; A K Dixit & R S Pindyck, Investment under Uncertainty, Princeton University Press; D Duffie, Security Markets, Academic Press; D J Bell & D H Jacobsen, Singular Optimal Control, Academic Press; J L Troutman, Variational Calculus and Optimal Control, Springer; W H Fleming & R W Rishel, Deterministic and Stochastic Optimal Control, Springer; W H Fleming; H M Soner Controlled Markov Processes & Viscosity Solutions, Springer; G Hadley; M C Kemp, Variational Methods in Economics, North Holland; D Burghes; A Graham Control and Optimal Control Theories with Applications, Horwood.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA410 Half Unit Information Communication and Cryptography

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Norman Biggs

Dr Andrew Lewis will be responsible for MA410. Please remove Norman Biggs' details.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Algorithms and Computation (MA407).

Students should be taking the course MA407 Algorithms and Computation or have taken an equivalent course to provide a basic knowledge of algorithms, and should have experience with proofs and proof techniques used in pure mathematics.

Course content: This course provides an introduction, for students with a mathematical background, to the applications of mathematics in information theory, coding theory, cryptography, and related areas. The course will cover mathematical aspects of the following topics: Noiseless coding, the Kraft-McMillan criterion, optimal coding, entropy, Shannon's first theorem; Noisy channels, capacity, system entropy; Error-correcting codes, decoding rules, bounds, construction and properties of linear and cyclic codes; Structure of natural languages, redundancy, the frequency table, making and breaking cryptosystems, historic examples; Public-key cryptography, complexity issues, the RSA system, authentication schemes, the ElGamal system, elliptic curve cryptography.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: N L Biggs, Codes, An Introduction to Information, Communication and Cryptography; G A Jones & J M Jones, Information and Coding Theory; C M Goldie & R G E Pinch, Communication Theory; D J A Welsh, Codes and Cryptography; D T Stinson, Cryptography Theory and Practice.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the MT.

MA411 Half Unit Probability and Measure

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arne Lokka

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some background in pure mathematics is essential.

Course content: The purposes of this course are (a) to explain the formal basis of abstract probability theory, and the justification for basic results in the theory, and (b) to explore those aspects of the theory most used in advanced analytical models in economics and finance. The approach taken will be formal. Probability spaces and probability measures. Random variables. Expectation and integration. Convergence of random variables. Conditional expectation. The Radon-Nikodym Theorem. Martingales. Stochastic processes. Brownian motion. The Itô integral.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful: J S Rosenthal, A First Look at Rigorous Probability Theory; G R Grimmett & D R Stirzaker, Probability and Random Processes; D Williams, Probability with Martingales; M Caplinski & E Kopp, Measure, Integral and Probability; J Jacod & P Protter, Probability Essentials.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA412 Half Unit Functional Analysis and its Applications

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Simon

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Course content: This course aims at familiarizing the student with the basic concepts, principles and methods of functional analysis and its applications. The topics covered are: normed and Banach spaces, continuous linear transformations, inner product and Hilbert spaces, compact operators, applications to differential equations, numerical analysis, optimization, and approximation theory with illustrative examples.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Jean-Pierre Aubin, Applied Functional Analysis, Wiley, 2000; A.V. Balakrishnan, Applied Functional Analysis, Springer, 1981; Erwin Kreyszig, Introductory Functional Analysis with Applications, John Wiley, 1989; Nicholas Young, An Introduction to Hilbert Space, Cambridge University Press, 1988.

Assessment: Exam (90%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (10%) in the MT.

MA413 Half Unit Games of Incomplete Information

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Simon COL 4.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have taken MA402 (Game Theory I) or an equivalent course in game theory. A background in algebra, topology, or probability theory would be desirable. Some degree of mathematical maturity is expected.

Course content: The techniques and results of game theory are increasingly important to economic analysis. This course focuses on the problems of information incompleteness and information asymmetry. This is a relatively new but rapidly expanding area of game theory with connections to several areas of economic theory, for example conflict resolution, auctions, principal-agent problems, and the logic of knowledge. The course is divided into three parts, I Basic Results, II Repeated Games, III Bayesian Games. For the first part we cover the Min-max Theorem and Nash's Theorem of Equilibrium Existence, Extensive Form and Discounted Games. For the second part we cover Zero-sum Games with Vector Payoffs, The Value of the Zero-sum Repeated Game of Incomplete Information on One Side, Non-Zero-Sum Games with Incomplete Information on One Side, Incomplete Information on Two Sides, and Variations of Repeated Games of Incomplete Information. For the third part we cover Common Knowledge, Belief Spaces, Zero-Sum Bayesian Games, Locally Finite Games, Non-Zero-Sum Bayesian Games, Ergodic Theory and Ergodic Games, and Open Problems of Bayesian Games. In order to understand the third part, some functional analysis and measure theory are included in the course. This includes the difference between Lebesgue and conventional integration and the difference between strong and weak topologies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises are set and marked.

Indicative reading: A full set of lecture notes will be provided. Useful accompanying texts are Robert J. Aumann and Michael B. Maschler, Repeated Games with Incomplete Information, MIT Press, 1995; L. Breiman, Probability; K. Border, Fixed Point Theorems with Applications to Economics and Game Theory; R Myerson, Game Theory, Analysis of Conflict, Harvard University Press; D Fudenberg & J Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA414 Half Unit Stochastic Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arne Lokka

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: ST409 or MA411.

Course content: This course is concerned with a rigorous introduction to the area of stochastic analysis with emphasis on Itô calculus. The course begins necessary preliminaries, followed by a construction of the standard Brownian motion and a study of its properties. Subsequently, Lévy's characterisation of Brownian motion, martingale representation theorems and Girsanov's theorem are established. The course then expands on a study of stochastic differential equations.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful: I Karatzas and S E Shreve, Brownian Motion and Stochastic Calculus, Springer; B Øksendal, Stochastic Differential Equations: An Introduction with Applications, Springer; D Revuz and M Yor, Continuous Martingales and Brownian Motion, Springer; L C G Rogers and D Williams, Diffusions, Markov Processes, and Martingales, Cambridge.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA415 Half Unit The Mathematics of the Black and Scholes Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arne Lokka and Prof Mihail Zervos

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics) (MA400).

Course content: This course is concerned with a mathematical development of the risk-neutral valuation theory. In the context of the binomial tree model for a risky asset, the course introduces the concepts of replication and martingale probability measures. The mathematics of the Black & Scholes methodology follow; in particular, the expression of European contingent claims as expectations with respect to the risk-neutral probability measure of the corresponding discounted payoffs, pricing formulae for European put and call options, and the Black & Scholes PDE are derived. A class of exotic options is then considered. In particular, pricing formulas for lookback and barrier options are derived using PDE techniques as well as the reflection property of the standard Brownian motion. The course also introduces a model for foreign exchange markets and various foreign exchange options.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: N H Bingham and R Kiesel, Risk-Neutral Valuation, Springer; T Björk, Arbitrage Theory in Continuous Time, Oxford; P J Hunt and J Kennedy, Financial Derivatives in Theory and Practice, Wiley; D Lamberton and J Kennedy, Introduction to Stochastic Calculus Applied to Finance, Chapman & Hall; D. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA416 Half Unit The Foundations of Interest Rate and Credit Risk Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pavel Gapeev

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed The Mathematics of the Black and Scholes Theory (MA415).

Course content: This course is concerned with the mathematical foundations of interest rate and credit risk theory. The course starts with a development of the multi-dimensional Black & Scholes theory with stochastic market data. This is then used to show how discount bond dynamics modelling can be approached by (a) the modelling of the short-rate process and the market price of risk, which underlies the family of short-rate models, or (b) the modelling of the market price of risk and the discount bond volatility structure, which gives rise to the Heath-Jarrow-Morton (HJM) framework. The course then expands on the theory of interest rate market models and credit risk.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures and 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: T R Bielecki and M Rutkowski, Credit Risk Modeling, Valuation and Hedging, Springer; J James and N Webber, Interest Rate Modelling, Wiley; A J McNeil, R Frey, and P Embrechts, Quantitative Risk Management: Concepts, Techniques, and Tools, Princeton University Press; M Musiela and M Rutkowski, Martingale Methods in Financial Engineering, Springer; R Rebonato, Modern Pricing of Interest-rate Derivatives: The LIBOR Market Model and Beyond, Princeton.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA417 Half Unit Computational Methods in Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luitgard Veraart

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available on the MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics) (MA400).

Course content: The purpose of this course is to (a) develop the students' computational skills, and (b) introduce a range of numerical techniques of importance to financial engineering. The course starts with the implementation of binomial and trinomial trees. Random number generation, the fundamentals of Monte Carlo simulation and a number of related issues follow. Numerical solutions to stochastic differential equations and their implementation are considered. The course then addresses finite-difference schemes for the solution of partial differential equations arising in finance.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures and 12 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 4 hours of seminars and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises and practicals are set and form the basis of the seminars.

MA418 Half Unit Preferences, Optimal Portfolio Choice, and Equilibrium

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Albina Danilova

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Financial Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409), Probability and Measure (MA411) and The Mathematics of the Black and Scholes Theory (MA415).

Course content: This course is concerned with the theory of optimal investment and consumption. The course starts with the derivation of utility functions from the axioms of an agent's preferences. Utility functions are then used as a measure of portfolio performance in a financial market. Optimal investment and consumption strategies are obtained for various utility functions in both complete and some types of incomplete markets. Equilibrium and asset price formation are considered in the context of complete and informationally incomplete markets

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: R.A.Dana and M.Jeanblanc, Financial Markets in Continuous Time; Springer; I.D.Duffie, Dynamic Asset Pricing, Princeton University Press; I.Karatzas and S.E.Shreve, Methods of Mathematical Finance, Springer.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA419 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Search Games

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In Search Theory, a mobile Searcher tries to minimize the time T taken to find something, which we call the Hider, in a known search space Q . The Hider may be stationary or mobile. In the zero sum game context (first half of the course), the Hider does not want to be found, or at least wants to maximize T . In the second half of the course we consider the Rendezvous Search Problem, in which the Hider also wants to minimize T . In both contexts the search space Q will often be taken as a finite network. In Search Theory, a unit-speed Searcher wishes to minimize the time T required to find (meet) a lost object or agent hidden in a known search region Q . This course concentrates on cases where the lost object is an agent who has motives of his own. The course content will be based on both Search Games (zero-sum games where a T -minimizing Searcher seeks a T -maximizing Hider) and Rendezvous Games (common-interest games where two lost searchers want to minimize T). The first part of the course will consider Search Games. We begin with the case where the Hider is immobile - he picks his position in Q at the start of the game. We solve this game for the case where Q is a tree or a 'weakly Eulerian' network, assuming the Searcher starts in a location known to the Hider; then we remove this restriction. We then study Search Games where the Hider is mobile, the so-called 'Princess and Monster' games of R. Isaacs. Several special games are then studied, for example where the Searcher makes guesses and is given directional information about the Hider's location ('high-low search'), and the case of an unknown search region (maze). The second part of the course studies the Rendezvous Search Problem. We begin with the player-asymmetric form of the problem, where the two Searchers may meet before the game to decide what strategy each will adopt. We then consider the player-symmetric form, where the Searchers are constrained to follow a common mixed strategy. Finally, we consider the incomplete information problem where a Searcher seeks an agent who might be a Hider (T -maximizer) or another Searcher (T -minimizer).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: An assignment is set each week and marked by the tutor with feedback. Problem areas will be discussed in class.

MA420 Half Unit Quantifying Risk and Modelling Alternative Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pavel Gapeev

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: This course is concerned with various issues arising in the context of investment risk specification as well as with the mathematical theory of so-called alternative markets, such as commodity and energy markets. In particular, the course considers the structural credit risk models and the quantification of risk by means of copulas and risk measures. Also, the course expands on the modeling of alternative markets and addresses the problem of valuation of investments in real assets.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two sets of written homework will be marked with feedback provided.

Dissertation in Mathematics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jozef Skokan

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The Dissertation in Mathematics is an individual, substantial project as an introduction to mathematical research methods. The student will investigate and study an area of mathematical research or application of advanced mathematical techniques, and to write a report on their findings. The project may include some programming. The dissertation topic will normally be proposed by the Department.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Assessment is based entirely on the report, three hard copies and one electronic copy which must be submitted by 1st September 2014. (The report may include some software relating to the project.) Detailed information about the required format for this submission will be provided during the Seminars.

Indicative reading: Detailed suggestions for reading will be provided by the supervisor.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%) in the ST.

MC401 Half Unit

Mediated Resistance and Citizens

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bart Cammaerts STC. S213

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to examine the various ways in which citizens, activists and social movements use, appropriate and consume media and technologies to resist, but also how resistance is represented and mediated, by citizens themselves, by the mainstream media and through movement media. The course will address several aspects of the intricate relationship between media and communication, resistance and activism. The course is organised around the core-concept of the 'mediation opportunity structure' referring to the opportunities for agency through media and communication, as well as the structural constraints preventing agency and stifling dissent. Both ICTs and more traditional media are considered and a dialectical perspective on power and the relationship between agency and structure is adopted with a particular emphasis on strategies of resistance. The different lectures will focus on various aspects of the mediation opportunity structure - mainstream-media representation, self-mediation, counter-hegemony, networked opportunities - using examples from various regions in the world. Some case-studies will be situated at a local level of analysis, others at a national, while again others might relate to regional contexts or even transnational levels of governance.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advanced reading, prepare seminar presentations and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC402 Half Unit

The Audience in Media and Communications

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pollyanna Ruiz STC. S214

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Politics and Communication and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines a variety of social, cultural and psychological issues as they relate to the audiences for television and new media. It analyses people's everyday engagement with media, beginning with the history of audiences and audience research, then examining audiences for a variety of genres, before addressing transformations in audiences and audience research with the advent of new media, especially hybrid, globalised, cross-media genres and user-generated content. The course frames its critical investigation of empirical audience studies in relation to theories of active audiences, interpretative communities, encoding-decoding and fandom, among others. Students will be encouraged to read widely, to forge links with other aspects of media, communications and cultural studies, and to debate the nature and future of audiences in a changing media landscape.

Teaching: 13 hours of lectures and 7 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC403 Half Unit Contemporary Issues in Media and Communications Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Damian Tambini STC. S119e

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines live issues in broadcasting, press and telecommunications policy with a focus on current debates. The aim will be to develop a practical approach to current debates at the same time referring to the longer term normative and theoretical background to intervention in this sector. After the first session, discussion will focus on a current issue each week, and the reading contains items relating to that issue. There may be some changes to the order of the sessions depending on availability of high profile guest speakers, and supplementary readings may be advised during seminars or by email. Students will be encouraged to debate current policy issues including those the regulators and the government are currently consulting on, and develop a critical understanding of policy intervention, the policy process and strategy.

Teaching: Lectures and seminars totalling 30 hours will be held on a weekly basis throughout Lent Term. Lectures and seminars will vary in length, with a combined total of three hours per week, to accommodate group work and various guest speakers. Seminars may be given by different teachers. They will not necessarily deal with the same topics each week, but they all cover the same ground.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advanced reading, prepare seminar presentations and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided for each topic. General works relevant to the course include: Freedman, Des. The Politics of Media Policy. MC404 Half Unit Political Communication

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Anstead STC. S111

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan) and MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance). This course is not available as an outside option.

It is available to other students from the Department of Media and Communications, and to students from the Department of Government, although places are limited.

Course content: The aim of the course is to examine the relationship between the media and political processes. It offers a critical review of key aspects of contemporary theory and research in political communications. It examines a range of interconnected issues concerning the politics/media relationship: media and political influence; political marketing; branding and news management; political reporting; media and public knowledge; the 'crisis' of current civic communications and public diplomacy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC405 Half Unit

Current issues in Media and Communications: Policies for ICTs, Society and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Claire Milne

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Priority will be given to students on other programmes in the Media and Communications department.

Course content: This course will examine communication policies and their relationship with society and development, focusing particularly on the application of information and communication technologies, especially the internet and mobile services. It will draw attention to some issues of critical importance in current ICT policymaking, including the relationship between the ICT sector and other areas of public policy (such as development, governance, the environment and rights) and the relationships among technology, market development and regulation. The course will draw on case studies and the lecturers' practitioner experience in communications development and deployment in Europe, Africa and Asia. Course objectives are: to examine the relationship between ICT policy and wider public policy domains; to explore the development and regulation of communications in industrial and developing countries; to understand current experience and the application of policy development and research methods in these areas; and to illustrate these issues, using case studies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one formative essay of 1,500 words which differs from the topic addressed by the summative essay.

MC407 Half Unit

International Media and The Global South

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shakuntala Banaji STC. S103

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course challenges students to raise questions about the power and role of international media - including media originating in the global south - in shaping global discourses about development, citizens and the global south. Building on empirical examples, the lectures aim to demonstrate that the reporting and discussion of poverty, disasters, underdevelopment and development by international media organizations has implications, not only for the way the global south and its diverse populations are imagined and represented, but also for the arena of international and national policy and politics. From different theoretical perspectives, the course critically investigates key questions concerning the role of international, national and NGO media in development, including the failure of the dominant modernization paradigm to 'pass away'. The course offers insight into how to approach the study of media constructions, discourses and representations of, and about, the global south and its citizens. The objectives are to: (a) Introduce debates about how media power shapes international development discourses and political realities for citizens in the global south; (b) Link dominant development theories to the paradigms of mediated NGO development interventions; (c) Provide a postcolonial critique of the study of representations of poverty, development, participation and the global south; (d) Critically assess aspects of the political economy of international media production within the contexts in which both local media groups and NGOs research, package and produce information about international development, especially in and about the global south and (e) Investigate whether and in what ways new and mobile technologies, and small and participatory media formats enable alternative voices and critical frameworks from the global south to be heard. The course is organized into three sections: 1) a historical and theoretical overview of international media, development and the global south locating the debate(s) around development and communication within postcolonial and other critical frameworks, 2) Critical perspectives, drawn selectively from studies of development theory, political economy and cultural studies and pertaining to identity, ideology, representation, regulatory frameworks, good governance and democracy and 3) Cases and practices in reporting development, poverty, inequality and humanitarian issues. Cross-cutting themes will include a consideration of gender, NGO communications, ethnic and social conflict, tourism campaigns, social media and ICTs in the context of international media and change in the global south.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

MC408 Half Unit Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications I (Key concepts and interdisciplinary approaches)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shani Orgad STC. S110

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course addresses key theoretical and conceptual issues in the study of media and communications, within a broadly interdisciplinary social science perspective. It grounds the analysis of media and communications phenomena within broader sociological and political theories of social order and social change, thereby revealing the shifting significance of the media environment for relations among the state, market and public sphere in a globalising knowledge society.

The course is divided into two main sections. The first examines key concepts underpinning the analysis of media and communications phenomena in order to understand processes of power and mediation in contemporary societies. The second explores selected critical perspectives which have proved influential in the field of media and communications. As a team taught course that combines weekly lectures and seminars, its purpose is to expose students to a range of research-led debates at an advanced level, and to enable students to develop their understanding and critical appraisal of the relation between media and power at the levels of institutions, culture and social processes.

The course also includes an invited speaker series ('Media Agenda Talks') which addresses the interface between academic issues taught on the Media and Communications programmes and professional issues facing the media and communications industry. Speakers will normally include a mix of journalists and executives working for UK and global media companies in London. The purpose of the seminar is to provide an opportunity for students to relate the topics and themes addressed within their academic studies to the debates and concerns currently facing practitioners.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

13 hours and 30 minutes of Polis Media Agenda Talks in MT.

MC409 Half Unit Media, Technology and Everyday Life

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leslie Haddon STC.S104

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course aims to explore how information and communication technologies are experienced in everyday life. This includes examining how ICTs are socially shaped, through looking at current theoretical frameworks as well as historical and contemporary examples. The course covers such matters as the domestication of ICTs, their place in social networks and their implications for time and space. Finally, a range of potential social consequences are considered, from the specific implications for parent-child relationships to broader questions about the extent to which these technologies are changing social life.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC413 Half Unit Information, Communication and Knowledge Systems.

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Mansell STC. S107

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to examine how innovation processes influence the development of new information and communication technologies and the information and knowledge systems they support. These processes are introduced, with an emphasis on the social and economic implications of recent changes for Internet service producers and their users. Information and communication technologies are developed and used within a complex innovation system. Students are encouraged to develop critical appraisals of the way this system is contributing to changes that are both empowering and disempowering for people whose lives are mediated by the online environment. The course emphasizes policy issues and conflicts related to the Internet and social media. Particular attention is given to social, political and economic incentives to develop open digital services and to why dominant network and service providers often prefer proprietary services for reasons of security, privacy, or profit.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC416 Half Unit Representation in the Age of Globalisation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shani Orgad STC. S110

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Priority access will be given to students on MSc Global Media and Communications (with Fudan or USC).

Course content: Images and stories circulated in the media play a central role in informing how we imagine the world, others and ourselves. We become increasingly dependent, often exclusively, on what we see, read and hear in the news, on our favourite television drama series, in advertisements, on the radio, and over the Internet. This course focuses on the way media representations are implicated in the exercise of power over how we think and feel through the construction of meaning. It explores the opportunities that media representations present for the creation of a global and interconnected space, which enables the people living in it to conduct their social, cultural, political and economic lives in positive, just and inclusive ways. At the same time, the course discusses some of the critical challenges, limits and threats those visual and textual representations present. The discussion focuses on the representation of the Other and the production of difference, the representation of suffering, migration war and conflict, timely issues whose centrality is ever more vivid. It examines how transformations in the contemporary media landscape, such as the expansion of new media, the increasing commodification and the increasing global scope of communication, shape the ways in which public issues are framed, imaged, and constructed, and what consequences this may have for the moral judgements people make and the actions they take.

Teaching: 11 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

MC418 Half Unit Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications II (Processes of communication in modern life)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Myria Georgiou STC. S119a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media, Communication and Development, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines key concepts and critical perspectives on the processes of communication that underpin social, economic and institutional relations across diverse spheres of modern life. It takes an interdisciplinary and theoretical perspective, comparing the claims and contribution of selected key theories of communication in order to understand and critique the symbolic and material power of communication media. With a substantive focus on the shifts from mass to networked media and from national to globalised communication processes, the course is divided into two parts. First, it offers a selective introduction to key theories in communication. Second, it examines a series of critical perspectives, drawing on current research debates in the field of media and communications and beyond. The course is team taught by active researchers in the field of media and communications and aims to enable students to develop their critical understanding of the communication processes central to the contemporary media and communications environment.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.
1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, prepare seminar presentations, and submit an essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided for each topic. General works relevant to the course include:

MC419 Half Unit Modern Campaigning Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Anstead STC. S111

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Modern campaigning politics. The practice of modern political campaigns based primarily on US and UK politics and elections since 1987. The focus is practical politics. The course is taught by a series of invited guest lecturers who are experts in the field of political campaigning for political parties and NGOs. It will connect with theory taught in the MSc programme's core courses concerning media influence, elections and voting behaviour and public opinion. It will enable students to see how theory is relevant and applied to the practice of modern political campaigns in the context of the changing nature of modern global politics, the politics of disengagement and identity. It will examine core and general concepts in campaigning including political strategy and how it is developed; 'political message', and the shaping of public opinion; and election campaigning and how successful campaigns are planned and implemented. The course will link campaign-relevant theory and practice through recent case histories of illustrative campaigns/political projects.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

MC420 Half Unit Identity, Transnationalism and the Media

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Myria Georgiou STC. S119a

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the relation between identity and the media in the context of diaspora and transnationalism. The course examines meanings of identity at present times, especially as these are formed through experiences of mediated and physical transnational mobility. As migration and symbolic mobility, especially through the media, inform each other it becomes almost impossible to understand identity outside the context of mediation. The course is organised in three main thematic units. The first unit provides the conceptual entry point to the course. The second unit focuses on the modes of transnational communication: television, cinema and the internet. The third unit focuses on the spaces of transnational communication: the city, the nation and the transnational space. Each unit and lecture contributes to the understanding of identity in a world that is increasingly interconnected and networked.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

MC421 Half Unit Critical Approaches to Media, Communication and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shakuntala Banaji STC.S103

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

It is also available to other students from the Department of Media and Communications.

Course content: The content of the course is framed to address the history of and tensions between 'media for development' and 'communication for development', while challenging mainstream perspectives on the role of media and communication in low income countries. It achieves this aim by emphasising the conflictual relationships between economic and political power and the empowerment of individuals, as well as among collective groupings within their local and regional contexts. In particular, it questions the epistemological basis of current approaches to Media, Communication and Development in the context of a historicised account of representations of development both in the West and the Global South. The course offers a critique of the scholarly and policy oriented literature that regards the media, information, and communication strategies and information and communication technology applications, as obvious means of alleviating poverty and fostering democracy as well as human rights in low-income countries. It offers alternative theorisations of the contested way in which developments in these areas become embedded in the cultural and social fabric, especially where poverty and unequal power relations influence the capacities of individuals to make changes in their lives.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

MC422 Half Unit Critical Studies in Media and Journalism

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Damian Tambini STC. S119e and Mr Charles Beckett KGS1.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The news media are instrumental not only in disseminating information but also in shaping the opinions, sensibilities and dispositions of their publics. This course draws on cutting-edge theory and empirical examples in order to enable students to understand the process by which the news media operate as major ethico-political agents in our societies as well as to critically analyse the profound transformations that news journalism is undergoing today, under the pressures of media globalisation and digitalisation. On completion of this course, students should be able to: understand the role of global journalism in society today; critically discuss different theoretical conceptions of journalism as practiced in a wide variety of social and political contexts; compare and contrast the role of journalism in contexts ranging from mainstream to alternative media outlets; evaluate the normative and empirical connections between media journalism, the production of news and ethical considerations; critically assess contemporary debates about the changing nature of journalism and its implications for cultural understanding and democracy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

MC423 Half Unit Global Media Industries

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bingchun Meng STC. S108

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is capped. Priority access is given to those taking MSc Global Media and Communications (with Fudan or USC), thereafter any remaining places are allocated on a first come, first served basis.

Course content: This course aims to present a critical view of theories, research and practices of media industries in the context of globalization. The central theme of the course is how media industries have been transformed by the recent political economic, cultural and technological changes on a global scale and how such transformation impact the content circulating across media platforms. Topics of interest include: new ways of organizing media production and distribution; digital media as a potential source of both resistance and control; media industries and creative cities; media policy and regulation at the global level. We will not only discuss key issues of media industries such as convergence, commodification, creative labour etc., but will also utilize different approaches such as political economy, cultural studies and ethnography to analyze cases of media production.

Course objectives:

This course aims to help you:

- Understand different approaches to the study of media industries
- Examine the transformation of media industries in the context of globalization
- Critically analyse the relationship between institutional arrangements of media industries and the content being produced and disseminated
- Critically evaluate global regulatory attempts to establish a new communication order and the dynamics of alternative media

Topics are structured as follows:

- Media production and distribution in a globalised era
- The many lives of media commodities
- Creative labour in media industries
- Convergence: Top-down and bottom-up
- Policy and regulation
- Political economy of film industry
- The neoliberal theatre of Reality TV
- Media industries and creative cities
- Ethnography of news production
- Summary and reflection

MC424 Half Unit Media and Communication Governance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Damian Tambini STC.S119e

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance). This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Should the internet be governed? How should law and policy on the press and the media be reformed in the light of technological change. This course lays the foundation to enable students to approach these and related questions in an informed, authoritative way. Communication governance includes all attempts by public bodies to fund, license or otherwise regulate or govern communication services or the providers of those services, usually for an alleged public benefit. The process of governance includes public policy debate and discussion and the processes of self-regulation and legal regulation. The term 'governance' refers to the norms, rules and resources together with their theoretical underpinnings that inform the production and consumption of media and communication services. The course covers the key concepts required to gain an understanding of the processes through which public authorities, corporations and the public are involved in setting rules, building institutions and providing public resources for the provision of media and communication services. This course begins from the assumption that media and communication can only be fully understood if their governance and its implications for citizens and consumers as well as producers, is understood. Illustrations are drawn from UK, European and international developments, thereby presenting a multi-levelled analytical approach to governance issues in the field. The first half of the course maps key elements of communication governance including key concepts and institutions. The second half of the course examines contemporary issues and debates in communication governance.

MC425 Half Unit Interpersonal Mediated Communication

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ellen Helsper STC.119c

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Communication media have been blamed for a breakdown of social relationships and have simultaneously been hailed as powerful social tools that can connect people from all walks of life. This course addresses the ways in which interpersonal relationships and communication are influenced by mediation. The first half of the course addresses the history of media in interpersonal communication as well as general interpersonal communication and relationship theories. The second half looks in more detail at how the interaction between media and interpersonal communication has been studied in relation to the cross-cutting themes of privacy/trust, isolation/socialisation and multi-modality. The aim of this course is to provide students with a critical understanding of communication within small groups and dyadic relationships. The course examines the influence of media on three key fields of interpersonal interaction which are identified as personal, social and professional communication. The examination of these key areas is framed by theories of social norms, media richness, social capital and supplementation/substitution. The central concepts of the course (ie. privacy/trust, isolation/socialisation and multi-modality) reflected upon in these theories, are discussed from the perspective of different disciplinary and methodological paradigms. Application of theory to practitioner and policy examples will give students the tools to understand what the practical implications are of the ways in which these different paradigms suggest that interpersonal communication processes vary depending on the type of platform this communication takes place on as well as the type of relationship that is under investigation. As a result of the course the students will be able to evaluate the weaknesses and strengths of the theories that aim to explain apparently contradictory observations about the practice of interpersonal mediated communication.

MC426 Half Unit Film Theory and World Cinema

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shakuntala Banaji STC. S103

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is designed to enable a consistent, informed and plausible reading of popular film representations, discourses and cultures of consumption in specific geopolitical contexts. Introducing theories from the humanities and the social sciences, lectures offer alternative approaches to theorising sexuality, gender, race, class, religion, national identity, childhood, history and politics in popular commercial films and their interpretation by audiences. The impact of unequal power relations - on how representations are reproduced, spectatorship is theorised and censorship policies are formulated - will be demonstrated and analysed. While the course offers a particular focus on Hindi commercial cinema as an example of World cinema, it refers more widely to examples from other National Cinemas such as those of China, Korea, Australia, Mexico and Iran. A key learning method is the extensive interrogation of audiovisual materials. To this end, there will be five film screenings alongside the lectures and seminars. Additionally, films referred to on the course will be made available through the library or can be downloaded and watched from popular film sites on the internet.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to complete advance reading, present in seminar discussions, attend 5 film screenings and submit one essay of 1,500 words.

MC427 Half Unit Digital Media Futures

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alison Powell STC. S119b

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an historical, theoretical and methodological basis through which to assess the social and cultural transformations related to digital media infrastructures and related social practices. It focuses on the materiality and affordances of new media, as well as on the social transformations that have co-evolved, including open source media production practices and peer to peer organizing practices. It critiques and questions the assumptions about the transformation of social and cultural life but also attempts to help students develop conceptual strategies beyond critique. A central focus of the course will be the claims made about the implication for collaborative work and culture of the qualities of digital data, considered through topics including but not limited to: peer to peer and open source cultural movements, the political economy and ecology of digital media, the politics of algorithms, remembering and forgetting, as well as the shift towards 'data as media' and its implications for media publics and media power. Students will be invited to consider the broader contexts of all of these media futures, including those related to policy and governance.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a 1,500 word formative essay based on a case study. They will also receive formative feedback on class participation and on participation in creating a shared, online 'Encyclopedia of Media Futures' modelled on Wikipedia.

MC428 Half Unit Media Culture and Neoliberalism in the Global South

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johanna Willems S119D

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers a comparative perspective on changing national media cultures in the global South in the context of the neoliberal turn. The course not only considers neoliberalism as a crucial factor that has brought media industries such as private broadcasting stations and mobile phone companies into existence but also examines the extent to which these new forms of media have played a role in reproducing neoliberalism as a process. The course aims to offer an understanding of how shifting economic policy regimes have impacted on the way in which people engage with media and how media engage with people in the global South. The first part of the course introduces the key concepts of 'media culture', 'neoliberalism' and 'global South' which will be deployed throughout the course. The second part of the course discusses how key processes of social change in the global South are linked to changing media cultures, including the commodification of national imaginaries, informality, crime and the rising middle class, religion and the prosperity gospel, self-help media and the neoliberal subject, and mobility and social relations. The course examines these themes through a series of empirically-grounded, mostly ethnographic case studies that include radio and sport in Chile, tourism in the Caribbean, popular video in Nigeria, reality television in India, crime and media in South Africa and India, Pentecostal media in Ghana, mobile phones in China and the Philippines, and therapeutic television in South Africa. The course encourages students to critically evaluate the extent to which the three key concepts in the course are helpful in gaining an understanding of changing media cultures in the global South.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will complete a formative 1,500 word essay based on a case study, usually submitted in LT6.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

MC499

Dissertation: Media and Communications

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alison Powell S119b

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of media and communications following the guidelines provided in the MSc Dissertation Guide and the instructions by the School's staff members. The dissertation is usually a combination of theoretical enquiry and original empirical enquiry concerning an issue in the field of media and communications. On rare occasions it is based on a theoretical interrogation. Students are encouraged to select a topic that reflects the content of their MSc programme. In all cases, students must obtain the approval of their supervisors before embarking on any research. The dissertation must be word-processed. It should be not less than 10,000 words and not more than 12,000 words in length.

Teaching: MC499.1

(i) Dissertation symposiums: a two-hour symposium will be held towards the end of LT for all students and another will be held in ST.

MC499.2

(ii) Dissertation workshops: each supervisor holds three two-hour workshops for their supervisees: (i) early in LT, after supervisors have been allocated; (ii) towards the end of LT; (iii) week 7 or 8 of ST.

(iii) Dissertation tutorials: ad hoc sessions for each student and their supervisor that can be organised during term-time during feedback and consultation hours.

MCLabs

Non-compulsory MCLab sessions, taught by Graduate Teaching Assistants.

MC499.3

(i) Lectures:

Two x 2-hour lectures in LT5 and LT7.

MC499.4

(ii) Workshops:

Three x 1.5-hour workshops in MT2, MT5 and MT9.

Three x 1.5-hour workshops in LT2, LT5 and LT9.

Places in these workshops are limited, students must attend all sessions in order to keep their place.

Students are required to submit Ethics Checklists and Dissertation Plans to their supervisor in LT and ST.

Indicative reading: There are no formal reading lists, but students are encouraged to consult handbooks on how to write dissertations. In addition, students are advised to consult dissertations submitted in previous years for style and formatting purposes and to make sure that they are not replicating previous work.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 12000 words).

Two hard copies of the dissertation must be submitted on the last Friday of August. Students on the MSc Global Media and Communications are required to submit their dissertations by 15 August or the Friday before that if 15 August falls on the weekend. Students are also required to upload their dissertation file(s) to Moodle by the same deadline.

MC4M1 Half Unit

Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pollyanna Ruiz (STC.S214) - Michaelmas Term

Dr Ellen Helsper (STC.S119c) - Lent and Summer Term

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Politics and Communication. This course is available on the MSc in Gender, Media and Culture. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aims of the course are to provide students with a general training in research methods and techniques, including research design, the collection, analysis and interpretation of data, and to enable students to evaluate critically their own research and that of professional researchers.

The course has three components:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: a series of lectures offered by media and communications staff in MT. The lectures will normally cover the following topics central to research design across the social sciences, with a specific emphasis on their application to media and communications contexts: the general nature of research as social inquiry, interviewing, critical discourse analysis, content analysis, visual analysis, survey design/questionnaires, case studies, ethnography and participant observation, as well as research ethics.

ii. Principles of Social Research: a series of ten three-hour workshops (each comprised of two 1.5-hour sessions) offered by media and communications staff in the LT. Students are required to participate in two of the workshops.

iii. Quantitative Analysis: Students have to take the following course offered by the Methodology Department: MY451M Introduction to Quantitative Analysis. Please note that this statistics course is compulsory and automatically included when you register for the standard MC4M1 course. (Students may be permitted to substitute a more advanced Quantitative Analysis course offered by the Methodology Department in place of MY451, with the approval of the MC4M1 course convenor and subject to timetabling constraints.)

Teaching: i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: Lecture (one hour) x 10 MT; Lecture on Writing Methodological Critiques (one hour) x 1 LT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: Workshop (three hours) x 2 LT (each comprised of two separate 1.5 hour sessions).

iii. Quantitative Analysis MY451: Lecture (two hours) x 9 MT; Computer class (one hour) x 9 MT.

Formative coursework: i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit one essay of 1,500 words in week 9 of MT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit workshop assignments.

iii. Quantitative Analysis: Most statistics courses require weekly assignments

In Lent Term students will be provided with examples of journal articles in which the discussed research methods are applied.

Assessment:

1. Coursework: One written assignment of not more than 3,000 words, relating to the combination of Principles of Research in Media and Communications and Principles of Social Research to be submitted in ST (80%).
2. A two-hour examination in the ST relating to Quantitative Analysis (MY451M) (20%).

MG401 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Operations Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Steinberg NAB3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Management Science (Operational Research), MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped. Students on the waiting list will be selected based on their suitability for the course based on their academic background.

Course content: The course covers eight topics: (1) Process Flow Analysis, (2) The Toyota Production System, (3) Inventory Management, (4) Assembly Line Balancing, (5) Project Management, (6) Quality Management for Services, (7) Forecasting, and (8)

Scheduling. The course is structured in three parts. Part I is called 'Cases', and is based around a set of 5 readings: three Harvard Business School cases and two articles. Part II is called 'Techniques'. Part III is called 'The Goal', which takes place during the final 2-hour session, and consists of an in-depth discussion of the book, The Goal, by E.M. Goldratt and J. Cox.

Teaching: 16 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will have six assignments throughout the term covering the material in the course, and will be expected to work as a group on each assignment. The problems comprising each assignment will be discussed in the classes, and each student will be individually responsible for answering all the problems for each assignment.

Indicative reading: (1) Case: 'National cranberry cooperative (abridged)'

(2) Case: 'Toshiba: Ome works'

(3) Case: 'Toyota Motor Manufacturing, U.S.A., Inc.'

(4) Article: 'Controlling variation in health care: a consultation from Walter Shewhart'

Pricing Strategy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Om Narasimhan NAB5.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The content of the course is organised into two principal modules: (1) pricing strategy and fundamentals and (2) pricing tactics and implementation. The first module of the course covers the fundamental analytical tools, theories, and conceptual frameworks needed for price strategy formulation. Basic principles from marketing, economics, and psychology will be briefly reviewed and extended. The module provides an in-depth treatment of the role of price in the firm's value proposition to the customer and the determination of customer response to price. The second module of the course covers pricing tactics and opportunities for achieving price customisation. Our focus shifts from setting the overall price level to making customer-specific or segment-specific pricing decisions. Topics include price promotions, reference prices, price customisation and bundling.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study and 1 other piece of coursework in the LT.

1 Case Analysis (to be done in pairs) 1 Practice Exam (to be done individually)

Consumer Behaviour: Behavioural Fundamentals for Marketing and Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Heather Kappes NAB5.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: For many companies, non-profit organisations, and political figures, success relies on understanding the "consumers." What is it that they really want, and why? What information will they attend to, and what will they ignore? How do they make decisions, why do they sometimes make bad ones, and how can we help them make better ones? It can be tempting to answer these questions intuitively, based on your own experiences as a consumer. However, intuitions about human psychology are often wrong. The aim of this course is to enable students to identify the major theories of consumer behaviour, and to apply these theories to understand behaviour at all stages of the consumer experience. Topics include

- Chronic and temporary sources of customer needs, desires, and motivations

- How customers search for information, acquire, and process information
- How customers allocate attention and how to attract it
- Customer decision-making processes, and the heuristics and biases that play a role
- The formation of attitudes and intentions, and processes for persuasively changing them
- Social influences on intentions and behaviour, including unconscious determinants
- Why intentions are or are not translated into behaviour, and what strategies can be used to narrow the intention-behaviour gap.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative feedback will be provided on two selected short (500 words max) writing assignments that address components of the Insight Brief and oral presentation assignments. At least one of these assignments will be submitted via the Moodle Forum, and feedback provided there, so that all students can benefit from the feedback each one receives. Students will individually complete a mock exam and will mark each other's exams in class with the help of the instructor to help them prepare for the final exam.

Indicative reading: Consumer Behavior, 6th edition. Hoyer, MacInnis, & Pieters. South-Western Cengage Learning, 2010; Consumer Behavior: How Humans Think, Feel and Act in the Marketplace. Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Management Science (Operational Research), MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance and MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to the fascinating field of behavioural decision science. We will explore a selection of current research topics relevant to personal and managerial decision making as well as policy-making. For each topic students will gain an understanding of central behavioural concepts through lectures. Students will read pre-assigned scientific articles and in class discuss lessons learned, limitations and implications of these concepts for the development of decision making competence (e.g. via design of policies, training programmes, or tools). Content will vary depending on the status of the field. Topics for 2010/2011 provisionally include: Origin of Behavioural Decision Science; the Building Blocks; : Preferences, Utility and Value; Probability, Uncertainty and Risk; Choice Architecture and Nudges; Emotions in Decision Making; Decisions about Money; Decisions about Health; Decisions about Things (consumers and choice tyranny); Decisions about People.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 6 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 800 word written report.

Indicative reading: All teaching and reading material will be available electronically via Moodle.

For a general background, the following books are recommended: Baron, J. (2000), Thinking and Deciding (3rd edition), Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; Beach and Connolly (2005), The Psychology of Decision Making: People in Organizations, (2nd Edition), Sage; R Hastie & R M Dawes (2001), Rational Choice in an Uncertain World, Sage; Plous, S. (1993), The Psychology of Judgment and Decision Making, New York: McGraw Hill.

Assessment: Project (30%, 800 words) in the MT.

Essay (70%, 5000 words) in the LT.

The course is examined during the year as follows: one 800 word written report (30%) and one essay of about 5,000 words (70%).

MG411 Firms and Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sutton and Prof Luis Garicano

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Economics. This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A graduate course in microeconomic analysis, geared towards those parts of the subject that are of primary importance in the Management area. The first section focuses on competition between firms, using standard game theoretic models. This leads to a general treatment of market competition by reference to the concept of firms' capabilities. The next section traces the basis of firms' capabilities to the set of elements of know-how possessed by the individuals comprising the firm, and by the mode of internal organization of those individuals. The analysis draws on the several strands in the modern literature on the theory of the firm. The final section of the course deals with the link between strategy and structure, and with the formulation of strategies in environments characterized by complexity and uncertainty.

The course syllabus covers Walrasian Equilibrium: Supply and Demand. Beyond the Walrasian model: Nash Equilibrium.

Applications of Nash Equilibrium: options and bargaining. General approaches to the analysis of competition in oligopolistic markets. Applications in Industrial Organisations. The concept of capabilities. The roots of firms' capabilities : individuals and their collective know-how. The internal organization of firms. Contract theoretic approaches to the theory of the firm. The Chandlerian nexus: from strategy to structure.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

A weekly seminar devoted to problem sets. A weekly seminar devoted to case studies.

Indicative reading: Milgrom and Roberts, Economics, Organization and Management; Sutton, Sunk Costs and Market Structure

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG412 Half Unit Globalization and Strategy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Sutton

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management and Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course studies the strategies of multinational corporations in their international context, including among others make or buy, organization, and location choices. It studies current developments in the global economy with a focus on the key decisions that multinationals make in their global strategy:

- 1 Economic analysis of globalization process. Assessing the growth of Chinese and Indian manufacturing, 1990-2010. Evidence from benchmarking studies.
- 2 Production: What determines the strategies multinationals adopt - product range; generic strategies.
- 3 Location: Competitive advantage of different countries; growth in outsourcing and Offshoring; particularly emphasizing India and China and analyzing their increasing role in the global economy.
- 4 Organization: how multinationals combine the necessary local adaptation with the need to standardize to achieve synergies.
- 5 The Globalization Debate.
- 6 The Prospects for sub-Saharan Africa.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to make two class presentations and submit written reports on selected case studies

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG414

Public Management and Governance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Barzelay

The course is team taught, with contributions from the the Department of Accounting and the Law Department.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Employment Relations & Org Behaviour and MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is organised into three modules: (1) Developing the knowledge, methods, and skills to plan improvements in organisational field situations, (2) Using systematically developed accounting information outcomes for purposes of managerial control and governance, and (3) Developing and assessing the quality of program delivery and administrative decision-making from the standpoint of governmental self-restraint and the rule of law more generally. The main corresponding disciplinary perspectives are management, accounting, and law. The first module is contained within Michaelmas Term, whereas Lent Term is divided between the other two modules.

The Michaelmas Term module presents three frameworks for understanding organisational field situations in relation to their contexts, keyed to organisational characteristics, programme management and delivery activities, and planned organisational and programme change, respectively. The frameworks offer knowledge and methods for explaining the outcomes of organisational activity, programme implementation, and change initiatives. In addition to explaining outcomes, these frameworks are used to develop approaches and skills whose favours the design and realisation of improvements in organisational field situations involving public programmes and organisations.

The first of the two Lent Term modules examines the evolution and use of systematically developed information about the behaviour of programmes and organisations for monitoring, decision-making, and governance purposes. The module explores financial management and organisational control concepts through recent developments in accounting literature and offers an introduction to methods, tools and techniques aimed at enhancing performance, managerial oversight and accountability in the public sector. A final module examines the structuring and controlled use of public authority by legal officials in administrative settings, such as government agencies and regulatory bodies. Central issues include (a) how to fulfil the generic requirement that governmental entities receive well-formed legal mandates with clear legal objectives and (b) how to anticipate expectations that public authority will be exercised in fair and otherwise appropriate ways.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Michaelmas Term: one formative essay, and regular individual or group exercises.

Lent Term: two formative assignments.

Policy Analysis, Evaluation and Implementation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Mara Airolidi NAB5.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Employment Relations & Org Behaviour and MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course focuses on how analysis needs to take account of, and be designed to relate to, the processes through which policies are made. It gives an introduction to economic concepts and leading intellectual arguments of the 20th Century: e.g., the nature of science, critiques of positivism; the nature of power; efficiency, equity and justice; and market and government failure. Case studies of failures and successes are used to illustrate these concepts. The first term focuses on concepts and cases relevant to understanding economic appraisal and evaluation (including cost-benefit analysis and cost-effectiveness analysis and multi-criteria decision analysis); the second term focuses on reform of systems of delivering public services focusing on health care and education (including contracting out, quasi-markets and performance measurement).

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 14 hours of lectures and 16 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One individual essay of 2,500 words on economic evaluation to be produced early in Lent Term as preparation for the summative assessment.

Indicative reading: The course text is MC Munger, Analyzing Policy, Norton, 2000. Background is provided by D M Hausman & M S McPherson, Economic Analysis and Moral Philosophy, Cambridge University Press, 1996 & 2006; W Parsons, Public Policy: An Introduction to the Theory and Practice of Policy Analysis, Edward Elgar Publishing 1997; H Varian, Intermediate Microeconomics, Sixth edition, Norton & Company, 2003; M Parkin, M Powell, K Matthews, Economics (3rd Edition). This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Various (depending on project title chosen)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a research project attached to one or more of the compulsory courses (MG426 Organisations in the Economy and Society, MG427 Analysis and Design of Organisational Practices (H) and MG428 Enterprise Development (H) taken as part of the programme.

Teaching: Students will be allocated a supervisor, based on the project chosen, who will provide supervision of this piece of work.

Assessment: Project (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term. Project report of no more than 6,000 words to be submitted by the 29th August 2014.

MG417 Half Unit Extended Essay

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Various (depending on title chosen).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake an extended essay which should normally be based on one of the two option courses taken. Students can, with special permission, base this piece of work on one of the compulsory courses.

Teaching: A supervisor will be allocated to individual students based on the essay title chosen who will provide students with supervision for this piece of work.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words) in the ST. Extended essay of no more than 6,000 words to be submitted by 9th May 2014.

MG418 Half Unit Open Innovation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Harry Barkema NAB4.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Week 1: The broader context: Open Innovation as part of Business Model Innovation

Week 2: The broader context II: Open Innovation as part of Business Model Innovation

Week 3: Open Innovation: Tools, Theory and Practice

Week 4: Open Innovation: Networked Innovation

Week 5: Implementing Business Model Innovation including Open Innovation

Week 6: Workshop on methodology and design

Week 7: Workshop on methodology and design

Week 8: Workshop on methodology and design

Week 9: Dress rehearsal (presentations)

Week 10: Final presentation

Innovation - in products, processes, and business models - is one of the most important topics for companies today and will likely be even more important in the future. This course focuses on an important trend: Open Innovation, i.e., strategies to tap new product ideas, technologies, and so on, from outside the company. For instance, using technology acquisitions, alliances, client-supplier relationships, crowd sourcing, open corporate campus, innovation ecosystems. The first part of this course reviews the recent literature. The second part focuses on group projects where students apply their insights to a "live" case in a real company. Each group analyzes their case, and makes recommendations for an improved Open innovation strategy. The group's analysis and recommendations are presented on the last day of the course.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Ten 3-hour lecture/seminars in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students will synthesize, critically analyze and present their views in class on relevant literature fields such as related to technology acquisitions, alliances, client-supplier relationships, crowd sourcing, open corporate campus, innovation ecosystems.

Feedback will be provided in seminars ahead of the submission of their assessed project.

Student teams will work closely with Innovation Partners to conduct research and apply theoretical concepts in the field.

MG419 Public Management - Strategy, Innovation and Delivery

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Meredith Rolfe NAB5.18

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course develops the practical knowledge and analytical skill to make sense of field problems faced by public managers, and to design and implement strategic and effective practical action in the public sector. In Michaelmas Term, the course focuses on making sense of the fuzzy problem-messes faced by public managers, and introduces students to the graphical and theoretical tools used to represent and reverse engineer the dynamic social systems involved. In Lent Term, the course focuses on the strategic design, evaluation and implementation of various organisational activities, such as policy interventions, managerial control systems, and strategic planning. Overall, the course provides a foundation for further coursework about management in the public sector as well as the ability to engage constructively and critically in the development of public management practise.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: MH Moore, Creating Public Value: Strategic Management in Government (1995). KE Weick, 'The Collapse of Sense-Making in Organizations: The Mann-Gulch Disaster' (1993). Assessment: Essay (30%, 3000 words) and presentation (15%) in the LT.

Essay (40%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Presentation (15%) in the MT.

MG420 Half Unit Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Brittany Jones

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Dissertations are based on a research question which students are required to agree with the teacher responsible during MT in year two. Students are encouraged, but not required, to relate their research questions and dissertations to the business projects carried out as part of MG489. Research questions may be investigated by: (a) Framing the question via a literature review and examining the problem in more detail through a small scale empirical research project, using either primary or secondary data sources; OR (b) Carrying out an extended literature review to provide a rigorous analysis of existing research investigating the problem.

Teaching: 3 hours of lectures in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write a short research proposal (maximum of 1,000 words), to be submitted as set out in the policies of their degree programme, with their proposed research question.

Indicative reading: Partington, D. (2002) Essential Skills for Management Research. London: Sage Publications. Other readings will be provided during lectures in MT and by dissertation supervisors.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term.

MG421 Half Unit The Future of the Multinational Firm

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB4.32 and Ms Christine Cote

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: An undergraduate or graduate course in micro-economics. Pre-requisites to be assessed by teacher responsible.

Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. It will combine the development of conceptual frameworks primarily through the lectures with the analysis of key cases in the classes. There will also be some external speakers from large international firms and from the banking and consulting community to bring contemporary views and arguments to bear.

Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused to developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The "new institutional economics" has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies' performance. This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concept such as the resource based view. We will provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economics and working with a large variety of datasets and sources. The course will then turn to key topics. These will include the determinants of FDI; the effects of FDI on the host economy; entry mode choices; measures of institutional and cultural distance; and the growing importance of multinationals from emerging markets.

Students will work with case material as well as the required reading, and the group project will comprise a case write up, which will be presented prior to submission in class for comment and discussion.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write a 1,000 word essay and will be provided with feedback. They will also be required to present their group project in class.

Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. Ghenawat, Redefining Global Strategy, Harvard Business School Press, 2007; J. Khanna and K Palepu, "The Future of Business Groups in Emerging Markets", Academy of Management Journal 2004.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period. Essay (25%, 1000 words) in the ST.

Project (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

MG422 Half Unit Thinking Strategically

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ignacio Palacios-Huerta NAB5.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of basic algebra is necessary to take this course.

Course content: This course is concerned with strategic thinking. The course is an interaction of game theory, economics and business strategic management. The focus is the study of situations in which two or more decision-makers (e.g., individuals, firms, political parties, etc) interact in a strategic manner. Understanding strategic situations that involve conflict and/or cooperation has proven critical in many areas of economics, business, political science, sports, law and other areas. The emphasis is to provide the fundamental thinking of good strategic making in these situations, rather than a mathematical and formal analysis.

The purpose of this course is threefold: (1) first, to introduce relevant tools of game theory in order to capture the key elements of different strategic situations and determine the most likely outcome in each situation; (2) second, to study various real-life applications and case-studies where thinking strategically has proven critical; (3) third, to cover modern developments in behavioural game theory, in particular in the areas of intertemporal choices and strategies, decision-making under risk and uncertainty, and experiments in strategic interaction.

Students should note that this course will involve weekly calculations and numerical reasoning.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will hand in 5-8 written assignments throughout the course, and feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Thinking Strategically: Competitive Edge in Business, Politics and Everyday Life, WW Norton, 1993, by Avinash Dixit and Barry Nalebuff. The Art of Strategy, WW Norton, 2008, by Avinash Dixit and Barry Nalebuff. Games of Strategy, (WW Norton, 3rd edition, 2009) by Avinash Dixit, Susan Skeath and David Reiley. Set of academic articles and/or case studies, plus lecture notes written by instructor. Set of articles from the media.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG423 Half Unit Leading Entrepreneurial Organisations in Global Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fei Qin NAB4.31

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Management Science (Operational Research), MSc in Management and Human Resources, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation, MSc in Organisational Behaviour and MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on the entrepreneurial management in the context of globalisation. It discusses theories and current research on the creation and development of entrepreneurial organisations. It introduces useful conceptual models and analytical tools for devising entrepreneurial strategies. Important aspects of entrepreneurship, such as the characteristics of entrepreneurial leaders, the dynamics of venture capital industry, networks and innovation, and business model design, will also be reviewed in the course. The classes will use readings or cases to explore these matters in depth.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Class presentations and one business plan project which forms part of the summative group project.

Indicative reading: Schumpeter, Joseph A., 1988, Essays in Entrepreneurs, Innovations, Business Cycles, and the Evolution of Capitalism (R. Teacher responsible: Dr Alexander Pepper NAB4.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Management and MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This core course will introduce students to the economic and social context in which managers and their organisations operate. Managers have a special role within organisations by virtue of their ability to structure the way the organisation is designed and work is organised, to position their organisations in a changing economic and social landscape, and to develop organisational capabilities to profit from new opportunities. Our teaching encourages students to address questions such as:

- Why do firms exist and what are the boundaries of the firm?
- Why does exchange sometimes occur through markets and sometimes through firms?
- Do markets emerge or are they created by firms?
- What role do networks play in markets and organisations?
- Does ownership matter?
- What is meant by 'corporate governance' and why is it important?
- Is the global economy converging to one form of capitalism, or does capitalism come in many forms?

The course draws on theory and evidence from a range of social sciences, including economics, economic sociology and organisational theory. It makes particular use of historical and international evidence. Lectures and classes are arranged under seven headings:

- Exchange
- Firms
- Industry structure
- Networks
- How the firm can shape its external environment
- Governance
- Varieties of capitalism

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to make oral presentations in class, and be expected to write one non-assessed essay during the MT.

MG427 Half Unit Innovation in Organisations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lourdes Sosa and Dr Yally Avrahampour

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Strategic Importance of Innovation in Organisations; Innovation in Social Science Theory; Creativity in Organisations; Corporate Entrepreneurship; Open Innovation; Real Options and Assessing Innovation Projects; Measuring and Incentivising Innovation; and Ambidexterity in Organisations. This half-unit course will develop students' abilities to analyse, design and evaluate innovative initiatives in organisations. Managers are viewed as agents of creative efforts to manage innovation in the interest of enhancing organisational performance over the long run. Knowledge and skill for this purpose is developed by studying the development and operation of well-theorised practices for delivering enhanced value through organisational innovation and entrepreneurship.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Anderson and Tushman (1990) Technological discontinuities and dominant designs: A cyclical model of technological change; Burgelman and Grove (2007) Let chaos reign, then rein in chaos - repeatedly: managing strategic dynamics

MG428 Half Unit Enterprise Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nathalie Mitev

Dr Linda Hickman

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will be introduced to basic business concepts (marketing, strategy, human resource management and finance) in the second half of Michaelmas term. These will form the basis for the enterprise projects which the students will develop in Lent term and Summer term.

In Lent term students will follow the development of an organisation from founder and idea generation through growth and change. This course will address problems and issues that must be resolved in order for start-up organisations to survive. It will provide an opportunity for students to use other course materials for application and decision-making when designing, maintaining and growing organisations. Through application, the students will be able to critically assess management practices and disciplines and evaluate their potential and limitations in developing organisations. The foundation idea of the course is to have the students start or adopt an organisation and work through its development through the course, addressing the challenges of a growing enterprise through the eyes of different disciplines and bodies of knowledge. The focus on the specific organization and its development should drive the student research material for the course.

The course will start with an evaluation of leadership roles and skills, followed by idea generation, group development, market evaluation, organisational design, resource issues, performance evaluation and growth.

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of lectures in the ST.

There will be 5 one-and-a half hour lectures in the second half of MT; 8 one-and-a half hour lectures, 7 one one-and-a-half hour group project seminars in the LT and a one day session in ST.

MG430 Half Unit Strategy, Organisation and Innovation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Luis Garicano

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

MSc Management students only. Other students wishing to audit the course are welcome, with permission of the Teacher Responsible.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Managerial Economics (MG431), Foundations of Management I (MG458), Foundations of Management 2 (MG459) and Organisational Behaviour (MG434).

Exemptions by permission of the Teacher Responsible.

Course content: This course applies tools from microeconomics, industrial organisation and organisational economics to the analysis of strategy. The emphasis is on the application of these concepts to business situations, and as such the course relies heavily on the analysis of case studies.

The course is divided in three parts. The first part focuses on the external context of strategy. It first reviews the basic tools to understand industry economics and the determinants of industry-wide profitability and focuses on positional aspects. It then introduces basic game theory to analyse competitive interactions when the number of players is small and the industry profitability is largely determined by the interactions between these players. This tool is used to analyse issues such as bargaining power, price competition and entry and exit decisions.

The second part studies technology and innovation. The main issues discussed will be standard setting and network effects, innovation and disruption.

The third and last part of the course focuses on the internal context of strategy and organisation, and discusses issues such as the scope of the corporation, outsourcing, and the role of corporate headquarters in adding value and capturing synergies.

The course is heavily based on case discussions. For each class meeting, study questions will be assigned concerning a case study. We will discuss these questions and the material in the case during the class discussions. Students will need to be prepared for those discussions, by reading the case and analysing it in view of the assignment question and the preparation questions below in the syllabus. Required cases and supplementary readings are in the course packet.

Students are expected to read all of the assigned material before class discussions. Specifically, the textbook, together with the lectures, contains the concepts necessary to analyse the case, and the class will take place under the assumption that students have carefully read the textbooks.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare for classes and actively participate in case discussions. Students will receive feedback on their class participation. They will also be given the opportunity to answer and receive feedback on a mock exam question.

Indicative reading: A primary text will be: Saloner, Garth, Andrea Shepard, and Joel M. Podolny. Strategic Management. New York, NY: John Wiley, 2001. A full reading list will be distributed at the start of the course. A primary text will be: Saloner, Garth, Andrea Shepard, and Joel M. Podolny. Strategic Management. New York, NY: John Wiley, 2001. A package with the cases and additional readings will be distributed as well.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Class participation (20%) in the LT.

Two-hour examination in the Summer Term (80%) and class participation submitted and assessed weekly via micro-essays (web logs) (20%) .

MG431 Half Unit Managerial Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Luis Rayo NAB5.20.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A graduate-level introduction to the foundations of managerial economics. Topics include: 1. Economics as a theory of organisation. 2. Economic Agents: Rationality and the co-ordination powers of the market (Demand and supply and equilibrium: the determinants of consumers' and firms' market responses and the nature of non-strategic interaction). 3. Strategic interaction and dynamic competition 4. Uncertainty: behaviour and markets (the economic foundations of financial markets) 5. Information and efficiency.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Students will be grouped into two streams. Both streams will cover the same content but will be taught separately. Each stream will have 1x3 hour lecture per week in the Michaelmas Term. Multiple review sessions will be offered throughout the term. Attendance is full optional.

Formative coursework: A problem set will be assigned on week 5 and is due on week 7. It will be marked for feedback purposes only.

Indicative reading: Main textbooks: S. Estrin et al, Microeconomics, Prentice Hall, 2008. Students can also consider D M Kreps, Microeconomics for Managers, W. W. Norton (2004); T van Zandt; Firms, Price and Markets, available online (2006). Saul Estrin et al., Microeconomics, Prentice Hall, 2008. B. Douglas Bernheim and Michael D. Whiston, Microeconomics, McGraw Hill, 2008. Reading lists will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG434 Half Unit Organisational Behaviour

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tara Reich NAB4.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course seeks to understand individual attitudes and behaviour in an organizational context. It does this by reviewing psychological theories as they apply to organisations, demonstrating the contribution of a psychological perspective to understanding human behaviour at work, and critically evaluating the empirical evidence. The course attempts to strike a balance between theory and practice by applying the theories to practical problems in organizations.

Topics covered include personality and individual differences, work motivation, decision making, rewards systems, psychological contracts, organizational justice, performance and counter-performance (organizational citizenship and retaliatory behaviour), leadership, groups and group processes, design of work, organizational culture and creativity.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST. The teaching is highly participative and includes lectures and seminars. Group work in seminars is an integral part of the course and students are expected to actively contribute to all group exercises. The course is demanding of students and its success depends partly upon student commitment and willingness to participate fully.

Indicative reading: The course relies heavily on journal articles (for example, Academy of Management Journal, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour). An extensive reading list is provided at the start of the course. No suitable textbook exists but students may wish to consult one of the following: R Steers, L Porter, G Bigley (2003) Motivation and Work Behaviour, McGraw-Hill; D Nelson and J Campbell Quick (2006) Organizational Behaviour: Foundations, Reality and Challenges (5th edition) Thomson South-Western; J. Greenberg (2003) Organizational Behaviour: The State of the Science (2nd edition) Lawrence Erlbaum Associates; J Barling and C. Cooper (2008) The Handbook of Organizational Behaviour, Sage.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG436 Half Unit Firms, Markets and Crises

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Willman NAB4.18 and Dr Daniel Beunza NAB4.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Any social science background

Course content: This course focuses on the financial sector and financial markets. It discusses current research in the social sciences on how this sector has emerged and operates, and sheds some light on the recent financial crisis. A constant theme is that academic research helps us explain major phenomena in current business and organizational life. In each lecture and class, faculty will discuss a major aspect of or issue in the financial sector internationally, and show how relevant research can help us understand it. The classes will use readings or cases to explore these matters in depth.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Davis, G.F. (2009) Managed by the Markets: How Finance Reshaped America, Oxford University Press.

MG437 Half Unit Business Model Innovation at the 'Base of the Pyramid'

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Harry Barkema

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Management, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance and MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students are required to submit a 500 word statement explaining their motivation to take MG437, and a CV detailing their education or experience related to countries in abject poverty. Either the student will have worked in these countries with NGOs, social enterprises or charities; or studied courses related to development poverty or business models.

The statement and CV should be submitted via the normal application system on LSE for You.

Course content: This is a timely and innovative topic for study. Over the past four decades, the developed world has transferred around $2 trillion in aid to emerging economies. However the impact, in terms of a positive permanent transformation, has been limited. NGOs have focused on a variety of needs, but despite enormous achievements in many places around the world only a small fraction of these needs have been served. More recently, an interest has been created around new business models that are economically sustainable. Some popular writings have even argued and presented anecdotes suggesting that "a fortune" can be made at the Base of the Pyramid. Despite significant effort there have been only a few successful ventures of multinational corporations (MNCs) at the BOP in only a few industries (in e.g., food, cell phones) and little evidence of NGOs and social entrepreneurs taking economically sustainable business models to scale. The course will include guest speakers from industry and will encourage students to assess the evidence to date and to think critically about the process of business model innovation at the base of the pyramid. The course will assess the evidence to date and will encourage students to think critically about the process of business model innovation at the base of the pyramid. It will monitor progress by MNCs and entrepreneurs as new business models are developed and delivered.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One 800 word essay. Students choose one example of business model innovation at the base of the pyramid from those posted on Moodle by course members, or choose your own. Use theory underlying and developed in this course to explain how the business model innovation may support the relevant organization's goals.

MG445 Half Unit Marketing Strategy (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB5.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is a rigorous examination of the key analytical frameworks and tools that are essential to building an effective marketing strategy. Peter Drucker, the father of business consulting once remarked, Because the purpose of business is to create a customer, the business enterprise has two--and only two--basic functions: marketing and innovation. In today's highly competitive environment these words ring even more true: a well-designed marketing strategy can make all the difference between success and failure in the marketplace. Participants with little or no previous experience of the discipline are introduced to the subject at a strategic level with some emphasis on the operational elements. One of its important aims is to emphasize the range of social science disciplines that are relevant if marketing is to be properly understood. Accordingly, this course will combine LSEs premier standing in the social sciences with cutting-edge management practices by using a wide range of quantitative as well as qualitative methods, interactive lectures, videos, hands-on exercises, and case studies. Also, emphasis is placed on the use of global marketing case studies to develop participants skills at analyzing and making sense of complex real world business situations. These cases are drawn from various industries and countries, giving the participant exposure to a wide variety of internationally orientated marketing issues. Thus, the aim of the course is to develop an analytical tool-kit that is applicable to a wide range of industries and functions.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 20 hours of lectures in the ST. Scheduled over two modules – one of which will take place overseas. Teaching will be spread across 10 sessions of up to 4 hours each.

Formative coursework: Feedback on class participation.

Indicative reading: Kotler and Kellers (2009) Marketing Management (13th Edition, PrenticeHall). Further references will be provided at the commencement of the course.

Assessment: Essay (25%, 2000 words).

Class participation (15%) in the LT and ST.

Take home exam (60%) in the ST.

MG446 Half Unit Strategy, Organisation and Innovation (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Foundations of Management (modular) (MG441), Managerial Economics (modular) (MG440) and Organisational Behaviour (modular) (MG443).

Course content: As a capstone course for the Executive Global MSc Management, MG446 explores advanced topics in Strategy, Organisation and Innovation. True to the LSE, we will adopt an interdisciplinary social sciences point of view that embraces economics, political science, sociology, anthropology and psychology, and builds on the core courses of MG441 (Foundations of Management), MG440 (Managerial Economics) and MG443 (Organisational Behaviour). This course therefore focuses as much on integration and synthesis, as on differentiation and analysis. Throughout the modules, we will explore, critique and develop theoretical frameworks which seek to understand, explain and predict firm performance via the analysis of empirical data in case studies. In the process we aim to contribute to fundamental academic debates on organization-environment interactions, managerial adaptation-inertia dilemmas, and competition-cooperation problems. Leveraging a unique vision of the Department of Management, we will adopt a view of management as an emerging Design Science, whereby we will seek to balance rigour with relevance, description with prescription, problems with solutions. We will explore how to architect enterprises to achieve their goals and to how to evolve them through intelligent design. In other courses, you are learning to consume existing management theory (i.e. analyse, critique and use), while in this course we will also learn to produce new management theory (i.e. synthesize, build and test). This is a valuable capability, which will serve as a bridge to your own dissertation research, successful management careers beyond and will enable us to continue to advance the science and art of management theory and practice.

Teaching: Teaching will be scheduled throughout the programme to include (at least) one 4-hour classroom session in each module plus intersession activity.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course. A primary text will be: Saloner, Garth, Andrea Shepard, and Joel M. Podolny. Strategic Management New York, NY: John Wiley, 2001.

Assessment: Essay (50%) and take home exam (50%).

Class participation assessed via micro-essays (web-logs) submitted after each module (50%) and a take-home final examination (50%).

MG447 Half Unit Foreign Direct Investment and Emerging Markets (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB4.32

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused to developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The new institutional economics has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies' performance. This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concept such as the resource based view. We will then provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economics and working with a large variety of datasets and sources. The remainder of the course is devoted to specific topics of MNEs in emerging markets. These include the determinants and impact of FDI; entry mode choices; measures of institutional distance; outsourcing and offshoring; and emerging market multinationals. Outline of Lectures: Lectures 1 and 2: Models and Strategies of the Multi-National Enterprise (MNE) Lectures 3 & 4: Growth and Institutions in Emerging Markets Lecture 5: The Determinants of Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) into Emerging Markets Lecture 6: The Impact of FDI on Emerging Markets - Horizontal Lecture 7: The Impact of FDI on Emerging Markets Vertical Lecture 8: MNEs and Modes of Entry Lecture 9: FDI and Distance Lecture 10: Emerging Market Multinationals Teaching: 32 hours of lectures in the MT. 8 hours of lectures in the LT. Scheduled over three modules, one of which will take place overseas – 10 sessions of up to 4 hours.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. MG450 Half Unit Social Network Analysis and Strategies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniela Lup NAB4.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Organisational Behaviour and MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The main objective of this course is to introduce students to current research in the area of social network analysis and improve their understanding of how an effective network structure looks like. The course focuses on both theoretical and substantive themes within social network analysis. Substantive topics focus on everyday managerial situations and consulting projects such as: managing information and knowledge; managing one's career; managing a team; selecting a business partner; using virtual networks; social media.

In addition, the course aims to familiarize students with methodological issues connected with social network analysis (SNA). To this end, the students will learn to work with UCINET, a software designed for SNA. During the classes, the students will solve concrete managerial and consulting problems using SNA. Examples include (but are not limited to): understanding the social network of a manager, proposing a strategy for implementing organizational change; understanding the power and fallacies of online networks; visualizing power networks in specific industries; marketing applications.

List of topics:

1. SNA: Basic Concepts and Trends
2. Principles of Social Networks
3. Brokerage Networks and Network Roles
4. Solving network problems in Organizations
5. Social Networks and Labor Markets: job search, careers and HR issues
6. Inter-organizational networks
7. Status and Reputation in Networks: Consequences for Individuals and Organizations
8. Entrepreneurship and Market Entry
9. Diffusion of (new) ideas in Markets
10. Summary and group project presentation

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Student will write a 500 words comment to a case, problem or article. Written feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: Burt R. (2005). Brokerage and Closure: An Introduction to Social Capital. OUP. Gladwell, Malcom (2000) The tipping point: How little things can make a big difference. Assessment: Project (35%, 3500 words), class participation (15%) and take home exam (50%) in the LT.

MG452 Half Unit Behavioural Economics for Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kristof Madarasz NAB5.36

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Graduate level Microeconomics, Game Theory or Managerial Economics, Graduate level Econometrics or Quantitative Analysis is required.

Course content: The course covers formal (mathematical) models of behavioural economics and discusses both experimental and field evidence that motivate and test various aspects of these models.

This course is a post-graduate introduction to behavioural economics and strategy. The topics to be discussed are

1. Risk Perceptions, Loss Aversion and Reference-Dependence.
2. Procrastination, Self Control and Choice over Time.
3. Social Motivation: Image, Reciprocity and Inequity.

4. Processing Information and Mistakes in Cognition
5. Naivite and Heuristics in Strategic Thinking
6. Happiness and Welfare

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A mock exam comprising of problem sets.

MG454 Leadership (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emma Soane NAB 4.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Each of the LSE modules will have a dedicated session on Leadership to relate the programme material to your professional and personal development planning, allowing you to examine your personal leadership styles and develop the skills required for successful leadership. Sessions will include completing a self-assessment and producing a Professional Development Plan.

Teaching: Six 3 hour sessions spread out over the five LSE modules.

Formative coursework: This course will not be formally assessed, but there is an optional assignment that will give students an opportunity to reflect upon their leadership development and to receive feedback.

Indicative reading: To be confirmed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: This course is not assessed. Completion of the assignment is optional.

MG455 Half Unit Principles of Decision Sciences

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Barbara Fasolo

Dr Zhifang Ni

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management Science (Operational Research) and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This half unit course examines 'decision capability', that is the ability of people to make judgments and decisions. The course blends research on how individuals and groups actually make decisions with theories on how they should make decisions in order to be consistent. The course encourages students to appreciate the linkages between the mathematical and psychological theories of decision. The course will cover the foundations of decision theory; models and theories describing how people form preferences, make judgments, deal with conflicting objectives, uncertainty, and risk.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: J. Baron, Thinking and Deciding (3rd Ed.); R. Hastie & R. M. Dawes, Rational Choice in an Uncertain World; W. Edwards & D. von Winterfeldt, Decision Analysis and Behavioral Research; R.T. Clemen and T. Reilly, Making Hard Decisions with Decision Tools Suite; S. French, Decision Theory: an introduction to the mathematics of rationality.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG456 Half Unit Advanced Decision Sciences

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gilberto Montibeller NAB 3.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences). This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Decision Sciences (MG455).

Course content: This half unit course extends the concept of 'decision capability', that is the ability of people to make judgments and decisions, and shows how that ability can be enhanced with appropriate modelling and analysis. Based on rigorous concepts of normative, descriptive and prescriptive decision-making research, the course has an emphasis on the practice of decision sciences. It uses illustrations of real-world Decision Analysis applications in organisations, and employs several case-studies (supported by specialised decision software) to build students' skills in decision modelling and analysis. It covers modelling and supporting decisions involving multiple stakeholders and conflicting objectives (multi-criteria evaluation and resource allocation problems) as well as uncertainty (decision trees, influence diagrams, risk analysis and Bayesian belief networks).

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

One three-hour seminar each week in the LT. Seminars are conducted differently each week, and involve a mixture of lectures, discussions, exercises and projects. One revision session in week 1 of ST.

Indicative reading: J. Baron, Thinking and Deciding (3rd Ed.); R. Hastie & R. M. Dawes, Rational Choice in an Uncertain World; W. Edwards & D. von Winterfeldt, Decision Analysis and Behavioral Research; P. Goodman & G. Wright, Decision Analysis for Management Judgment (3rd Ed.); R.T. Clemen and T. Reilly, Making Hard Decisions with Decision Tools Suite. W. Edwards, R.F. Miles, D.v. Winterfeldt (Eds.) Advances in Decision Analysis.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG457

Foundations of Management 2 (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yally Avrahampour NAB 5.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is concerned with examining the relationship between governance and control in organizations. A strong emphasis is placed on the techniques used in assigning values to input into and outcomes of organizational processes. Amongst other issues, we will examine how firms' financial condition is represented to external parties, how values are assigned to determine the magnitude of costs and how performance is measured. Each session will be concerned with investigating real life debates relating to the representation of issues relating to governance and the exercise of control. In common with Foundations 1, we will utilize the different disciplines informing management, that is, primarily economics, psychology and sociology to investigate the debate relating to the use of these techniques and to place these techniques in their historical and organizational context. Through this combination of technical, theoretical and historical perspectives we will systematically examine the complex relationship between governance and control in organizations. Each session will include a lecture introducing the topic and a case providing participants the opportunity to apply concepts relating to the topic.

Teaching: Eight sessions spread out equally over two LSE modules

Formative coursework: These sessions will not be formally assessed, but support the integrated assessments set on other courses.

Indicative reading: To be confirmed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: This course will not be assessed.

MG458 Half Unit

Foundations of Management I

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Brittany Jones NAB 4.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course provides a basic grounding in a number of key management disciplines and will be taught chronologically. Students will therefore be provided with an overview of the development of Management disciplines and will develop an understanding of the disciplinary anchors in Sociology, Psychology and Economics. Each field will cover Origins and disciplinary boundaries, triggers for growth, core concepts and the current state of play and debate. 1. Course Introduction and the Origins of Management; 2. Management and the Firm; 3. Taylorism, Motivation, and Performance; 4. The Rise and Decline of Labour; 5. The Rise of Human Resources Management; 6. Decision Making; 7. Understanding Organisational Structures; 8. The Origins of Modern Strategy; 9. Contemporary Strategic Management: Firms as Bundles of Resources; 10. Managed by Markets?

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Seminars will develop critical thinking and writing skills for postgraduate study. Running concurrently with the syllabus above, these will reinforce key topics and learning points but also focus on the following content:

1. Postgraduate study skills (finding and indexing resources; referencing; advanced group study; learning to be critical; self-reflection)

2. Critical reading

3. Developing a critical analysis of a text

4. Compiling a literature review

5. Self-critical reading and writing; reviewing for others

Formative coursework

Formative coursework will be assigned in seminars.

The project is a 500-word data analysis project with a peer critique component.

MG462 Half Unit Qualitative Analysis in Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos and Dr Katie-Anne Best Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Employment Relations & Org Behaviour and MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

The course is designed for MiM students who are likely to have little or no previous experience of qualitative methodologies.

Course content: This course provides MiM students with a critical understanding of qualitative management research, with an emphasis on methods and techniques which will be useful and relevant to them both as management scholars and in their future careers. A range of methods will be used and critically appraised, including ethnography, discourse analysis, case studies and in depth interviews. The course will cover: research design; data collection; data handling techniques; methods of analysis; constructing a contribution; and authoring a research report. These are methods, skills and techniques which are used both formally and informally in academia, consultancy and the workplace.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: 500 word research proposal in week 6 LT. Classes are based around the critical analysis and practical application of methods and techniques introduced in the lectures and further explored through the readings. Formative feedback is provided during seminars.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (50%, 3500 words) in the LT.

MG482 Half Unit Innovation and Technology Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nathalie Mitev NAB3.27 and Dr Jonathan Liebenau NAB5.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The main focus of this course is on how innovative technologies are managed and their consequences. It includes technological innovation in areas such as telecoms, hi tech industries, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, space technology, nuclear technologies. Aspects covered are how new industries are created, how existing industries can be transformed by new technologies, linkages between technological development and the creation of wealth, and implementation success and failure of technological systems. Topics include: technology and entrepreneurship, technology strategy, R&D management, patents and intellectual property, disruptive technologies, project escalation, technological disasters. Economic, systems, managerial and sociological approaches will be compared using a variety of case studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles and case studies from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students will present an essay plan in preparation for the final case-based essay, on which formative feedback will be provided.

MG489 Half Unit Professional Development Programme and Business Project

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emma Soane NAB4.02 and Dr Alexander Pepper NAB4.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The Professional Development Programme (PDP) aims to equip students with the skills necessary to secure internships and jobs, optimise their career opportunities and succeed in their careers. The sessions will also provide students with tools and techniques that can be applied to long term career management. Content includes developing your CV; writing application letters; understanding your workplace preferences and working to your strengths; preparing for psychometric assessments and other candidate selection activities; interview preparation; and career-related skills such as networking and giving presentations and making the transition to postgraduate working life. Students apply the skills and knowledge gained from the PDP sessions and first year courses in order to carry out a Business Project for a company in either MT or LT of their 2nd year, culminating in an executive seminar; - a presentation of their findings to the company and to their MIM peer group. At the start of the term groups (normally of 5-6 students) are assigned to a particular company, with a sponsoring executive from the company and a faculty coach from the LSE; The students research a business question posed by the company. The actual topic is for the sponsoring executive to decide and questions are very diverse. Subsequent variations may be proposed by the company and agreed with the student team and faculty coach; The students present their research findings to the company; they will subsequently give a presentation to their peer group at a seminar which is attended by the company sponsor; the sponsor is invited to give a short talk to the students in response to the presentation. Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Professional Development Programme: Sessions run once a week throughout the Michaelmas and Lent Terms of both the first and second years. Sessions are delivered by LSE faculty, advisors from the LSE Careers Service, business professionals and experts in specific areas, for example, selection and assessment. Business Project: Students will work in groups (normally 5 or 6 people). They will be allocated a Faculty Coach who will support and guide them through the full project.

Formative coursework: Students will be asked to apply theory to personal and professional development, such as leadership, communication or effective decision making. Students must refer to the Professional Development Programme syllabus which will provide full assessment information. Students working on their Business Projects in MT will submit their formative course work at the end of week 7 of MT. Students working on their Business Projects in LT will submit their formative course work at the end of week 7 of LT.

Indicative reading: Many of the core areas are covered in the text Cottrell, S. (2005). Skills for Success. The Personal Development Planning Handbook. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan. A reading list is provided at the start of the course.

Assessment: Project (65%) in the MT and LT. Other (35%) in the ST.

- PDP assignment - 35 % of total marks. Students must refer to the Professional Development Programme Syllabus.
- Business Project - 65 % of total marks, assessed on a group basis under three headings: quality of group presentation; quality of research including application of theoretical concepts; quality of outcomes (recommendations and solutions) and other deliverables.

The presentation will be the assessed component of the Business Project. The presentation must include the following sections: an introduction, literature review, methods, results, discussion and recommendations. Students working on their Business Projects in MT will submit their summative Professional Development course work at the end of week 2 of LT. Students working on their Business Projects in LT will submit their summative Professional Development course work at the end of week 2 of ST. Presentations for students working on their business projects in MT will take place during LT. Presentations for students working on their business projects in the LT will take place in the first two weeks of ST. Business projects are assessed on a group basis

MG498 Half Unit Dissertation: Executive Global MSc Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Various

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive Global MSc Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Dissertations will be based on a project which will be undertaken throughout the second year of the degree. This will include conducting industry and company analysis before writing a final report based on issues and opportunities within a business ideally the students own company.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students are required to participate in 20 hours of scheduled seminar sessions which will relate to dissertation topics and will lead to their own individual dissertation project. They will be allocated a faculty advisor who will support and guide them through the full project including virtual support through the online learning platform.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to agree their dissertation topic with a faculty advisor and provide a 1,500 word dissertation plan which they will receive feedback on.

Indicative reading: Relevant reading will be provided by academic advisors.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words).

MG499 Half Unit Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Meredith Rolfe NAB5.18

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Public Management and Governance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Dissertations could be either a 'live' project with an outside organisation or a small research project.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT.

Students will attend a session in the Michaelmas term which will explain the objectives and requirements of the dissertation and outline possible topics. Students are required to choose a topic by the start of Lent term. They will attend lectures on methods in the Lent term Academic supervision will be available in the Lent and Summer terms but not after the end of the Summer term. Students are required to submit their dissertation by the end of August

Formative coursework: Each student will be required present an outline of the subject of his/her dissertation and the proposed argument of the dissertation in a session organised for all students at the end of the Summer Term.

Indicative reading: An excellent guide to the stages of doing a dissertation is given by Wayne C. Booth, Gregory G. Colomb, ; Joseph M. Williams, The Craft of Research (Chicago Guides to Writing, Editing & Publishing). 2nd Edition. 1995, 2003 Series: (CGWEP) Chicago Guides to Writing, Editing, and Publishing.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term.

MG4A1 MSc Management pre-sessional: Quantitative Methods and Mathematics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is divided into two separate subjects: Statistics and Mathematics. The Statistics course covers basic probability and statistics; hypothesis testing; analysis of variance; association, correlation and regression and matrix algebra. The Mathematics course covers the following topics with application reference to economics and business: Linear equations; Algebra and Graphs; Quadratic functions; Indices and Logs; Exponential and natural log; Geometric Series; Derivatives (univariate); Rules of differentiation; Optimisation; Multivariate functions; Unconstrained optimisation; Constraint optimisation; Indefinite integrals; Definite integrals.

Teaching: Statistics: 10 x 1 hour lecture (+tutorial) in the three weeks prior to the Michaelmas Term.

Mathematics: 10 x 2 hour lecture (+tutorial) in the three weeks prior to the Michaelmas Term.

Indicative reading: Statistics: Huff (1991). How to Lie with Statistics. Penguin. Field, A. (2009). Discovering Statistics using SPSS. 3rd edition. Sage: London. Leik, R. K. (1997). Incentives and Governance in Organisations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Catherine Thomas NAB5.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management and MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Note this course may be capped if student numbers become too high.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of Mathematics and Economics.

Course content: The course uses economic theory to gain insight into issues related to internal organisation and management of firms. The course will draw on various disciplines including management science, industrial organisation and microeconomics. The course deals with three main topics: (i) the provision of incentives in organisations, (ii) the use of information in markets and firms, and (iii) the theory of financial decisions. A major theme concerns the question of how to provide incentives efficiently in organisations. Other important themes include efficiency, coordination, incompleteness of contracts and the use of the market versus internal exchange. A section of the course deals with financial theory. The implications of asymmetric information are examined. Corporate governance is discussed in a principal-agent framework.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Main texts: Roberts J (2004), The Modern Firm. Organizational Design for Performance and Growth, Oxford University Press, UK; Brealey, RS, Myers, and F Allen (2006), Corporate Finance, 8th edition (older editions are fine too), McGraw-Hill International Edition (US edition is titled "principles of corporate finance"; older versions by Brealey and Myers only).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

International Marketing: A Strategic Approach

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Amitav Chakravarti NAB5.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Media and Communications and MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is a rigorous examination of the key analytical frameworks, technical tools, and concepts that are essential in building an effective marketing strategy. Participants are introduced to the subject at both strategic and operational levels. This course combines LSE's premier standing in the social sciences with cutting-edge management practices. By using a wide range of quantitative as well as qualitative methods, interactive lectures, videos, hands-on exercises, and case studies, we will share key analytical frameworks and tools that are essential to a good marketing strategy. The aim is to develop a widely applicable analytical tool-kit that relies on: (a) anticipating decisions that managers frequently face, (b) bringing to bear a wide range of fundamental, often competing social science theories to inform these decisions, (c) knowledge about empirical generalizations, and (d) knowledge about moderating conditions. Also, emphasis is placed on the use of marketing case studies to develop participant's skills at analysing and making sense of complex real world business situations

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Alex Chernev (2011), Strategic Marketing Management (6th edition), Cerebellum Press. Philip Kotler and Gary Armstrong (2001), Principles of Marketing (9th edition), Prentice Hall. The Analysis of Strategy A

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David De-Meza

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The objective of the two courses (A and B) is to provide students with a critical appreciation of what it takes to be a strategist - in the real world, both within and between firms. The critical aspect of being a strategist is to anticipate and prepare in advance for the possible reactions of other players (e.g. competitors). These two courses will help students to understand how managers in the real world ought to read situations from a strategic angle. In particular, strategy is viewed from the perspective of economics. Besides applications, attention will also be given to conceptual underpinnings.

The course is an amalgam of game theory, economics, and strategic management. After some preliminary material on measuring corporate performance, students will be introduced to ideas of behaviour in strategic situations. A powerful tool to study these situations is game theory, where the emphasis is on outplaying a competitor who is trying to outplay you. Some three lectures and two seminars will be devoted to developing the basic concepts of game theory including Nash and sub-game-perfect Nash equilibrium. The second part of the course will focus on applying these ideas to issues in competitive industries. The third part of the course introduces the concepts of creating and appropriating value, distinctive capabilities and ways to build and maintain competitive advantage. These issues will be deepened further in the accompanying seminars.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MN416 Half Unit The Analysis of Strategy B

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe NAB5.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed The Analysis of Strategy A (MN415).

Course content: In this course we continue, deepen and extend the analysis of strategy. The success of a firm depends on the decisions it makes, and these decisions have to take the behaviour of competitors into account who themselves try to make optimal decisions. Thus the firm faces a problem of strategic interaction, and game theory takes this interaction consistently into account. This course aims at a strategic understanding of these situations and the decisions firms face. We will study general principles of strategic thinking, the application of these principles to specific problems and general conclusions we can draw in these situations. This part of the course focuses on the strategic aspects of competing against other firms within the same industry. We start by analysing market structure and various dimensions of competition - pricing, capacity choices, research and development and advertising. We will then discuss different aspects of strategic commitment and the commitment aspects of pricing, investment and financing decisions. We then focus on the dynamic aspect of pricing rivalry, in particular collusion and price wars. We will analyse the role of incomplete and changing information in decision-making and the evaluation of 'real options'. We will finally discuss the incentives for innovation and market entry and exit decisions. Our approach will be critical throughout, emphasising both the power and the limits of a game-theoretic approach. We will use simple models to clarify the logic of strategic reasoning, and case studies to emphasise the relationship between the analysis of strategy and managerial decision making.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: There is no fully adequate textbook for this course.

The most important text is D Besanko, D Dranove & M Shanley and S Schaefer, The Economics of Strategy, John Wiley (6th edition, 2012). Among the other sources are:

A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MN425 Half Unit Business in the Global Environment

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veronica Rappoport-Redondo NAB5.29

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in International Management and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Priority will be given in the following order: IMEX students (home and visiting); other students from the MES Group and International Relations; all other LSE students.

Course content: The course looks at the process of globalisation at three levels: industries, firms and nations. Its goal is to develop a solid understanding of the external, economy-wide factors that affect the performance and management of firms in today's global economy. Topics include the changing structure of industries; the response of companies, both those based in the advanced industrial countries and those based in emerging markets, to increasing international competition; and differences between countries in their institutions and policies.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: A seminar presentation on a topic related to the course.

Indicative reading: Useful books for background reading are Robert Feenstra and Alan Taylor, International Economics, Worth Publishers, 2012; Giorgio Barba Navaretti & Anthony J Venables, Multinational Firms in the World Economy, Princeton, 2004; and Andrew Abel, Ben Bernanke and Dean Croushore, Macroeconomics, Addison-Wesley Longman Publishing, 2011. Detailed reading lists will be provided for each of the ten lectures.

Assessment: Essay (40%, 3000 words) and in class assessment (60%) in the MT.

MN426 Half Unit Design and Management of Organisations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available on the MSc in Management and MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we investigate aspects of management and the internal organisation of the firm. We start by discussing management decision making in the light of general heuristics and biases exhibited by individuals and groups and ask how organisations might help to mitigate negative consequences arising from these predispositions. We also shed light on the management of teams and non-monetary aspects of motivation. Other topics include formal and informal structures of organisations, leadership, power, authority, delegation, entrepreneurship, innovation, promotions and careers. We conclude by looking at two intangible assets of organisations: corporate culture and corporate social responsibility. Students are introduced to a set of frameworks which will enable them to critically evaluate contemporary management approaches. The organising principle of much of the content of the course has its origins in economic theory and empirical behavioural observations which are applied to issues and ideas relevant to management. Additionally we draw upon findings from psychology and sociology. The course complements MN404 (Incentives and Governance in Organisations) but can be taken as a stand-alone course. Whereas MN404 focuses on incentive contracts, principal-agent models and topics in finance, this course focuses more on aspects of informal structure.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 8 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 problem sets in the LT.

MN428 Half Unit Evolutionary Psychology and Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Satoshi Kanazawa NAB5.33

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Principles of evolutionary psychology. The nature and limitations of the human brain as an evolved and adapted organ. Evolutionary origins of cognitive biases, and their effects on organisational behaviour. Sex differences in organisational behaviour. The importance of physical attractiveness and general intelligence in organisational behaviour. "Discrimination" in labour market. Evolutionary psychological perspectives on cooperation, reciprocity, altruism, hierarchy, and leadership in modern corporations. Evolutionary origins of organisationally relevant emotions such as envy, spite, and positional bias. This course introduces the evolutionary psychological perspective on business and management. The emerging science of evolutionary psychology sheds entirely new light on, and offers different solutions to, old problems of management, such as glass ceiling, occupational sex segregation, sexual harassment and suboptimal decision making, and points to new potential problems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

MN429 Half Unit The World Trading System

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emanuel Ornelas NAB5.30

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic Knowledge of Mathematics and Economics

Course content: The course studies a key component of the "globalization" process: the negotiation, implementation and implications of international trade agreements (ITAs). These include the World Trade Organisation and the fast-growing web of regional trade agreements. We analyse the challenges and opportunities faced by companies engaged in the global economy in this context. The course relies on recent theoretical and empirical research to gain insight into the motivations for ITAs and their consequences for consumers and firms. Globalisation - trends in the international economy and overview of their causes and effects. The sources of international trade. Trade barriers - restrictions to international trade and their consequences. The economics and politics of international trade agreements. The rules, accomplishments and shortcomings of the GATT/WTO system. Regional trade agreements - motivation, implications, and recent trends. The costs and benefits from exporting for individual firms. Challenges and opportunities for national and multinational firms in the global economy.

MN430 Half Unit Strategy for the Information Economy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe

Dr Thomas Kittsteiner

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of economics.

Course content: The internet has created many new market opportunities. Web-based technology allows for new kinds of market interactions and products. Understanding the design and functioning of these new markets is central for business strategy and success. This course develops the relevant economic principles and applies them to the formulation of strategies for the provision of information goods and the design of online market platforms. The first part of the course is concerned with strategic aspects of the provision of information goods (such as music, software, product reviews, search results). Topics include the pricing of information goods, versioning, rights management, network effects, lock-ins and the discussion of e-commerce institutions and business models. The second part of the course covers the use and design of online-market transaction mechanisms for business-to-consumer and business-to-business e-commerce. Topics include principles of market engineering, design of standard (online-)auction markets and multi-unit auction markets, reputation and collusion in online markets and matching markets. The course provides a theoretical background and relates theory to various examples and case-studies (such as the design of Google's ad-auctions and eBay's feedback mechanism).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two exercise sets with a mixture of qualitative and quantitative questions. These will be marked and students will receive written feedback on them.

MN431 Half Unit Corporate Strategy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jordi Blanes I Vidal NAB5.27

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students will need to have some understanding of microeconomics and knowledge of basic statistical methods would be an advantage

Course content: This course is an introduction to the strategic management of modern diversified firms. It studies how the firm's portfolio of products and its internal organisation can be designed to maximise corporate performance. The course addresses the following questions facing modern managers: what products and activities should the firm focus on? Which tasks should be subcontracted and which should be carried out inside the firm? When should a firm expand geographically? How should the firm be organised internally in order to coordinate and motivate employees, managers and other stakeholders? How should the firm's scope and internal organisation adapt to changes in the environment?

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to undertake the analysis of two Corporate Strategy problems which will be marked and handed back with feedback.

Indicative reading: Corporate Strategy, A Resource-Based Approach, David J. Collis and Cynthia A. Montgomery, Second Edition, McGraw-Hill Irwin, 2005.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yona Rubinstein NAB5.31

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Employment Relations and Human Resource Management, MSc in International Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Human Resources and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students will need to have some understanding of microeconomics and knowledge of basic statistical methods would be an advantage

Course content: Personnel economics applies economic principles to human resources management issues such as recruitment, compensation, promotions, performance evaluation, selection, and training. The course provides a rigorous theoretical framework and the statistical tools needed to analyse human resources policies under varying institutional and competitive environments. It highlights the importance of information and incentives in the modern economy. Issues covered include should pay vary across workers within firms? How are pay and promotions structured across jobs to induce optimal effort from employees? Why do firms use teams and how are they used most effectively? Does CEO pay reflect competitive markets and efficient contracting? How important is discrimination? What makes an entrepreneur? How should human resource management practices be combined within firms?

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

10 x 3 hours of seminars (in Harvard Style teaching) in MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to undertake the analysis of two human resource management problems which will be marked and handed back with feedback.

MN433 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Case Study in Management and Strategy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Sir Geoffrey Owen NAB5.32 and Prof David De-Meza NAB5.23

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The case study component involves an examination of the recent history of a number of major companies, focusing in particular on strategic choices, organisational issues and overall performance. The aim is to use these case studies as a way of illustrating some of the topics dealt with in the MSc Management and Strategy programme. Each of the study groups into which the class is divided will be assigned a company, which will form the subject of its case study. Each group will make a presentation on their company in the Lent Term. Linked to these case studies is a set of talks on strategy and organisation given by outside speakers - executives from the companies and experts in the industries concerned.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures in the MT. 4 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Each case group will have a one-hour introductory session and a 1.5 hour guidance session (MT). There will be 6 x 1.5 hour presentation sessions and each group will have a 1.5 hour feedback session (LT).

Formative coursework: Each study group will meet the teachers responsible for an introductory session, and then a guidance session. Each study group will then provide a draft of their presentation and receive feedback on this draft in a feedback session. Each student will submit an essay (1000 words) as a formative assessment. Before submitting the final essay students will also receive feedback on their group presentation.

MN434 Half Unit Empirical Strategy for Managerial Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Yona Rubinstein NAB5.31

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Management and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course addresses the link between a research question, the nature of the available data, the appropriate statistical and econometric methods and the interpretation of the empirical findings. Using datasets from current research in managerial economics, the course will explain how conceptual ideas are transformed into an empirical research project, and how this project is then implemented. Topics will include: 1. The statistical modelling of research questions; (formulation, reduced forms and structural parameters of interest) 2. Identification in controlled experiments; 3. Identification strategies in observational data: a. cross section: instrumental variables, regression discontinuity design; b. panel data: fixed and random effects models, differences-in-differences c. sample selection: structural models and non-parametric approach

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: One formative essay (review of an empirical paper, 1000 words), one problem set, mock exam.

Indicative reading: Books:

Essay (40%, 1000 words).

MN497 Half Unit Dissertation: MSc Management and Strategy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe NAB5.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation consists of a research project within the subject of management. Students work on this project individually under the guidance of a supervisor. The dissertation should make a contribution towards understanding a topic or question related to management based on original analysis and empirical evidence.

Teaching: There will be two introductory meetings, the first will set out the requirements for the dissertation, the process, caution of plagiarism, etc. The second meeting will allow students to approach staff with preliminary ideas, mainly with a view to set up subsequent one-to-one meetings.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on a preliminary proposal (to be submitted by the end of Michaelmas Term) and will be allocated a dissertation supervisor, under whose guidance they will complete a detailed project proposal by the end of Lent Term. Students work on their dissertation over the summer, with supervision available until the end of the Summer Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term.

MN499 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jorn Rothe NAB5.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation consists of a research project within the subject of management. Students work on this project individually under the guidance of a supervisor. The dissertation should make a contribution towards understanding a topic or question related to management based on original analysis and empirical evidence.

Teaching: Dissertation supervisors are allocated early in the Lent Term and are available for consultation until the end of July. Details about the process of writing the dissertation will be provided in Michaelmas Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

MY400 Half Unit Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Jackson COL.8.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Gender (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Research students please see MY500.

Course content: Research design can be considered as a form of problem oriented practical scholarship. It is one of the key components in the empirical social scientific study of social issues. Design is the means to provide relevant information on a research question in an efficient way that meets the criteria of public accountability, in the sense of openness to public scrutiny. Any research design is characterised by both opportunities and constraints, and the selection of the optimal design is always a trade off between the strengths and weaknesses of different options, viewed in the context of feasibility. Drawing on a variety of examples from the social scientific literature, this course will explore design considerations and options, issues of data quality and analysis, and reporting. The broad aims of the course are to: increase awareness of the role of research design in the social sciences; introduce a range of design options; and foster an appreciation of the strengths and weaknesses of the different options for particular research objectives. At the end of the course, students will be able to bring a more critical reading to the literature and have acquired a basic knowledge of social research design as a contribution to their dissertations.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 7 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: To identify a research question the proposed research project will answer (two pages of A4, by week 5).

Indicative reading: Key texts: Robson, Colin (2011, 3rd edition). Real World

Research. London: John Wiley. D Della Porta ; M Keating, Approaches and Methodologies in the Social Sciences: A Pluralist Perspective (Cambridge, 2008).

Assessment: Research proposal (30%) in the MT.

Research proposal (60%) in the ST.

Class participation (10%).

Provisional Research Design (1500 words), submitted in week 10 MT (30%). Students will receive feedback in LT. Final Outline Research Design (5000 words), submitted in ST (60%).

MY421 Half Unit Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09 and Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Comparative Politics (Research), MSc in Conflict Studies and MSc in Gender (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course presents the fundamentals of qualitative research methods. It prepares students to design, carry out, report, read and evaluate qualitative research projects. Students learn how to collect data using methods including interviewing, focus groups, participant observation, and documentary and historical work. The challenges and opportunities of new media including visual images and Internet research are discussed. We then cover analysis, using thematic, content, discourse, and semiotic analysis. Issues of research design, quality indicators, epistemology and ethics are addressed. The course has the dual aims of equipping students with both conceptual understandings of current academic debates regarding qualitative methods, and the practical skills to put those methods into practice.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the LT.

The course runs twice per year: in MT (MY421M) and again in LT (MY421L).

Formative coursework: All students are required to upload one interview transcript OR one focus group transcript, plus a topic guide and one paragraph of reflections, to Moodle by Week 6 of term. Students will also be required to read and comment on transcripts submitted by others. Feedback will be provided through these discussions and via comments from the seminar leader, and the collected transcripts will provide the material for practising data analysis later in the term.

Assessment: Project (100%, 4500 words) in the LT.

MY426 Half Unit Doing Ethnography

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed CP-MY421 and Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400).

A postgraduate qualitative research methods course, such as MY421, as pre- or co-requisite. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent Course content: Doing ethnography enables us to examine how social order is produced as people go about their everyday interactions. Multiple sources of naturally-occurring data are used to understand how communities, organisations and institutions work, informally as well as formally. Contemporary conditions of globalisation, individualisation, bureaucratisation and digitisation introduce new challenges for such fieldwork. This interdisciplinary course equips students with a practical understanding of how to do, and to think about, contemporary ethnography. Core conceptual, ethical and methodological debates are introduced through in-depth engagement with book-length exemplars, and through students' experience of fieldwork. Fieldwork is a key component of the course, with data collection at a local public institution (interesting sites are chosen each year, e.g. the Occupy encampment at St Paul's, protests around London), followed by data analysis and presentation activities. Methodological concerns regarding case selection, establishing rigour, reflexivity, representing others, and ethical issues are addressed in detail. Practical issues addressed include access to study sites, studying elite and marginalised groups, innovative sources of data, and writing field notes. Emphasising that ethnography relies on the researcher-as-research-instrument, the course aims to develop students' sensitivity and rigour as ethnographic researchers.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: An excerpt of field-notes from the field visit undertaken as part of the course (up to 2,500 words).

Field-notes should record rich details of observations (the data), researcher reflections, and brief interpretations of the significance of these observations. Written feedback will be provided.

MY427 Half Unit Qualitative Research with Non-Traditional Data

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Media and Culture, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to PhD students, please see MY527.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed CP-MY421 and Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis) (MC4M1). Introductory course on qualitative methods (e.g. MY421 or MC4M1) as pre-requisite or co-requisite.

Course content: Most qualitative research is in the form of written or spoken texts, produced through interviews and field notes or collection and analysis of documents. Recently, qualitative researchers have become interested in ways of capturing and documenting other kinds of data and other dimensions of social life, including visual, audio, and other sensory data, space, and time. This course will examine methods for collecting and analysing data which are not primarily textual or linguistic, and how these can be integrated into qualitative research. The course will cover history, memory and longitudinal qualitative research; space and place; research in virtual environments; pre-existing and research-generated images and video; sound and audio data including music; kinaesthetic and movement data; and taste and smell as research data. The aim is to understand how qualitative methods can be applied to these data and how to address traditional methodological concerns such as rigor and representativeness in their analysis and presentation. The course is aimed at students who are considering one or more of these elements as part of their dissertation research design and/or who are interested in gaining advanced qualitative research skills. Seminars will provide practical skills through hands-on exercises in collecting and analysing non-traditional data. These develop skills for a final project of students' choosing which is to be submitted at the beginning of summer term.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Seminar activities will receive in-class feedback. A brief proposal for final summative coursework (c. 1000 words) should be submitted and will receive formative feedback and guidance.

Indicative reading: Note: No one text covers the whole course. Pink, S. (2009) Doing Sensory Ethnography, London: Sage. Bull, M. and Back, L. (eds) (2003) Auditory Culture Reader, London: Berg. Assessment: Project (100%, 4000 words) in the ST. One 4000-4500 word research project related to the course material, on a topic selected by the student (100%).

MY428 Half Unit Qualitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Aude Biquelet COL 7.06

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/Phd in Media and Communications, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is also available to PhD students, please see MY528.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed MY421 and Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400). A postgraduate qualitative research methods course, such as MY421, as pre- or co-requisite. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent Course content: This course covers issues, methods, and applications of qualitative approaches for the analysis of textual data. It introduces techniques and procedures available to researchers to identify and extract information from texts for social scientific purposes. Topics discussed draw on a wide range of analytic traditions such as thematic analysis, content analysis, dialogical analysis and dictionary-based approaches. The aim of this course is to equip participants with the right skills to work within these traditions and select appropriate qualitative methods for analysing textual data according to 1) Research Design 2) Type of data under consideration.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: A project proposal (c.1,000 words). Students write a proposal for the project that will comprise their summative assessment.

MY429 Half Unit Special Topics in Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer Col.8.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Human Geography and Urban Studies (Research), MSc in Gender (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course will assume good knowledge of qualitative research methods as covered in MY421.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide understanding and competence to students in advanced qualitative research methods used in leading-edge social research.

The content of the course will change from year to year. Possible topics include forms of textual analysis such as rhetorical and argumentation analysis, computerised text analysis, biographical research methods, diary methods, experience sampling and bemetology, qualitative evaluation research, etc.

Details of the content for any one year will be available from the Department of Methodology office.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of assessed coursework (max 2500 words).

Indicative reading: Readings for this course will vary according to the topics covered each year. A reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours).

MY451 Half Unit Introduction to Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Sally Stares COL8.05

Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL8.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available on the MSc Comparative Politics, MSc in Comparative Politics (Research), MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research), MSc in Social Anthropology (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Research students please see MY551.

Course content: An intensive introduction to quantitative data analysis in the social sciences. The course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical estimation and inference. At the end of the course students should be able to carry out univariate and bi-variate data analysis and have an appreciation of multiple linear regression. The computer classes give 'hands-on' training in the application of statistical techniques to real social science research problems using the SPSS computer package (no prior knowledge of SPSS is necessary).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. The course runs twice per year: in MT (MY451M) and again in LT (MY452L). Ten two-hour lectures and nine one-hour computer classes per term. Weekly assignments are required.

Formative coursework: Weekly assignments are required.

Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online. Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data. Pearson Education. Or Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. Pearson Education (note that the second book is more advanced and is particularly useful if you are planning to take MY451 and MY452).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

A two-hour open book unseen examination in ST.

MY452 Half Unit Applied Regression Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.02

Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL.8.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available on the MRes Political Science, MRes/PhD Political Science (Qualitative stream B), MRes/PhD Political Science (Quantitative stream A) MSc Comparative Politics, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Local Economic Development, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Organisational Behaviour, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Social Anthropology (Research), MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed CP-MY451. Students are required to have completed MY451 or an equivalent level statistics course

Course content: The course is designed for students with a good working knowledge of elementary descriptive statistics; sampling distributions; one and two sample tests for means and proportions; correlation and the linear regression model with one or more predictor variables. The course is concerned with deepening the understanding of the generalized linear model and its application to social science data. The main topics covered are linear regression modelling and binary, multinomial and ordinal logistic regression. Class exercises and homework will be carried out using the Stata or SPSS package, according to the student's choice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the second week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY452M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY452L which is taught in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Weekly assignments are required.

Indicative reading: A Agresti & B Finlay, Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. A course pack will be provided at the beginning of the course and additional reading will be recommended.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

A two-hour open book unseen examination in ST.

MY455 Half Unit Multivariate Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Sally Stares COL8.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Organisational Behaviour, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to research students as MY555.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY452).

The course will assume a knowledge of standard linear regression models, to the level covered in MY452.

Course content: An introduction to the application of modern multivariate methods used in the social sciences, with particular focus on latent variable models for continuous observed variables, and their application to questions of measurement in the social sciences. At least the following topics will be covered: principal components analysis, exploratory factor analysis, confirmatory factor analysis and structural equation models. In addition, a selection from the following topics will be covered: cluster analysis, correspondence analysis, multidimensional scaling, latent class models, latent trait models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki; J I Galbraith (2008) Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data (Second Edition).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MY456 Half Unit Survey Methodology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Jackson COL 8.08 and Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.02

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of basic descriptive and inferential statistics, to the level of MY452 or equivalent. MY456 can also be taken in parallel with MY452L. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the methodology of the design and analysis of social surveys. It is intended both for students who plan to design and collect their own surveys, and for those who need to understand and use data from existing large-scale surveys. Topics covered include basic ideas of target populations, survey estimation and inference, sampling error and nonsampling error; sample design and sampling theory; methods of data collection; survey interviewing; cognitive processes in answering survey questions; design and evaluation of survey questions; nonresponse error and imputation for item nonresponse; survey weights; analysis of data from complex surveys; accessing, preparing and working with secondary data from existing social surveys. The course includes computer classes, using the statistical computer package Stata; no previous knowledge of Stata is required.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from some of the seminars and computer classes are submitted for feedback

Indicative reading: Groves, R M, Fowler, F J, Couper, M P, Lepkowski, J M, Singer, E, and Tourangeau, R (2009). Survey Methodology (2nd ed.). Wiley.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (50%, 2500 words).

The project is a report of approximately 20 to 30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 2,500 words, reporting the data analysis of a given research question and data set.

MY457 Half Unit Causal Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dominik Hangartner COL8.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY552) and Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400).

Knowledge of multiple linear regression and some familiarity with generalised linear models, to the level of MY552 (MI452) or equivalent. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 (MI453) or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to statistical methods used for causal inference in the social sciences. Using the potential outcomes framework of causality, topics covered include research designs such as randomized experiments and observational studies. We explore the impact of noncompliance in randomized experiments, as well as nonignorable treatment assignment in observational studies. To analyze these research designs, the methods covered include matching, instrumental variables, difference-in-difference, and regression discontinuity. Examples are drawn from different social sciences. The course includes computer classes, where standard statistical computer packages (Stata or R) are used for computation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes are submitted for feedback.

Indicative reading: Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J.-S. (2009). Mostly Harmless Econometrics. Princeton University Press. Rosenbaum, L. (2010). Design of Observational Studies. Springer.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (50%, 2500 words).

The project is a report of approximately 20 to 30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 2,500 words, reporting the data analysis of a given research question and data set.

MY459 Half Unit Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Applied Statistical Computing

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL8.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to research students, as MY559.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY452).

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to advanced analytic methods frequently used in leading-edge social research. The content of the course will change from year to year. In the 2013/2014 session, this course will cover computer programming for social science research and some of the advanced data analysis methods that require significant computation.

The main topics covered are data collection and management, nonparametric density estimation and regression, additive models, the lasso, cross-validation, the bootstrap, and permutation/randomization inference. Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: Matloff, N. The Art of R Programming; Shalizi, C.R. Advanced Data Analysis from an Elementary Point of View.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (50%, 2500 words) in the ST.

MY499 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.02 and Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Dissertation supervisors.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students are required to write a 10,000 word dissertation on a topic within the field covered by their specialist subject and agreed with their supervisor.

Teaching: A series of around 6 dissertation seminars during MT and ST. The seminars cover methodological issues such as the literature review, sources of secondary quantitative data, topic guides for interviews, and sources of textual material. Students will be required to write a report where they apply the tools considered in the seminars to a topic of their choice.

Formative coursework: Each student will be required to give a short presentation outlining the subject of his/her dissertation and the proposed argument of the dissertation in a session organised for all students during ST.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Two hard copies of the 10,000 word dissertation must be submitted to the Graduate Teaching Administrator of the Department of Methodology by Friday August 15th 2014. Students are also required to upload their dissertation file(s) to Moodle by the same deadline. In addition to the dissertation, a separate written report based on the dissertation seminars, due in ST, must be submitted. MY499 cannot be passed unless this report has been submitted, with all of its required elements included. The report does not otherwise affect the mark for MY499, which is based entirely on the dissertation. Individual feedback on the report will be provided.

MY4M1 Foundations of Social Research 1

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Sally Stares COL8.05, Dr Jonathan Jackson COL8.08, Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09 and Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Dr Sally Stares/Dr Benjamin Lauderdale (MY451), Dr Jonathan Jackson (MY400) and Dr Flora Cornish/Dr Jen Tarr (MY421).

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics (Research), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Political Theory (Research), MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research), MSc in Regulation (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is designed to give students a good introduction to quantitative and qualitative methods and to acquaint them with the strengths and limits of different methodologies. The course has three main components: 1. MY451 (MY451M in Michaelmas Term or MY451L in Lent Term) in

Introduction to Quantitative Analysis - this course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. Students who have already studied statistics and data analysis should take MY4M2. Plus: 2. MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design 3. MY421 Qualitative Research Methods

Teaching: See separate course outlines.

Indicative reading: See separate course outlines.

Assessment:

Examination is by two pieces of assessed coursework (c.3000 words each) (67%) due early in LT and one two-hour paper in the ST (33%). Students registered on this course will take exam paper MY4M1a (based on the MY451 syllabus) and assessed coursework covering MY400 (c.3000 words) and MY421 (c.3000 words) portion of the course.

MY4M2 Foundations of Social Research 2

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish and Dr Jonathan Jackson Dr Benjamin Lauderdale (MY452), Dr Jonathan Jackson (MY400), and Dr Flora Cornish (MY421)

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics (Research), MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in International Political Economy (Research), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Political Theory (Research), MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research), MSc in Regulation (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This programme is designed to give students a good introduction to quantitative and qualitative methods and to acquaint them with the strengths and limits of different methodologies. The course has three main components: 1. MY452

Applied Regression Analysis. This course is intended for students with some previous experience of quantitative methods or statistic, as described in the prerequisites for MY452. Students who have not previously studied quantitative methods or statistics should take MY4M1. The course can be taken either in MT (as MY452M) or in LT (as MY452L). 2. MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design 3. MY421 Qualitative Research Methods. This course can be taken either in MT (as MY421M) or in LT (as MY421L).

Teaching: See separate course outlines.

Indicative reading: See separate course outlines.

Assessment: Examination is by two pieces of assessed coursework (c.3000 words each) (67%) due early in LT and one two-hour paper in the ST (33%). Students registered on this course will take exam papers MY4M2a (based on the MY452 syllabus) and assessed coursework covering MY400 (c.3000 words) and MY421 (c.3000 words) portion of the course.

OR401 Half Unit Techniques of Operational Research

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katerina Papadaki NAB 3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have a knowledge of mathematics and statistics to the level of the undergraduate course MA107/

ST107 Quantitative Methods.

Course content: An introduction to a range of Operational Research techniques. The particular techniques taught may vary slightly from year to year. Topics normally covered are: inventory models, forecasting, queueing theory, replacement, critical path analysis, dynamic programming, markov chains, and game theory.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures and 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Recommended books are: Wayne Winston, Operational Research; Applications and Algorithms, Fourth/ International Student Edition.

Students may also wish to consult: F S Hillier & G J Lieberman, Introduction to Operations Research, 7th edn.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

OR406 Half Unit Mathematical Programming: Theory and Algorithms

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Giacomo Zambelli NAB 3.36

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Management Science (Operational Research), MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have a knowledge of linear algebra sufficient to handle matrix inversion and manipulation of partitioned vectors and matrices. Previous experience of computers is not required, but students must be prepared to use computer packages.

Course content: To cover the use of mathematical programming models in practice, and an introduction to the theory and computational methods, as described under the headings of the lecture courses below. OR406.1 Foundations of Mathematical Programming: An introduction to the mathematical foundations of mathematical programming OR406.2 Mathematical Programming: Introduction to theory and the solution of linear and nonlinear programming problems: simplex and interior point algorithms, integer linear programming (ILP) methods (branch and bound, enumeration, cutting planes), decomposition methods, quadratic programming.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: V Chvatal, Linear Programming; G Dantzig & M Thapa, Linear Programming 1 and 2; M Padberg, Linear Optimization and Extensions; M Bazaraa, J Jarvis & H Sherali, Linear Programming and Network Flows; J Nocedal & S Wright, Numerical Optimization; S Wright, Primal Dual Interior Point Methods; Nemhauser & Wolsey, Integer and Combinatorial Optimization; A Schrijver, Theory of Linear and Integer Programming; J More & S Wright, Optimization Software Guide; H P Williams, Model Building and Mathematical Programming; H P Williams, Model Solving in Mathematical Programming.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

OR408 Half Unit Combinatorial Optimisation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katerina Papadaki NAB 3.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with graph theory and some knowledge of programming could be desirable.

Course content: The course is intended as an introduction to discrete and combinatorial techniques for solving optimisation problems, mainly involving graphs and networks, as described under the headings of the lecture course below. OR406.1 Foundations of Mathematical Programming. An introduction to the mathematical foundations of mathematical programming. OR408 Combinatorial Optimisation. Shortest path algorithms in networks, various matching algorithms, the Chinese postman problem, solution techniques for Travelling Salesman and other Combinatorial Optimisation problems. Also polyhedral combinatorics, heuristic approaches and a brief introduction to complex theory.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

OR406.1 - four LT; OR406.1A two x 1.5 LT.

OR408 - sixteen LT; OR408A eight x 1.5 LT and one revision session.

Formative coursework: Lecture notes containing problems are supplied. Written answers will be expected by the lecturer on a regular basis, and the problems will be discussed in the problem class.

Indicative reading: Relevant sections from the following texts will provide useful supplementary reading - N Christofidis, Graph Theory: An Algorithmic Approach; Nemhauser, Rinnooy Kan & Todd, Optimization; Nemhauser & Wolsey, Integer and Combinatorial Optimization; C F Laywine & G L Mullen, Discrete Mathematics using Latin Squares, Wiley & Sons 1998. Alexander Schrijver, Combinatorial Optimization, Ahuja, Magnanti and Orlin, Network Flows, Jon Lee, A First Course in Combinatorial Optimization, Cambridge University Press 2004. As concise reference material for the graph theoretic part of the course R Wilson's book Introduction to Graph Theory should prove useful.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

OR409 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Auctions and Game Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Steinberg NAB 3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Management Science (Operational Research) and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have a knowledge of mathematics to the level of the undergraduate course MA107 Quantitative Methods in Mathematics.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to auctions and game theory. Topics covered are: non-cooperative game theory; cooperative game theory; social choice; auctions; and combinatorial auctions.

Teaching: 16 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Very full lecture notes are provided, and every week a set of problems is given out in the lecture. These are discussed in the following seminars (OR409.A).

Indicative reading: Recommended books are: K.G. Binmore, Playing for Real: A Text on Game Theory; Alan D. Taylor, Social Choice and the Mathematics of Manipulation; and P. Cramton, Y. Shoham, and R. Steinberg, Combinatorial Auctions.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

OR414 Half Unit Advanced Topics in Operational Research

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laszlo Vegh NAB3.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: An examination of the new trends in Operational Research. The topics selected differ year to year; information is available from the Management Science Group administration office.

Teaching: 16 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Details will be provided at the start of the course.

Indicative reading: Detailed suggestions for reading will be given before the start of the course.

Assessment: Coursework (20%) in the LT.

Project (80%) in the ST.

OR426 Half Unit Computer Modelling: Applied Statistics and Simulation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a knowledge of mathematics and statistics to the level of MA107 Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) and ST102 Elementary Statistical Theory.

Course content: An introduction to stochastic modelling and applied statistics. Applied Statistics (OR426.1): Revision of Descriptive stats, EDA, outliers, transformations; ideas of experimental design, one-way ANOVA; simple and multiple regression. Applied Stochastic Modelling (OR426.2): This course is about how to build models of systems which are characterised by uncertainty and random variability. The focus is on simulation (i.e. computer-based) models and aims to develop simulation modelling skills, understanding of the theoretic basis which underpins the simulation methodology, and an appreciation of practical issues in managing a simulation modelling project.

Teaching: 21 hours of lectures and 19 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: OR426.1 - exercises are set weekly and discussed in the following classes, which alternate between hands-on computer sessions and problem classes. Any written work handed in prior to the class will be marked and returned. OR426.2 - students will have the opportunity to submit a mock project for marking and comment several weeks before the final assessed project is due.

Indicative reading: Recommended for OR426.1 are: Ramsey & Schafer, The Statistical Sleuth, Duxbury; M Chapman & B Mahon, Plain Figures; W W Himes & D C Montgomery, Probability and Statistics in Engineering and Management Science; D C Hoaglin, R J Light, B McPeck & F Mosteller, Data for Decisions; J A Rice, Mathematical Statistics and Data Analysis; B F Ryan & B L Joiner, MINITAB Handbook; E Tufte, The Visual Display of Quantitative Information; J W Tukey, Exploratory Data Analysis; T J Wonnacott & R J Wonnacott, Econometrics.

Recommended for OR426.2 are: A M Law & W D Kelton, Simulation Modelling and Analysis; M Pidd, Computer Simulation in Management Science, S Ross, Simulation, Academic Press.

Assessment: Project (50%) and project (50%) in the LT. This course is examined entirely by course work and projects, as follows: 50% for a final project for Applied Statistics, and 50% to a management report covering the results of a computer simulation project. Written work is marked on presentation as well as on content.

OR428 Half Unit Model Building in Mathematical Programming

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katharina Schwaiger

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have a knowledge of Mathematics and Statistics to the level of MA107 (Quantitative Methods - Mathematics) and ST102 (Elementary Statistical Theory).

Course content: Mathematical Programming is one of the most powerful and widely-used quantitative techniques for making optimal decisions. The course has a pragmatic focus and aims at enabling students to model and solve real-life management problems. In providing an overview of the most relevant techniques of the field, it teaches a range of approaches to building Mathematical Programming models and shows how to solve them and analyse their solutions. Content includes: An introduction to the theory of linear programming. The modelling life cycle and modelling environments. Formulation of management problems using linear and network models; solution of such problems with a special-purpose programming language; interpretation of the solutions; limitations of such models. Formulation and solution of non-linear models including some or all of binary, integer, convex and stochastic programming models

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 20 hours of seminars and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 3 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Computer Workshops are optional.

Formative coursework: Students will have the opportunity to submit a mock project for marking and comment before the final assessed project is due.

Indicative reading: Central to the course is: H P Williams, Model Building in Mathematical Programming, Wiley. A good introduction to Mathematical Programming provide the relevant chapters of: F S Hillier and G J Lieberman: Introduction to Operations Research, McGraw-Hill. A more theoretical treatment can be found in: D Bertsimas and J N Tsitsiklis: Introduction to Linear Optimization, Athena Scientific. Further suggestions for reading are given during the course.

Assessment: Continuous assessment (100%) in the MT. This course is examined entirely by weekly exercises and/or by project. Written work is marked on presentation as well as on content.

OR432 Half Unit Operational Research and Decision Science in Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Keith Rapley NAB 3.38

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course focuses on the key skills needed to be an effective practitioner in Operational Research (OR) and Decision Sciences (DS). It is designed to complement the theoretical and practical skills developed in both programmes' compulsory courses. The intention is to give students an appreciation of the different kinds of OR & DS study that occur in practice, and the skills that are needed to make effective interventions in the decision making of organisations. Additionally, the students will explore common practical problems encountered in undertaking OR & DS studies. The history and development of OR & DS will be explored to identify key issues affecting the practice of OR & DS. Students will identify different kinds of organisation in which OR & DS make important contributions. The structure of these organisations will be studied together with organisational behaviours. The nature of decision making at both the strategic and operational levels will be examined. The course will explore the role of the OR & DS consultant emphasising the importance of problem structuring and of various techniques (e.g. cognitive mapping) which can assist the analyst in developing a shared view of the problem with a client or clients. The skills required for making OR & DS interventions will be identified. Students will have opportunities to develop these skills together with identifying the contributions that they can make when working in teams as well as individually.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: There will be opportunities in MT and LT to provide answers to test examination questions.

Indicative reading: Understanding the Process of Operational Research, P Keys, Wiley 1994; Rational Analysis for a Problematic World Revisited, Rosenhead & Mingers Wiley 2001.

Additional reading matter will be issued for specific sessions.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (20%, 2500 words) in the ST.

OR437 Half Unit Solving Unsolvable Problems: NP- completeness and how to cope with it

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gregory Sorkin NAB 3.19

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A level of mathematical sophistication, including comfort with proofs and familiarity with limits, permutations, factorials, binomial coefficients, and rudimentary probability including expectations and independence. If in doubt, please consult the instructor or attend the first lecture.

Course content: Many problems, from the "Travelling Salesman Problem" to train scheduling, are easy to state but hard to solve, in a mathematically well-defined sense. In practical operations research, though, one must solve such problems, and the issues involved are mathematically interesting. The course will introduce the underlying computational concepts (polynomial-time computation and NP-completeness); introduce canonical problem models including graph problems and formula satisfiability; and explore various ways of addressing these problems, including heuristics, randomized and approximation algorithms, average-case analysis, and relatively efficient exponential-time algorithms.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Shmoys and Williamson, The Design of Approximation Algorithms (Cambridge Univ. Press book, free e-version)

Sinclair, Randomness and Computation (U.C. Berkeley lecture notes, by kind permission of the author)

Print books

Fomin and Kratsch, Exact Exponential Algorithms

Mitzenmacher and Upfal, Probability and Computing: Randomized Algorithms and Probabilistic Analysis

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.

Coursework (15%) in the LT.

OR440 Applied Management Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr David Newton

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Cannot be taken with OR499 Management Science Dissertation.

Course content: The student will carry out and report upon a substantial practical piece of Management Science. The project will either be found by the Group or may be suggested by the student, with the approval of his/her teachers.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 3 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Each student will be assigned an internal project supervisor who will monitor his/her progress on a continuing basis and give tutorial advice as required.

Indicative reading: Detailed suggestions for reading will be provided in the course of supervision.

Assessment: Project (100%) post-summer term.

Assessment is based entirely on the project report. Two paper copies must be handed in to the MS Group on a specified date in late August/early September. The page limit for the report is 40 pages, excluding appendices. The project is critical to assessment.

OR499

Dissertation: MSc Management Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: All members of the Management Science Group are involved in dissertation support.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences) and MSc in Management Science (Operational Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Cannot be taken with OR440 Applied Management Science.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research within the field of management science. The dissertation is a quantitative or qualitative investigation in the field. It may be either a theoretical or empirical piece of research. Students must obtain the approval of their advisor before embarking on any research.

Teaching: Advisors will normally be allocated according to student dissertation proposals, and it is the student's responsibility to find a suitable dissertation adviser who will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research. Students may expect to see their supervisors in both individual and group sessions, but should note that supervision is not available after the end of ST. Dissertation guidelines will be issued to students during MT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit Dissertation Plans to their supervisor in LT and ST.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Two paper copies of the dissertation must be handed in to the MS Group on a specified date in late August/early September. An electronic version of the dissertation must also be submitted. The word limit for the dissertation is 10,000 words. The dissertation is critical to assessment.

PH400

Philosophy of Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Miklos Redei

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Philosophy, science and two grand traditions in philosophy of science (weeks 1-2): the history of the philosophy of science and the two major traditions. Theory and observation (weeks 3-5): Hume's problem of induction and Popper's falsificationism, Lakatos' Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes, underdetermination of theory by evidence, the positive instance account. Bayesian confirmation theory (weeks 6-8): probability theory and the interpretation of probability, Bayesianism. Explanation (weeks 9-10): the Deductive-Nomological model of explanation, statistical explanation. Reductionism (week 11): reductionism and pluralism. Theories and laws (weeks 12-13): the regularity and necessitarian views of natural laws, the best systems-account, instrumentalism. Realism versus antirealism (weeks 14-15): scientific realism and the no miracles argument, inference to the best explanation, antirealism and the pessimistic meta-induction, constructive empiricism, entity realism, structural realism. Kuhn's philosophy of science (weeks 16-17): normal science and paradigms, scientific revolutions and incommensurability. Sociological approaches to science (weeks 18-20): social constructivism, strong programme, feminist epistemology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two 2,000 word essays per term on topics covered by the course.

Indicative reading: T S Kuhn, The Structure of Scientific Revolutions; K R Popper, Conjectures and Refutations; B van Fraassen, The Scientific Image; N Cartwright, How the Laws of Physics Lie.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PH404

Scientific Revolutions: Philosophical and Historical Issues

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: The course examines a number of fundamental issues in philosophy of science, as they arise from instances of important theory-changes (so-called 'scientific revolutions') in the history of science. It is therefore by no means a 'straight' course in history of science: it looks at historical episodes to test and/or illustrate philosophical theses about science and its development.

1. The Copernican revolution: the switch from the Ptolemaic geocentric view of the world to the Copernican heliocentric one was probably the greatest revolution in human thought ever: What justified the switch? Was Ptolemaic theory definitively refuted by the data? Was Copernican theory simpler? Was the Church's view that Copernican theory should only be thought of as an instrument for calculating astronomical data purely theologically motivated or does it have some scientific rationale? What role was played in the eventual acceptance of the Copernican view by predictive success? Do we need to invoke social or other non-intellectual factors to explain why this 'revolution' occurred? 2. Galileo: Galileo and the telescope: are all observations 'theory-laden' and does this mean that there is a subjective element to all theory-choices? Galileo and the argument for his law of free fall: can theories be 'deduced from the phenomena'? 3. The Newtonian revolution: What was the relationship between Newton's theory and Kepler's and Galileo's laws? What does this tell us about theory-change in general? 4. The chemical revolution: What were Priestley and Lavoisier's experiments, and what exactly lead scientists to supplant phlogiston by oxygen? What does this tell us about theory change in general? In particular, in what sense was the replacement of phlogiston by oxygen rational? 5. The Darwinian Revolution: This revolution certainly ranks alongside the Copernican one in terms of its impact on man's view of herself. But debates about the scientific credentials of Darwin's theory began immediately on the publication of Darwin's work and continue to this day. Is Darwinian theory unfalsifiable (or even just one big tautology)? Can 'scientific' creationists explain everything that Darwin can? What objections were raised by Darwin's critics to particular aspects of Darwinian theory? Were these valid objections and, in so far as they were, have they now been resolved?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework: 2 x 1500 word essays per term.

Indicative reading: Background reading: T S Kuhn, The Structure of Scientific Revolutions; I Lakatos 'Falsification and the Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes' in his The Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes, Philosophical Papers 1; G Holton (revised by S Brush): Theories and Concepts in Physical Science; P Duhem The Aim and Structure of Physical Theory; P Kitcher Abusing Science: The Case against Creationism, K R Popper, Conjectures and Refutations; P Feyerabend Against Method. Recommended reading: The central text for the first part of the course is T S Kuhn, The Copernican Revolution, Harvard University Press. The central text on the Darwinian revolution will be P Kitcher, Abusing Science, the Case Against Creationism. MIT Press.

There will be lecture slides on each topic including (i) a list of essential reading and suggestions for further reading and (ii) 'study questions' to guide your thought. Aside from the above reading for the section of the course on the Copernican revolution and the Darwinian revolution, reading for particular topics will be in the form of articles and selections from books. These will be made available electronically on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Philosophy of the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jason Alexander LAK. T501b

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Philosophical issues concerning the nature of social scientific theory and its applications. Topics to be covered will include some or all of the following: the explanation and interpretation of action, naturalist and hermeneutic social theory; the nature of 'social facts'; reductionism and methodological individualism; functional and structural explanations; rationality and relativism; the role of values in social science; social norms; the construction of social reality; methods of evolutionary explanation in the social sciences; philosophical and methodological critiques of evolutionary psychology. In addition, philosophical problems of particular social sciences such as anthropology, sociology, and economics will also be addressed.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays per term and may be asked to give seminar presentations.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful background readings are: The Philosophy of Social Science Reader (Francesco Guala and Daniel Steel, eds); D Little, Varieties of Social Explanation; A Rosenberg, Philosophy of Social Science; M Hollis, The Philosophy of Social Science; B Skyrms, Evolution of the Social Contract. A useful anthology is M Martin & L McIntyre (Eds), Readings in the Philosophy of Social Science.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2500 words) in the LT.

PH413

Philosophy of Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alexander Voorhoeve and Dr Joseph Mazon

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics A (EC100).

Intermediate microeconomics and/or public economics recommended (but not required) for the material in the Lent term of the course.

Course content: The first term, 'Markets and Morals', covers key historical and contemporary thinkers on the moral advantages and disadvantages of market institutions. Among others, we will cover Bernard Mandeville's thesis that 'Private Vices' lead to 'Public Benefits'; David Hume's account of how self-interest and sympathy combine to generate our moral code; Adam Smith's analysis of the working of the 'Invisible Hand' and of the vices and virtues of commercial society, and Marx's idea that markets lead to the improper 'commodification' of non-market goods. We will also cover contemporary debates on the moral limits of markets, focusing especially on the question which goods ought (not) to be for sale. The second term, 'Welfare Economics', covers several topics in the analysis of public policy, including: Efficiency and its critics; optimal taxation and its critics; equity; public goods vs. merit goods; philosophy of law and economics; fair prices; paternalism; GDP vs. happiness vs. capabilities; and the ethics of the discount rate.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars and 5 hours of help sessions in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 5 hours of help sessions in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay and 1 exercise in the LT.

Students will be required to participate in seminar discussions and to write three formative essays: two in the Michaelmas Term, and one in Lent. They will also write one 500 word outline of their summative essay in Lent.

Philosophy and Public Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joseph Mazon LAK4.06 and Dr Alexander Voorhoeve LAK4.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy and MSc in Public Policy and Administration. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course offers critical reflection on the design and evaluation of public policies from the perspective of moral and political philosophy. To this end, we study a range of theories and concepts that are used in policy evaluation. We often discuss and evaluate them by focusing on specific policy proposals. The course addresses questions such as: 1. What is well-being, how is it measured, and how should it be measured? 2. When, if ever, is paternalism justified? 3. What is the role of personal responsibility in determining people's claims on public resources? 4. What are the moral limits of markets? 5. When, if ever, is equality in the distribution of goods (such as health, income, or well-being) important? 6. How should we evaluate risks of harm and chances of benefit to people? 7. What are our rights to freedom of expression? 8. What are our rights against being harmed? 9. What are the moral strengths and shortcomings of cost-benefit analysis?

10. When, if ever, are market prices exploitative?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 5 hours of help sessions in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 5 hours of help sessions in the LT.

Each lecture will be followed by a 30-minute, optional Q&A session. This session will not cover new material. Instead, interested students will be able to discuss ideas covered in the lecture with the lecturer.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay and 1 exercise in the LT.

Indicative reading: Wolff, J. (2011) Ethics and Public Policy: A Philosophical Inquiry, Routledge. J. Feinberg. (1971) 'Paternalism', in his 'Harm to Self'. Sunstein, C. and Thaler, R. Philosophy, Morals and Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Michael Otsuka

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences and MSc in Political Theory. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course covers central topics in moral and political philosophy.

The first part will be devoted to the ethics of harming and saving from harm. We will address the following questions: (i) When and why should one save the greater rather than a lesser number of people from harm?; (ii) In coming to the aid of others, should we be solely concerned with how badly off they are in absolute terms, or should we instead, or also, be concerned to reduce the inequality between them and those who are better off?; (iii) Why might it be wrong to bring someone into existence whose life is worth living and is as good as it could possibly be, but who will suffer from serious disability or disease, when one could instead have brought a perfectly healthy and able-bodied person into existence?; (iv) Under what circumstances is it justifiable to engage in beneficial activities that impose risks of harm on individuals (e.g., driving, flying)?; (v) Why is it permissible to divert a tram so that it runs over one rather than five, whereas it is impermissible to kill a single individual in order to redistribute his vital organs to save the lives of five? (a.k.a. 'the trolley problem'); (vi) Is there a morally significant difference between the intentional killing of someone as a means and the merely foreseen killing of someone?; (vii) When, if ever, is it justifiable to kill an innocent person in self-defence?

The second part will be devoted to the topic of justice. What does justice require? Does it demand the redistribution of income from rich to poor in order to create a more egalitarian society? We'll discuss the answers to this question that John Rawls and Robert Nozick have provided. Rawls argues that such taxation is just, since it would be endorsed under fair conditions in which people are deprived of knowledge of whether they happen to be rich or poor, talented or unskilled. Nozick argues that redistributive taxation is unjust because on a par with forced labour. In addition, we'll consider their answers to the following questions: When is it unjust to constrain the liberties of some in order to prevent harm to others? What sort of equality of opportunity for jobs and university places does justice require? Are people entitled to compensation for historical injustices? What are the just conditions of acquisition of unowned natural resources? In answering the last question, we will also draw on the writings of John Locke.

Set Theory and Further Logic

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Miklos Redei LAK5.04

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Introductory level logic.

Course content: The aim of the course is to make students of philosophy familiar with the elements of naive and axiomatic set theory, classical mathematical logic and propositional modal logic. From set theory, two types of facts and results are covered: (i) the ones needed to understand the basic notions, constructions and the mode of thinking in mathematical logic (ii) the ones that have philosophical-conceptual significance in themselves (elementary theory of ordinals and cardinals, transfinite induction, Axiom of Choice and its equivalents, Continuum Hypothesis, Russell paradox). Formal languages, syntactic-semantic, theorem-metatheorem, soundness and completeness and some model theory are the main topics covered from classical first-order logic, together with an outline of Peano arithmetic, decidability and Gödel's incompleteness theorems. The idea of possible world semantics and the semantic characterization of the basic types of modal propositional logics are covered from modal logic. In both set theory and logic, emphasis is on the conceptual-structural elements rather than on technical-computational details. Not all theorems are proven and not all proofs are complete.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write three 1,500 word essays during the year on a topic from a list and are to hand in two problem solutions each term.

Indicative reading: Peter J. Cameron. Sets, Logic and Categories. Springer undergraduate mathematics series. Springer, London, Berlin, Heidelberg, 1999. Dissertation Seminar - Philosophy of Social Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jason Alexander

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is intended to develop the ability to make philosophical arguments and to write structured philosophical essays. It will serve to prepare students for research and writing their dissertation. In Lent term, seminars will cover topics that are chosen by MSc students for their theses. In Michaelmas term, the early meetings will discuss the structure and content of an MSc dissertation in Philosophy, the grading rubric used for marking dissertations. The remainder of Michaelmas term will cover some core topics in the philosophy of social science, such as: Methodological issues such as the use of mathematical models in the social sciences, methodological individualism and its rivals, collective intentionality and the autonomy of the social sciences.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A number of assignments whose completion will aid the writing of the dissertation will be set over the course of MT and LT.

Assessment:

Scientific Method and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katie Steele

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is also open to all LSE MSc and research students.

Course content: Policy decisions should be responsive to our best evidence. But what does that mean? How should we negotiate conflicting evidence? Can some evidence be disregarded due to cultural and political biases? What should we do when there is little evidence available about the issues at hand?

The course is divided into three main topics.

The first topic concerns the strength and the quality of the available evidence. This is a central issue in the 'evidence-based' policy-and-medicine movement. Are randomised controlled trials really the gold standard? Can evidence be statistically significant without being scientifically or practically significant, and vice versa? What is the role of quantitative versus qualitative evidence?

The second topic concerns the relationship between scientific and policy aims. To what extent should individual rights be compromised to enable scientific research? What issues arise when scientists interpret and measure ethically-loaded concepts like poverty, well-being or bio-diversity? How should broader social-political values influence priority-setting in public science?

The final topic concerns the role of the scientist as policy advisor. What is the 'Precautionary Principle' and how is it used in policy decision-making? What does it mean to say that there is a scientific consensus? Does expert knowledge of scientists constitute a threat to democratic processes?

Examples referred to in the course are drawn from various areas of science in policy-making, including climate, conservation, international development, poverty, education, medicine, and health.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful background readings are: Cartwright, N. and Hardie, J. Business and Organisational Ethics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gabriel Wollner

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science, MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences, MSc in Public Management and Governance and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This introductory course to business and organisational ethics is divided into three parts. The first part raises normative questions about the structure in which firms operate, including questions about the proper scope of markets and questions of distributive justice. The second part outlines a framework for incorporating moral principles into the decision-making of business professionals. The course introduces basic approaches in normative theory, explains how these approaches relate to standard ways of managerial and economic decision-making and discusses to what extent business professionals are bound by ordinary moral requirements. The third part focuses on firms and corporations as units of moral concern, with a particular focus on their role in international and global affairs. The course discusses justice and democracy at the workplace, the significance of international labour standards, how business professionals may or may not respond to practices like bribery and insider trading, and how responsibility is properly distributed between corporate and individual actors.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

PH427 Half Unit Genes, Brains, and Society: Philosophical Issues in the Biomedical Sciences

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Bryan Roberts

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The biomedical sciences have produced some of the most exciting discoveries of the last 50 years: organ transplantation, the decoding of the human genome, cloning, stem cell regeneration, and more. We are only just coming to grapple with the moral problems raised by these discoveries. This course is an introduction to those problems. Our central focus will be on contemporary issues in genetics and the biomedical sciences, including problems of genetic testing, stem cells and cloning, death and assisted suicide, probabilistic judgment, and the allocation of scarce resources. Some of the questions we consider include:

- Autonomy and Genetic Testing. How much can be known about a person on the basis of genetic testing, and can we use this information to decide whether someone gets a job, or to create a "designer" baby?
- Stem cells and Cloning. What's the issue about stem cells? What are they, what do they do, and what is their moral status?
- Death, Killing and the Brain. What does it mean to be "dead" according to philosophers, doctors, and society? When and how is a person allowed to help someone die, if at all?
- Probabilistic Pitfalls in Psychology and Medicine. How should we deal with medical experiments and medical tests when our confidence in the accuracy of the information they provide is less than 100%? How do the probabilistic pitfalls of the Monty Hall Problem and the Base Rate Fallacy apply to decision-making in biology and medicine?
- Society's Allocation of Scarce Resources. When we have too many people in need of a limited number of resources like doctors or organ donors, what strategies are available for distributing those resources? Students will make use of elementary techniques in ethical theory and the biomedical sciences to analyse these issues. Students will ultimately aim to formulate and justify their own views about these moral problems using rigorous philosophical arguments.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit two 1,500 word essays, one of which will be a draft of the assessed essay.

PH428 Half Unit Emotion, Cognition and Behaviour: Science and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr John Wigglesworth

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces some of the key issues in the philosophy of emotion and cognition, cutting across the disciplines of psychology, neuroscience, and cognitive science. The course is divided into three parts. The first part examines the use of computer models and Artificial Intelligence as a framework for analysing fundamental ideas about the nature of intelligence and cognition. The questions discussed include: What is the relationship between the body and mind? What is the nature of consciousness and what is its relationship to the brain? Is it possible for an artificial system to have consciousness? The second part covers various issues in human cognition. These may include: theories of emotion, theories of intentionality, decision making, rationality and irrationality, pathologies such as delusion, self-deception, and weakness of will, and differences between human and animal cognition. The third part explores the moral concerns and policy implications of these topics. Particular attention will be given to questions like: What role do emotions play in moral reasoning? How do mental conditions like schizophrenia and bipolar disorder complicate the perceived connections between free will and moral responsibility? How do certain classifications and definitions of mental disorder affect policy decisions?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

PH429 Half Unit Global Justice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gabriel Wollner LAK4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course addresses normative challenges that arise from globalization with a particular focus on the global economy. In doing so it raises foundational questions in moral and political philosophy (e.g., about the grounds and scope of justice), it reflects questions of method (e.g., about how to do empirically informed normative theory able to guide the action of real world actors), and tackles applied public policy issues (e.g., of how to make the international financial system more just). The course is divided into three parts. The first part examines how principles and values traditionally used to morally assess the political and economic institutions of domestic society apply beyond the nation state. The questions discussed include: What are normatively significant differences between the domestic basic structure and the international order? Do conditions of coercion or reciprocal cooperation give rise to obligations of distributive justice? Do individuals possess human rights simply in virtue of being human, or should we think of such rights as arising within particular political practices? The second part focuses on particular aspects of global capitalism and its institutions. Beginning with the problem of global poverty, which raises empirical and normative questions about the nature of both the interactions and obligations between various actors in the global economy, the course explores what moral principles apply to the practice of global trade, the international financial system and the distribution of natural resources. The third part explores different ways of bringing the global economy in line with the normative requirements that apply to it. Particular attention will be given to questions like: What is the promise of international taxation as an instrument for making the global order more just? Under what circumstances, if any, may the victims of global injustices resort to violence and war as a means of bringing about justice? How should policy makers balance the need for short-term improvements with the aspiration of long-term transformation?

PH445 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Miklos Redei

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Philosophy of Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is intended to develop the ability to construct sharp analytic philosophical arguments and to write structured philosophical essays. It will help students to choose the topic of their dissertation, help with how to go about researching the topic and how to write the dissertation (by presentation and criticism of preliminary drafts). The course starts with reviewing the structure and content of an MSc dissertation in Philosophy, the requirements of, and grading scheme used for marking dissertations. This is followed by presentations by students on topics intended as possible topics of their dissertations. The presentations will be extensively discussed in the seminar by fellow students and in subsequent private meetings with the seminar leader. In the Lent Term each student will read two former MSc dissertations with topics close to the interest of the student, and each student will report in the seminar on the merits and weaknesses of the selected works, trying to understand why the chosen dissertations received the marks they did. In the final part of the seminar students will again give presentations on the progress of their research.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in

the LT.

Formative coursework: A number of assignments - at least one per term - whose completion will aid the research into and writing of the dissertation will be set.

Assessment:

The course is not assessed.

Rationality and Choice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Philosophy and Public Policy, MSc in Philosophy of Science and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the theory of rationality and rational decision making. It is in two parts (i) Probability and Decision: Probabilistic thinking, different interpretations of probability, decision making under risk, ignorance and uncertainty, the measurement of belief and desire, paradoxes of expected utility theory. (ii) Game Theory and Social Choice: Solution concepts for games, backward induction and hypothetical reasoning, bargaining theory, Arrow's Theorem, the Gibbard-Satterthwaite theorem, interpersonal comparability and Utilitarianism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will submit a piece of written work each term and complete a number of exercises.

Organisational Social Psychology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lucia Garcia-Lorenzo STC, S311

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology. This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course addresses both the social psychology of organisations and social psychological processes within organisations. It also provides multidisciplinary coverage of the organisational contexts in which social psychologists may work in a variety of professional domains. A basic familiarity with social psychological methods is assumed but their application within organisational processes and contexts will be examined in detail within the course. Issues and techniques in organisational analysis, discourse, decision-making and change management are covered with emphasis on their social psychological aspects. Lectures/seminars in the MT: These will cover key social psychological concepts and theories and their application to the understanding of organisations and the implementation of change processes. The specific topics covered include: 1) Introduction: critique of the tradition and logic underlying organisational psychology; history and frameworks in organisational analysis; "Scientific" management; Taylorism and Fordism; the Human Relations movement and the Socio-Technical approach; 2) Frameworks for analysis: organisational representations; the cultural image of organisations; culture and change in organisations; power, knowledge and organising; 3) People organising: job design, motivation and stress; work groups and teams; decision-making; resistance and organisational learning; leadership, networking and collaborative work ; 4) Implications for practice: doing organisational development and action research. Working Seminars in the LT: These will centre on discussion of practical and research applications in domains where organisational social psychological investigation and analysis may play a leading role. Each topic will be presented by a member of LSE staff or invited external expert working in the domain.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of classes and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: 1) An individual book review and 2) a written assignment.

PS409 Half Unit Political Psychology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caroline Howarth STC.365

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students from all departments may attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the teacher responsible Course content: The course demonstrates the importance of a Political Psychological perspective for research into citizenship, globalisation, multiculturalism, gendered inequalities, mobilisation and collection action. The central issues we shall examine across an array of contexts are: what is the connection between politics and psychology; what is the relevance of politics in everyday social relations and for systems of everyday knowledge; what are the psychological consequences of exclusion, discrimination and inequality; what are the psychological processes involved in systems of social and political change? Theories of intergroup relations, contact, prejudice, social representations, identity, community resilience and agency shall be covered. Lecturers aim to achieve a balance between theoretical and applied issues, in the interests of critically investigating the ways in which conceptual tools can enhance our understanding of the concrete social world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A written assignment (maximum 1000 words). This will consist of an outline and short section of the summative assignment.

PS438 Half Unit Corporate Communications

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ilka Gleibs STC3.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students from other programmes may access this course subject to availability.

Course content: Corporate communication affects each one of us in various guises: as employees, customers, citizens, investors or, more generally, as observers of today's world. It is therefore essential to develop a critical understanding of the different practices associated with corporate communication, be it traditional public relations, corporate social responsibility, crisis management or internal communication. Future practitioners also need this critical perspective so as to understand better the challenges associated with the development and implementation of corporate communication programmes. This course provides an introduction to corporate communication, both internal and external and makes use of different social psychological concepts to improve our understanding of this significant aspect of organisational life. It combines a critical perspective on corporate communication with practical examples provided by invited external experts. Both theoretical and practical perspectives are discussed during the seminars that complement the lectures.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we will analyse functionally how resistance, expressed in public opinion as the interplay of mass media, public perceptions and activism, impact on technological trajectories. New technology is neither good nor bad, nor is it neutral. It is a negotiated project, a growing web of engineers, lawyers, regulators, users etc, in a dynamic configuration of ideas, materials, affiliations and dissent. The discussions explore issues leading toward a social psychology of objectification. Specific content will include: Public opinion and representations of science and technology make and brake technological projects such as nuclear power, information technology, genetic engineering and nanotechnology. While being partially supportive, public opinion often resists: why and to what effect? This is modelled in analogy to 'acute pain' (Bauer, 1991, 1997). We will explore conceptions of 'resistance' in psychotherapy, attitude research, rural studies, risk analysis and communication, media perfect studies, group dynamics, public understanding of science, and studies of social influence. Students are expected to appreciate theory driven empirical research.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

PS443 Half Unit Societal Psychology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caroline Howarth STC.365

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

All students from the Institute of Social Psychology are strongly encouraged to audit this course and MSc Health, Community and Development students may take this as a course option. . Students from all other departments may attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the teacher responsible.

Course content: What is the relevance of Societal Psychology for social science? How is it useful for the study of organisations, intercultural relations, health, community development and communication? Each week we tackle key debates for the social sciences through an examination of central theories in Societal Psychology. For example we ask: How is human consciousness possible? Is intergroup conflict inevitable? Are there cultural differences in how we think? Do we practice what we preach? Can a minority change the opinions of a majority? Do certain organisations produce good leaders? Would designing social spaces differently change social behaviour? These questions are addressed through the introduction of the main theories of Societal Psychology, theories on consciousness, social identity, intergroup relations, attitudes and behaviour, social representations, social influence, language, leadership and social design. The course is aimed at MSc students with little or no background in Societal Psychology but will also include advanced material and critiques for students who want to study topics in-depth.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

PS445 Half Unit Organisational and Social Decision Making

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Reader STC.313

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Management Science (Decision Sciences), MSc in Organisational Behaviour, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible.

Course content: This course teaches on theory and research from the field of organisational and social decision-making. It is primarily focused on high-risk organisational settings, and explores contexts where there is uncertainty, high-consequences for failure, and complex social systems. PS445 provides a historical introduction to decision-making, and introduces the core concepts used by social psychologists to understand (and improve) decision-making processes in organisations. It draws upon the social, cognitive and organisational psychology literatures, and considers the core concepts and tools used to understand, research, and support decision-making in organisations. These theories and tools are contextualized through empirical and case study examples taken from domains such as finance, healthcare, the energy industry, government, and the military. Students will be encouraged to take a critical perspective, and to consider how the principles taught on the course can be applied to (and used to improve) a variety of social or organisational scenarios. The course will cover psychology (or 'Human Factors') concepts such as: intuitive and analytical forms of decision-making, individual traits and cognitive factors that influence decision-makers (e.g. biases and emotions), human error and decision-failures, rule breaking, and group decision-making processes (e.g. teamwork, leadership). It will teach on methods for analysing decision errors, identifying decision-making competencies, observing decision-making, and supporting group decision processes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study in the LT.

PS446 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Issues in Organizational and Social Psychology: Organizational Life

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students on degrees without a psychology component may only attend subject to numbers, their own degree regulations and at the discretion of the Teacher responsible. This course is capped at 25 students.

Course content: In recent years, much has been made of the demise of the traditional work organisation and with it, traditional organisational life. In popular rhetoric, globalisation, the rise of the knowledge economy, ICT and the credit crunch have all trumpeted the dawn of a very different world. The reality of the situation would seem to be far more complex. So how do we understand and explain this complexity? This basic question has prompted huge soul searching within the social sciences as comfortable assumptions about the analysis of our world have been shown wanting. For many the current behavioural 'turn' throughout many of our disciplines act as an alternative lens for making sense of our reality - this has as its core the tools and approaches of social psychology. The aim of the course is to give a social psychological perspective on the elements of continuity and change surrounding contemporary organisational life. It will focus in particular on the blurring of boundaries within our key organizational relationships: with employees, customers, clients, and stakeholders. Its primary objective is to facilitate students in developing a critical and reflective understanding of these emerging processes. The course is informed throughout by a dual mandate. A rigorous approach to theory will be developed within the context of contemporary organisational issues, and current topics of debate. This essential relationship between theory and practice is a central feature of the course - outside speakers and practitioners are used throughout to supplement the learning for each topic and various forms of social media are employed to connect with an extended community of practice. The course will address emerging organisational questions such as: Perspectives: how do we make sense of the complexity of organisational life? Why do we work? How do different generations engage with work? The rise of the BlackBerry: have we moved from the workplace to the 24/7 workspace? Organisational time: is work life-balance a pipe dream? After multiculturalism where now for organisational equality, diversity and inclusion? Corporate Social Responsibility: how do organisations relate to wider stakeholders? Customer, client or 'partner'? Co-creation as the dynamic for growth. Beyond the 'ivory tower': how do we relate organisational theory to practice?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed references and class topics are distributed in the first lecture of the series. The following represents some key readings from the course:

PS447 Half Unit Psychoanalysis and Communication

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Derek Hook STC.312

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Research), MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Lacanian psychoanalysis provides a valuable set of instruments for an understanding of the structures and dynamics underlying communicative activity. This course will introduce students to a series of relevant components within Lacanian theory

- the distinction between enunciation and statement, the role of the 'big Other' as the third in every dialogue, Lacan's four structures of discourse - before exploring how these ideas might inform, extend and develop how we go about the analysis of communication. Specific content will include: Freudian dream theory and the analysis of popular advertising texts; jokes, slips of the tongue, and the role of the unconscious in everyday speech; the notion of the 'big Other' as the mediating third in every instance of dialogue; Lacan's four discursive structures or social links (emphasizing particularly political, governmental and university discourse); the functioning of Master signifiers and the transmission of knowledge; 'empty' versus 'full' speech; a psychoanalytic account of ideology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be handed out at the beginning of the course.

PS458 Half Unit Creativity and Innovation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alex Gillespie STC.308

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Also available as an outside option where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: An undergraduate degree in a social science related discipline or equivalent.

Course content: This course examines creativity and innovation from a social psychological standpoint. The first part of the course will examine creativity, focusing on the social conditions which lead to new ideas and technologies. The second part of the course will examine the way in which new ideas and technologies are instituted and resisted. Guiding questions will be: How do new ideas and technologies come about? How do we know if something new is creative, productive or useful? What social contexts are conducive to creativity and innovation? Can the resistance to innovation lead to innovation? What is the human imagination? Why do humans enjoy play, games and fiction? What leads to insightful problem solving? At a deeper level the course will also question the extent to which researchers should be describing the world as it is, or imagining the world as it could be. The overarching focus is on the relation between social interaction and the emergence of productive novelty. The course will examine the social conditions (i.e., face-to-face or online, one-to-one or group, autocratic or democratic, specialisation or integration, etc.) conducive to creativity and innovation, including the social conditions for socialization creative individuals and the social and institutional factors which enable productive novelty to be recognised and instituted. Specific topics will include: theories of creativity, the imagination, insight and problem solving, creative leadership, the creation of value, cultural evolution, the resistance to innovation, utopias and social science as future-making.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

PS460 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Inter-cultural Relations and Racism

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caroline Howarth STC.365

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course demonstrates the importance of a Social Psychological perspective for research into inter-cultural relations and racism, with a particular focus on national and community identities, acculturation, multiculturalism, political change and collaboration across difference. Lecturers aim to achieve a balance between theoretical and applied issues, in the interests of critically investigating the way in which conceptual tools can enhance our understanding of the concrete social world. We use a range of psychological theories: acculturation, contact, social identity, social representations, intersectionality, orientalism and conscientization. We explore the social and ideological production of cultural difference, exclusion and prejudice in ways that both highlight the role of history and politics in the social psychology of intercultural relations and also reveal the possibilities for agency, resistance, collaboration and transformation in contexts of (constructed) difference. Hence we establish an account of intercultural relations that connects the social (the ideological, the contextual, the structural, the cultural) and the psychological (subjectivity, agency, identity and representation). We apply this critical social psychological account of production and consequences of cultural difference to the contexts of politics, community, education and everyday life in general.

Health, Community and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Campbell STC.303 and Miss Jenevieve Mannell STC.305a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Community and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course examines the psycho-social determinants of community health and social development, in the context of health inequalities and social marginalisation in the global North and South. In particular it explores the role of participation, partnerships and collective action in facilitating health, well-being, the management of illness (including prevention, service access, care and treatment) and health-enabling social change. Attention is given to promoting behaviours that facilitate both physical and mental health and well-being more generally, viewing health as a phenomenon that spans the individual, community and social levels of analysis.

The challenges of facilitating health, and health-enhancing collective action, are explored with reference to social identities, social representations and local knowledge, dialogue, empowerment, critical thinking, gender, social capital and social change. All this material is contextualised within wider debates about the global nature of public health, mainstream vs. alternative development policy, the respective roles of local and global social movements, and the potential for participation to alleviate the negative health impacts of social inequalities. Particular attention is given to the links between health and inequalities related to poverty, gender and sexuality, ethnicity, age (children and the elderly) and disability. The over-riding ethos of the course is an interest in the links between theory and practice. Attention is given to providing students with actionable conceptual tools for the challenges of designing and evaluating community-focused programmes in the fields of public health, health promotion and health-supporting social transformation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of seminars in the MT.

PS462 Half Unit

Theory and Practice of Organisational Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caryn Solomon STC.312

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Organisational Behaviour, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The organisation is a social system that is complex, dynamic and ever changing. This course attempts to explore the management of organisational change and development in a practical way. It does this by recognising that there are research-based methodologies for ensuring that the potential inherent in change is harnessed, and that the capacity and potential of the organisation, in the pursuit of a broad range of organisational objectives, are enabled. While it is informed by a number of key theoretical frameworks, Organisation Development comes into its own in application. The aim of the course, therefore, is two fold: first to explore the body of core theory underpinning the practice; second, to examine the practice of Organisation Development as a 'process' (not a 'product' or a 'programme') which fundamentally influences and is influenced by the specific organisational context within which it takes place. Drawing on key theoretical frameworks and the approaches of major practitioners, the course also examines a range of current, best practice socio-psychological interventions. Students will be actively encouraged to relate key theoretical perspectives to organisational challenges covering a range of contemporary issues and contexts.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: C Argyris, On Organisational Learning (Malden, Mass: Blackwell Business, 1999); Richard Beckhard, Organisational Development: Strategies and Models (Reading, Mass. Assessment: Essay (75%, 3000 words) and presentation (25%) in the ST.

PS497 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alex Gillespie STC.308

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation is an empirical investigation, carried out on the student's own initiative, under the supervision of a member of staff. Research topics and methodologies vary considerably, but they must relate to the student's MSc Programme. All dissertation topics will need to be approved by a supervisor who is a faculty member of the Institute of Social Psychology. Topic selection and supervision Towards the end of the Michaelmas Term students will be introduced to the Dissertation module and members of staff will outline the research areas in which they would be willing to supervise projects. In the first instance students should approach the member of staff whom they think is most appropriate to supervise the research they have in mind. Students then submit a Dissertation Plan, outlining their project, and the supervisor who they have discussed the project with. Students are then allocated to supervisors. The supervisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography, and identify likely problems with the research proposed.

Formative coursework: Students will receive formative feedback from their supervisor on the following coursework (1,000 words): 1) A Dissertation Plan 2) A Dissertation Progress Report

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

Methods for Social Psychology Research: Fundamental Qualitative and Fundamental Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Caroline Howarth STC.374

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Organisational and Social Psychology, MSc in Social and Cultural Psychology and MSc in Social and Public Communication. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. A full unit of methods training is compulsory for students taking the above named programmes. Students take either PS4A1/2/3/4 depending on their level of knowledge and experience with methods.

Course content: This is for MSc students in ISP will no background in research methodology. This shall provide them with an overview of methodological issues for Social Psychological research as well as an introduction to both qualitative and quantitative methods. The course as a whole will equip them with methodological skills that will enable them to conduct empirical research for their MSc Dissertation and possibly research after the MSc.

Teaching: The course consists of 10 hours of in-house ISP teaching and two half unit course options provided by the LSE Methodology Institute (MY) during MT and LT.

- PS4AA - ISP in-house research methods lectures in MT (10 hours) and ISP in-house fortnightly methods workshops in LT and ST (20 hours)
- MY421 Qualitative Research Methods (MT)
- MY451 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MT)

Formative coursework: Students will follow the formative work requirements on the MY course(s) that they take under each stream.

Criminal Justice Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Coretta Phillips OLD M2.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), Master of Laws and Master of Laws (extended part-time study). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course will be capped at 30 students, with preference given first to students on MSc programmes in Social Policy, then the LL.M. If spaces are still available, students from other MSc programmes will be selected on a first come first served basis.

Pre-requisites: Some prior knowledge of law or sociology is useful, but not essential.

Course content: The course provides a detailed and critical introduction to the study of criminal justice institutions, practices and participants. It begins with an introduction to the nature of crime and contemporary criminal justice policy. It then examines the main elements of modern criminal justice systems (police, courts, prisons, probation, the media, and private security). Special emphasis is given to current issues such as restorative justice and increasing rates of incarceration. The course combines up-to-date empirical work with theoretical perspectives and also emphasises the role of historical and comparative perspectives in understanding current trends.

Teaching: Lectures: SA403.1 19 weekly one and a half hour lectures, MT and, LT.

Seminars: SA403.2, 18 weekly one and a half hour seminars, MT and LT and a revision session in ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to submit two non-assessed essays.

Indicative reading: There are two set texts for the course: M Maguire, R Morgan & R Reiner (Eds), The Oxford Handbook of Criminology, 5th edn, 2012; and T Newburn, Criminology, 2012.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

SA407 Half Unit Financing Health Care

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarah Thomson COW 3.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available on the MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a thorough grounding in health financing policy. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in European countries, but the general principles studied apply internationally. By the end of the course students will have:

- a grasp of the economic, political and philosophical concepts relevant to any discussion of health financing policy.
- a good understanding of how financing arrangements affect the achievement of key health financing policy goals such as financial protection, equity in financing and equity of access to health care, incentives for efficiency and quality in the organization and delivery of health services, administrative efficiency, transparency and accountability.
- the skills to critically assess current health financing arrangements and options for reform.
- an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. In addition there will be a two-hour revision session in the MT and a two-hour revision session in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will sit a one-hour progress test in the last seminar of term. This will involve writing an essay under exam conditions. Their seminar leader will mark the essay and provide a mark and written feedback by the beginning of the Lent Term.

Indicative reading: WHO, World Health Report 2010 - Health systems financing: the path to universal coverage (2010); E Mossialos, A Dixon, J Figueras & J Kutzin (eds), Funding health care: options for Europe, Open University Press (2002); J Kutzin, Health financing policy: a guide for decision-makers, World Health Organization (2008); T Rice, The economics of health reconsidered, Health Administration Press (2nd edn, 2003); B Abel-Smith, An Introduction to Health: Policy, Planning and Financing, Longman (1994).

SA427 Half Unit Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have an understanding of basic Health Economics principles.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the economics of pharmaceutical markets and related policies that affect national and international markets broadly.

- To provide students with an understanding of basic features of pharmaceutical markets, how pharmaceutical markets work and how competition manifests itself in different parts of pharmaceutical markets.

- To illustrate to students how the pharmaceutical market is linked to the health care market, why it is often the focus of much regulation, and to help students understand the multidimensional goals of pharmaceutical policies.

- To introduce students to the economic and policy problems encountered in managing pharmaceutical markets and how to evaluate the impact of alternative policy approaches. The course will also give students some experience in critically evaluating the impact of policy on market outcomes.

- To facilitate consideration of various country-specific political, cultural and economic factors that may drive governments' approaches to pharmaceutical regulation. In this context, this course will help students consider the extent to which policies may be transferable.

- To enable students to analyse pharmaceutical markets from the perspectives of several main actors: governments, third party payers, the pharmaceutical industry, doctors, patients, pharmacists and wholesalers. Literature from Health Economics, Industrial Organisation and Health Policy will be incorporated into lectures, discussions and seminars.

- To introduce students to the economics of pricing and reimbursing pharmaceutical products, to explore different models of pricing and reimbursing medicines in OECD countries, including rate of return regulation, value-based pricing, cost-plus pricing, external price referencing and internal reference pricing, among others.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

SA451 Social Policy Research

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tania Burchardt 32LIF3.34

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course equips students to critically assess the ways in which a wide range of research approaches are used in the study of social policy questions. This includes: an overview of the varied traditions and approaches to social policy research; Historical methods; Participatory research; Researching organisations; Depth interviews (especially with service users and clients); Evaluation of policy reform; Social experiments and pilots; Geographical methods; Social surveys and the analysis of large datasets; Longitudinal and life history analysis; Micro-simulation techniques; Systematic reviews and meta-analysis; and Comparative research. The final part of the course considers research strategies and choices and the relationship between research and policymaking.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

The lectures will be given by a member of staff or external expert in that particular method or topic and are followed by a seminar examining research exemplifying the approach and the issues raised. The tutorials are short one-to-one sessions with the seminar leader to discuss feedback on essays.

Formative coursework: Students will make at least one seminar presentation per term. In addition to written essays based on two seminar presentations, students will write at least two essays of no more than 2,000 words for the course.

Indicative reading: P Alcock et al (Eds) (2012), The Student's Companion to Social Policy, 4th edn; C Hakim (2000), Research Design: Strategies and choices in the design of social policy, 2nd edn; A Bryman (2012), Social Research Methods, 4th edn. Additional references will be supplied at the start of the course and in lectures.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

SA465 Criminal Justice Policy - Long Essay

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Coretta Phillips OLDM2.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy. This course is not available as an outside option. Those taking the course part-time must submit the dissertation in their second year.

Course content: The objective is to write an original dissertation on an approved topic in the field. The selection of the topic is a matter primarily for the student, though the approval of the supervisor is needed for topic registration.

Teaching: The designated supervisor should discuss the selection of the topic and its title with the student, advise about preliminary reading, methods and broad analytical approach; and comment on the draft version. At their discretion, supervisors may give additional advice and comments.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The dissertation must be submitted to the Course Administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September). Dissertations should be no more than 10,000 words in length, excluding notes and appendices and should be typed. Formal titles should be registered with the Course Director in early December.

SA466 European Social Policy - Long Essay

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Mangen OLD 2.62

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to study a topic in depth researching the literature and analysing a subject: often these essays involve original perspectives or empirical research.

Teaching: An appropriate supervisor will be appointed to advise each candidate and comment on draft elements of the dissertation.

Selection of Topic

The dissertation should conform to one of the following formats

- a study of a single EU state (or region, city etc) and one or more policy areas focusing on the impact of EU level social policy. This state should not be the student's own country. Within this format the focus may also be at the sub-national level (regions, cities etc).
- a comparative study of two or more states (or their subnational levels) focusing on one or more policy areas. The sample may include the student's own country.
- a study of an element of EU-level social policy or EU processes of social policy making.

The general subject area of the dissertation should be approved by the MSc programme director and dissertation supervisor by the sixth week of the Michaelmas Term. This will facilitate a specific research topic for the dissertation to be subsequently formalised. This topic may only be changed by agreement with programme director and supervisor and, in any case, no later than the end of the Lent Term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The completed dissertation, which should be typewritten, must be submitted on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September). It must not exceed 10,000 words, bibliography and tables will not be included in this total.

SA470 Dissertation - Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarabajaya Kumar KSW5.02, Prof Anthony Hall OLD2.28, Prof David Lewis OLD2.25, Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin OLD2.57 and Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD2.42

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The 10,000 word dissertation enables students to analyse in greater depth an issue relevant to social policy and development from a civil society-centred perspective.

Teaching: The advisor will provide regular supervision and feedback.

Formative coursework: The area of study is defined by the student, in consultation with their academic adviser. An outline proposal is developed on SA470 in Moodle and discussed with their adviser early in the Lent Term. Guidance is provided in dissertation writing and research skills.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. Dissertations should be no more than 10,000 words in length (100% of this unit), excluding the bibliography. The dissertation must be submitted to the Course Administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

SA471

Social Policy and Planning - Long Essay

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to study a topic in depth researching the literature and analysing a subject: often these dissertations involve original perspectives or research and some have been subsequently published.

Teaching: The general subject area of the dissertation should be approved by the tutor by the middle of the second term and the title should be submitted to the course convenor by the end of that term.

Arrangements for Supervision

An appropriate tutor will be appointed to advise each candidate and comment on the first draft of the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September.

The completed dissertation, must be submitted to the course administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September) in the year of the examination. It must not exceed 10,000 words.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The 10,000 word dissertation enables students to analyse in greater depth an issue relevant to social policy and development from a government-centred perspective.

Selection of Topic

The area of study is defined by the student, in consultation with their academic adviser. An outline proposal is developed on SA472 in Moodle and discussed with their adviser early in the Lent Term. Guidance is provided in dissertation writing and research skills.

Arrangements for Supervision

The advisor will provide regular supervision and feedback.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September.

Dissertations should be no more than 10,000 words in length (100% of this unit), excluding the bibliography. The dissertation must be submitted to the Course Administrator on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

SA481 Half Unit

Population Analysis: Methods and Models

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca OLD2.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health, Population and Society,

MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Statistics and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have basic numeracy, but the course does not require advanced mathematical knowledge.

Course content: This course is an introduction to the key concepts and methods of population analysis. It will introduce the fundamental components of population change: fertility, mortality and migration, and will discuss methods of data collection and population projections. Topics covered will also include population age-structure and growth; marriage and reproduction; an introduction to population projections; and the use of models in demography. Importance is placed on the understanding and interpretation of demographic data, as well as the methods of population analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete exercises and write two essays during the term.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the start of the course. A useful text is Demographic Methods and Concepts by D Rowland, 2003; or, alternatively Methods and Models in Demography by C Newell, 1988 or Demographic Techniques by A H Pollard, F Yusuf & G N Pollard, 1990, A Demography: Measuring and Modeling Population Processes by S H Preston, P Heuveline and M Guillot, 2001.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA485 Half Unit

Planning for Population and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone OLD2.56

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with personal computers is required, but a high degree of technical proficiency is not required.

Course content: The course is practical in nature and overviews key methods used for planning in population and development. Key questions which will be answered in this course are: what is the future of the world population; What are the family planning needs of couples in low income countries; what will be the number of newly HIV infected in the next 15 years; what is a sustainable population growth. Relevance will be given to methods used for assessing the implications of high levels of mortality in developing countries with specific reference to the HIV/AIDS pandemic; as well as the assessment of high fertility levels due to low uptakes of family planning methods. The approach is practical and complements the more theoretical population courses giving additional skills such as an understanding of key international projections and estimates. Students will undertake a number of computer-based assignments (using either Excel or Spectrum) which will follow the topics highlighted during the lectures. The course covers concepts used for population analysis; the role of population projections in the population planning and development process; the basis of projections made by international agencies such as the UN Population Division; the formulation of projection assumptions and methods of making projections; methods for projecting and assessing the impact of HIV/AIDS and the use of software such as AIM (AIDS Impact Model). The course will also give an overview of projections for particular sub-groups such as households, families, urban, sub-national and labour force ones and of the implications of uncertainty for the planning process. A great emphasis will be given to the learning of analytical skills which include data and information searching on the internet as well as presentation of the information obtained in various formats.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Indicative reading: Relevant documents will be provided at the start of the course, mainly in the form of electronic documents. Suggested reading are Lutz "The future population of the world; Cohen " How many people can the earth support"

Assessment: Coursework (50%) and coursework (50%) in the ST. Assessment will be by two coursework assignments, each of a maximum of 10 A4 pages, which will involve the formulation, execution and writing up of a project concerned with a model for population planning, which has been agreed with the lecturer.

SA488 Half Unit Social Policy Goals and Issues

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

SA492 Half Unit Sexual and Reproductive Health Programmes: Design, Implementation and Evaluation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ernestina Coast OLD2.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course is deals with the effectiveness and efficiency of reproductive health programmes, especially those that deliver services. The key issues addressed are the design of programmes, their effective implementation, and their evaluation, addressing questions such as:

What role can the mass media play in communicating reproductive health messages?

What are the key elements of a reproductive health programme?

What special sexual and reproductive needs do adolescents have?

Should violence against women be considered a reproductive health issue?

How appropriate is social marketing as a means of increasing contraceptive use in developing countries?

What are the main causes of maternal death in the less developed world?

The course covers a wide range of topics, including: the organisation of programmes; issues of strategic management; personnel training; logistics and commodity supply; the tools of management and evaluation, including management information systems; information, education and communication, including the role of the mass media; innovative approaches to reproductive health education, including an examination of the role of formal education and curriculum content; violence against women as a reproductive health issue; meeting the reproductive health needs of "special" groups, including adolescents and refugees; the use of social marketing; issues of quality in service delivery; techniques for evaluating programme effectiveness.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare a seminar presentation and an essay (circa 1,500 words) during the term.

Indicative reading: The course is supported by a VLE containing electronic reading lists. There is no single key text. The following journals are of key importance: Studies in Family Planning, Population Reports, International Family Planning Perspectives, Population Council Working Papers, Health Transition Review, Social Science and Medicine.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (50%) in the ST.

Coursework assignment to be a maximum of 10 A4 pages.

SA493 Half Unit Demographic Change and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ernestina Coast M2.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides an up-to-date and comprehensive account of demographic change and population trends in lower income countries by looking at recent changes in fertility, mortality and migration. The course considers the implications of these trends and some of the key demographic issues in these countries.

Topics that are covered include:

- The impact of education on changes in mortality and fertility
- Demography and gender
- Infant, child and maternal mortality
- Urbanisation and urban growth
- Communicable diseases

SA499Dissertation: Population and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: MSc Convenor and academic advisor.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Population and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to explore a particular research topic in depth.

Arrangements for Supervision

An appropriate academic advisor will be appointed to advise each student. Students are given a class on research and dissertation writing in addition to attending SA4C1.

Selection of Topic

The topic of the dissertation is selected in consultation with the student's academic advisor.

Teaching: 3 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September.

The completed dissertation must be submitted on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

SA4A6Dissertation: MSc International Health Policy and MSc International Health Policy (Health Economics)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This is not a course but a dissertation which will be undertaken by students.

Students of this programme undertake a summer placement during which they would be writing up the dissertation. The purpose of the dissertation is to allow students to explore a particular topic or a relevant policy issue in depth. The dissertation may take the form of an empirical research conducted on a topic or issue of relevance to health/social policy; or may be a literature-based providing an analysis of a specific research question of relevance to health/social policy.

Teaching: 4 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. Students will have at least three individual meetings with their supervisors. Additionally, 3 seminars (2 in the LT and 1 in the ST) will take place during the academic year with the entire class in order to discuss issues pertaining to the dissertation (topic selection, structure, methods, result reporting, ethics approval, among others) and the student placements.

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback and comments on a 1,000 work summary/outline of the proposed research proposal.

Indicative reading: May T. (1997). Social research: Issues, methods and processes, Open University Press

Robson C (1993). Real world research: A resource for social scientists and practitioner-researchers, Oxford University Press.

Wallimann N. (2001). Your research project: A step-by- step guide for the first-time researcher, Sage

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

SA4B3MSc Health, Population and Society Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Population and Society. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The purpose is to allow students to explore a particular research topic on issues related to health and population in depth.

Selection of topic

The topic of the dissertation is selected in consultation with the student's personal supervisor.

Supervision

An appropriate dissertation tutor will be appointed to advise each student as the work proceeds. In addition, students are given a class on research and dissertation writing, and another one on data sources and uses. Students are expected to make a non-assessed presentation of their proposed dissertation topics in LT.

Teaching: 3 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%) post-summer term.

The completed dissertation must be submitted on or before 1 September (or if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after 1 September).

SA4B5 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 International Planning and Children's Rights

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eileen Munro OLD2.46 and Dr Muzaferrettin Seckinelgin OLD2.57

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Community and Development and MSc in Human Rights. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is an interdisciplinary course that explores the links between child rights and child poverty at all levels of development in rich and poor countries. The social and economic as well as the civil and political rights of children, as defined in recent international laws, charters and Conventions, are examined in relation to the conditions, especially poverty and multiple deprivation, experienced by many children. Human rights theories as a basis for international and social policies will be a focus of attention. There has to be universal planning and not only specific proposals to deal with serious violations of rights. Issues of child labour, the violations of war, cultural discrimination against girl children and the right to a minimally adequate family income will be discussed in relation to the roles played by international agencies, Trans National Corporations, governments and NGOs.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

SA4C1 Long Essay and the Research Process

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kitty Stewart OLD2.36

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is not available as an outside option. For all MSc Social Policy programmes involving a dissertation or long essay. Exemptions at the discretion of the course tutor. Lecture notes will be available electronically via Social Policy public folders (for part-time students)

Course content: The course aims to provide an understanding of issues associated with the research process in the context of MSc Social Policy long essays. It includes an examination of philosophical issues underpinning research methods in social policy, the place of different research methods (qualitative and quantitative) in social policy and the process of writing a long essay.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT. 3 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Three useful texts are: Alan Bryman (2012) Social Research Methods, 4th edition Oxford University Press; C Robson, Real world research: A resource for social scientists and practitioner-researchers, 3rd edition Oxford University Press, 2011; N S R Wallimann, Your Research Project: A step-by-step guide for the first-time researcher, Sage, 2001.

Assessment: Non-examinable. It is expected that the student's dissertation will be informed by the course and appropriate discussion of methodological issues will be incorporated in all dissertations.

SA4C2 Half Unit Basic Education for Social Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anthony Hall OLD2.28

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Work experience in a developing country is highly desirable but not essential.

Course content: The course is designed to examine the role of basic education in developing countries as it relates to social development and social policy. Content of the course includes: the history of education and current problems in developing countries, links between basic education and socio-economic development, primary schooling, decentralization policies, non-formal and vocational education, adult literacy, popular education for grassroots development, environmental education, ICT, and foreign aid in supporting basic education.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: In addition to seminar presentations and the assessed essay, students may be required to write unassessed (formative) essays for the course.

SA4C3 Half Unit Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Maria Raikou OLD 2.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There is no pre-requisite, although it is envisaged to be complementary to SA4C4.

Course content: This course develops the statistical and modelling techniques necessary to apply economic evaluation to the health care sector. Introduction to statistical methods, linear regression analysis, logistic regression analysis, survival analysis for health outcomes, survival analysis for treatment costs, economic evaluation and clinical trials. Estimation of confidence intervals for cost-effectiveness ratios. Transformation of ratios - net benefit approach. Missing data, parametric and non-parametric approaches. Presentation of analysis, acceptability curves. This is the same course as SA4G4 Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (modular) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: The following are basic reading for the course: M Drummond & A McGuire (Eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, OUP, 2002; M Drummond, B O'Brien, G Stoddart & T Torrance, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, 2nd edn, OUP, 1997; M Gold, J Siegel, L Russell & M Weinstein, Cost-Effectiveness in Health and Medicine, OUP, 1996; M Johannesson, Theory and Methods of Economic Evaluation in Health Care, Kluwer, 1996; P Johansson, Evaluating Health Risks: An Economic Approach, CUP, 1995

SA4C8 Half Unit Globalisation and Social Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin OLD2.57

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: What do the, the Catholic Church, Bill and Melissa Gates, UNICEF and the World Bank have in common? They are in one way or another involved in social policy that goes beyond the nation state. Policy could be seen as the exercise of political power and this political power has often been concentrated within the nation state. Far from the traditional study of policy this includes the effect of globalization on a variety of actors in social policy. This course examines how globalization has changed the way we perceive areas such as health, education, social care and other areas that concern social citizenship. The course examines the international policy environment, particularly intergovernmental organisations; bilateral and multilateral aid agencies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), which influence the social policy environment in developing countries. The impact of the inter-governmental policy process on policy outcomes is examined. The same goes for religious groups, social movements and corporations that all play a role in global social policy. The main goal of the course is not only to open up the understanding of social policy and globalization but also to show the complexity of goals and actors of social policy. It is expected that the students will devote considerable time to reading and preparing for the seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write a long essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be presented at the beginning of the term. Health and Population in Contemporary Developed Societies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Mikko Myrskylä TBA

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Population and Society. This course is available on the MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course brings together the main issues in health, population and society in developed countries, including the role of social and biological factors in determining health and mortality. Course content includes the relationship between health and societal changes: family changes and their implications for population health; social support and health, health of older people and coping with ageing in the 21st century. Prospects for health and mortality in decades to come. Definition and use of measurements of health; self-reported, 'objective' measures and health service use indicators. Trends in inequalities in health and the explanations for these. Key issues in public health in developed countries especially in the light of expected demographic changes. Policy responses to health, population and societal changes.

Teaching: 10 weekly lectures and 10 weekly seminars, MT.

SA4D2 Half Unit Health and Population in Developing and Transitional Societies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Arjan Gjonca OLD2.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health, Population and Society. This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims at analysing the relationship of population change and global health. It follows a multidisciplinary approach by integrating demography, public health and epidemiology. It brings together the main issues in global health, population and society in developing and transitional societies. The course is unique as it addresses both, the issues and measurements of health and population. Determinants of health, health consequences of HIV/AIDS epidemics, poverty and health, as well as policy responses to health and population changes are some of the issues dealt with in detail in this course.

Some of the main topics covered are: The major threats to health and mortality in developing countries and the double burden of disease. Poverty and inequalities in health in developing countries. Reducing poverty: programmes and strategies, what do we know? Health consequences of HIV/AIDS epidemics in developing and transitional societies. Ageing in developing societies 'is it a matter for concern'? Urbanisation and inequalities in health in developing countries. Child and maternal mortality in developing countries. Health and mortality crises in Eastern Europe and the Central Asian Republics. The emerging threats of health and mortality in transitional economies. Achieving 'good health at low cost' in developing countries. Main priorities for health improvements in developing countries. It also covers basic techniques and measurement of health, mortality and morbidity.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA4D3 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Valuing Health

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Oliver COW3.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers a thorough understanding of how we might value health for use in health economic evaluation. The major value elicitation methods, and the assumptions that underlie these methods, are critically assessed. Moreover, possible alternatives to the standard ways in which health is valued and distributed in economic evaluation are considered.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: The following are background readings for the course:

SA4D4 Half Unit Measuring Health System Performance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Irene Papanicolas COWG.04

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to present a framework to discuss the opportunities and challenges with performance measurement in health care, examine the various dimensions and levels of health system performance, identify the measurement instruments and analytic tools needed, and examine the implications of these issues for policy makers and regulators. Lectures generally focus on measuring health system performance in high-income countries but draw on the experience of other countries where relevant.

After taking this course students are expected to:

- understand the principles of performance measurement
- appreciate the challenges, approaches, and opportunities in performance measurement in four dimensions: population health, patient outcomes, equity, quality and appropriateness of care, and productivity
- understand the methodological issues facing performance measurement relating to risk adjustment, developing composite measures, and measuring attribution and causality
- identify key issues relevant to policy makers relating to: developing targets and reporting on progress to the public, and developing incentives to improve performance

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Papanicolas I, Smith P (Eds) Health System Performance Comparison: An Agenda for Policy, Information and Research. Presentation (20%) and project (30%) in the LT.

The coursework consists of an in class group presentation and a written report based on the group presentations.

This is a similar course as SA4G6 Measuring Health System Performance (modular) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

SA4D5 Half Unit Social Rights and Human Welfare

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Polly Vizard 32LIF3.28

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will examine the basis of social or welfare rights as a component of human rights. It will situate social/welfare rights in an historical and comparative context and explore a range of debates concerning the relevance and effectiveness of a rights based approach to poverty alleviation and social welfare provision, both in the developed and the developing world. It will address the practical limitations of and the constraints upon social/welfare rights. Specifically, it will address: concepts of social rights and welfare citizenship; human needs and human rights; social/welfare rights in global context; critiques of social/welfare rights as human rights; the scope and substance of social/welfare rights; social/welfare rights and mechanisms of redress; rights based approaches to poverty alleviation; social development and social/welfare rights; constitutional instruments and social/welfare rights; human rights and the ethics of welfare.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

SA4D6 Half Unit Health Systems and Policies in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mrigesh Bhatia OLD2.34

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Population and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course focuses on health system reforms. It aims to identify key health systems and policy issues in developing country context and understand why health sector reforms have become an important issue in the developing countries. It will examine the assumptions upon which health system reforms are based and the evidence to support these assumptions. After an introductory lecture on the history of the development of health systems and policies of the member nations of the World Health Organisation, the content of the course is divided into three components. These are financing health care, delivery of health care and stewardship. Because Primary Health Care is once again at the centre of the World Health Report (2003), these sections will focus on equity, participation and intersectoral collaboration. With respect to financing, the emphasis will be on options for financing health care in developing countries, examining the potential role of user charges, social health insurance and community financing schemes. Delivery will focus on social franchising, decentralisation and the role of the private/public mix. Under stewardship, the course will explore issues around human resources for health and capacity building. The course concludes with a session on the future of Health Sector Reforms in developing countries.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: An essay of not more than 2,000 words.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%).

Take-home exam with 2 questions out of 3 blocks that have 2 questions each (100%).

SA4E3 Half Unit Dissertation in Health Economics, Policy and Management

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Grace Lordan OLD2.26, Miss Irene Papanicolas COW G.04 and Prof Alistair McGuire COW 4.05
Dr C Rudisill COW 3.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of the dissertation is for students to pursue an independent piece of research that will contribute to the field of health economics, health policy or health management. The dissertation is a quantitative or qualitative investigation in one of these fields. It may be either a theoretical or empirical piece of research. The contribution of the work to the chosen field must be made clear. The output will be a piece of work of 5000 words or less that is written in an article format that is suitable for submission to a peer reviewed journal. Students must obtain the approval of their supervisor before embarking on any research.

Arrangements for supervision

Students' tutors will act as their dissertation supervisor in the first instance. If the specific topic a student wishes to cover for his/her dissertation requires a different supervisor, a MSc programme director can arrange this change. The dissertation supervisor will advise the student, help provide information and bibliography and identify likely problems with the proposed research.

Assessment: Dissertation (95%, 5000 words) in September.

Research proposal (5%) in the MT.

5% of the mark will be based on a dissertation proposal due in the December of the first year of study.

The paper copies must be handled in to the Department on a specified date in December of the second year of the MSc programme. An electronic version of the dissertation must be also submitted. Penalties will be applied to any late submission. The word limit for the dissertation is 5,000 words (including references) and it must be in a journal article format.

SA4E6 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Rural Development and Social Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Lewis OLD2.25

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of rural areas and relevant work experience is desirable but not essential.

Course content: Theories of rural development, history of rural development policy, changing rural livelihoods, land and agrarian reform, agricultural research and extension, the roles of private and non-governmental actors, natural resource management, food security, climate change and rural-urban linkages.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is included in the seminar programme. The following is an introductory reading list: World Bank (2007) World Development Report 2008: Agriculture for Development; A Hall & J Midgley, Social Policy for Development (2004); A Shepherd, Sustainable Rural Development (1998); IFAD, Rural Poverty Report 2001; B Crow & H Bernstein (Eds), Rural Lives: Crises and Responses (1992); N Long, Development Sociology: Actor Perspectives (2001); J Harriss (Ed), Rural Development (1982); R Chambers, Rural Development: Putting the Last First (1983); I Scoones & J Thompson, Farmer First Revisited (2009).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period. Essay (25%, 2500 words).

Students are required to write an assessed essay of 2,500 words (25%). A two-hour written examination in the ST (75%).

SA4E9 Half Unit Advanced Health Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair McGuire COW4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will cover: international comparisons of health care expenditure, health care insurance, contract theory applied to the health care sector (including principal-agent theory and incentive payment mechanisms), equity in health care, health behaviour and an introduction to econometric analysis applied to health care data.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Culyer, A.J., and Newhouse, J.P., (eds.), 2001, Handbook of Health Economics Volumes 1A & 1B, (North-Holland, Amsterdam); Zweifel, P. and Breyer, F., 1997, Health Economics, (OUP, Oxford).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period. Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the ST.

SA4F1 Half Unit Migration: Population Trends and Policies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Murphy OLD M2.23

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Population and Society and MSc in Population and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students should have basic numeracy, but the course does not require advanced mathematical knowledge. It assumes no previous knowledge of the subject.

Course content: The course deals with the inter-relationships between migration and its economic and social context. The causes of migration and its consequences are examined at national and international levels together with their policy implications. The approach of the course is comparative, both across time and between more developed and less developed societies. A wide range of topics is covered, including: sources and types of demographic data; techniques for the measurement of migration; historic migration flows; macro- and microeconomic theories of migration; forced migration and migrants; demographic consequences of migration; and, international and national migration policies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to participate actively in seminars

Indicative reading: The course is supported by a VLE containing electronic reading lists. Key overview texts include: The migration reader : exploring politics and policies, 2006 (Anthony & Lahav); Global migration and the world economy (Hatton & Williamson); The age of migration (Castles & Miller); European migration policies in flux (Boswell); Migration theory : talking across disciplines (Brettell & Hollifield); Worlds in motion : understanding international migration at the end of the millennium (Massey); Dialogues on migration policy (Giugni & Passy); The dynamics of international migration and settlement in Europe : a state of the art (Penninx); Forced migration and global processes (Crépeau); Migration and development : opportunities and challenges for policymakers (Farrant); Migration, immigration and social policy (Jones-Finer); Rural-urban migration in developing countries (Lall).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (25%) in the ST.

Coursework assignment maximum of 5 A4 pages.

SA4F2 Half Unit Principles of Evidence-Based Medicine and Clinical Trials (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr C Rudisill COW 3.05

In addition, Professor Allan Hackshaw (Deputy Director, Cancer Research UK and UCL Cancer Trials Centre, UCL) will be teaching on this course.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Health claims are frequently reported in the media, and it can be difficult to determine which is based on reliable evidence and which is not. With a large amount of research being conducted, it is essential to be able to interpret study results and conclusions correctly, in order to change clinical practice or develop public health policy. This is achieved by Evidence-Based Medicine. The module will enable students to evaluate risk factors for disease or early death, and methods of disease prevention, detection, or treatment.

The module will provide students with practical skills in the following key areas:

- Understanding the different types of research that can be conducted in humans and their strengths and limitations, ie observational studies and a focus on clinical trials.
- Familiarity with systematic reviews (ie how several studies are combined).
- Interpreting research results and conclusions using aspects of epidemiology and medical statistics, and how to communicate study findings.
- Reading and understanding published journal articles or pharmaceutical company reports.
- Examining the efficacy and safety of health care interventions (an important part of a complete health economic evaluation within a clinical trial), including how to target treatments in subgroups of patients.

Teaching: 10 interactive seminars/workshops, each 2-3 hours long.

Formative coursework: Students will be given a set of exercises before the course begins, via Moodle. The tutor will go over some of these during the contact week, and address any queries from the students. However, detailed answers are provided to all exercises, so the students can access these if they undertake any of the exercises after the week. The tutor is also available for one-to-one email contact with any student.

Indicative reading: Hackshaw A. A concise guide to clinical trials. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, first edition 2009.

Greenhalgh T. How to Read a Paper: The Basics of Evidence-Based Medicine. BMJ Books, Wiley-Blackwell, fourth edition, 2010.

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle.

Assessment: There will be two pieces of coursework based on (i) a clinical trial of an intervention and (ii) a risk/causal factor, in the form of:

- a written assignment in the form of a PowerPoint slide deck (about 25 slides) and a statement of 400 words of conclusion, based on a published paper and associated media news article of the paper (50%)
- 4-5 questions specific to a published paper with answers requiring 1-2 paragraphs each (one question involving writing a media news article of 400-500 words) (50%).

SA4F3 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 US Health Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adam Oliver COW 3.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy and MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is of great value to those wishing to work as health policy analysts after graduation, be that in academia, industry, government or health care management and practice.

Course content: The course offers a thorough understanding of the major issues in the United States health care policy debate. The historical development of the system, the predominant private sector health insurance, the public coverage of 'entitled' groups, the problems of uninsurance, and policies aimed at improving the efficiency and equity of the system will be considered.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: "The health care mess: how we got into it and what it will take to get out", by Julius Richmond and Rashi Fein (Harvard University Press, 2005); "The Politics of Medicare", Second Edition, by Theodore Marmor (Aldine de Gruyter, 2000); "The system: the American way of politics at the breaking point", by Haynes Johnson and David Broder (Little Brown, 1997); "The reform of the 1990s: The United States": Chapter 3 of "Accidental Logics", by Carolyn Tuohy (Oxford University Press, 1999). "The historical logic of national health insurance: structure and sequence in the development of British, Canadian and US Medical Policy", by Jacob Hacker, Studies in American Political Development (1998) 12: 57-130.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the ST.

SA4F7 Half Unit The Economics of European Social Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joan Costa-Font COW 316

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Social Policy, MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations and MSc in Social Policy and Planning. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course. Students are required to register for this course on LSE for You and obtain permission from the European Institute to take this course.

Pre-requisites: Introductory economics is helpful.

Course content: This course attempts to apply economics to examine and evaluate social policies and problems in Europe. The course addresses the main goals for social intervention including poverty relief, inequality, efficiency and accountability. Students will acquire an understanding of the economic theory underpinning the analysis of social policy in the areas of health, education, long-term care, pension, housing, employment, family and housing policy. The course will provide an analysis of social and public insurance underpinning the financing of welfare states. Students will be asked to apply the economic principles to examples of cross-country reform in Europe. The course will address key questions on social policy intervention, inequality, poverty, tax financing v social insurance, longevity risks and pensions, long term care insurance, financing housing, family policy and wealth accumulation.

Teaching: 10 x 1 hour lectures and 10 x 1.5 hour seminars, LT. 1 x 1 hour revision lecture (ST).

Formative coursework: Two 2,000 word essays.

Indicative reading: A. B. Atkinson (1999), The Economic Consequences of Rolling Back the Welfare State, London and Cambridge, Mass: MIT Press; Smith, S, Le Grand J and Propper, C (2008). The Economics of Social Problems. 4th edition. Oxford University Press, Oxford, UK.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SA4F8 Half Unit Behavioural Public Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Julian Le Grand OLD1.13

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics), MSc in Political Science and Political Economy, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of the course is to explore ways of changing behaviour to achieve the aims of public policy. One half of the course will be concerned with the behaviour of professionals who work in public services. How can doctors, teachers and social workers be motivated to provide the best possible care for their patients, pupils or clients? Should we rely upon professionalism and the public service ethos? Should we set up targets and league tables for performance, penalising those who fail to achieve the target or who drop down the table? Or should we rely upon patient or parental choice and competition to provide incentives to improve? The second half of the course explores ways of changing individuals' and households' behaviour in areas of policy concern such as smoking, obesity, and the environment. How can people be persuaded to stop smoking, to take more exercise, to eat less, to reduce their carbon emissions? Should we rely upon punitive measures such as bans, or on positive incentives such as financial rewards? Should government intervene at all, if the only people harmed by their own activities are themselves? In trying to answer these questions, the course will draw on recent developments in behavioural economics, motivational and behavioural studies in psychology, and the philosophy of paternalism, including libertarian paternalism and the 'nudge' agenda. It will discuss evidence from a wide range of areas of public policy, but especially health care, education, social care and the environment, using illustrations and evidence from Europe, North America and Australasia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Each student will write one non-assessed essay or mock exam question. There will be a revision session in the summer term, going through the mock exam questions and/or previous years' exam papers. Each student will make at least one seminar presentation during the term.

Indicative reading: J. Le Grand (2006) Motivation, Agency and Public Policy: of Knights and Knaves, Pawns and Queens. Revised paperback edition. Oxford: Oxford University Press. J. Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the ST.

SA4F9 Half Unit Housing, Neighbourhoods and Communities

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anne Power OLDM2.21

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides a concise introduction to theories, arguments and evidence about housing, neighbourhoods and communities, in urban areas of developed countries. It starts by analysing how existing urban areas came to be developed. It then looks at housing systems, including home ownership, private renting and publically subsidised renting and owning, how people gain access to housing and are distributed between neighbourhoods, and the problems of housing costs and quality, homelessness, and social segregation. It examines the different roles of private individuals, the private sector, the public sector and community groups in financing, making decisions about and managing housing and other neighbourhood services. It also examines the impact of housing on social problems, community relations and the environment. It uses community-oriented sociology and ethnography alongside hard numbers to investigate how people relate to their neighbourhoods and to each other in these areas. The course considers how new places and communities are being developed, how existing areas can be adapted and modelled using live case studies to illustrate the themes.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. In addition there is one lecture and one seminar in the ST. There is also a two-hour walking tour.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in seminars and to complete two formative essays drawing on case study evidence.

Indicative reading: A. Power. City Survivors. 2007. A. Power. Fromhovels to High Rise. 1993. R. Lupton. Poverty Street, 2003. R. Tunstall and A. SA4G1 Half Unit Financing Health Care (Modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarah Thomson COW 301.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a thorough grounding in health financing policy. It focuses on the health financing functions of collecting revenue, pooling funds and purchasing services, as well as on policy choices concerning coverage, resource allocation and market structure. The course mainly draws on examples from health financing policy in European countries, but the general principles studied apply internationally. By the end of the course students will have:

- a grasp of the economic, political and philosophical concepts relevant to any discussion of health financing policy
- a good understanding of how financing arrangements affect the achievement of key health financing policy goals such as financial protection, equity in financing and equity of access to health care, incentives for efficiency and quality in the organization and delivery of health services, administrative efficiency, transparency and accountability

- the skills to critically assess current health financing arrangements and options for reform
- an overview of key health financing policy issues, including the advantages and disadvantages of different ways of raising revenue for health; the role of private financing mechanisms; the importance of pooling; decisions about whom to cover, what services to cover, and how much of service cost to cover; allocating resources to purchasers, purchasing market structure and the principles of strategic purchasing; the incentives associated with different methods of paying providers; and the issue of financial sustainability.

Teaching: 11 hours of lectures in total and 4 seminars (1.5 hours each).

Formative coursework: Students will sit a one-hour progress test in their own time. This will involve writing an essay under exam conditions. Their seminar leader will mark the essay and provide a mark and written feedback.

Indicative reading: WHO, World Health Report 2010 - Health systems financing: the path to universal coverage (2010); E Mossialos, A Dixon, J Figueras & J Kutzin (eds), Funding health care: options for Europe, Open University Press (2002); J Kutzin, Health financing policy: a guide for decision-makers, World Health Organization (2008); T Rice, The economics of health reconsidered, Health Administration Press (2nd edn, 2003); B Abel-Smith, An Introduction to Health: Policy, Planning and Financing, Longman (1994).

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle. They will be expected to read these prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This is the same course as SA407 Financing Health Care (H) but it has different teaching arrangements.

SA4G2 Half Unit Health Economics (Modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair Mcguire COW4.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Distinction between health and health care. Nature of health care as an economic commodity. How markets and insurance markets work, and how they can fail for health care and health insurance. Incentive mechanisms and principal-agent relationships in health care. Yardstick competition and Diagnostic Related Group payment schemes. Labour markets in health care. Economic evaluation as a regulatory tool.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: The following is a basic reading list for the course: S Folland, A C Goodman & M Stano, The Economics of Health and Health Care (3rd edn), Prentice Hall, 2001; B McPake, L Kumaranayake & C Normand, Health Economics - An International Perspective, Routledge, 2002.

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This is the same course as SA408 Health Economics (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

SA4G3 Half Unit Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy (Modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to the economics of pharmaceutical markets and related policies that affect national and international markets broadly.

- To provide students with an understanding of basic features of pharmaceutical markets and how pharmaceutical markets work and how competition manifests itself in different parts of pharmaceutical markets.
- To illustrate to students how the pharmaceutical market is linked to the health care market, why it is often the focus of much regulation, and to help students understand the multidimensional goals of pharmaceutical policies.
- To introduce students to the economic and policy problems encountered in managing pharmaceutical markets and how to evaluate the impact of alternative policy approaches. The course will also give students some experience in critically evaluating the impact of policy on market outcomes.
- To facilitate consideration of various country-specific political, cultural and economic factors that may drive governments' approaches to pharmaceutical regulation. In this context, this course will help students consider the extent to which policies may be transferable.
- To enable students to analyse pharmaceutical markets from the perspectives of several main actors: governments, third party payers, the pharmaceutical industry, doctors, patients, pharmacists and wholesalers. Literature from Health Economics, Industrial Organisation and Health Policy will be incorporated into lectures, discussions and seminars.
- To introduce students to the economics of pricing and reimbursing pharmaceutical products, to explore different models of pricing and reimbursing medicines in OECD countries, including rate of return regulation, value-based pricing, cost-plus pricing, external price referencing and internal reference pricing, among others.

Teaching: 2 lectures (2 hours), 4 lectures (1.5 hours) and 5 seminars (2 hours).

Formative coursework: A 2000 word formative essay, to mirror an exam question, to be written during seminar time.

Indicative reading: E Mossialos, M Mrazek & T Walley (eds), Regulating Pharmaceuticals in Europe. Striving for Efficiency, Equity and Quality, Buckingham, Open University Press (2004); S O Schweitzer, Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy, Oxford University Press (2006); W S Comanor, 'The Political Economy of the Pharmaceutical Industry', Journal of Economic Literature, XXIV (September): 1178-1217 (1986); F M Scherer 'The Pharmaceutical Industry', Chapter 25, in: A J Culyer & J P Newhouse (Eds), Handbook of Health Economics, Vol 1, Amsterdam, Oxford, Elsevier, 2000. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

This is the same course as SA427 Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

techniques necessary to apply economic evaluation to the health care sector.

Introduction to statistical methods, linear regression analysis, logistic regression analysis, survival analysis for health outcomes, survival analysis for treatment costs, economic evaluation and clinical trials. Estimation of confidence intervals for cost-effectiveness ratios. Transformation of ratios - net benefit approach. Missing data, parametric and non-parametric approaches. Presentation of analysis, acceptability curves.

Teaching: 2 lectures (2 hours), 4 lectures (1.5 hours) and 5 seminars (2 hours)

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time. Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: The following are basic reading for the course: M Drummond & A McGuire (Eds), Economic Evaluation in Health Care: Merging Theory with Practice, OUP, 2002; M Drummond, B O'Brien, G Stoddart & T Torrance, Methods for the Economic Evaluation of Health Care Programmes, 2nd edn, OUP, 1997; M Gold, J Siegel, L Russell & M Weinstein, Cost-Effectiveness in Health and Medicine, OUP, 1996; M Johannesson, Theory and Methods of Economic Evaluation in Health Care, Kluwer, 1996; P Johansson, Evaluating Health Risks: An Economic Approach, CUP, 1995. Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%).

This is the same course as SA4C3 Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (H) but it has different teaching and assessment arrangements.

SA4G5 Half Unit Valuation, Behaviour and Policy (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Paul Dolan OLD2.38

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course offers an understanding of how to measure health outcomes for policy purposes. We will focus on the 'effectiveness' side of cost-effectiveness analysis. We will consider the ways in which economists outside of health value benefits (using revealed and stated preferences) and then focus on how health economists have developed methods specifically designed to value health status. We shall pay particular attention to the measurement and valuation of quality-adjusted life years (QALYs), which are being used by agencies such as the UK's National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE). We will discuss some of the problems with the current methods of calculating QALYs, framed around the latest evidence from the behavioural sciences. It will then consider whether 'happiness' measures might provide a better alternative. The course will conclude with a consideration of issues relating to equity and fairness and how we account for preferences that policymakers and the public have regarding 'who gets what'.

Teaching: 2 lectures (2 hours), 4 lectures (1.5 hours) and 5 seminars (2 hours)

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time. Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: The following are background readings for the course:

SA4G4 Half Unit Statistical Methods in Health Care Economic Evaluation (Modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Ms Maria Raikou OLD 2.24.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course develops the statistical and modelling

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

SA4G6 Half Unit Measuring Health System Performance (Modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Irene Papanicolas COWG.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to present a framework to discuss the opportunities and challenges with performance measurement in health care, examine the various dimensions and levels of health system performance, identify the measurement instruments and analytic tools needed, and examine the implications of these issues for policy makers and regulators. Lectures generally focus on measuring health system performance in high-income countries but draw on the experience of other countries where relevant.

After taking this course students are expected to:

- understand the principles of performance measurement
- appreciate the challenges, approaches, and opportunities in performance measurement in four dimensions: population health, patient outcomes, equity, quality and appropriateness of care, and productivity
- understand the methodological issues facing performance measurement relating to risk adjustment, developing composite measures, and measuring attribution and causality
- identify key issues relevant to policy makers relating to: developing targets and reporting on progress to the public, and developing incentives to improve performance

Teaching: 2 lectures (2 hours), 4 lectures (1.5 hours) and 5 seminars (2 hours).

Formative coursework: In-class exercise during seminar time. Students will receive feedback on it from their seminar leader after completion.

Indicative reading: Papanicolas I and Smith PC (Eds), Health System Performance Comparison: An agenda for policy, information and research. Maidenhead: Open University Press, 2013. PC Smith, E Mossialos, I Papanicolas S. Leatherman (Eds), Performance measurement for health system improvement: experiences, challenges and prospects. World Health Organization (WHO), (2000) The world health report 2000: Health systems: Improving performance, Geneva: WHO Publications

Students will be given access to essential readings before the course begins through the pre-session reading programme on Moodle, which they will be expected to read prior to the first day of class.

Assessment: Essay (75%, 1 words) and in class assessment (25%). In-class assessment (25%) and assessed piece of coursework (75%). In-class assessment on a presentation where students apply principles taught to construct an argument around a theory-based question informed from real world data. They would be assessed on their presentation as well as their ability to apply the conceptual material taught in class to practical data. Coursework is the production of a report where students are asked to evaluate and interpret key performance data for a particular country.

SA4G8 Half Unit The Third Sector

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Isabel Shutes OLD2.55

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice

Policy, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is capped at a maximum of 15 places.

Course content: The 'third sector' is conceived as including all non-state and non-market organisations - such as non-governmental organisations, voluntary organisations, and community groups - and their activities. The course provides a concise introduction to theory and evidence on the nature, past and present roles and potential capacity of third sector organisations in social policy in developed countries. It aims to answer the key questions: what is the 'third sector'?; what roles does it or should it play in meeting welfare needs?; how are third sector organisations involved in shaping social policy; how are changes in funding and in the provision of services affecting organisations? What are the limits to the roles of third sector organisations? Are the answers affected by country, institutions, policy, period, areas of activity? The course covers theoretical arguments and models of the ideal and actual roles of third sector organisations, and the historical development of the sector. It assesses boundaries and relationships between the third sector, the state and the market, and its relationship with different social groups, service users and communities. It describes and explains the size and the role the sector takes in different periods, countries and areas of activity, and evaluates its impact. It considers the interdependence, interdependence, accountability and probity of third sector organisations. The course draws on examples from a range of areas of activity (such as education, employment, social care), and areas of activity with particular groups (such as migrants and refugees, women, children and older people), as well as a range of countries (including the UK, other European countries, the USA and some middle income countries).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in seminars and to complete one piece of written formative coursework

Indicative reading: Alcock, P (2010) 'A Strategic Unity: Defining the Third Sector in the UK' Voluntary Sector Review 1(1): 5-24; Anheier, H (2005) Nonprofit Organisations: Theory, Management, Policy London: Routledge; Billis, D (2010) Hybrid Organizations and the Third Sector: Challenges for Practice, Theory and Policy Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan; Edwards, M (2009) Civil Society Bristol: Policy Press; Evers, A and Laville, J-L (eds) (2009) The Third Sector in Europe Cheltenham: Edward Elgar; Harris, M and Rochester, C (eds) (2001) Voluntary Organisations and Social Policy: Perspectives on Change and Choice London: Palgrave; Ishkanian, A and Szeiter, S (2012) The Big Society Debate: A New Agenda for Social Welfare? Cheltenham: Edward Elgar; Kendall, J (2003) The Voluntary Sector: Comparative Perspectives in the UK London: Routledge; Powell, W and Steinberg, R (2006) The Nonprofit Sector: A Research Handbook New Haven: Yale University Press; Salamon, L and Anheier, H (1997) Defining the Nonprofit Sector: A Cross-National Analysis Manchester: Manchester University Press; Taylor, M (2011) Public Policy in the Community Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan

SA4G9 Dissertation for MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Currently Dr M Bhatia (LSE) and Dr N Spicer (LSHTM) as Programme Directors though the Programme Directorship sometimes varies from year to year.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc Health Policy, Planning and Financing. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide a foundation to students on dissertation-writing as well as to address queries students may have in relation to their dissertation topic, the methodology used, the likelihood of ethical approval, and data acquisition, among others.

The dissertation could be on any topic in the field of health policy, planning and/or financing. The main body of the dissertation should include the background to the research, method of investigation, results of the analysis, discussion and policy implications and recommendations.

Teaching: Teaching comprises two 2-hour seminars, one in the LT and one in the ST.

Students would find it of interest to attend the lectures of SA4C1 on SA4C1 Long Essay and the Research Process - 2 hours in the MT and 3 hours in the LT.

Finally, there is individual supervision for students on the dissertation.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write a summary of the proposed dissertation, outlining the title, background to the topic, methods to be employed, and likely expected results. A list of literature sources will be appended to this summary.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Dissertation due on 1st September.

SA4J8 Half Unit Social Policy and Development: Core Concepts

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anthony Hall OLD2.28, Prof David Lewis OLD2.25, Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin OLD2.57 and Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD2.42

and Dr Tim Hildebrandt OLD2.45

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students are expected to have a background in the social sciences and some practical work experience in developing countries.

Course content: The course is designed to give students a knowledge of core concepts within the theory and implementation of social policy in developing countries. Such an overview is essential for those focusing on mainstream social policy and development issues, and those choosing to specialise on non-governmental organisations. Main topics will include: Comparative social policy in north and south; social development and human development; conceptualizing the state, market and civil society as policy actors; citizenship and rights; comparative approaches to the understanding of poverty, wellbeing and exclusion; welfare regime theory; concepts of sustainable livelihoods; global institutions and the international aid system; conceptualizing the policy process.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT.

An unassessed study and research skills for social policy and development is also provided. This comprises five additional one hour sessions in MT. It includes an introduction to 'Conceptualising the Research Process', a self-learning web-based course, a review of research methods, use of evidence, ethics in research, basic study skills and dissertation guidance.

Formative coursework: All students will write and receive feedback on a formative essay (1500 words). Also, the student-led weekly seminars will require all students to make at least one joint seminar presentation on a question, a process designed to students plan an exam answer based on their reading.

SA4J9 Half Unit States, Social Policy and Development

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Anthony Hall OLD2.28, Prof David Lewis OLD2.25, Dr Muzafferettin Seckinelgin OLD2.57 and Dr Armine Ishkanian OLD2.42

and Dr Tim Hildebrandt OLD2.45

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Social Policy and Development: Core Concepts (SA4J8).

Lectures and seminars draw on both conceptual literature and discussion of the practical challenges of social policy interventions and projects in the developing world. Students should provide themselves with background information on their own countries, or ones on which they intend to focus. Students will be required to take part in a two day residential workshop on applied social planning at Cumberland Lodge in Windsor Great Park, during the Lent term. The cost is included in MSc SPD student fees. The cost of this three day workshop for students taking the course as an option is £200.

Course content: This course provides the analytical tools needed to understand and critically evaluate the key practical challenges of social development. It will apply concepts discussed earlier in the Social Policy and Development: Core Concepts half unit. A wide range of development contexts will be discussed using empirical research and case studies. Key themes include: linking social policy theory, implementation and practice; making social protection effective; managing sector reform processes; projects and programmes, including design and evaluation; participation and community development; gender analysis; the impact of corporate social responsibility and social enterprises on poverty reduction. Students will also be equipped with a working knowledge of the principles and tool of project design, through the project planning workshop, and will write an assessed 'project essay' that draws on topics from the course to present the case for a project that have designed.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the Lent Term. Students must complete a two-day residential workshop in the Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Following the project planning workshop, students will write and receive feedback on a 1500 word project proposal essay setting out a basic project idea.

SA4K1 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Global Health Policy: Institutions, Actors and Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: E.Pitchforth@lse.ac.uk

Availability: Compulsory on MSc Global Health. Not available as an outside option.

Course content: Globalization has not only impacted on the nature of emerging global health but the policy responses to these challenges. This module critically examines the transnational institutions and actors involved in global health policy and the interplay between them. The governance of global health issues has traditionally been carried out by various United Nations agencies (namely, the World Health Organisation), but given the transboundary nature of many global health issues (e.g., AIDS, SARS), a diverse range of actors, including the private sector, civil society organizations and national governments, are now integrally involved. The funding of global health programmes and policies, for example, has shifted from primarily bi-/multilateral donors to include private and public sectors and philanthropists. Alongside these changes 'Global Health Initiatives' (e.g. GFATM: Global Fund to fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria) have been developed and implemented to unify these diverse actors and funding streams. The module will use a number of case studies to examine the organisation and role of global health institutions, the challenges and opportunities presented by these governance arrangements, and their (intended and unintended) impacts on global health policy and practice. In doing so, the module will draw on contributions from a range of social sciences including sociology, political science and health services research.

Teaching: 10 one-hour lectures and 5 two-hour seminars in MT. A two-hour revision seminar in the ST.

SA4K2 Half Unit Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hakan Seckinelgin

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender (Research), MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is capped at 15 students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course aims to analyse and understand the way social policies deploy sexuality categories in regulating everyday life in developing countries, both in its public and private manifestations. It aims to consider social policy and particular interventions in their historical contexts, as a way of unpacking the construction of sexuality in the intersection of colonialism, gender, race, class and international policy frameworks in developing countries. The course also aims to interrogate the relationship between particular social policy prescriptions developed in most industrialized welfare societies and the way some of these are transferred to developing countries. The major concern of the analysis is to bring out the perceptions of sexuality that underwrite these policies and how these interact with existing perceptions of sexualities and their performances (identities, desires and bodily practices) in multiple developing country contexts. These policy areas include, among others, discussions of rights, entitlements, citizenship, same-sex marriage, sexually transmitted disease, HIV/AIDS, family policies, migration/border controls, criminality and employment-related policies.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay (2,000 words), which is to be handed in by the end of week eight of Lent Term.

Indicative reading: Aggleton, P., Boyce, P. and Moore, H. (2012) Understanding Global Sexualities. New Frontiers. London: Routledge; Butler, J. SA4K3 MPA Capstone Project

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA

Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Columbia), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Hertie), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and NUS), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in International Development, MPA in International Development (LSE and Columbia), MPA in International Development (LSE and Hertie), MPA in International Development (LSE and NUS), MPA in International Development (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE & Columbia University), MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE & Sciences Po), MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE and Hertie), MPA in Public Policy and Management (LSE and NUS), MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Columbia), MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Hertie), MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and NUS), MPA in Public and Economic Policy (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in Public and Social Policy and MSc in Public Policy and Administration (LSE and Peking University). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 6 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by an external organisation. Typical clients include public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations or think tanks and NGOs. The group will have from October to February to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Assessment: Project (60%, 20000 words) and presentation (20%) in the LT.

Continuous assessment (20%) in the MT.

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances. 1) A presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. The presentation must take place by week 8 of the Lent term, on a date agreed with the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation after receipt of the presentation and project report. 2) A group project report of approximately 12-15,000 words (and no more than 20,000 words) to be submitted during the Lent Term. The report is read by academic markers and their assessment accounts for 60% of the final grade. 3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

SA4K4 MPA Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is also coded DV4B4, EC4B4 and EU4B4, GV4B4.

Course content: MPA students must write a dissertation (of no more than 10,000 words) on a topic of their choice to be agreed with their supervisor.

Teaching: Students will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide guidance on this piece of work. MPA Dissertation Workshops will be held to assist in the development of the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) in the ST. Project (10%) in the MT.

1) The dissertation title, abstract, contents page and a 5 page synopsis/introduction will count for 10% of the overall dissertation mark. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their supervisor. Students will be given feedback on their abstracts. 2) The full dissertation of no more than 10,000 words will account for the remaining 90% of the overall mark.

SA4K7 Half Unit Health Care Negotiations (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Panagiotis Kanavos COW3.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Financing Health Care (SA4G1).

Course content: Lectures will cover the following material: The dynamics of health care stakeholders and the shifting balance of power among them; Introduction to the concept of negotiations and principles of game theory (principles of game theory, definition and properties of a Nash equilibrium; static and dynamic games; games with complete and incomplete information); the dilemma of complex, discontinuous, multiparty health care negotiations; the populator pricing exercise; the seven elements: defining success in health care negotiations; management as negotiation: frameworks and tools for analysing decision processes; the seven elements: defining success in health care negotiations; value creation and allocation in health care systems; when the people are the problem (partisan perceptions exercise; the three perspectives; the ladder of inference; the elements of relationship management).

Seminars will be interactive drawn based on case studies from specific health care environments (e.g. hospitals, drug coverage decision; health technology assessment; conflict between management and clinical excellence), and use frameworks such as Choice Analysis (a currently unresolved negotiation in which another party has or is expected to reject a proposal), Complex Problem Solving (a currently unresolved and complex situation involving so many parties and issues that the situation is unclear or confusing and our ability to influence the situation is in doubt), Rapport Management (one or more currently unresolved negotiations in which resolution of a troubled personal or corporate relationship with the key person(s) on the other side constitutes one of the major requirements or aspirations for agreement), Decision Rights Analysis (a live, unresolved task of persuasion involving one or more individuals negotiating in their capacity as employees of a large health care provider), and Value Creation (a complex, live, unresolved negotiation where lots of differing interests are implicated by the subject matter and the parties do not share the same interests or have the same priorities).

Teaching: The course will comprise 10 x 1-hour interactive lectures, 1 x 1-hour revision session and 5 x 2-hour interactive seminars, where students will discuss specific case studies.

Formative coursework: Students will be given a case study—reflecting a real-world situation - by the end of lecture 4 and will be asked to come up with a credible strategy/plan, which they will need to write up (2,000 words), submit and present during seminars.

SA4K8 Half Unit Health Care Quality Management (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anne Michaelsen COW3.05

This course will be led by Dr. Michael Holland, Associate Medical Director and Consultant Psychiatrist, South London and Maudsley NHS Foundation Trust.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An introduction and overview of quality improvement methodology as used in healthcare settings internationally. The course will cover the following areas:

- 1) History of quality management: The course will start with an overview of key theories in quality management such as those described Taylor, Shewhart, Deming and Juran. An overview and critical appraisal of quality assurance systems used in healthcare, such as ISO 9000, Magnet, Baldrige award and different types of healthcare regulation and their role in quality improvement. It will also include a discussion of patient-focused measures of quality such as patient-recorded outcome measures (PROMS).
- 2) A critical assessment of the mainstream schools of thought of quality as part of the production process - this will include a study of the relationship between supply chain procurement management and quality as well as the requirements for good production models and the critique of evidence-based decision-making in the clinical setting
- 3) Quantitative methods in quality management - This course will examine a number of tools for quality management purposes - both how to do them as well as how they fit into the various schools of thought on quality management. It will cover statistical process control which is a method of statistical analysis of time series data that is used in quality management. This method shows whether there is variability in processes and gives the user an ability to both measure improvements and declines in performance of both processes and outcomes and to understand whether processes are performing within acceptable limits. A computer based seminar on the use of Statistical Process control will also be held. An overview of the quality improvement methodology known as Design of Experiments will also be given. The role of case mix adjustment in quality assessment will also be discussed.
- 4) Process Mapping - Understanding the value and power of mapping processes both at a systems level and at the individual process level. This will be accompanied with a worked through example of process mapping with processes which the students are in a computer-based seminar. They will also be given an example of a process map from a healthcare environment to work on optimising.
- 5) Theories of capacity and flow management and examples of this in both in-patient and outpatient settings will be discussed. This will also include how DRG/HRG payment has a role within organisations of capacity management.
- 6) A critical overview of Lean, Six Sigma and Model for Improvement. While these models can be useful in healthcare management, these are not deep philosophies of organisation and many of the things which make healthcare unique (e.g. asymmetry of information, difficulty of measuring quality, patient behaviour and societal preferences for fairness) are sometimes not accounted for in these models.

Teaching: 5 lectures (5 x 2 hours) and 5 seminars or workshops (5 x 2 hours). As indicated above the process mapping seminar and statistical process control seminar will be computer based (2 seminars). The other 3 seminars will be non-computer based.

Formative coursework: A case study will be provided for the students to analyse and write an essay answering questions relating to it. Feedback will be provided on this essay by the seminar leader.

SA4K9 Half Unit Advanced Health Economics (modular)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alistair Mcguire COW4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Health Economics, Policy and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover: international comparisons of health care expenditure, health care insurance, contract theory applied to the health care sector (including principal-agent theory and incentive payment mechanisms), equity in health care, health behaviour and an introduction to econometric analysis applied to health care data.

Teaching: 6 lectures (2 hours each) and 5 seminars (2 hours each).

Formative coursework: Students will make group presentations on topics covered in lecture. Students may receive feedback on these presentations from their seminar leader after completion. Alternatively, students may write a 2,500 word essay on the topic of their presentation for seminar leader feedback.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words).

SA4L1 Half Unit The Governance of Welfare: The Nation State and the European Union

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Mangen OLD 2.62

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy). This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The initial lecture introduces the principal methods and analytic models of comparative social policy. This is followed by a review of the development of modern welfare states in Western Europe from the last quarter of the 19th century, when many of the key institutional features of European welfare were being created. Then a series of lectures provides analysis of contemporary welfare models as they have evolved in major EU member states since the end of the Second World War: Sweden (representing social democracy) France and Germany (representing two variants of 'conservative corporatism' as Esping-Andersen in the Three Worlds of Welfare Capitalism termed them), Italy and Spain (as representatives of the Mediterranean 'middle way') and the emerging welfare states of the transitional economies in the new EU members. Discussion of the principal social policy competences of the European Union completes the teaching in the last three sessions.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit one formative essay of 1500 words by the end of week 6 of the Michaelmas Term.

Indicative reading: Baldwin, P The Politics of Social Solidarity - Class Bases of European Welfare States 1875-1975, Cambridge University Press 1990; Buchs M New Governance of European Social Policy: the Open Method of Coordination. Assessment: One summative essay of 3000 words (100%).

SA4L2 Half Unit

Contemporary Issues in European Social Policy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Mangen OLD2.62

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines a range of critical social problems shared by EU member states and the role of the EU in resolving them within the framework of deepening European integration. Issues are addressed from the perspective of growing EU-level involvement in policy elaboration. Demographic, ethnic and gender issues feature prominently. Specific policy areas relate to the integration of social security and labour markets; interventions targeting social exclusion; the funding, organisation and challenges of providing pensions and health care; urban policy-making; and the relative role of migration and education and training policies in the regeneration of European labour markets. The course ends with an assessment of globalisation and the threats and opportunities that arise for the European Social Model.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit one formative essay of 1500 words by the end of week 6 of the Lent Term.

SA4L5 Half Unit Applied Health Econometrics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Grace Lordan OLD2.26

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in International Health Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Health Economics (SA408).

Course content: Most research questions, in health economics require students to apply econometric techniques. This course will introduce these techniques and students exiting the course can expect to have acquired a competency in econometrics as it is applied to health economics. The methods studied will be as described above. The seminars- which are lab based- will allow students to apply these methods to practical problems using Stata and decipher the results.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A set of problems given in seminar 4, tackled without help during the seminar and submitted afterwards. This work will be read and feedback provided.

SA4L6 Half Unit Illegal Drugs and Their Control: Theory, Policy and Practice

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Shiner OLD2.49

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research), MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning) and Master of Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with criminology or sociology is preferable but not essential

Course content: This multi-disciplinary course draws on sociology, psychology, criminology and law to examine the place and meaning of illegal drug use in late modern societies and associated policy responses. It begins by considering drug use and subcultural formations; the 'normalisation' of drug use; drug tourism; the role of addiction; and the organisation of drug markets. It then goes on to consider the making of drugs policy; drugs, policing and the law; treatment and harm reduction; drugs as a development and human rights issue; decriminalisation and alternatives to prohibition.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit a formative essay (2,000 words), which is to be handed in by the end of week eight of MT.

SA4M1 Half Unit Politics of Social Policy: Welfare and Work in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timo Fleckenstein OLD1.17

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy), MSc in Social Policy (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (Social Policy and Planning). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course explores the politics of social policy in advanced political economies. In the first part of the course, the main analytical approaches for the cross-national analysis of welfare states are introduced (such as the industrialism thesis, the power resources model, new institutionalism, feminist theory and the globalisation thesis). These will be examined in the context of the rise of modern welfare states and their transformations since the end of the 'Golden Age' in the mid-1970s. These analyses and the theoretical approaches to cross-national study of welfare states will be harnessed in the second part of the course when the focus shifts towards more recent policy developments since the 1990s. The empirical focus is on the welfare-and-work nexus. The course analyses the development of labour market and family policies in Nordic countries, Continental Europe, Anglo-phone countries and East Asia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Seminar members will be expected to make presentations to the seminar, and submit a formative essay of 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Armingeon, Klaus and Bonoli, Giuliano, eds. (2006) The Politics of Post-Industrial Welfare States, London: Routledge. Castles, Frances G. SA4V8 Half Unit MPA Policy Paper

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Patrick Dunleavy CON5.19 and Dr Lloyd Gruber CON6.03

plus supervisors from MPA departments

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: MPA students to write an individually-authored MPA Policy Paper on a topic developed in consultation with their MPA supervisor. Each paper analyses a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and proposes an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. Papers cannot exceed 6,000 words and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures in the MT.

SA4X6 Welfare Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29 and Dr Berkay Ozcan OLD2.32

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and MSc in Social Policy (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: The course has no formal pre-requisites. Because much of the empirical evidence referred to in the course is quantitative in nature, a familiarity with basic statistical concepts and basic calculus are very useful. These topics are reviewed during the pre-sessional course of the MPA programme (EC408).

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the analysis and measurement of the welfare of individuals and societies, examining concepts, measurement and data, as well as providing illustrations. The aims are to provide an understanding of the main tools used to measure and monitor individuals and social welfare, and to develop skills for assessing academic research and official statistics (as produced by national or international agencies) and for undertaking one's own analysis. The first half of the course focuses on monetary measures of economic wellbeing notably income, and on the experience of OECD countries (especially the UK, EU, and USA), but the aim is also to place these in the context of developments based on other approaches and in other countries including middle- and low-income nations. The topics covered include measurement of inequality, poverty, and mobility; setting poverty thresholds and equivalence scales; data sources and their quality; empirical illustrations considering assessments of trends within countries, cross-national differences, and global poverty and inequality. The second half of the course broadens the perspective to consider a range of non-monetary, multidimensional, and subjective measures of welfare for individuals and societies. Examples include occupational and socio-economic status (SES), anthropometric measures, the Human Development Index and related indices of development, and measures of happiness and life satisfaction.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading for the course is in journal articles. Books providing overviews include Atkinson AB (1983) The Economics of Inequality, and Salverda W, Nolan B, Smeeding TM (eds) (2009) The Oxford Handbook on Economic Inequality. A full reading list is distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the ST.

SA4X6E Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Welfare Analysis and Measurement

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins and Dr Berkay Ozcan

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Pre-requisites for this course are completion of Empirical Methods for Public Policy and Economic Policy Analysis.

Course content: This course provides the analytical tools to evaluate public policy interventions with respect to both efficiency and equity. The first part of the course provides students with the analytical tools to assess the efficiency of public policy interventions through examples based on a range of topics including health, education, crime, social services and social care. The second part focuses on issues of inequality and poverty. The topics covered include issues such as measurement of inequality and poverty, setting poverty thresholds and equivalence scales, assessment of differences between social groups, empirical modelling of the income distribution.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%). Please note that online examinations usually take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are usually due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

SO401 Social Research Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ursula Henz and Dr Jesse Potter

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society and MSc in Political Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Part-time students taking the MSc over two years may take the course in either the first or second year.

Course content: The course covers both quantitative and qualitative research methods. Special topics include: different epistemological positions; formulating research problems; the social context of research; ethical aspects of research; concepts and their measurement; attitude measurement and scaling; inference and generalization including probability and non-probability sampling; research design, including experimental and quasi-experimental; comparative research; methods of data collection including questionnaire design, structured, semi-structured and unstructured interviewing, ethnography and participant observation; introductions to contemporary survey research techniques by telephone and by the Internet; other sources of data for sociological research; analysis of qualitative data, including computer assisted analysis. As the course does not cover quantitative data analysis, students might consider taking MI451 to complement the course.

Teaching: The course is taught by a mixture of lectures, seminars and workshops. It normally provides two hours of teaching each week in MT, with 3 hour workshops in the LT and three revision seminars in ST.

Formative coursework: Students must participate in group presentations and undertake several pieces of compulsory practical work during the year.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook that covers the content of the whole course. Useful books are: R H Hoyle, M J Harris & C M Judd, Research Methods in Social Relations (7th edn 2002); D A de Vaus, Surveys in Social Research (5th edn 2001); R M Groves, F J Fowler Jr., M P Couper, et al. SO407 Politics and Society

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Sociology. This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Social Research Methods and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to explore some of the great debates about the relationship between politics and society. It will examine the interaction between political institutions, economic interests and cultural ideas, especially in societies that are both democratic and capitalist. The course begins by looking at the canonical writings of authors like Marx, Weber and Tocqueville. The rest of the course will then provide you with a chance to study some of the major empirical controversies that have animated political sociologists. Each week, we will discuss questions like: Why are some social movements more powerful than others? How does social change shape parties and elections? Do repressive states give rise to radicalism? What explains the growth of the far right? Why are welfare states more developed in some countries than others? Why is there no Labor Party in the United States? Under what conditions can democracy survive? What gave rise to national identities? Do authoritarian states inhibit development? Why is there a resurgence of ethnic and religious violence? And has neo-liberalism become hegemonic? In addition, the course will enable you to build up your knowledge of a number of countries and to assess the strengths and weaknesses of some of the main theories and approaches that have dominated the study of political sociology. These include functionalist, rational choice, and institutionalist theories, as well as historical and comparative approaches.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Seminars: Papers will be presented by participants and, on occasion, by guest speakers. In addition to the weekly seminar, there will be a number of additional seminars specifically concerned with research strategies in political sociology. Students should attend the lecture course SO203 Political Sociology when available.

Formative coursework: Members of the seminar will be required to present a number of papers during the course of the seminar. There will also be a termly essay in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: B. Anderson, Imagined Communities; R. Archer, Why is There No Labour Party in the United States?; M. Desai, State Formation and Radical Democracy in India; P Evans et al, Bringing the State Back In; A. Kholi, State-Directed Development; S M Lipset, 'The Social Requisites of Democracy Revisited', American Sociological Review, vol 59; S Lukes, Power: A Radical View; D McAdam, Comparative Perspectives on Social Movements; M Mann, The Sources of Social Power; M Olson, The Logic of Collective Action; T Skocpol, Protecting Soldiers and Mothers; C. Tilly, The Politics of Collective Violence; L. Weiss, The Myth of the Powerless State.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Exam will be held during the Summer Term exam session.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S219A, no later than 16:30 on the first Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

Approaches to Human Rights

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margot Salomon TW2.11.01F and Dr Claire Moon

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Human Rights. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. The course is capped but a limited number of places are usually available to students from outside the MSc in Human Rights who wish to take this as an option. Priority is given to postgraduate students in the Sociology Department and those registered on the LL.M. The course is also available as an outside option for other MSc degrees where regulations and numbers permit. Students from other programmes who wish to apply for a place on SO424 must complete the online application form on LSEforYou stating reasons for wishing to take the course.

Course content: This is a multi-disciplinary course that provides students with a rigorous and focused engagement with different disciplinary perspectives on the subject of human rights including philosophy, sociology and law. It provides students with contending interpretations of human rights as an idea and practice from the different standpoints that the disciplines present (including debates from within and between the disciplines), and investigates the particular knowledge claims and modes of reasoning that the respective disciplines engage. The course applies the insights of disciplinary frameworks of understanding to key human rights issues such as the right to life, free speech, humanitarian intervention, war, genocide, human rights activism, , relativism, group rights, poverty, globalization, terrorism and civil liberties.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Active participation in the workshops is expected and students may be asked to make a presentation to their group.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus and students are expected to read widely from more general texts on human rights, to more specific texts outlining the debates on human rights from a particular disciplinary perspective. Introductory reading: Relevant books that provide an introduction and overview of the key areas include: Jack Donnelly, Universal Human Rights in Theory and Practice; Michael Freeman, Human Rights; Philip Alston and Ryan Goodman, International Human Rights (2013). Philosophy: P. Jones, Rights, (1994); A. Swift, Political Philosophy: a Beginners' Guide for Students and Politicians, (2006). International Law: A. SO447 Not available in 2013/14 Topics in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suki Ali S216

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies. This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This new course is a whole unit that functions as the intellectual core of our proposed MSc programme in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial-Studies. It will offer a preliminary genealogy of race thinking which connects the concerns of anthropology and imperial government with new scholarly debates over multi-culture, diversity, genomics, human rights and the morality and legality of reviving colonial power. The course is sociological in focus but is enriched by the introduction of scholarly discussions from neighbouring disciplines. We regard this multi-disciplinary character as a strength and an asset the helps to define the uniqueness of our approach. The course offers students a broad exposure to theory and history of race, racism and ethnicity as well as an opportunity to consider a range of contemporary instances in which the social and political problems arising from these factors of division have been manifested. We start by addressing the history and character of the colonial and imperial expansion with which modern theories of race and ethnicity were intertwined. The first block introduces material drawn from various disciplines that is aimed at interpreting the social, political, governmental, cultural and economic characteristics of the colonial "contact zones" which were so important in making racial categories and keeping them alive. The development of racialised conceptions of humanity, progress, civilisation, national identity, cultural difference and geo-politics are tracked through the rise and fall of European empires in the second and third blocks. Block three takes on the scholarly agenda set by the anti-colonial theorists and intellectuals who led the movements against colonial rule as its initial point of departure. The final block engages contemporary approaches to diaspora, intercultural and biocolonialism before concluding with a sequence addressed to the failure of human rights initiatives to sufficiently engage the issues of racial hierarchy and racism. The course will be taught through a weekly pattern of linked lectures and seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of writing a 3,000 word paper in preparation for the assessed essay.

SO448 City Design: Research Studio

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Suzanne Hall and Dr Francine Tonkiss

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The City Design Research Studio is the central unit of the MSc programme, linking the critical issues raised in the core and optional lecture courses with the practical analysis of issues of city design and development, and proposals for urban intervention. This course promotes a practical understanding of the city as a social and built environment. It will provide students with an appreciation of the complexities of urban design and development processes, and with interdisciplinary tools for addressing specific urban challenges. The course addresses design as a mode of research and practice that shapes urban environments, responds to urban problems, and connects visual, social and material forms in the city. It aims to integrate the physical, economic, social and political aspects of urban contexts, and develop ways to analyse these visually, textually and verbally.

Teaching: The Studio course runs every Monday and Tuesday in MT and LT through lectures, workshops and regular small-group tutorials; additional specialist seminars and workshops are scheduled throughout the Studio course. Studio groups are expected to work together during the scheduled Studio hours, and prepare collectively for regular workshops and tutorials. In MT, the Studio course focuses on methods and approaches of social and spatial research and analysis. In LT, Studio groups work intensively on a detailed analysis of a specific urban context, and develop a practical proposal for intervention in that site.

Formative coursework: Group presentations for faculty and guest critics. 1 x research paper and site analysis.

Assessment:

The assessment consists of one Studio portfolio (50%) and an individual tutor assessment (50%).

SO449 Independent Project

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Francine Tonkiss S209

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The independent project enables students to develop an original and extended piece of work on any approved topic within the field of the MSc programme - students are encouraged, but not required, to develop work on themes or sites introduced in their Studio or core courses. The project may focus on a small-scale urban research study or on a practical proposal for urban intervention. Approval for the topic must be obtained from your academic advisor.

Teaching: In LT students attend a dissertation workshop and then submit a provisional project abstract; academic advisors for the independent project are assigned on the basis of the abstract. In ST, each student has five supervisory meetings with their academic advisor, together with group project workshops and one day of final reviews with members of faculty. Students are also encouraged to consult with other members of faculty during regular office hours.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit one project abstract, and to produce regular formative project work in consultation with their academic advisor.

Assessment: Project (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term.

SO451 Half Unit Cities by Design

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Burdett TW2 8.01L

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is available on the MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course and we can only accept 32 students. If you are not registered on the MSc City Design and Social Design please submit an e-mail to Ricky Burdett motivating your inclusion on the course, ONCE you have attended the first introductory lecture where we will be available to respond to individual questions.

Course content: The course examines the relationship between built form and its social, political and cultural impacts in the contemporary, changing city. By introducing students to key concepts and methodologies in visual narratives and spatial analysis, the course investigates how the design of our complex urban environments affects the people who live in them. Using the city as a laboratory - through the analysis of case studies and discussion seminars - students are encouraged to evaluate how new policies and projects will impact on the macro and micro scales of city landscapes. While the course does not focus on urban policy, it provides students with the critical tools to understand the paradigms that underpin much of contemporary urban practice in cities of the global North and South, with a special focus on London's political and spatial context. Key issues include urban analysis and public space; densification and the compact city; gated communities and social exclusion; accommodating complexity and difference; boundaries and borders in contemporary city.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Written feedback is given within two weeks of the essay submission, and in addition a writing seminar is incorporated in the course in preparation for the summative assessed essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course. Core background includes: Burdett, R and Sudjic, D (2008) The Endless City, London, Phaidon; Burdett, R and Sudjic, D (2011) Living in the Endless City; Larice, M. and Macdonald, E. (eds) (2007) The Urban Design Reader. London and New York: Routledge; R. Sennett, (1991) The Conscience of the Eye: the design and social life of cities, London, Faber and Faber.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

An illustrated course essay of not more than 5,000 words to be submitted by 4pm on the first Tuesday of LT, two hard copies to be handed in to the Cities Administration Office, a third copy to be posted to Moodle.

Attendance at seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO452 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Urban Environment

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: To develop a critical understanding of the conditions and the politics of sustainability that shape the urban environment. This is an interdisciplinary course that introduces students to a critical understanding of the conditions that shape urban environments. It makes connections between the social, physical, and environmental aspects of cities through a broad range of topics. The course is structured around four key themes: Conceptualisations of urban environments, Environmental and spatial justice, Politics of infrastructure, and approaches to sustainable urban environments. The aim of the course is to introduce the students to the range of scales and social actors who imagine different kinds of urban environments, and the issues at stake for 'sustainability' in these imaginings.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Key texts include: Harvey, D (1996) Justice, Nature, and the Geography of Difference, Oxford: Blackwell; Heynen, N., Kaika, M., and Swyngedouw, E. SO454 Half Unit Families in Contemporary Societies: a Life Course Perspective

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ursula Henz S279

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Sociology.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides an introduction into selected issues of the sociology of the family as well as an introduction of core concepts of life-course research. It examines continuities and changes in modern life-courses by drawing on a rich body of empirical studies about the family.

Major themes include: concepts of the life course; childhood; reproducing inequality; parenthood and childlessness; causes and consequences of divorce; gender roles and the division of paid and unpaid work; intergenerational ties.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. General reading:

J Scott, J Treas & M Richards (eds.), The Blackwell Companion to the Sociology of Families (2004); S McRae (ed.), Changing Britain. Families and Households in the 1990s (2000); U Beck & E Beck-Gernsheim, The Normal Chaos of Love (1995); G H Elder & J Z Giele The Craft of Life Course Research (2009); D Morgan, Family Connections: An Introduction to Family Studies (1996); C Smart & B Neale Family Fragments? (1999); J M White & D M Klein, Family Theories (1996).

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay with submission sheets on each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S219A, no later than 16:30 on the first Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day. Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO457 Half Unit Political Reconciliation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Moon S287

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is capped.

Course content: The course explores the politics of reconciliation by identifying and examining its key themes, the practices and institutions in which it is embedded and the political subjects of reconciliation discourse. It is an interdisciplinary course that draws upon literature from sociology, law, political theory, anthropology and philosophy amongst others, because any investigation of reconciliation must be approached from a variety of perspectives in order to understand and interpret its wider social and political reach, as well as its limitations. The course introduces students to current research in the field of transitional justice and historical injustice, and draws upon a range of examples from Africa, Latin America, post-communist Europe, Australia and the US. Topics include transitional justice as a field of practice and a field of knowledge; historical injustice - apologies and reparations; state crimes; retributive and restorative justice; perpetration; theology and therapy in reconciliation; memory and atrocity.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: One formative essay in week seven of the MT (does not contribute towards the overall mark for the course).

Indicative reading: Hannah Arendt, Eichmann in Jerusalem: A Report on the Banality of Evil (Penguin Books, 1977); Penny Green and Tony Ward, State Crime: Governments, Violence and Corruption (London: Pluto Press, 2004); Priscilla Hayner, Unspeakable Truths: Confronting State Terror and Atrocity (Routledge, 2001); Michael Humphrey, The Politics of Atrocity and Reconciliation: From Terror to Trauma (Routledge, 2002); Karl Jaspers, The Question of German Guilt (Capricorn Books, 1961); Neil Kritz, Transitional Justice: How Emerging Democracies Reckon with Former Regimes (US Institute of Peace, 1995); Claire Moon, Narrating Political Reconciliation: South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission (Lexington, 2008); Judith Shklar, Legalism: Law, Morals, and Political Trials (Harvard University Press, 1986); Nicholas Tavuchis & Mea Culpa, A Sociology of Apology and Reconciliation (Stanford University Press, 1991); Richard Wilson, The Politics of Truth and Reconciliation in South Africa: Legitimizing the Post-Apartheid State (Cambridge University Press, 2001).

SO461 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Racial Formations of Modernity

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will explore the sociological, political and philosophical debates that have emerged where the concept of modernity intersects with the formation and reproduction of racial hierarchy. It will look in particular at articulations of modernity with colonial power, war, national character and, above all, with the idea of "race". Four inter-linked lines of enquiry will be followed:

- 1] We will explore some of the different ways that the subject of modernity has been imagined and articulated in racialised forms;
- 2] We will see what attributes and experiences have qualified that subject as properly human and rational. How has it been endowed with or deprived of rights?
- 3] We will try to understand where its human identity has been recognised as coming from, both culturally and materially.
- 4] We will explore where cosmopolitan loyalties have emerged in conjunction with demands to see and act beyond the boundaries of immediate particularity. These inquiries will be pursued in the urgent spirit that follows from another timely desire: the need to find histories of our multi-cultural present.

The intellectual core of this course is historical and sociological but we will also be reading a range of material drawn from a variety of different disciplinary sources. The underlying approach is comparative in character. Students will be asked to become familiar with a number of contrasting historical cases and to examine a wealth of theoretical perspectives that have been applied to the analysis of races, racisms and raciolgies by writers who have often enjoyed more than an exclusively scholarly relationship to their analyses of race and racism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One formative essay will be required.

Indicative reading: Stephen Toulmin, Cosmopolis; Ivan Hannaford, Race, (John Hopkins); George Fredrickson, Racism: A Short History (Princeton); David Goldberg, The Racial State, (Blackwell). Core readings will be supplemented weekly by a comprehensive combination of essays, journal articles and online materials.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Attendance at all seminars and submission of all set coursework is required.

Ethnic and Religious Violence in Post-Colonial Societies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The focus of this course is a comparative, theoretically driven analysis of the varying forms of 'ethnic' and 'religious' violence with a focus on post-colonial Asia and Africa. The course will draw on sociological theory, using structuralist and constructivist theories of ethnicity and a variety of theoretical perspectives on violence that draw on recent work in political sociology, anthropology, and post-colonial studies. The course will address concerns such as post-colonial transformations of the state, the roles of political organisation and informal networks, political-economy and the class and gender bases of violence, transformations of space, as well as issues of identity, memory and recognition. Topics include: theories of violence; ethnicity and ethnic conflict; post-colonial states; state failure; riots; pogroms; genocide; sexual violence in ethnic conflict; religious fundamentalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Brass, Paul (1996) Riots and Pogroms. New York University Press; (1997) Theft of an Idol: Text and Context in the Representation of Collective Violence. SO465 Half Unit

City-making: the Politics of Urban Form

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Philipp Rode TW2 8.01K and Dr Savvas Verdis TW2.8.01.D

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in City Design and Social Science. This course is available on the MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This case study-led course provides a critical understanding of major urban development initiatives and practices in international city contexts. It will introduce students to the following knowledge and skills:

- general understanding of political theories underlying urban development models
- ability to situate major urban development initiatives within different development cultures and socio-economic policy agendas
- understanding the role of public, private and third party actors and formal and informal urban development processes
- perspectives on decision making at the strategic, pre-design stage for urban development initiatives and ability to relate urban policy to spatial outcomes, operating at different scales
- knowledge of key evaluation approaches and analytic frameworks used in the analysis of proposed and existing urban developments
- understanding of how urban development objectives, phases and processes can be integrated and how policy making, economic development, urban planning, city design, architecture, and engineering are related.

The course content is based on contemporary projects and urban trends examined in the context of cities throughout the world. These range from policies such as congestion charging (London) and Progressive City Development (Medellin) to urban development trends such as extreme urbanism in Mumbai and privatist planning (Canary Wharf, London and Santa Fe, Mexico City). Such projects will be examined through critical frameworks that include utilitarianism, cost benefit analysis, social and environmental justice, citizenship theory and the capabilities approach. The course will focus on negotiation, politics, financing, appraisals and decision-making for cities by inviting practitioners, experts and policy makers to join individual sessions for presentations and debate. Seminars and assessed project work for the course will be based on the analysis of Development Strategies and City Design briefs. An archive of the course together with videos of the 2010 lectures can be found on: <http://www.citymaking.com/>.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: 1 x contribution to student debate OR 1 x critical statement following a guest lecture AND submission of a 1,000 word position statement.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S219A, no later than 16:30 on the first Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO467 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Race, Ethnicity and Migration in Britain (post-1945)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Gender, MSc in Gender, Development and Globalisation, MSc in Gender, Policy and Inequalities, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Race, Ethnicity in Contemporary Britain; Race, Migration and the Legacy of Empire; Race and Migration post 1945; Race and Immigration Legislation; Race Relations and Equal Opportunities; Race and 'Riots'; Multiculturalism, Citizenship and Community Cohesion; Race, Religion and Securitisation; New Migrations and the Asylum Issue; Whiteness and the Rise of the Far Right.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: 1 x 1,500 word essay.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

SO468 Half Unit International Migration and Migrant Integration

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick McGovern S285

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Migration and Public Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Coverage of contemporary sociological perspectives on migrant integration including theories of international migration, immigration policy, labour market incorporation; welfare and social rights; 'assimilation' and social integration; multiculturalism; and the second generation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write two non-assessed pieces of work during the term.

Indicative reading: There is no recommended textbook. Books of a general nature that cover substantial parts of the syllabus are: S. Castles and M. J. Miller (2009) The Age of Migration (4th edn); P. Kvisto and T. Faist (2010) Beyond A Border. A more comprehensive bibliography will be available to students taking this course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Exam will be held during the Summer Term exam session.

SO469 Half Unit Risk and Governance: A Sociological Approach

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter S217

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Regulation (Research), MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students an advanced understanding of the various ways in which risk is governed in modern societies and an appreciation of the complexities of different levels of risk governance.

It will consider three main areas. First, state based risk governance regimes; second, risk governance beyond the state; and third transnational risk governance. The topics under consideration include a critical discussion of what is regarded as risk evidence and the role of experts in policy making; how state regulators incorporate risk based approaches into their governance regimes; the role of insurance companies and other business organizations in risk governance; the role of the public; and attempts to governance risks which traverse national borders. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including the environment, finance, biotechnology and food.

Teaching: 25 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students should hand in one 2,000 word formative essay.

Indicative reading: Ericson, R.V., Doyle, A. and Barry, D. (2003) Insurance as Governance University of Toronto Press. Hood, C., Rothstein, H. and Baldwin, R. (2001) The Government of Risk. Oxford: Oxford University Press. Hutter, BM (2010) (ed) Anticipating Risk Cambridge University Press. Renn, O. (2008) Risk Governance. London (Earthscan) Chapters 1 and 9.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S219A, no later than 16:30 on the second Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

SO470 Half Unit The Sociology of Markets

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Juan Pardo Guerra S265

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Economic Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course offers an introduction to social studies of markets: it presents an analysis of markets as complex sociotechnical devices that create and transform specific social worlds. The course covers eight substantive theoretical themes, which are examined through empirical case studies. Case studies are developed by students, and have included: electricity markets, illegal drug markets, pharmaceutical markets, financial markets, supermarkets, and data markets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A portfolio documenting two case studies, a presentation and a 1 x 1500 word essay are required.

Indicative reading: Recommended texts: Callon, M. (1998). The laws of the markets. Blackwell Publishers: Oxford; Knorr-Cetina, K., & Preda, A. (2006). The sociology of financial markets. Oxford University Press: Oxford; MacKenzie, D. A., Muniesa, F., & Siu, L. (2007). Do economists make markets? Princeton University Press: Princeton; Pinch, T., & Swedberg, R. (2008). Living in a material world: economic sociology meets science and technology studies. The MIT Press: Cambridge MA.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Assessment will consist of an essay analysis of two case studies along with the submission of a portfolio (100%).

Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S219A, no later than 16:30 on the second Wednesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Attendance at all workshop sessions and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO471 Half Unit Technology, Power and Culture

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Judy Wajcman S203

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to give students a detailed understanding of sociologically informed approaches to the social studies of science and technology. It will consider how macro theories of post-industrial society (from Bell to Castells) have conceptualised the role of technology in social change. It will then look at the development of STS as a field that highlights the constitutive role of objects and artefacts in social relations. In other words, it will reflect upon sociology's traditional neglect of the social life of things or materiality. These broad themes will then be elaborated substantively. First, by considering the role of technology in reconfiguring time, space and mobility. Second, by considering power relations and social inequalities embedded in digital technologies, such as the Internet and mobile phones. Third, by treating technology as a culture that shapes gender identities, such as those that find expression in the virtuality of cyberspace. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including the environment, the internet, robotics, sex, and weapons.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Hackett, E. et al (2008) The Handbook of Science and Technology Studies (MIT Press). MacKenzie, D. and Wajcman J. (1999) The Social Shaping of Technology (MIT Press) Suchman, L. (2007) Human-Machine Configurations (CUP) Turkle, S. (2011) Alone Together (Basic Books). Wajcman, J. (2004) TechnoFeminism (Polity Press). Morozov, E. (2013) To Save Everything, Click Here: Technology, Solutionism and the Urge to Fix Problems That Don't Exist (Allen Lane)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

SO473 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Crime, Control and the City

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Janet Foster S206

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Criminal Justice Policy, MSc in Regional And Urban Planning Studies and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This half unit course examines crime and disorder in city landscapes, the relationship between crime, space and place, and the complex mix of informal and formal social controls that influence different types and levels of crime. Drawing on a range of comparative literature from different cities, and using a mixture of classic and contemporary texts, we examine the importance of informal social control in maintaining social order in cities, the role of policing, and what happens when formal and informal social controls fail using the recent riots, gangs and homicide as examples. We also explore the principles of crime prevention - both physical and social - and use public housing as a case study to critically examine the relationship between crime and design.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Bottoms, A (2007) 'Place, Space, Crime and Disorder' in Maguire M et al (eds.) The Oxford Handbook of Criminology Chapter 17, Cochrane, A and Talbot, D (eds.) Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the ST.

Students who do a ride along with the police will also be required to write up a short report (approx. 500 words) on their visit and what they learnt from it.

SO474 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Bodies, Markets and Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carrie Frieze S207

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: We are witnessing ever expanding economies in human and animal bodies and bodily parts in contemporary social life. These bioeconomies undergird much of bioscientific research along with biomedical care. These bioeconomies also facilitate the contemporary 'knowledge economy'. Gametes and embryos in assisted reproduction, embryos and cord blood in regenerative medicine, animals in experimental science, and humans in clinical trials are just a few examples of such bioeconomies. This course explores these economies in human and animal bodies and bodily parts, with a focus on corresponding regulatory and governance regimes. The course takes a distinctly global perspective, exploring how bioeconomies and bioregulation differ across national contexts. In the process, we will ask what kinds of capital are produced through bioeconomies and what kinds of citizens are being created in and through such exchanges.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One formative essay of no more than 2000 words due Week 7 of the Lent Term.

Indicative reading: Almeling, Rene. 2011. Sex Cells: The Medical Market for Eggs and Sperm. University of California Press. SO475 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Material Culture and Design

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Donald Slater S218A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in City Design and Social Science, MSc in Culture and Society, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on designed entities in everyday life, looking at the ways in which materials are configured into things, practices, spaces and forms, and at the assemblage of objects across production, design, consumption and use. Though aiming to produce expertise in specifically social science research, the course will bring together literatures and debates that cross the social sciences, humanities and science/technology, drawing particularly on actor-network theory, material culture studies, sociology of consumption, practice theory, urban and architectural studies, cultural theory and design studies. There will also be a strong emphasis on methodology: what tools are available to social scientists to investigate the emergent properties and impacts of designed objects. Case studies will be central to the teaching, developing theoretical and methodological strategies through a (changing) set of empirical cases that are likely to include: digital objects (software, games); media objects; lights and lighting; fashion; domestic interiors.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: One 2,500 essay applying a theoretical approach to a specific case study.

Indicative reading: Bijker, W. E. and J. Law (eds.) (1992) Shaping technology/building society: Studies in Sociotechnical change. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press. Frayling, C., E. King and H. Assessment: Essay (100%, 5000 words) in the LT.

SO499 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Programme Tutor of the relevant MSc programme and other Sociology and Cities staff.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Culture and Society, MSc Economy Risk and Society, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Political Sociology, MSc in Race, Ethnicity and Postcolonial Studies, MSc in Sociology, MSc in Sociology (Contemporary Social Thought, MSc in Sociology (Economic Sociology and MSc in Sociology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation may be on any topic within the field of the MSc programme studied. Approval for the topic must be obtained from the relevant Programme Tutor.

Teaching:

Dissertation Preparation

The candidate should confirm a working title and prepare a brief abstract for their intended dissertation (up to one A4 page, double-spaced, including your name not your candidate number), which should be reviewed with their Academic Advisor no later than the Monday, week 8 of Lent Term. Along with the title and abstract the candidate and Academic Advisor should review and complete the Research Ethics Review Checklist by this same time. These abstracts are the basis for an MSc dissertation Workshop that is organised for each programme. Attendance at this workshop is optional but students are, of course, encouraged to attend.

Dissertation Particulars

The dissertation must be a report of a research project, whether it comprises primary empirical material, secondary empirical material or theoretical/exegetical work on a body of social thought: i.e. there must be an identifiable and clear research question governing the research project; there must be critical reflection on the methods used (including their limits and the reasons why they warrant the kinds of claims made); and substantive analysis of empirical or analytical material. Even where the topic is substantively a literature or policy-review exercise, candidates are expected to offer original reasoned argument and interpretation and to show evidence of a competence in research methods. Guidance on topic selection and methods will normally be provided by the candidate's tutor. The dissertation is primarily a reflection of the candidate's own work and so feedback will not be given on draft versions of the dissertation. The dissertation should reflect the candidate's own views.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. Two hard copies of the dissertation, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S219A, no later than 16:00 on the last Thursday of August if you are a full-time student and in the subsequent year if you are a part-time student. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Dissertations may be up to and no more than 10,000 words, must be word-processed and be fully referenced using a recognised citation system.

ST405 Half Unit Multivariate Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Irini Moustaki

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) and Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202).

Course content: An introduction to the theory and application of modern multivariate methods used in the Social Sciences: Principal components analysis, factor analysis, latent variable models, multivariate normal distribution, exponential family, and structural equations models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of coursework

Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki & J Galbraith, Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data; D J Bartholomew, M Knott & I Moustaki, Latent Variable Models and Factor Analysis; C Chatfield & A J Collins, Introduction to Multivariate Analysis; B S Everitt & G Dunn, Applied Multivariate Data Analysis; K.V. Mardia, J.T. Kent and J.M. Bibby, Multivariate Analysis.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST409 Half Unit Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kostas Kardaras COL 6.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Risk and Finance, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Good undergraduate knowledge of distribution theory

Course content: A broad introduction to stochastic processes for postgraduates with an emphasis on financial and actuarial applications. The course examines Martingales, Poisson Processes, Brownian motion, stochastic differential equations and diffusion processes. Applications in Finance. Actuarial applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of workshops in the MT.

Indicative reading: T Bjork, Arbitrage Theory in Continuous Time; T Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus; S I Resnick, Adventures in Stochastic Processes; B K Oksendal, Stochastic Differential Equations: An Introduction with Applications, D Williams, Probability with Martingales.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST411 Half Unit Generalised Linear Modelling and Survival Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Barigozzi COL 7.11

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202).

Course content: Generalized linear modelling with an emphasis on diagnostics, estimation, and inference. Variables belonging to the exponential family. Survival analysis. Linear regressions. Variable selection and model building. Deletion diagnostics. Analysis of variance. Transformation of the response, constructed variables. Maximum likelihood estimation. Exponential family and generalized linear models. Categorical data, binary variables and logistic regressions. Log-linear models and contingency tables. Exploratory analysis of survivor distributions and hazard rates. Regression modelling for survival data. The use of R for data analysis.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: A C Atkinson & M Riani, Robust Diagnostic Regression Analysis; A Dobson & A Barnett, An Introduction to Generalised Linear Modelling; P McCullagh & J A Nelder, Generalized Linear Models; A Agresti, Categorical Data Analysis; R Venables & D M Smith, An Introduction to R (downloadable). Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST416 Half Unit Multilevel Modelling

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Irini Moustaki

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to multilevel modelling with applications in social research. This course deals with the analysis of data from hierarchically structured populations (e.g., individuals nested within households or geographical areas) and longitudinal data (eg repeated measurements of individuals in a panel survey). Multilevel (random-effects) extensions of standard statistical techniques, including multiple linear regression and logistic regression, will be considered. The course will have an applied emphasis with computer sessions using appropriate software (e.g., Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned fortnightly and returned to students with comments/feedback during the lab sessions

Indicative reading: T Snijders & R Bosker Multilevel Analysis: an Introduction to Basic and Advanced Multilevel Modelling, Sage (2011, 2nd edition); S Rabe-Hesketh & A Skrondal, Multilevel and Longitudinal Modeling using Stata, (Third Edition), Volume I: Continuous responses (plus Chapter 10 from Volume II, which is available free on the publisher's website). Stata Press (2012). Also recommended are: A Skrondal & S Rabe-Hesketh, Generalized Latent Variable Modeling: Multilevel, Longitudinal and Structural Equation Models, Chapman & Hall (2004); H Goldstein, Multilevel Statistical Models, Arnold (2003); S W Raudenbush & A S Bryk, Hierarchical Linear Models: Applications and Data Analysis Methods, Sage (2002); G Verbeke & G Molenberghs, Linear Mixed Models for Longitudinal Data, Springer (2000); E Demidenko, Mixed Models, Wiley (2004).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST418 Half Unit Non-Linear Dynamics and the Analysis of Real Time Series

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Leonard Smith TW1 11.01A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Time Series (ST422).

Course content: An introduction to the analysis of actual time series observations of real-world processes. The course casts both modern nonlinear methods and more traditional linear methods in a geometric approach. It introduces the properties of nonlinear mathematical models, covers chaos and the dynamics of uncertainty, and demonstrates the fundamental limitations in applied analysis which arise from model inadequacy. Fundamental aspects of predictability are addressed. Decision support under uncertainty is considered, with examples of economic impacts of forecasting, including weather and climate. The student will leave with a toolkit for the analysis and modelling of real data, with insights into how to evaluate which methods to employ (linear/non-linear, deterministic/stochastic) in a given problem, how to interpret the results in context, and how to avoid over interpreting nice theorems in practical circumstances. Concrete applications in economics (price time series, electricity demand, energy futures) and environment (weather, climate) as well as analytically tractable illustration from mathematics are considered.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: K Beven, Environmental Modelling: An uncertain Future? Routledge (2009); H Kantz & T Schreiber, Non-linear Time Series Analysis; E Ott, T Sauer & J A Yorke (Eds), Coping with Chaos: Analysis of Chaotic Data and The Exploitation of Chaotic Systems; E Ott, Chaos in Dynamical Systems; R Tsay, Analysis of Financial Time Series; L.A. Smith, Chaos: A Very Short Introduction. Oxford University Press (2007)

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (30%) in the ST.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wicher Bergsma COL 6.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation (ST425).

It is also useful to take ST411: Regression, Diagnostics and Generalised Linear Modelling in parallel to this course.

Course content: Our aim is to teach students important statistical methodologies that reflect the exciting development of the subject over the last ten years, which include empirical likelihood, MCMC, bootstrap, local likelihood and local fitting, model Assessment and selection methods, boosting, support vector machines. These are computationally intensive techniques that are particularly powerful in analysing large-scale data sets with complex structure. A selection from the following topics. Robustness of likelihood approaches: distance between working model and "truth", maximum likelihood under wrong models, quasi-MLE, model selection with AIC, robust estimation. Empirical likelihood: empirical likelihood of mean. Bayesian methods and Markov chain Monte Carlo (MCMC) basic Bayes, Gibbs sampler, Metropolis-Hastings algorithm. Elements of statistical learning: global fitting versus local fitting, linear methods for regression, splines, kernel methods and local likelihood. Model assessment and selection: bias-variance trade-off, effective number of parameters, BIC, cross-validation. Further topics: additive models, varying-coefficient linear models, boosting, neural network, support vector machines. The course will be continuously updated to reflect important new developments in statistics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: T Hastie, R Tibshirani & J Friedman, The Elements of Statistical Learning: Data Mining, Inference and Prediction; Y Pawitan, In All Likelihood: Statistical Modelling and Inference Using Likelihood; M A Tanner, Tools for Statistical Inference.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST422 Half Unit Time Series

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wai-Fung Lam COL 6.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management Science (Operational Research), MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Good undergraduate knowledge of statistics and probability.

Course content: A broad introduction to statistical time series analysis for postgraduates: what time series analysis can be useful for; autocorrelation; stationarity; causality; basic time series models: AR, MA, ARMA; ARCH and GARCH models for financial time series; trend removal and seasonal adjustment; invertibility; spectral analysis; estimation; forecasting. We will also discuss nonstationarity and multivariate time series.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Brockwell & Davis, Time Series: Theory and Methods; Brockwell & Davis, Introduction to Time Series and Forecasting; Box & Jenkins, Time Series Analysis, Forecasting and Control; Shumway & Stoffer, Time Series Analysis and Its Applications.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST425 Statistical Inference: Principles, Methods and Computation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Qiwei Yao COL 7.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will provide a comprehensive coverage on some fundamental aspects of probability and statistics methods and principles. It also covers linear regression analysis. Data illustration using statistical package R constitutes an integral part throughout the course, therefore provides the hands-on experience in simulation and data analysis.

Teaching: 40 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of computer workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 project in the MT.

Weekly assessed problem sheets.

Indicative reading: L. Wasserman, All of Statistics.

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (15%) in the MT.

ST426 Applied Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Erik Baurdoux COL 6.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course builds on material discussed in ST409 (Stochastic Processes). In particular, elements of the general theory of semi-martingales will be covered and emphasis will be given on presenting a variety of models involving processes with general dynamics, including jumps. The theory will be applied to a range of topics in mathematical finance and insurance, as well as financial economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A set of coursework similar to the exercises that will appear in the exam will be assigned. Additional formative exercise will be available through Moodle.

Indicative reading: Brownian Motion and Stochastic Calculus.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST427 Insurance Mathematics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hao Xing COL 7.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A self-contained comprehensive introduction to life and non-life insurance mathematics. For the life insurance, mortality laws are analysed from probabilistic and statistical point of view. Actuarial analysis of basic insurance products: pure endowment, life insurance/assurance, and annuity. Prospective/retrospective reserves of these products. Extension to general multi-states policy is studied via Markov chains Pricing embedded interest and mortality guarantees is introduced. For the non-life insurance, axiomatic approach to ordering of risks is presented, optimal forms of insurance from the insured's and from the insurer's point of view are analysed, and Pareto-optimal risk exchanges are introduced. Standard schemes of reinsurance are introduced and analysed. Ruin probability of an insurance company and capital requirement are studied. Heavy tail distributions and the extreme value theory are introduced. Case studies on current developments in life and non-life insurance industry are also presented.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: 5 to 6 problem sets will be assigned.

Indicative reading: R Norberg, Risk and Stochastics in Life Insurance (Lecture notes). R Norberg, Non-life Insurance Mathematics (Lecture notes). T Mikosch, Non-Life Insurance Mathematics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST429 Half Unit Probabilistic Methods in Risk Management and Insurance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hao Xing COL 7.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Risk and Stochastics and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: A self-contained introduction to probabilistic and statistical methods in risk management. This course starts with risk factors models and loss distributions, which are illustrated via examples in stocks, derivatives, and bonds portfolios. Axioms of coherent risk measures are introduced. Value at risk and other risk measures are introduced and their relation with coherent risk measures is discussed. Multivariate factor models are introduced and analysed: covariance and correlation estimations, multivariate normal distributions and their testing, normal mixture distributions and their fitting to data. The theory of copulas is introduced: meta distributions, tail dependence, fitting copulas to data. Some limitations of copulas are also discussed. The extreme value theory is introduced: generalized extreme value distribution, threshold exceedances and generalized Pareto distribution, modelling and measures of tail risk. Applications to insurance with large loss are also discussed. Students will be exposed to financial data via sets of computer-based classes and exercises.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A set of exercises which are similar to problems appearing in the exam will be assigned. A set of coding exercises which are similar to examples in computer lab sessions will be assigned.

Indicative reading: A. McNeil, R. Frey, P. Embrechts, Quantitative Risk Management: Concepts, Techniques, Tools; Princeton Series in Finance

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (25%, 2000 words).

ST433 Half Unit Computational Methods in Finance and Insurance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umut Cetin COL 6.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Finance (full-time), MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed September Introductory Course (Financial Mathematics) (MA400).

Course content: The purpose of this course is to (a) develop the students' computational skills, (b) introduce a range of numerical techniques of importance in actuarial and financial engineering, and (c) develop the ability of the students to apply the theory from the taught courses to practical problems, work out solutions including numerical work, and to present the results in a written report. Binomial and trinomial trees. Random number generation, the fundamentals of Monte Carlo simulation and a number of related issues. Finite difference schemes for the solution of ordinary and partial differential equations arising in insurance and finance. Numerical solutions to stochastic differential equations and their implementation. The course ends with an introduction to guidelines for writing a scholarly report/thesis.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly exercises and practicals are set and form the basis of the classes.

Indicative reading: N E Steenrod, P Halmos, M M Schiffer & J A Dieudonne, How to write mathematics (1973); D.J. Duffy, Finite Difference Methods in Financial Engineering: A Partial Differential Equation Approach, Wiley; P. Glasserman, Monte Carlo Methods in Financial Engineering, Springer; P.E. Kloeden and E. Platen, Numerical Solution of Stochastic Differential Equations, Springer. Further material will be specified during the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.
Project (50%) in the ST.

ST435 Half Unit Advanced Probability Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Erik Baurdoux COL 6.04

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is offered as a regular examinable half-unit as well as a service to students and academic staff.

Pre-requisites: Analysis and algebra at the level of a BSc in pure or applied mathematics and basic statistics and probability theory with stochastic processes. Knowledge of measure theory is not required as the course gives a self-contained introduction to this branch of analysis.

Course content: The course covers core topics in measure theoretic probability and modern stochastic calculus, thus laying a rigorous foundation for studies in statistics, actuarial science, financial mathematics, economics, and other areas where uncertainty is essential and needs to be described with advanced probability models. Emphasis is on probability theory as such rather than on special models occurring in its applications. Brief revision of mathematical tools: set theory, logics, techniques of proof, real and complex numbers, sequences, functions, metric spaces, notions of limits and convergence, continuity, differentiation and integration. Brief review of basic probability concepts in a measure theoretic setting: probability spaces, random variables, expected value, conditional probability and expectation, independence, Borel-Cantelli lemmas Construction of probability spaces with emphasis on stochastic processes. Operator methods in probability: generating functions, moment generating functions, Laplace transforms, and characteristic functions. Notions of convergence: convergence in probability and weak laws of large numbers, convergence almost surely and strong laws of large numbers, convergence of probability measures and central limit theorems. If time permits and depending on the interest of the students topics from stochastic calculus might be covered as well.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set weekly and solutions are discussed in the lectures. There will be two rounds of compulsory written coursework which will be marked, one in the MT and one in the LT.

Indicative reading: Lamperti, J. (1966): Probability. W.A. Benjamin Inc.; Norberg, R (2008): Crash course in probability. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST436 Half Unit Financial Statistics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Piotr Fryzlewicz COL 6.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Statistical Inference: Principles and Computation (ST425).

Course content: The course covers key statistical methods and data analytic techniques most relevant to finance. Hands-on experience in analysing financial data in the “R” environment is an essential part of the course. The course includes a selection of the following topics: obtaining financial data, low- and high-frequency financial time series, ARCH-type models for low-frequency volatilities and their simple alternatives, predicting equity indices (case study), Markowitz portfolio theory and the Capital Asset Pricing Model, machine learning in financial forecasting, Value at Risk, simple trading strategies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly marked problem sheets, with solutions discussed in class.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST439 Half Unit Stochastics for Derivatives Modelling

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Beatrice Acciaio COL 6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Valuation and hedging of derivative securities: General principles of mathematical finance. Asset price models. Option pricing by bilateral Laplace transforms as well as integro-partial differential equations. Utility indifference valuation. Minimal entropy martingale measures. Foellmer-Sondermann optimal hedging. Entropic hedging.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A weekly set of homework will be set. Students are not expected to submit this homework but will go over the exercises in the following seminar with the lecturer. Students will also complete one or two sets of formative coursework during the year which will be marked. Feedback will be provided.

Indicative reading: T. Rheinlander, Derivatives in Insurance and Finance, lecture notes (2005). Selected papers from scientific journals. ST440 Half Unit Recent Developments in Finance and Insurance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pauline Barrieu COL 6.03

Dr Beatrice Acciaio COL 6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Risk and Stochastics. This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Recent developments in the theory of stochastic processes and applications in finance and insurance and their interface. A variety of topics will be chosen from modelling with Lévy processes; securitisation; energy and commodity markets; actuarial and financial aspects of climate change

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: A set of coursework similar to the exercises that will appear in the exam will be assigned as well as a mock exam.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST441 Half Unit Introduction to Markov Processes and their Applications

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umut Cetin COL 6.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Financial Mathematics, MSc in Risk and Stochastics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) and MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Stochastic Processes (ST409).

Course content: Markov property and transition functions. Feller processes. Strong Markov property. Martingale problem and stochastic differential equations, relation with partial differential equations. Diffusion processes. Affine processes. Piecewise deterministic Markov processes. Selection of topics from filtering and statistics of diffusion processes. Applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: A weekly set of homework will be set. Students are not expected to submit this homework but will go over the exercises in the following seminar with the lecturer. Students will also complete one or two sets of formative coursework during the year which will be marked. Feedback will be provided.

ST442 Half Unit Longitudinal Data Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Fiona Steele COL 7.08

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A knowledge of probability and statistical theory, including linear regression and logistic regression.

Course content: A practical introduction to methods for the analysis of repeated measures data, including continuous and binary outcomes. Topics include: longitudinal study designs, (random effects) growth curve models, marginal models, dynamic (autoregressive) models, latent class models, and multiprocess models for multivariate outcomes. The course will have an applied emphasis with weekly computer classes using appropriate software (e.g. Stata).

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Coursework assigned fortnightly and returned to students with comments/feedback during the computer sessions.

Indicative reading: Singer JD, Willett JB. Applied Longitudinal Data Analysis: Modeling Change and Event Occurrence. New York: Oxford University Press (2003). (Part I only).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST450 Advanced Lectures on Special Topics in Statistics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Course content: Seminar series. Please refer to Departmental web page for details. <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/statistics/home.aspx>

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

ST499 Dissertation

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Piotr Fryzlewicz COL 6.01

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Independent project work on a subject chosen by the student.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%) in September. (50 page limit).

LN701

Arabic: Level One (Standard)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Nadim Ben Mohamed Mahjoub CMK.C804

Pre-requisites:

- No previous knowledge of Modern Standard Arabic required.
- Students should demonstrate commitment to regular attendance, completion of homework, completion of the dossier and all assessments.
- Students should dedicate at least two hours per week for coursework in addition to classes.
- This course is suitable for students wanting to learn Modern Standard Arabic.
- Admission into the course upon tutor's approval during the information sessions.

Course aims:

- To develop the ability to use Arabic effectively for purposes of practical communication at survival level.
- The course introduces the students to the Arabic writing system and enables them to read and write basic words and sentences.
- To deal with a range of predictable simple language tasks using a limited range of language.
- To establish the skills, language and attitudes required to promote and facilitate further study of Arabic.
- To bring the students to level A1- of Common European Framework.

Communicative content:

- Greetings
- Asking for and giving personal information
- Talking about your immediate family
- Talking about studies and jobs
- Say where you live
- Asking for and giving directions
- Talking about your city and country
- Talking about present actions

Structural content:

- Alphabet
- Joining letters
- Pronunciation
- Feminine and masculine words
- Roots
- Present tense
- The definitive article
- Independent pronouns and pronoun suffixes
- Nouns-adjective phrases
- Numbers
- Plural
- Dual
- Word order
- Demonstrative: this (masc./fem.)
- Possessive pronouns
- Interrogatives (where, when, what, how many, etc.)
- Prepositions: in, between, etc
- Nisba (nationality)
- Idafa (genitive construction)
- Introduction to Past Tense
- Linking words (Firstly, after, lately, etc.)

Teaching: 12 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of classes in the LT. 8 hours of classes in the ST.

- This is a 40 hour-course.
- Please refer to the LSE timetable for course teaching arrangements.

Indicative reading: Students will be provided with a study pack. Other useful materials for this level description of “Communicative content” and “Structural Content” of Level 4 standard (LN729). Students should have done 250 hours including selfstudy (16+), AS-level or six/seven years at school level. Low pass mark at A-level. Candidates to this course should be able to: Read articles and reports concerned with contemporary problems in which the writers adopt particular stances or viewpoints. Understand texts of a more generalist nature relating to relevant areas of the Social Sciences. Understand extended speech and lectures and follow even complex lines of argument provided the topic is reasonably familiar. Understand most TV news, business and current affairs programmes. Understand the majority of films in standard dialect. Present clear, detailed descriptions on a wide range of subjects related to their field of interest. They can explain a viewpoint on a topical issue giving the advantages and disadvantages of various options. Interact with a degree of fluency and spontaneity that makes regular interaction with native speakers quite possible. They can take an active part in discussion in familiar contexts, accounting for and sustaining their views. Write clear, detailed text on a wide range of subjects related to their interests. Write an essay or report, passing on information or giving reasons in support or against a particular point of view. Writing letters highlighting the relevance of events and experience relating to business or other relevant Social Science topics. Admission to the course upon completion of online level test and tutor’s approval during needs analysis. Students should: Demonstrate commitment to regular attendance, completion of homework, completion of portfolio and all assessments. Dedicate at least two hours per week for coursework (including watching a film per week) and in addition to classes.

Course aims: To develop the ability to use French effectively for purposes of dealing with complex work tasks. Including the following: Understanding long and complex factual texts and films. Understanding with few serious problems other texts relating to social issues (Identity, Race, Gender, Power...) and other associated areas. Understanding extended speech at conferences or lectures, and interactive speech during meetings or seminars. Following film documentaries about film making and directing and recorded material without great effort in a wide range of both general and subject specific areas. Presenting clear, detailed descriptions of a wide range of subjects in the field of cinema and social issues, integrating sub-themes, developing particular points and rounding off with an appropriate conclusion. Expressing themselves fluently and spontaneously without much need for obvious searching. During presentations they will be able to argue, counter-argue and interact effectively. Relate to other speakers and link various strands of discussion. Expressing themselves in a clear, well structured text, expressing points of view at some length. Writing detailed expositions of complex subjects in an essay or report, underlining what they consider to be the salient issues. Writing different kinds of texts in an assured, personal style, appropriate to the reader in mind. To bring students to Level B2- C1 of CEFR.

Communicative content: Develop understanding and critical analysis of French cinema. The main focus is on “auteur” directors in the French cinema of the post-World War II years. Methodological Training and Study Skills

The Methodology Institute provides a number of courses for research track PhD programmes. MY4M1 Foundations of Social Research 1 and MY4M2 Foundations of Social Research 2 contain modules in quantitative and qualitative analysis and are required for the ESRC 1+3 scheme. In addition the Institute offers courses in study skills and specialist options in a range of aspects of social research. All PhD students are welcome to attend any courses offered by the Institute, details of which are in the relevant part of the section on Masters degrees.

MRes/PhD Economics

For students starting in or after the 2010/11 session

The MRes/PhD programme is offered in twin-track formats. Students on both tracks of the programme will have to complete MRes degree courses, a PhD-qualifying course and research training modules prior to submission of the PhD thesis. The different entrance qualifications of Track 1 and 2 students dictate the sequence and duration of the coursework.

Track 1 is aimed at students graduating with a first class undergraduate degree in economics from a reputable university institution. Track 2 is for students who have completed a graduate degree in economics from a reputable university institution and who have demonstrated exceptional performance in it. The decision on which track students are registered is a matter of academic judgement of the selectors for the programme.

The School's regulations for Taught Masters Degrees apply to Track 1 course components 1. - 6. and Track 2 course components 1. - 5., except where the regulations below supersede the School's degree regulations.

Programme Structure

Track 1

Track 1: (5 MRes Papers + 1 PhD-qualifying paper)

Track 1 students are required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

First year of Track 1

Students are required to take the following MRes core courses:

1. EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students
2. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
3. EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students or EC484 Econometric Analysis*

* Permission must be obtained to sit EC484: it is intended for students with a strong econometric background and an interest in pursuing a PhD with econometrics as the primary field.

Second year of Track 1

Students are required to take:

4. EC599 Research Paper in Economics (5,000 - 10,000 words in length)

5. One from the Field Selection List below

Students who obtain at least two marks of 60% or more and one mark of 50% or more in the core courses 1. - 3. will be allowed to take their second (PhD qualifying) field during year 2 (paper 6).

In addition, students attend:

- A. MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started

- B. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars

- C. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Third and further years of Track 1

Students who have not completed paper 6 (PhD qualifying field course) will be required to take:

6. One from the Field Selection List below but different from paper

5. In addition, students attend:

- D. MY593B Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Middle Years

- E. MY593C Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Endgame

- F. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research

- G. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field
- Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Progression to year 2 of MRes in Economics

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration, students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in papers 1, 2 and 3. Students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to two resit papers, only with the permission of the MRes Programme Director, with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams (including resits and EC599) in year 2.

Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve three marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes papers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. Two marks of 60% or higher are required from the MRes core papers 1, 2, and 3. A mark between 55 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another core paper and/or a mark between 50 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in the EC599 research paper.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students will also need to pass their PhD-qualifying field course (paper 6), which is taken in the first year of PhD registration, with 50% or higher.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Throughout the coursework portion of the MRes or MRes/PhD programme, students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. In exceptional circumstances, the Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper in a subsequent year. Students can resit each paper only once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit. A student can appeal against the Department's decision on progression to PhD according to the appeal's procedures against decisions on upgrading to PhD in the School's Regulations for Research Degrees.

Award of the PhD in Economics

Award of the PhD is contingent on meeting the progression requirements for the PhD, passing the PhD qualifying field with a mark of 50% or higher, and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

Track 2

Track 2: (4 MRes Papers + 1 PhD-qualifying paper) Track 2 students may be required to attend EC400, the September Introductory Course before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

First year of Track 2:

Students are required to take:

1. EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students
2. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students
3. EC443 Econometrics for MRes Students or EC484 Econometric Analysis*
4. EC599 Research Paper in Economics (5,000 - 10,000 words in length)

* Permission must be obtained to sit EC484: it is intended for students with a strong econometrics background and an interest in pursuing a PhD with econometrics as the primary field. Students who have completed EC484 to the required standard as part of their MSc do not have to take the course again and will have their MSc mark carried forward. These students are permitted to take their PhD qualifying field course (paper 5) in place of paper 3.

In addition, students attend:

- A. MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started
- B. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars
- C. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.

Subsequent years of Track 2 (if upgraded to PhD):

Students are required to take:

5. One from the Field Selection List below (PhD qualifying field course).
- Students who are permitted to take a PhD qualifying field in year 1 are waived this additional requirement.

In addition, students attend:

- A. MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started
 - B. MY593B Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Middle Years
 - C. MY593CAuthoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Endgame
 - D. EC501 Work in Progress Seminars, where they present their research
 - E. The weekly departmental seminar series closest to their major field.
- Students are required to work on their research and to write a PhD thesis.

Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in papers 1, 2, 3 and 4. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 60% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve two marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes papers 1, 2, 3 and 4. Two marks of 60% or higher are required from the MRes core papers 1, 2, and 3. A mark between 55 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another core paper and/or a mark between 50 - 59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in the EC599 research paper. Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students will also need to pass their PhD-qualifying field course (paper 5), which is taken in the first year of PhD registration, with 50% or higher.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Throughout the coursework portion of the MRes or MRes/PhD programme, students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. In exceptional circumstances, the Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper in a subsequent year. Students can resit each paper only once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach this standard at re-sit.

A student can appeal against the Department's decision on progression to PhD according to the appeal's procedures against decisions on upgrading to PhD in the School's Regulations for Research Degrees.

Award of the PhD in Economics

Award of the PhD is contingent on meeting the progression requirements for the PhD, passing the PhD qualifying field with a mark of 50% or higher, and on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with LSE regulations.

MRes/PhD Economics

For students starting before the 2010/11 session

The MRes/PhD programme is offered in twin-track formats. Students on both tracks of the programme will have to complete MRes degree courses, a PhD-qualifying course and research training modules prior to submission of the PhD thesis. The different entrance qualifications of Track 1 and 2 students dictates the sequence and duration of the coursework.

Track 1 is aimed at students graduating with a first class undergraduate degree in economics. Track 2 is for students who have completed a graduate degree in economics and demonstrated exceptional performance.

Programme StructureTrack 1*Track 1: (5 MRes Papers + 1 PhD-qualifying paper)

Track 1 Students are required to attend EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

The School's regulations for Taught Masters Degrees apply to the entire coursework portion of the MRes and MRes/PhD programme, except where the regulations below supersede the School regulations.

First year of Track 1:

Students are required to take MRes core courses (papers 1, 2 & 3) in microeconomics, macroeconomics and econometrics.

Second year of Track 1:

Students write an MRes research paper (paper 4) of 5,000-10,000 words and take the first of two field courses (paper 5). Subject to permission, students may be allowed to take their second (PhD qualifying) field simultaneously (paper 6).

Students are required to attend the Methodology Institute training 'Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher' and are strongly encouraged to take advantage of other PhD-level training provided by the Department.

Students are required to attend the weekly Departmental seminar series closest to their major field and the relevant EC501 Work in Progress Seminar.

Subsequent years of Track 1 (if upgraded to PhD):

In year 3, students take the PhD-qualifying field course (paper 6) if they were not permitted to take it in year 2.

Students must have a detailed research proposal approved and signed by their supervisor by the end of the Michaelmas Term of their third year.

Students continue to attend the weekly Departmental seminar series closest to their major field and the relevant EC501 Work in Progress Seminar, where they present their research.

Students are expected to work on their research and to complete their PhD thesis within two or three years of PhD registration.

Track 1:Summary MRes degree courses, PhD qualifying course, and research training modules:*MRes degree courses (examinable)

* Permission must be obtained to sit EC484: it is intended for students with a strong econometric background and an interest in pursuing a PhD with econometrics as the primary field.

Track 1:Progression to year 2 of MRes in Economics

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration, students should attain the pass mark of 50% (at least) in papers 1, 2 & 3. Students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to two resit papers, with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams (including resits) in year 2. Students with more than 2 resits will not be permitted to proceed to year 2.

Track 1:Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in papers 1, 2, 3, 4 & 5. One failed paper (but not a bad fail) can be compensated by a mark of 55% or higher in another paper.

Track 1:Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students should obtain three marks of 60% or higher and two marks of 50% or higher in MRes papers 1, 2, 3, 4 & 5. Two marks of 60% or higher are required from the MRes core papers EC441, EC442, and EC443. A mark between 55-59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another core paper.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students who have not taken their PhD-qualifying field course (paper 6) will also need to pass that course with 50% or higher. These requirements will need to be taken at the next examination, except where permission has been granted for a candidate to defer the examination until a subsequent year.

Students missing the progression requirement by more than one paper are required to pass those papers to the necessary standard before PhD registration can be permitted.

Throughout the coursework portion of the MRes or MRes/PhD programme, students failing a paper or missing a progression mark will have to retake that paper within one year of the original examination. The Graduate Studies Sub-Committee can grant permission to a candidate to resit a paper in a subsequent year in exceptional circumstances. Each paper can only be resat once. Students registered for the PhD remain subject to the relevant MRes regulations for any courses or examinations they are completing. Students who have been permitted to progress onto the PhD without satisfying the complete progression standard will have their PhD registration discontinued if they fail to reach the this standard at re-sit.

Track 1:Award of the PhD in Economics

Award of the PhD is dependent on the completion and defence of an original research thesis, in accordance with University of London and LSE regulations.

Track 2Track 2: (4 MRes Papers + 1 PhD-qualifying paper)

Track 2 Students may be required to attend EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics before commencing the MRes/PhD programme.

First year of Track 2:

Students are required to take MRes core courses (papers 1, 2 & 3), plus the MRes research paper (paper 4). Students who, as part of an MSc, have completed with exceptional performance a core course of a strictly equivalent level and coverage are permitted to take their PhD qualifying field course in its place.

Students are required to attend the Teaching and Learning Centre training 'Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher' and are strongly encouraged to take advantage of other PhD-level training provided by the Department.

Students are required to attend the weekly Departmental seminar series closest to their major field and the relevant EC501 Work in Progress Seminar.

Subsequent years of Track 2 (if upgraded to PhD):

In year 2, students take the PhD-qualifying field course (paper 5) if they were not permitted to take it in year 1.

Students must have a detailed research proposal approved and signed by their supervisor by the end of the Michaelmas Term of their second year.

Students continue to attend the weekly Departmental seminar series closest to their major field and the relevant EC501 Work in Progress Seminar, where they present their research.

Students are expected to work on their research and to complete their PhD thesis within two or three years of PhD registration.

Track 2: Summary MRes degree courses, PhD qualifying course, and research training modulesMRes degree courses (examinable)

1. EC441 Microeconomics for MRes Students +
2. EC442 Macroeconomics for MRes Students +

++ Students who are permitted to take a PhD qualifying field as paper 1, 2 or 3, are waived this additional requirement.

Track 2: Award of the MRes in Economics

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a four-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in papers 1, 2, 3 & 4. One failed paper (but not a bad fail) can be compensated by a mark of 55% or higher in another paper.

Track 2: Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students should obtain two marks of 60% or higher in the MRes core papers EC441, EC442 and EC443, plus two marks of 50% or higher. If a student already has a mark of 60% or above in an MRes-level core paper taken as part of an MSc, the required MRes marks are two at 60% or higher (one from the MRes core papers EC441, EC442 and EC443), plus two marks of 50% or higher. A mark between 55-59% in one of these core papers can be condoned by a mark of +70% in another core paper.

(Note: EC484 substitutes for EC443 on the MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics)

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. Students who have not taken their PhD-qualifying field course (paper 6) will also need to pass that course with 50% or higher. Progression and upgrade requirements

In order to progress unconditionally from the first to the second year of MRes registration students are required to achieve pass marks of 50% or higher in papers 1, 2 and 3. Students who do not attain this standard may proceed to the second year with up to two resit papers, only with the permission of the MRes Programme Director, with the restriction that they can sit a maximum of four exams in year 2, which must be the two resits, either paper 4 or 5, and paper 6.

Award of the MRes in Finance

The award and classification of the MRes degree is consistent with the School's Scheme for the Award of a five-unit Taught Masters Degree. Students are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in 5 of full-unit papers, which must include Paper 6 (Research paper) and four papers from 1,2,3,4, and 5. One failed paper (but not a bad fail of 29% or less) can be compensated by a mark of 55% or higher in another paper.

Progression to PhD registration

For PhD registration students are required to achieve marks of 50% or higher in papers 1, 2, and 3, and marks of 65% or higher in papers 4, 5 and 6.

Students missing the overall progression requirement by one paper are permitted to progress to PhD registration, but will subsequently need to re-sit and pass the paper to the necessary standard to continue their PhD registration. MRes/PhD International Development

Compulsory courses

1. DV400 Development: History, Theory, Policy (H) (with 500 level seminar)
2. Methodology course choice 1 to the value of one full unit (at the 400 and 500 level) (F)*
3. Methodology or Theory course choice 2 to the value of one full unit (at the 400 and 500 level) (F)*
4. Methodology or Theory course choice 3 to the value of one half unit (at the 400 or 500 level) (H)*
5. DV410 Research Design and Dissertation in Development Studies, Development Management and International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies (F)
6. DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies (non-examined)

Notes

* Course choices must be approved by the supervisor and Doctoral Programme Director.

Optional Courses

7. EC400 Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (September pre-session course as a pre-requisite for 400 and 500 level EC courses for students planning to make use of advanced quantitative methods in their PhD research).
8. MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started

Award of the MRes in International Development

The MRes in International Development will be awarded if all the exams are passed.

A 'Distinction' grade will be awarded for the MRes if an aggregate of 270 marks (over 4 full units) is achieved with no fails.

A 'Merit' grade will be awarded for the MRes if an aggregate of 250 marks (over 4 full units) is achieved with no fails.

A 'Pass' grade will be awarded for the MRes if an aggregate of 200 marks (over 4 full units) is achieved with no fails.

Upgrade to PhD

Upgrade to PhD is dependent upon:

1. Pass of the MRes with an average of 65 in the coursework (except as noted above).
2. Pass of the Research Proposal with a mark equal or greater than 65.

The Research Proposal Committee will offer constructive advice and make one of four decisions:

- Unconditional approval
- Conditional approval
- Revise and resubmit
- Fail

Students who are required to Revise and Resubmit are usually expected the resubmit the proposal within three months. These students will progress to a temporary MPhil status, with the approval of the Chair of the Research Degrees Subcommittee, while they are revising their research proposal. Students who are successful will be upgraded to PhD.

The progress of each student will be reviewed at the end of each subsequent year.

Award of the MRes Quantitative Economic History

The award and classification of the MSc degree is consistent with the School's scheme for the award of a four-unit Taught Master's Degree. Student are required to achieve a pass mark of 50% in papers 1, 2, 3 and 4 and submit paper 5 (EH474 Research Prospectus, not examined half unit). Where a candidate receives a Fail mark in any course, the penalty rules are set out in <http://www.lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/academicRegulations/taughtMastersDegreesFourUnits.htm> (see paragraph 5.2) apply. A Bad Fail (39% or lower) in any course of any unit value will result in an overall Fail for the degree.

Progression from the MRes Quantitative Economic History to the PhD

To progress from the MRes to the PhD programme, students need to achieve at least a Merit overall in the MRes and at least 65% in the (full unit) Research Paper in Quantitative Economic History (EH473). In addition, their Research Prospectus (EH474) needs to be approved by the departmental Prospectus Review Committee following a viva.

If a student fulfils all other progression requirements but his/her Research Prospectus does not meet the expectations set out in the EH474 course description, the Prospectus Review Committee will grant an extension of up to three months to submit a revised version. If this revised version fails the required standards, the candidate will not be admitted to the PhD programme.

 Any other graduate-level course available in the School with permission from the PhD Programme Director.

Optional (examined):

At least one methodology course, including courses offered by the Methodology Institute, either in their first and/or second year of the programme.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

AC501 Seminar in Accounting Research Methods

Optional (not examined):

Relevant seminars in related areas elsewhere in the School
 Appropriate international workshops and colloquia

YEAR TWO

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

AC500 Accounting, Organisations and Society

Compulsory (examined):

Students who have completed less than 2 graduate-level course units in Year One will take additional courses.

Optional (examined): As needed students may take course(s) or research training session(s) offered by the Methodology Institute.
 Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

Department of Accounting research seminars

Optional (not examined):

Relevant seminars in related areas offered elsewhere in the School
 Appropriate international workshops and colloquia

YEAR THREE

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

AC500 Accounting, Organisations and Society

Optional (examined):

As needed, students may take course(s) or research training session(s) offered by the Methodology Institute.

YEAR FOUR

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

AC500 Accounting, Organisations and Society

Optional (examined):

As needed, students may take course(s) or research training session(s) offered by the Methodology Institute.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined):

Department of Accounting research seminars

Optional (not examined):

Relevant seminars in related areas offered elsewhere in the School
 Appropriate international workshops and colloquia
 Progression and upgrade requirements:
 To proceed from Year One to Year Two, students must pass all course examinations normally with high Merit or Distinction marks Examinations: All MPhil/PhD Accounting students are required to achieve a pass mark of at least 65% in their examined courses. The examiners may, in exceptional circumstances, condone a lower pass mark if there is strength elsewhere. Students failing a paper can, at the discretion of the departmental Postgraduate Assessment Review Committee, and taking into account overall performance, re-sit that paper on one occasion only. The departmental Postgraduate Assessment Review Committee may also decide to substitute a make-up assignment, such as a 5,000-word essay, to redress any mark deficiencies.

Seminar presentations:

Students are required to make a seminar presentation in each year of their programme.

Upgrade:

Students will initially be registered for the MPhil. In order to progress to PhD registration, students must have achieved a pass mark of at least 65% in their taught course exams, and have made satisfactory progress in their research, which normally is understood to mean a solid draft of one complete chapter, plus a detailed outline for the rest of the dissertation with abstracts for each proposed chapter. The departmental Postgraduate Review and Assessment Committee will review the progress of each research student, and make recommendations for upgrading to PhD on a case-by-case basis.

Teaching Experience:

Students are offered the opportunity to gain teaching experience with appropriate training, and are encouraged to take presentation skills and other training offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

MPhil/PhD Anthropology

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONE:

Pre-fieldwork

Training courses

Compulsory (not-examined):

AN500 Seminar on Anthropological Research

Compulsory (examined):

AN501 Field Research Seminar

AN449 Ethnography in relation to other Research Methods (H)

AN455 Statistics and Causal Analysis for Social Anthropologists (H)

Students with a strong background in statistics can take MY552 instead of AN455.

In addition, students are required to attend and produce coursework for one or two of the department's main courses (to the value of one unit):

AN402 The Anthropology of Religion,

AN405 The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender,

AN437 Anthropology of Learning and Cognition and

LL4E8 Law in Society: A Joint Course in Law and Anthropology

AN451 Anthropology of Politics (H),

AN456 Anthropology of Economy (1): Production and Exchange (H),

AN457 Anthropology of Economy (2): Development, Transformation and Globalisation (H)

Students also follow a reading and fieldwork preparation course

(AN442) under the direction of their supervisors and prepare a

10,000 word research proposal (AN443).

Transferable skills courses Optional (not examined):

Students are encouraged to attend MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started

YEARS TWO-THREE:

fieldwork

Fieldwork normally lasts approximately fifteen to eighteen months.

Years three-four: Post-fieldwork

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined):

After fieldwork students begin writing their PhD dissertations under the close supervision of members of staff. During this period of their studies, they attend:

AN500 Seminar on Anthropological Research,

AN503 Thesis Writing Seminar, and

AN507 Theoretical Issues in Anthropology: Precepts and Practice II.

Presentation requirements:

in the year following their return from the field, students are required to present a chapter to the rest of their cohort in the Thesis Writing Seminar (AN503). In the final year, students are normally expected to present a paper in the Departmental Seminar on Anthropological Research (AN500).

Transferable skills courses

Optional (not examined):

Students are encouraged to attend MY593B Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Middle Years and MY593C Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Endgame.

Progression and upgrade requirements:

In the first year of the programme, AN449 and AN455 will be examined in the Summer Term. Together these count for 25% of the total mark of the year. Students who obtain a fail (but not a bad fail) in either of these courses, but who achieve a pass when both marks are combined are allowed to progress without retaking the failed exam. Essays for the additional course are submitted at the end of Lent Term. If a mark of 60% is not achieved essays must be resubmitted within four weeks. The research proposal, worth 75% of the total mark for the year, will be examined, and must be passed before a student is upgraded to the PhD and allowed to begin fieldwork.

MPhil/PhD (with Qualifying Examination) in Anthropology

The QE/MPhil/PhD programme is designed for, and only open to, students who have secured full sponsorship for a research programme in Social Anthropology but do not fulfil entry requirements for the LSE's MPhil/PhD. The first year provides training and Qualifying Examinations equivalent to MSc Social Anthropology.

YEAR ONE

Year 1 will be assessed under the LSE's Regulations for Taught Masters Degrees and Scheme For The Award Of A Taught Masters Degree. Students will automatically progress to the MPhil/PhD provided they obtain a Merit or higher in Year 1.

Students must take courses to the value of three full units and a dissertation as shown.

 AN499 Dissertation
 Successful completion of Year 1 will result in students obtaining the MSc in Social Anthropology. Students obtaining a Merit or higher under the LSE's MSc regulations will be eligible to progress to the MPhil.

YEAR ONE

Non examinable components

All QE students will be entitled and encouraged to attend the Departmental Seminar on Anthropological Research (AN500) in order to develop their familiarity with current research in the discipline.

YEAR TWO

Subject to obtaining a Merit or higher in Year 1, students progress to the MPhil which focuses on research preparation and methodological training.

YEARS THREE to FIVE

After fieldwork (which normally lasts approximately fifteen to eighteen months) students begin writing their PhD dissertations under the close supervision of members of staff. During this period of their studies, they attend weekly thesis-writing seminars (AN503), as well as the departmental Seminars on Anthropological Theory (AN500), and fortnightly seminars on recent developments in anthropology (AN507).

Years two to five of the MPhil/PhD (with Qualifying Examination) in Anthropology are the same as years one to four of the MPhil/PhD in Anthropology and full details can therefore be found here: <http://www.lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/programmeRegulations/mPhilPhD/anthropology.htm>

MPhil/PhD Demography/Population Studies

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONE

Training courses

Optional (not examined)

If not already taken previously:

SA451 Social Policy Research

MY451 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)

MY421 Qualitative Research Methods (H)

Students will discuss with their supervisors any other methodological training that may be relevant for the successful completion of the MPhil/PhD programme.

SA550 Research Student Seminar

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Each student is required to undertake Major Review in the summer term of their first year (second year for part-time students). For Major Review they must submit a 10,000 word document with a detailed thesis proposal, their research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. They are interviewed on this document by senior staff who make the decision on upgrading.

Each year post-Major Review, every student is expected to submit a 1,000 to 2,000 word progress report, approved by supervisors, to the Research Students' Programme Director.

Each pre-Major Review student is expected to make a presentation on their proposed research to the SA550 seminar prior to the submission of their major review document and to address issues raised by the Research Students' Programme Director(s).

MPhil/PhD Development Studies

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses.

Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONE

Training courses Compulsory (examined)

All students will be required to take either a full or two half unit courses in research methods in the School's Methodology Institute. The precise courses taken will be decided in consultation with the student's primary supervisor.

Compulsory (not examined)

DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies

Students who have not received their MSc Development Studies from the LSE will be required to attend the lectures for the core course DV400 Development: History, Theory and Policy. All first year students are required to attend a special seminar for research students.

Optional (not examined)

Further appropriate graduate level courses in the Department of International Development and agreed with supervisor.

Transferable skills courses Compulsory (not examined)

MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started

Optional (not examined)

MPhil/PhD students will find it advantageous to attend the weekly Visiting lecture Series in Development Studies in Michaelmas Term.

YEAR TWO

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

MY593B Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Middle Years

YEAR THREE

Transferable skills courses Compulsory (not examined)

MY593C Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Endgame

YEAR FOUR

Students are expected to have completed their research.

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Students will be required to achieve a minimum mark of 65% in the Methodology courses. Failure to do so may mean that you are unable to progress onto the PhD programme and will remain at MPhil until you have either completed a further methodology course or achieved an improved grade.

All students will be interviewed during the Michaelmas term of their second year by the Graduate Review Committee. Continued registration for a second year will be conditional on the work presented being of a satisfactory standard and if satisfactory, will be upgraded from MPhil to PhD. By the end of ST of the second year students should have finished all fieldwork (where applicable). By the end of the third year students should be able to complete their dissertation.

MPhil/PhD Economic Geography

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Progression and Upgrade requirements for both routesProgression and upgrade requirements:

Students in the MPhil/PhD programme will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. This is Year 1 for students in the +3 programme and Year 2 for students in the 1+3 programme. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme). Progression to the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme) is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. This is Year 2 for students in the +3 programme and Year 3 for students in the 1+3 route. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. Students are asked to discuss their research paper/thesis outline during an Upgrade Meeting in front of an Upgrading Committee normally formed by main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The material is evaluated by the Upgrading Committee, who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD Economic History

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses.

Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Progression and upgrade requirements

By the start of the Summer Term students are required to submit at least one draft thesis chapter and a 3-5 page thesis outline to the department's Graduate Review Committee. Students taking one or more MSc examination may, with the support of their supervisor, apply to defer their submission of work to no later than the start of the 7th week of the Summer Term. The Committee will interview all students during the Summer Term, and re-registration for a second year will be conditional on the work presented being of a satisfactory standard. All students are expected to gain broad knowledge of the subject from graduate level course work in their first year and active participation in workshops, seminars and conferences to complement the expertise gained from intense thesis research.

By the Summer Term of the second year the Graduate Review Committee will normally expect to see about half the thesis in draft. The Committee will interview students, and if the submitted work is of an acceptable standard, students will be upgraded from MPhil to PhD. Students may defer the upgrade decision until their third year for fieldwork or other reasons, but only with the support of their supervisor.

Progression and Upgrade requirements for both routes

Once students in the MPhil/PhD part of the programme, they will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. This is Year 1 for students in the +3 programme and Year 2 for students in the 1+3 programme. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and justification for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme). Progression is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. This is Year 2 for students in the +3 programme and Year 3 for students in the 1+3 route. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. The material is evaluated by an upgrade committee that will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrading committee is normally formed by the student's main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONETraining courses*Compulsory (not examined):

ID500 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

Optional (not examined/examined):

Students should discuss their training needs with their supervisor.

A large number of seminars and courses are offered by the Methodology Institute and elsewhere in the school.

YEAR TWOTraining courses*Compulsory (not examined):

ID500 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

YEAR THREETraining courses*Compulsory (not examined):

ID500 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

YEAR FOURTraining courses*Compulsory (not examined):

ID500 Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

Progression and upgrade requirements:

Students are expected to take an active part in the PhD seminar series, usually presenting their work at the seminar once each year.

A formal review committee assesses the progress of all MPhil/PhD students on an annual basis.

Students will initially be registered for the MPhil. It is the normal expectation that the decision to upgrade a full-time student from MPhil to PhD will be made either at the first formal review or by the end of the second year of registration, and for part-time students, respectively at the end of the second or third reviews.

The materials submitted for the upgrade review may include examples of written work, such as a draft chapter or literature review, an abstract, and an outline. Supervisors will advise their students as to the content and nature of the material required for the upgrade review.

MPhil/PhD European Studies

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed research training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed and should discuss this with their supervisor. For a complete list of courses please refer to the 2013/14 Handbook for Research Degree Students.

Upgrading to PhD/Targets for Progress

Year 1 - For a standard thesis: a research proposal (approximately 2,500 words) and abstract of the whole thesis (one page); a sample chapter (approximately 8,000 words); a chapter synopsis, and a timetable for completion. For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: a research proposal (approximately 2,500 words) and an abstract covering the three prospective papers; a full draft of the introduction or a full draft of one of the papers (approximately 8,000 words); and a timetable for completion.

Year 2 - For a standard thesis: at least two further substantive chapters (of approximately 5,000-7,000 words each). For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: at least one fully written paper (approximately 10,000 words); and outlines of the other two papers (approximately 2,000 words).

Year 3 - For a standard thesis: a full draft of all core chapters and agreed timetable for completion. For a thesis as a series of publishable papers: full drafts of all three papers and agreed timetable for completion of the thesis.

MPhil/PhD Finance

For students entering in or after the academic year 2013/14 please refer to the MRes/PhD Finance programme regulations.

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Students will take either Route 1 or Route 2 (depending on their previous Masters qualification) as detailed below.

Route 1: Students from the MSc Accounting and Finance or MSc Management and Regulation of Risk programmes and those from other relevant programmes, either at LSE or elsewhere, will enter in Year 1 and take the courses specified below.

YEAR ONE

Progression and upgrade requirements

All students are required to achieve a mark of at least 65% in their examined courses, with the exception of EC441 where the required mark is 50%. The examiners may decide under certain conditions to condone a lower mark if there is strength elsewhere. Students failing to satisfy a progression requirement in a paper can, at the examiner's discretion, taking into account overall performance, re-sit that paper on one occasion only.

Students are initially registered for an MPhil. In order to progress to PhD registration, students must have achieved a mark of at least 65% in the taught course exams, with the exception of EC441 where the required mark is 50%, and have made satisfactory progress in their research. Route 1 students will also be required to submit and defend a thesis proposal to a small Committee. The proposal builds on the 10,000 word essay completed for FM505 and should be submitted at the latest by the beginning of Summer Term of the second year of registration. The thesis proposal defence will be scheduled upon the satisfactory conclusion of all examined courses and completion of the FM505 paper and presentation. Students are strongly encouraged to participate at an early stage in their research training in appropriate international workshops and colloquia. They are also offered the opportunity to gain teaching experience, with appropriate training, without detracting from their research time.

Route 2: Students who have taken the MSc Finance and Economics or MSc Finance and Economics (Research) programmes at LSE or equivalent from another institution may enter onto Route 2 of the programme (this will have been subject to the approval of the Programme Director).

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the first year students will go through their Aims and Methods examination. This is held in the summer term and materials should be submitted by the end of the second week of summer term. Students submit a draft chapter and a research proposal for consideration by a panel of their supervisor and advisor (and occasional one other person with appropriate expertise). The research proposal follows a specific template and includes research objectives, the methodology and short research rationale. The nature of the chapter should be agreed with the supervisor. Both parts of the assessment focus on the student's own research and draw on material and debates engaged in GI400 and GI402 where relevant. Students must pass Aims and Methods before progressing to their second year. If unsuccessful at first sit, students have the opportunity to retake Aims and Methods once more at the end of September.

Research students make the transition from MPhil to PhD (Upgrading) by the end of the MT of their second year. In order to upgrade, students must have passed their Aims and Methods. For Upgrade students submit a detailed outline for their thesis (including the anticipated division into chapters), two substantive draft chapters (usually a literature review, methodology or introductory chapter, in discussion with supervisor), and a timetable for completion. The Upgrade is examined in a viva and the committee consists of the main and advisory supervisors and one other person who is not familiar with the student's work. Part-time student submissions are calculated pro-rata for both Aims and Methods and Upgrading.

Expectations for successful Aims and Methods and Upgrading:

- Satisfactory completion of materials for submission and appropriate academic presentation of the same
- Completion of compulsory courses, attendance and contribution to Doctoral Workshop
- Development of appropriate LSE courses in discussion with supervisor

Having successfully Upgraded you will have an annual review with your supervisor and advisor to ensure satisfactory progress.

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Students must achieve a pass (50% or over) in all examined elements (which includes the Methodological courses). All students will be subject to an annual review of progress in every year of registration.

At the end of the first year, students must submit a written first year progress report for formal review, encompassing a revised detailed research proposal and a chapter/paper (which can be a literature review). More details about the required materials and review process are outlined in the programme orientation notes. All of the work carried out in the year, plus performance in specified courses, will also be taken into consideration in the annual review.

All students will initially register for an MPhil and will be required to pass through an upgrade process to register for the PhD. Upgrade from MPhil to PhD normally takes place in the second year of registration. Students must then submit a written upgrade report for formal examination, encompassing an extensive and detailed research proposal and two chapters/papers (one of which can be a literature review). More details about the required materials and upgrade process are outlined in the programme orientation notes. Students may be required to complete additional courses, as deemed relevant by their supervisor, in later years of registration. Students are required to be in attendance throughout their period of registration. Absences or fieldwork must be approved by the Director of Graduate Studies in Geography and the Research Degrees Subcommittee, LSE.

students are required to present at one of the workshops attended

YEAR THREETraining courses*Compulsory (not examined)

At least one workshop from the above (workshop content varies from year to year, but a typical profile includes workshops in political theory, institutional analysis and political economy, European politics and policy, rational choice, and comparative politics).

Year Four Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

At least one workshop from the above (workshop content varies from year to year, but a typical profile includes workshops in political theory, institutional analysis and political economy, European politics and policy, rational choice, and comparative politics).

Progression and upgrade requirements Year 1 - To be allowed to re-register for the second year, first year students are required to give a satisfactory account of the progress and future direction of their research. This should take the form of:

1. A short prospectus, of approximately 3,000 words, setting out the research question, initial theoretical ideas, how these ideas will be applied in empirical research or theoretical enquiry, and a fully referenced discussion of the location of the proposed thesis in relation to existing research, questions, and controversies.
2. A list of intended chapter headings, giving the hypothetical contents of the thesis, together with a short abstract of one paragraph and no more than a page of A4, which summarises, albeit tentatively, the argument, anticipated or hoped for empirical findings or theoretical conclusions of the prospective thesis.
3. One substantial piece of writing, which would normally be a draft chapter. The draft chapter should not be a literature review: it should be a forward looking piece dealing directly with the planned research.

A student is allowed to re-register if, in the opinion of the panel, there is a strong probability that the student will complete a PhD in the permitted time.

Year 2 - The annual review examines the progress made by the student and especially the likelihood of completion of a thesis of sufficient standard within the normal periods (four years for a full-time student and eight for a part-time one).

Year 3 - The annual review examines the progress made by the student and especially the likelihood of completion of a thesis of sufficient standard within the normal periods (four years for a full-time student and eight for a part-time one).

Progression and Upgrade requirements for both routes 1 and 2

Once students are in the MPhil/PhD part of the programme, they will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. This is Year 1 for students in the +3 programme and Year 2 for students in the 1+3 programme. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress to the second year. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year (third year of the 1+3 programme). Progression is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops.

All research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. This is Year 2 for students in the +3 programme and Year 3 for students in the 1+3 route. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. The material is evaluated by an upgrading committee that will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrading committee is normally formed by the student's main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students are expected to make a presentation once per year at IS554 Information Systems PhD Seminar Series and Workshops.

Students are also expected to take an active part in the PhD Seminar Series. During the programme students are required to pass an MPhil/PhD upgrade examination. This involves a presentation at the IS554 Seminar series, submission of a research proposal for formal assessment by the faculty, response document to assessor feedback followed by an oral exam in the early Michaelmas term of year two, attended by a panel of faculty members and an external moderator. Students would normally be required to pass all six of their first year courses with Merit in order to be upgraded.

MPhil/PhD International History

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Progression and upgrade requirements

On being admitted, all students are formally registered for an MPhil. By 13 June (wk 8 Summer Term) of their first year (1 March of their second year for part-time students) they are required to submit 3 hardcopies of their dossier containing (1) the provisional title of their thesis, together with the provisional titles of their chapters; (2) a bibliography, setting out as comprehensively as possible the primary published and unpublished sources they intend to use, along with the books, articles, unpublished theses and other sources they will consult; (3) an historiographical essay, evaluating the contributions of other scholars to their subject, and indicating clearly how their own thesis will contribute to it; and (4) a draft chapter of approximately 10,000 words based largely upon primary sources. The dossier will be read by three members of the Department, and students will be required to undergo a 20-30 minute viva. After the viva you will be informed of the outcome and will receive a joint report from the panel. If the Committee deems the dossier/viva satisfactory, the Department will recommend the student for transfer of registration from MPhil to PhD status. If it is less than satisfactory it will be examined by the Committee who will determine whether the student should be allowed to resubmit revised upgrade materials, which may be permitted once. The review and viva process is designed to determine whether the student is likely to meet the requirements of a PhD, and whether the chosen topic is suitable for a doctoral dissertation.

MPhil/PhD International Relations

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Progression and upgrade requirements Early in the Summer Term first- and second-year research students will have their progress reviewed by a Research Panel. They may also be held at the end of the third or subsequent years of registration at the request of a supervisor or student. Supervisors will not attend Research Panels but will provide reports on progress. Panel members may attend student presentations at the Research Design Seminar (IR509).

Students are expected for the first Panel to submit an outline of their proposed research and one draft chapter. Students who are deemed not to have made satisfactory progress will either be refused permission to re-register or will be required by the Research Panel to produce written work over the summer as a condition for re-registration in the autumn. In the event of conditions to re-registration being set, a further Research Panel may be reconvened in the September prior to re-registration.

For the second Panel, which will decide on the question of upgrading from MPhil to PhD, students will be expected to submit two additional draft chapters. The two chapters should be substantially new work, but may include revised material from year one. Students who have not made sufficient progress to be converted from MPhil to PhD registration by the end of their second year will normally have re-registration made conditional on further progress (details to be decided by the Panel) or may, exceptionally, be prohibited from re-registering.

MPhil/PhD Management

From the 2012/13 session onwards The Department of Management offers an MPhil/PhD Management programme with five tracks:

MPhil/PhD in Management: Business Economics

MPhil/PhD in Management: Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour

MPhil/PhD in Management: General Management

MPhil/PhD in Management: Information Systems and Innovation

MPhil/PhD in Management: Management Science

These are offered either within the Department or one of the its Academic Groups (Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour, Information Systems and Innovation, Management Science).

Progression and upgrade requirements (all tracks)

Students will normally be required to pass their first year modules with Merit or above in order to progress to the second year.
 The research paper must be submitted in the autumn of the second year for the upgrade decision. The panel will decide whether to upgrade the student to PhD status by the end of MT, or require them to 'revise and resubmit', with continued advice from the supervisor, by the end of March. A final decision would then be made.

MPhil/PhD Management

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Students registered for the MPhil/PhD Management (Managerial Economics and Strategy Group) should see the MPhil/PhD
 Management (MES Group) programme regulations
 Students will be registered for one of three tracks of this research programme and are required to take the courses as listed below.

MPhil/PhD Management Science (formerly MPhil/PhD Operational Research)

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Training Courses and Seminars

There are no prescribed courses for all research students. Your supervisor will discuss with you your experience and background and will advise you or require you to take courses as appropriate. These would normally be taken in your first year of registration as a research student.

Students would be expected to be active participants in the Group's Research Seminar Series and, where appropriate to their research, with the Mathematical Programming Study Group Seminar Series held in conjunction with the Operational Research Society.

Normally research students are expected, under the guidance of their supervisor, to present their work and findings to the whole Group every summer in a session devoted to that purpose. Students engaged in preparing the final draft of their thesis are exempted from this requirement.

Methodological Training

You will work closely with your principal supervisor, who will provide advice and guidance. You will also have the opportunity to take advantage of research methodology courses provided by the Methodology Institute and the academic and professional development programme offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

Upgrading to PhD

The review to upgrade to the PhD normally takes place within two years of full time registration. Progress is assessed by the first and/or second supervisor in consultation with the PhD programme director and another expert in the field of the research undertaken by the student. If satisfactory progress has been made, the programme director will recommend that registration be upgraded to PhD status.

Targets for Progress

Year 1 - Successful completion of any taught courses required
 Year 2 - Upgrade to PhD
 Year 3 - Completion of research and thesis
 Year 4 - Completion of research and thesis

MPhil/PhD Mathematics

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONE

Training courses

Compulsory (not examined)

Courses designed for research students in Mathematics, chosen in consultation with their lead supervisor. Most students will attend four courses organized by the London Taught Course Centre (www.lttc.ac.uk), but there are separate arrangements for students in Financial Mathematics, where courses are provided by the London Graduate School in Mathematical Finance (www.londonmathfinance.org.uk).

Transferable skills courses

 Teaching opportunities All students are offered the opportunity to teach for the department, subject to a successful interview and language requirements.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students are initially registered for the MPhil, and will be able to upgrade to PhD registration during their second year, dependent on satisfactory progress. Progress is assessed regularly by the student's supervisors, in consultation with the Doctoral Programme Director, on the basis of the extent to which the agreed research goals have been achieved. Any upgrade is dependent on the successful completion of a Major Review, the date of which is determined by the Doctoral Programme Director in consultation with the lead supervisor.

MPhil/PhD Media and Communications

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONE

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

MC408/418 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications I and II (for students without the appropriate background)
 MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (includes MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis and MY552 Applied Regression Analysis). By agreement, the Methodology Institute components (MY551 and/or MY552) can be replaced by other, more advanced, statistics courses or an advanced qualitative course taught at the Methodology Institute. At least one half-unit course of statistics needs to be included.

Optional (examined/not examined)

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture
 Annual Departmental PhD Symposium

Optional (not examined)

CLT04 Digital Literacy MY593A Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: Getting Started LN988 Thesis Writing course
 Modern Foreign Language courses offered by the Language Centre
 Other graduate seminars of relevance to research subject

Presentation requirements

At least one presentation annually at MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture

YEAR TWOTraining courses*Optional (examined/not examined)

Either MY530 Advanced Qualitative Analysis Workshops (H) or MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)
 MY559 Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Advanced Regression Modelling (H)
 ST416 Multilevel Modelling (H)
 Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor

Transferable skills coursesCompulsory (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture
 Annual Joint PhD Symposium for Second Years and above, at Goldsmiths, Westminster and City

Optional (not examined)

MY593B Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Middle Years
 Other graduate seminars of relevance to research subject

YEAR THREETransferable skills courses*Optional (not examined)

MC500 Research Seminar for Media, Communications and Culture
 MY593C Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher: The Endgame

YEAR FOUR

Students are expected to complete their research

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students will be required to submit a full Thesis Proposal of 10,000 words to their Thesis Committee by 1 June in their first year (part-time students can submit their Proposal by 1 March in their second year). This paper will include a substantive statement of the aims, theories and methods proposed for the thesis, a tentative chapter outline, an indicative bibliography and a timetable for its completion. Together with the Methods (MC5M2) and Theories & Concepts (MC408/418) examinations, this paper will form part of the evaluation process, and, together with an oral examination based on the Thesis Proposal, will determine whether students are permitted to upgrade from MPhil to PhD and continue into their second year.

MPhil/PhD New Media, Innovation and Literacy

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONETraining courses*Compulsory (examined)

Any two of:

MC413 new Media, Information and Knowledge Systems
 MC418 Theories and Concepts in Media and Communications II
 MC402 The Audience in Media and Communications
 MC409 Media, Technology and Everyday Life
 MC424 Media and Communications Governance
 MC425 Interpersonal Mediated Communication

Plus

MC5M2 Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (includes MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis and MY552 Applied Regression Analysis). By agreement, the Methodology Institute components (MY551 and/or MY552) can be replaced by other, more advanced, statistics courses or an advanced qualitative course taught at the Methodology Institute. At least one half-unit course of statistics needs to be included.

Optional (examined/not examined)

Other graduate courses relevant to research subject and agreed with supervisor.

YEAR FOUR

Students are expected to complete their research

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students will be required to submit a full Thesis Proposal of 10,000 words to their Thesis Committee by 1 June in their first year (part-time students can submit their Proposal by 1 March in their second year). This paper will include a substantive statement of the aims, theories and methods proposed for the thesis, a tentative chapter outline, an indicative bibliography and a timetable for its completion. Together with the examinations in Methods (MC5M2) and the other two chosen compulsory first year courses from the list above, this paper will form part of the evaluation process, and, together with an oral examination based on the Thesis Proposal, will determine whether students are permitted to upgrade from MPhil to PhD and continue into their second year.

MPhil/PhD Social Research Methods

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONETraining courses

Optional (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined)

A selection of:

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)

MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)

MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)

MY552 Applied Regression Analysis (H)

MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)

MY556 Survey Methodology (H) MY557 Causal Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies (H)

A typical selection would be to take MY400, MY521, MY552 and MY555 in the first year, but students may be excused from some or all of them if they have previously taken graduate-level courses covering the same material. Students who use quantitative methods in their research, are also encouraged to take MY559 in their first or second year. The courses they take may also include ones from other institutes or departments at LSE, dependent on their needs.

YEAR FOURTransferable skills courses*Compulsory (not examined)

MY599 Methodology Institute Seminar

Progression and upgrade requirements In the Summer Term of their first year, candidates will produce a 10,000 word 'first year review' that outlines the aims and methods of their thesis: this means summarising the key literature(s), motivating their specific research questions, and highlighting the planned contributions of their work. A first year review document typically includes a general introduction, a comprehensive literature review (covering relevant empirical and theoretical work), a motivation of the research questions and hypotheses, and an indication of the literature(s) that the candidate is seeking to contribute to (i.e. the gaps in knowledge that will be addressed). Candidates will also give an oral presentation of their proposal at the Methodology Institute PhD day. Written and oral work will be assessed by two academics (not on the supervisory team), normally members of Methodology Institute staff. This work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable them to progress to the second year. It is particularly important that the first year review clearly states the objectives of the doctoral research and indicate how the empirical work will be carried out. If the panel deems the first year review to be not suitably clear, they can choose not to accept the submitted document and give the candidate up to a month to clarify. This decision will be taken maximum one week after the Methodology Institute PhD Day.

Examples of unclear work might include (but not be limited to):

- A first year review that does not state clear research questions;
- A first year review that does not adequately review the specific literatures that the empirical work is contributing to;
- A first year review that does not give enough methodological detail, showing how the design will produce data that allows the candidate to address the theoretical issues at stake in a systematic and rigorous way.

After the first year candidates will spend more time on independent study under the guidance of their supervisor(s). This will involve the collection, organization and analysis of data, and writing up the results. During their second year of registration, they will typically submit three (minimum) draft chapters of their thesis plus a short introduction and a detailed plan for its completion. The three draft chapters will typically include a detailed literature review, specification of research problem(s) and two empirical chapters. If candidates are pursuing a paper-based thesis, their upgrading documents will typically include a short introduction, a literature review and at least two empirical papers. Whether a traditional or paper-based thesis, the material will be evaluated by an upgrading committee (two academics, not necessarily of the MI or even the LSE) who will recommend transferral to PhD registration if their work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. Throughout the MPhil/PhD and PhD, candidates will attend the Institute's research seminar and other specialist workshops and seminars related to their interests. The student must present at every Methodology Institute PhD day.

MPhil/PhD Philosophy

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor. All programmes of study should be agreed with the supervisor at the start of the year.

YEAR ONETraining courses*Compulsory (examined/not examined)

PH501 Philosophical Problems Seminar

Students who have never taken a paper in formal logic at degree must take PH502 Reasoning and Logic (examined).

Students who have already taken a formal logic course should choose one further MSc course not already taken as part of an MSc degree. Students can either decide to be examined in this course or instead choose to write two assessed essays, one at the end of each of the first two terms. This with the exception of students who choose PH419 Set Theory and Further Logic, in which case the examination is compulsory.

Either a further MSc course (again one not taken as part of the MSc course) plus three term units of PhD level seminars. The seminars on offer are PH551 Research Seminar in Philosophy of Natural Sciences, PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences or PH500 Research Methods in Philosophy. Taking three term units means that students can either take all three terms of one of these seminars or 'mix and match' by taking different seminars in different terms. Seminars must be taken with associated course work.

Or six term units of PhD level seminars with associated coursework. If students choose to take a further MSc course, they can either decide to be examined or instead choose to write two assessed essays, one at the end of each of the first two terms. PhD level seminars are not examined and assessment is solely based on essays.

Optional (not examined)

Transferable skills courses offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre or the Methodology Institute.

YEAR TWOTraining courses*Optional (not examined)

PH551 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences

PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

PH500 Research Methods in Philosophy

Optional (examined/not examined)

Transferable skills courses offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre or the Methodology Institute.

YEAR THREE

Training courses

Optional (not examined)

PH551 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences

PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

PH500 Research Methods in Philosophy

Optional (examined/not examined)

PH555 Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

PH500 Research Methods in Philosophy

Optional (examined/not examined)

Transferable skills courses offered by the Teaching and Learning Centre or the Methodology Institute.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Successful completion of work required for each year is a necessary condition for re-registration in the following year; and for upgrading from MPhil to PhD status. During the first year students must write a first chapter of the thesis as well as an outline (research plan) of the rest of the thesis. The chapter should be around 40 pages; the research plan around 10 pages. Both have to be handed in to the Departmental Office by 1 September. This upgrading will normally take place after the successful completion of year 1 requirements in Case A, and after the successful completion of year 2 requirements in Case B. In both cases once you are registered for the PhD that registration will be backdated to the start of your MPhil/PhD studies.

MPhil/PhD Philosophy of the Social Sciences

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor. All programmes of study should be agreed with the supervisor at the start of the year.

YEAR ONE

Training courses

Compulsory (examined/not examined)

1. MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis
2. MY552 Applied Regression Analysis
3. MY521 Qualitative Research Methods
4. Either PH502 Reasoning and Logic (if students have previous logic training) or PH419 Set Theory and Further Logic (if no logic training)
5. PH423 Scientific Method and Policy
6. Students also attend a Research Seminar in the Department

YEAR TWO

Training courses

Compulsory (examined)

7. MY555 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement
8. MY500 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

YEAR THREE AND FOUR

Completion of the thesis.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Students on the MPhil/PhD programme will go through a First Year Progress Review taking place in the Summer Term of their first research year. For the First Year Progress Review, the student submits a written progress report containing an extensive and updated research proposal (typically including an introduction to the topic and motivation for the research; aims and objectives/research questions; contribution to knowledge; summary of methods to be used; and outline of the work to be done) and either a comprehensive literature review or a substantive draft of a chapter/paper as evidence of progress made during the year. Normally, there will be a progress review meeting between the student and the supervisors (main supervisor and review supervisor) to discuss the written material presented. The work has to reach an acceptable standard to enable the student to progress to the second year. There is provision for a second Supplementary Review, in cases where there are doubts as to whether progress has been sufficient to allow the student to enter the second year. Progression to the second year is also dependent on students having passed all required examinations and obtained at least one merit, and having presented their work satisfactorily in the doctoral presentation workshops. Research students are initially registered for an MPhil and have to be upgraded to PhD status. The upgrade from MPhil to PhD usually occurs during the second year of full-time registration. The exact timing depends on the student's progress. Students are required to submit a formal written upgrade report consisting of an extensive revised research proposal, two substantive draft papers/chapters, of which one can be a literature review, and a detailed plan for completion. The material is evaluated by an upgrading committee that will recommend transferral to PhD registration if the work is judged to be of sufficient quality and quantity. The upgrading committee is normally formed by the student's main supervisor, review supervisor and a third member of staff with relevant expertise. The upgrade is also dependent on students having completed all required training courses and having made a satisfactory research presentation in their doctoral presentation workshop.

In addition to these formal arrangements, each year during the Summer Term and throughout the course of their studies, all PhD students and their supervisors have to complete a yearly Progress Report Form, detailing progress made, problems arising and plan/timeline for completion. The forms are sent to the relevant Doctoral Programme Director for approval before students are able to re-register for the following session. If perceived lack of progress is identified, it can trigger a more formal annual review of progress in which the student is asked to produce specific written documents to be evaluated by a review panel.

MPhil/PhD Social Policy

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONE

Training courses

Optional (not examined)

If not already taken previously:

SA451 Social Policy Research

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)

MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)

MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)

Students will discuss with their supervisors any other methodological training that may be relevant for the successful completion of the MPhil/PhD programme.

SA550 Research Student Seminar

Progression and Upgrade requirements

Each student is required to undertake Major Review in the summer term of their first year (second year for part-time students). For Major Review they must submit a 10,000 word document with a detailed thesis proposal, their research question, a literature review, a description of their methodology, their plans for data collection and a timetable through to completion. They are interviewed on this document by senior staff who make the decision on upgrading.

Each year post-Major Review, every student is expected to submit a 1,000 to 2,000 word progress report, approved by supervisors, to the Doctoral Programme Director(s).

Each pre-Major Review student is expected to make a presentation on their proposed research to the SA550 seminar prior to the submission of their major review document and to address issues raised by the Doctoral Programme Director(s).

MPhil/PhD Social Psychology

The MPhil/PhD programme includes taught courses on both methodology and theory. The precise courses students are required to attend varies and exemptions may apply depending on prior experience and qualifications. These matters should be discussed and agreed with the supervisor in the first formal supervision meeting.

YEAR ONE

Training courses

Compulsory (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined)

MY421 Qualitative Research Methods (H)

MY452 Applied Regression Analysis (H) or MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)

MY456 Survey Methodology (H)

PS400 Contemporary Social and Cultural Psychology or PS404

Organisational Social Psychology or PS429 The Social Psychology of Communication or PS461 Health, Community and Development.

Half unit optional course.

Transferable skills courses

Compulsory (not examined)

PS950 Current Research in Social Psychology

Optional (examined/not examined/)

Students can take further optional courses which they should discuss with their supervisor (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined)

YEAR TWO

Training courses

Compulsory (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined):

Quantitative pathway

MY452 Applied Regression Analysis (H) (if MY451 taken in year 1)

MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H) (if MY452 taken in year 1)

Qualitative pathway

MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)

Combined pathway

MY452 Applied Regression Analysis (H) (if MY451 taken in year 1)
MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H) (if MY452 taken in year 1)

MY456 Survey Methodology (H) (if MY455 taken in year 1)

MY455 Multivariate Analysis and Measurement (H)

Optional (examined/not examined)

Students can take further optional courses which they should discuss with their supervisor (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined)

Transferable skills coursesCompulsory (not examined)

PS950 Current Research in Social Psychology

Optional (examined/not examined)

Students can take further optional courses which they should discuss with their supervisor (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined).

YEAR THREETraining courses*Compulsory (examined/not examined)

Students can take further compulsory courses which they should discuss with their supervisor (students should agree with their supervisor whether the courses taken will also be examined):

Optional (examined/not examined)

Selection of courses taken at more advanced level than those in years 1 and 2

Transferable skills coursesCompulsory (not examined)

PS950 Current Research in Social Psychology

YEAR FOURTraining courses

Students can take further courses following discussion with their supervisor.

Transferable skills coursesCompulsory (not examined)

PS950 Current Research in Social Psychology

Optional (examined/not examined)

Students can take further optional courses which they should discuss with their supervisor

Progression and upgrade requirements

The first year Extended Essay and the second year Upgrade chapters (see below) are examined by a three-person thesis committee, which includes the student's supervisor, as well as two other academic colleagues.

Targets for progress

Year 1 - Extended Essay of 6,000 words, submitted on first day of Lent Term.

Year 2 - Upgrade viva. Two draft chapters of 10,000 words each (total of 20,000 words), submitted on first day of Lent Term. These chapters form the basis of an oral examination by three person thesis committee usually four to six weeks after submission. Success in this examination results in upgrade from MPhil to PhD status.

Year 3 - Completed first draft by end of three years.

Teaching experience

Graduates will usually gain some teaching experience and have had the opportunity to develop teaching skills.

MPhil/PhD Sociology

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

YEAR ONETraining courses Compulsory (examined)

SO500 Research Class for 1st year MPhil Students

Students may also be asked to attend and pass the assessment for up to one further course unit (or two half units) chosen with their supervisor on the basis of an assessment of their research training needs.

Optional (examined)

MY400 Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (H)

MY521 Qualitative Research Methods (H)

MY551 Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (H)

MY552 Applied Regression Analysis (H)

Selection of additional courses, with agreement of supervisor, including:

Other courses from Sociology Masters programmes

Specialist research courses: SO507 Theory and Methods in Qualitative Research, (W/D) SO511 Research Seminar in Political

Sociology (n/a 13/14), SO521 Research Seminar on Cities and Space and SO401 Social Research Methods

Transferable skills coursesOptional (not examined)

YEAR FOURTraining courses Optional (not examined)

MY593C Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher:

The Endgame (This course is intended for students who are within a year to six months of completing the doctorate.)

Progression and upgrade requirements

In the Summer term of each year the progress of each student registered in the Department is discussed at the MPhil/PhD Board, which is a general meeting of all research student supervisors.

This Board decides whether to recommend to the School that students be permitted to proceed to the next year of study. If progress is unsatisfactory, a course of action to assist students to reach performance standards deemed appropriate by supervisors may be required, or a recommendation may be made that the student not be allowed to re-register.

By the end of year 2, students are expected to have completed their fieldwork, and to be ready to submit three draft chapters for upgrade. All full-time research students are expected to have made the transition from the MPhil to PhD (upgrading) within two years of first registration and to have submitted their PhD thesis within four years. Part-time students are expected to be upgraded to PhD by the end of their third year, and to submit their thesis within six years.

The decision to upgrade from MPhil to PhD is taken by a panel consisting of two academics from the Department or the School, with the supervisor(s) in attendance and available to be consulted by the panel. For upgrade, students submit three draft chapters of their thesis, plus thesis abstract and outline schedule for completion. This material is then assessed by viva voce and a written report is made by the panel.

Students should aim to have a complete first draft of their thesis in years three to four and allow three to six months for revision and submission.

MPhil/PhD Statistics

In addition to progressing with their research, students are expected to take the listed training and transferable skills courses. Students may take courses in addition to those listed, and should discuss this with their supervisor.

Progression and upgrade requirements

Formal assessment is made towards the end of each Summer Term. This assessment is based on statements made by the student and the supervisors in the progress report form. Students are also required to complete a supplementary report of 1-2 pages (A4), providing in more detail an outline of their current research. The review to upgrade to the PhD normally takes place within two years of full time registration. Progress is assessed by the first and/or second supervisor in consultation with the PhD programme director and another expert in the field of the research undertaken by the student. If satisfactory progress has been made, the programme director will recommend that registration be upgraded to PhD status. The department's research committee also monitors the progress of PhD students.

Teaching opportunities

The department employs Graduate Teaching Assistants (GTAs) to teach a number of its undergraduate and postgraduate courses. In particular ST102, Elementary Statistical theory, and ST107, Quantitative Methods, are taught to a large number of students across the School and require a significant number of classes. Research students are encouraged to undertake some teaching from year two onwards. First year MPhil/PhD students are normally not permitted to teach, although some marking may be available during the year or for the external degree at the end of the year. A Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education is offered to those who wish to pursue this.

AC500Accounting, Organisations and Society*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting and MPhil/PhD in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In addition CARR staff and students on other programmes may be eligible to take this, with the permission of the Course Director.

Course content: This is an advanced course for doctoral and postdoctoral students focusing on the institutional and organisational context of accounting practices in their broadest sense. The seminars are generally based on key readings at the interface between accounting, organisation studies, regulation and management. Discussions will be focused on the analysis of accounting and calculative practices in context drawing on a wide range of approaches.Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.Indicative reading: There is no single text for this course and the seminars will be based on pre-distributed readings. Students are advised to read the following: Hopwood and Miller (Eds.), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice, Cambridge, 1994.Assessment: Assessment will be based on written work as agreed with the Course Director.AC501*Seminar in Accounting Research Methods*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Power KSW 3.12Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting and MPhil/PhD in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

In addition CARR staff and students on other programmes may be eligible to take this, with the permission of the Course Director.

Course content: This is a readings based course dealing with advanced issues in accounting research methods.Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the LT.AC502 Half Unit*Foundations of Accounting, Organizations and Institutions*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Hall OLD 2.11Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is also offered for students from other MPhil/PhD programmes, with the approval and written permission of the PhD in Accounting Programme Director.Course content: The object of the course is to provide students with an advanced understanding of the changing role and position of accounting practices in organisations, both public and private, and societies more generally. Students will be exposed to advanced thinking about how accounting practices are much more than a collection of routine techniques but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. We will focus on how efforts to design internal and external accounting practices are both a function of specific economic and political interests, but are also shaped by social and political aspirations. The role of accountants and other agents will be addressed.

The course emphasises the inter-relations between technical, organisational and institutional issues. While some technical accounting knowledge will be helpful, it is not essential and each lecture will provide the necessary technical foundations.

Indicative topics include:

Foundations of Reporting, Calculation and Disclosure; Transnational Regulation and Standardisation; Accounting and the Notion of "Entity"; Audit and Assurance: The Audit Society; Organisational Boundaries, Structure and Control; Performance, Accountability Incentives; Accounting for Sustainability; Organisational Failure as a Process.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two pieces of written work. This may take the form of either an essay, or the analysis of a case, and may also include in-class presentations and team-based work. This work will be assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.Indicative reading: Chapman, Cooper & Miller (eds), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford, 2009); Hopwood & Miller (eds), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice, Cambridge, 1994; Power, The Audit Society, Oxford, 1999; Roberts, The Modern Firm, Oxford, 2004.Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words) in the ST.

MPhil/PhD in Accounting students must pass the course examination, normally with high Merit (at least 65%) or Distinction marks, to proceed to the next year of the programme.

AC550Quantitative Methods in Accounting and Finance*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Stefano Cascino OLD 3.32, Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07 and Dr Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Law and Accounting and MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk. This course is not available as an outside option.Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with the necessary background required for core accounting and finance courses. The course is organised in three sections:

Section 1 - "Accounting: Disclosure Principles and Practice" provides an overview of fundamental accounting concepts, practices and the main financial statements. This section emphasises users' perspective rather than preparers' perspective on financial reporting (eg, for valuation purposes).

Section 2 - "Game Theory: Application to Capital Markets" introduces the game theoretical tools required to analyse issues in accounting and finance in settings in which economic agents interact strategically.

Section 3 - "Finance: Quantitative Methods" provides the basic quantitative tools needed for technical MSc courses. This section consists of an introduction to Basic Calculus, Probability and Statistics.

Teaching: Teaching takes place over a 9-day period before the start of MT.Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.Assessment: This course is not assessed. However, students will be given a number of application exercises to complete on their own or in groups.AN500*Seminar on Anthropological Research*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option.Course content: Seminar on Anthropological ResearchTeaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 20 hours of seminars in the ST.Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN501 Field Research Seminar (Anthropology)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott, OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option. This seminar is for MPhil/PhD students preparing their detailed research proposal prior to embarking on fieldwork and other forms of empirical research.

Course content: The course aims to give you a thorough understanding of what is involved in carrying out ethnographic fieldwork, and what kinds of knowledge it can and cannot generate. It focuses both on the classic fieldwork methods used by anthropologists in the first half of the 20th century, and on more recent methodological developments and techniques that correspond to transformations in the nature of the social. It also engages you with the realities of turning research ideas into realistic plans, in the context of your chosen area of fieldwork. The first half of the course deals with general ethnographic methods. These include participant observation; field notes and the organization of data; visual methods; ethics and anthropological 'codes of ethics'; interviews; written ethnography, ethnographic knowledge, and problems of representation; critical approaches to existing ethnographic texts; place, multi-sited ethnography, the local and the global; research into family, kinship and the genealogical method; archives and how to use documentary material; fieldwork methodology and the research proposal. In the second half of the course, students present drafts of their projects and think through associated methodological and ethical issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to prepare seminar presentations.

Indicative reading: P Caplan (Ed), The Ethics of Anthropology Debates and Dilemmas (Routledge, 2003); M Banks and H Morphy (Eds), Rethinking visual anthropology (Yale UP, 1999); R Ellen (Ed), Ethnographic Research: a guide to general conduct, (Academic Press, 1985); A Gupta and J Ferguson (Eds), Culture, Power, Place: explorations in critical anthropology (Duke University Press, 1997); K Hastrup, 'Getting it right: knowledge and evidence in anthropology'. Anthropological Theory, 4 (4): 455-72; (2004); M Jackson, Paths Towards a Clearing (Indiana UP, 1989); L H Malkki and A Cerwonka, Improvising Theory: process and temporality in ethnographic fieldwork (Chicago, 2007); G Marcus, Ethnography Through Thick and Thin (Princeton, 1998); D Mosse, Cultivating development: an ethnography of aid policy and practice (London, 2005); K Narayan, 'How Native is a "Native" Anthropologist?' American Anthropologist, 95(3), 1993; P Steven Sangren, 'Rhetoric and the authority of ethnography'. Current Anthropology, 29(3), 405-435, 1988; R Sanjek (Ed), Fieldnotes: the Makings of Anthropology (Cornell, 1990); Bernard H Russell, Research Methods in Cultural Anthropology (Sage, 1990); N Scheper-Hughes, 'The Primacy of the Ethical. Propositions for a Militant Anthropology'. Current Anthropology, 36(3), 409-420, 1995; ASA Ethical Guidelines <http://www.theasa.org/ethics.htm>

Assessment: Students' progress is monitored throughout the course by the teachers responsible. The work undertaken for this course is expected to feed directly into the preparation of the Research Proposal (AN443). The formal examination of the Proposal constitutes the assessment of the course.

AN503 Thesis Writing Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option. This seminar is for 3rd and 4th year MPhil/PhD post-fieldwork students.

Course content: Students present draft dissertation chapters in their cohort.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 20 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN507 Theoretical Issues in Anthropology: Precepts and Practice II

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option. This seminar is for 3rd and 4th year MPhil/PhD post-fieldwork students.

Course content: The course examines key theoretical concepts and approaches in anthropology. It focuses on a number of areas, including post-structuralist and post-modernist theory; theories of the person and the body; theories of gender; theories of social change; theories of distribution and consumption; theories of religion and ritual; and such theoretical issues as are determined from time to time to be relevant to the course participants.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Fortnightly seminars in each of the MT, LT and ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

AN522 Research Seminar on Consciousness, Self and Society

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

AN900 Not available in 2013/14 A Programme of Ethnographic Films

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: To be announced.

Availability: Open to all

Course content: There will usually be 10 films in each of the MT and LT. Titles will be announced at the beginning of each term.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

DV500 Research Seminar in Development Studies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold CON.7.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Development Studies and MRes/PhD in International Development. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This seminar is designed as a forum for discussing theoretical and methodological issues in Development Studies research. Modules are organized around broad methodological issues (e.g. research design, case studies, causal inference) and presentations of research, with the former featuring heavily in the MT and the latter in the LT and ST. Research presentations at the seminar are made by DESTIN research students and also by staff, with some invited speakers from outside.

All research students are expected to attend the seminar while in residence in London. First year students are required to present a draft of their research proposal to the seminar during the LT or ST. Continuing students are invited to make presentations based on a report of their research, draft chapters or even their final draft of the dissertation. In making their presentations students are asked to provide (a) background material about the particular issue at hand, (b) a clear statement of the research questions and/or hypotheses that are being addressed, and (c) discussion of the research methods to be employed. Students should inform their supervisor(s) of the date when they are scheduled to make a presentation.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 15 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

EC501

Work in Progress Seminars

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francesco Caselli 32L.1.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Economics (Track 1), MRes in Economics (Track 2) and MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Research students present their work to faculty and peers in the designated field. Outside speakers are also invited from time to time.

Teaching: Seminars EC501: eight seminar groups covering the major field options. The frequency of meetings to be determined according to the number of students in each specialism, but generally each group will meet weekly throughout the session.

Assessment: This course is not examinable.

EC518

Topics in Advanced Econometrics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L.4.20 and Dr Taisuke Otsu 32L.4.25

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: See course content for EC485. Additionally, this course will examine more advanced theories and applications in Econometric Theory. Recent developments in the field will be discussed, giving students an insight into the process by which research is conducted, and suggesting fruitful areas for research.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of lectures in the LT.

Students are required to attend (i) EC485 Topics in Advanced Econometrics, and (ii) EC518 lectures (20 hours).

Indicative reading: See reading list for EC485. Additional readings will be recommended at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC532

International Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Swati Dhingra 32L.2.31, Dr Keyu Jin 32L.1.17, Prof Gianmarco Ottaviano 32L.2.27A and Dr Thomas Sampson 32L.2.34

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is concerned with the latest developments in international economics. The course builds on techniques introduced in MSc International Economics (EC421) to take students to the research frontier. One term covers international trade and the other term covers international macroeconomics. The course is based around research papers. Topics covered vary from year as the research frontier expands. A list of representative topics in international trade includes: micro-econometric studies of international trade, theories of heterogeneous firms and trade, theories of incomplete contracts and trade, and the political economy of trade policy. A list of representative topics in international macroeconomics includes international business cycles, determinants of international capital flows, portfolio choice and risk sharing, monetary and fiscal policy in open economies, theoretical and empirical work on the real exchange rate and international financial crises (e.g., currency attacks and sovereign defaults).

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings will be from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC533

Labour Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Luis Garicano NAB 5.09, Dr Guy Michaels 32L.2.10 and Prof Jorn Pischke 32L.2.16

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of the course is to familiarise students with main theoretical and empirical issues in current labour economics, to provide them with the tools for carrying out independent research in the field, and to provide a perspective on areas of ongoing research. The course has a strong applied focus. For each major topic covered we will investigate the main available theories in light of their testable implications, and discuss the advantages and limitations of existing empirical work and assess policy options.

Topics include:

- Labour supply, household behaviour, and the allocation of time
- Labour demand and monopsony
- Search, matching, labour market frictions, unions, and unemployment
- Wage determination, compensating differentials, race and gender gaps, and wage inequality
- Human capital, returns to schooling, and training
- Contracts and incentives in the labour market

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC534

Public Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Henrik Kleven 32L.3.16, Dr Johannes Spinnewijn 32L.3.24 and Dr Camille Landais 32L.2.23

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover the economics of the public sector, including material on taxation, public expenditures and political economics. The course, which covers both theory and empirics, aims to give students a broad overview of this growing field and bring them to the research frontier.

The specific topics covered may vary from year to year, but the following general areas would typically be included:

- Behavioural responses to taxes and transfers
- Optimal taxation
- Dynamic taxation
- Behavioural public economics
- Social insurance
- Federalism
- Privatization and regulation
- Voting

- The role of communication in politics
- Special-interest politics
- Political institutions
- Political accountability

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of the term. Although the course will not be based on a textbook as such, it will make extensive use of the Handbook of Public Economics Vol. 1-4 (A.J. Auerbach and M. Feldstein, eds.) and of T Persson and G. Tabellini, Political Economy, MIT Press, 2002.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC535

Development Economics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Oriana Bandiera 32L.3.02, Prof Robin Burgess 32L.3.03, Prof Maitreesh Ghatak 32L.3.08A and Dr Gregory Fischer 32L.3.09

Dr Gharad Bryan 32L.3.10, Prof Torsten Persson, Guest Lecturer

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course will cover advanced topics in development economics where current research is active. It is intended to introduce research students in economics to the latest research in development economics and to serve as an input into the research work of these students.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback will be given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC536

Economics of Industry for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Gentry 32L.4.28, Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L.4.19, Dr Pasquale Schiraldi 32L.4.22, Prof Alessandro Gavazza

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The main goal is to familiarize students with selected theoretical and empirical topics in industrial organization and to put students in a position to do their own research. Classical IO theory, well established empirical techniques including estimation of demand, production and models of strategic interaction and topics at the forefront of current IO research will be covered.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC537

Microeconomic Theory for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Ellis, Prof John Hardman Moore 32L.4.14, Dr Matthew Levy 32L.3.21 and Prof Balazs Szentes 32L.4.05

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomics for MRes students (EC441).

Course content: The objective of this course is to provide students with a graduate level introduction to advanced topics and contemporary developments in Microeconomic Theory. Topics will include:

- Classic static and dynamic game theory
- Contract theory
- Bounded rationality
- Psychology and economics.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and assessed by teachers.

Indicative reading: Osborne M, and Rubinstein A, A Course in Game Theory, MIT Press, 1994. Fudenberg D, and Tirole J, Game Theory, MIT Press, 1991.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC539

Macroeconomics for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pascal Michaillat 32L.1.11, Dr Kevin Sheedy 32L.1.09 and Prof Wouter Den Haan 32L.1.08A

Availability: This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Surveys the most recent development in macroeconomics, with an emphasis on technical detail and directions for further research opened up by the material. The goal is to put the students on the research path by bringing them to the research frontier.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: One piece of work per term will be required and feedback given by teachers.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly from journal articles; a list will be supplied at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC540

Political Economy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Gilat Levy 32L.4.31

Availability: This course is available on the MRes Political Science, MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: MRes Economics first year core courses for Economics students, EC400 and adviser's approval for Government students. EC400, EC411 (or equivalent) and course convener's approval for all other students.

Course content: The course will provide students with the economic methodology and tools for the analysis of political decision making and its effect on public policy. We will consider how political institutions shape economic policy, e.g., how do institutions such as election, legislative bargaining, political parties or non-democratic regimes shape redistributive policies, fiscal policies, and the size of government. We will also consider how in the absence of institutions, political attitudes, beliefs and norms shape policies. The course will focus on analytical models and their testable implications.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will discuss papers in lectures and will be given the opportunity to solve problem sets.

Indicative reading: Political Economics by T. Persson and G. Tabellini (MIT Press 2000); Special Interest Politics by G. Grossman and E. Helpman (MIT Press 2001); Whither Political Economy? Theories, Facts and Issues, by A. Merlo, in Blundell, Richard, Newey, Whitney and Torsten Persson (eds.), Advances in Economics and Econometrics, Vol. 1, Cambridge University Press, 2005; Tim Besley and Torsten Persson, Pillars of Prosperity: The Political Economics of Development Clusters, Princeton University Press Torsten Persson & Guido Tabellini, 2005; "The Economic Effects of Constitutions," MIT Press Books, The MIT Press; Positive Political Theory 1, Collective Preference, D. Austen-Smith and J. Banks, Michigan, 2000; Positive Political Theory 2, Strategy and Structure, D. Austen-Smith and J. Banks, Michigan, 2005.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC599

Research Paper in Economics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD in Economics. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: A research paper, between 5,000 and 10,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted mid-way through the summer term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis chapters and related work. A detailed syllabus is fixed at the start of the year. Seminar presentations by outside speakers may be added.

Teaching: Ten one and-a-half hour fortnightly meetings in MT and LT, commencing in week 2 of MT. A mini-conference in the ST, organised by the students themselves.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending student has to give at least one presentation.

FM502

Corporate Finance for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Amil Dasgupta and Dr Daniel Paravisini Maggi

Mike Burkart

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Doctoral students in the Departments of Finance and Economics, and other students with the permission of the PhD Programme Director, Professor Daniel Ferreira.

Course content: The first half of this course focuses on the theory of corporate finance. The theory half of the course can, in turn, be subdivided into two parts. The first part reviews some of the classical concepts in corporate finance, using tools from game and contract theory to study incentive and information problems at the level of the firm, examining how financial contracts can be designed to mitigate these problems. This part of the course also considers how takeovers and ownership concentration can help to mitigate conflict of interests among insiders and investors in firms. The second part focuses on the theory of financial intermediation. This component reviews the classical theories for the existence of financial intermediaries, focusing on the key inter-linkage between financial intermediation and financial fragility. This component of the course also examines the role of financial intermediaries in engendering financial market imperfections. The second half of the course will consider empirical methods in corporate finance and its applications to capital structure, investments, financial distress, corporate governance, and financial intermediation.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings will be mainly based on books and journal articles including:

- Tirole, Jean, The Theory of Corporate Finance, 2006, Princeton University Press.
- Freixas, X. and Rochet, J.C., The Microeconomics of Banking, 1997, MIT Press.
- J. Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross-Section and Panel Data, Cambridge: The MIT Press, 2002.
- M. Roberts and T. Whited: "Endogeneity in Empirical Corporate Finance," Handbook of the Economics of Finance, vol. 2.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

FM503

Asset Pricing for Research Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Dimitrios Vayanos and Dr Georgy Chabakauri

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is divided into two parts relating to asset pricing theory empirical asset pricing. The asset pricing theory half of the course will cover static models of frictionless markets, dynamic discrete-time models, dynamic continuous-time models, and models with frictions. The second half of the course is dedicated to empirical evaluation of asset-pricing models. Representative agent models (with power, habit and recursive preferences) and their application to valuation of equities are covered. Next, no-arbitrage term-structure and option-pricing models are discussed. The class concludes with both equilibrium and reduced-form models of currencies.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT. 30 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading:

- Darrell Duffie Asset Pricing Theory, Princeton University Press
- John Campbell, 1999, Asset prices, consumption, and the business cycle, in J. B. Taylor and M. Woodford, Eds., Handbook of Macroeconomics, Volume 1C, Elsevier Science B.V
- John Cochrane, 2004, Asset Pricing, Princeton University Press
- Kenneth Singleton, 2006, Empirical Dynamic Asset pricing, Princeton University Press

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PhD Seminar in Finance

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Finance. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This is a seminar course for PhD students in the early stages of their research to present their work in progress. Outside speakers may also be invited from time to time.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Other meetings to be arranged as necessary.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 10000 words) in the LT.

A 10,000 word essay on a topic to be agreed with the student's supervisor. This essay is to be submitted by the end of the LT of the second year of registration for Route 1 students, and the MT of the second year of registration for Route 2 students.

GI500

Doctoral Workshop: Gender Institute

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible:

Dr Marsha Henry, COL 5.04H and Dr Ania Plomien, COL 5.04F.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Gender Studies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The aim of this course is to give students experience and practice in presenting chapters or papers related to their current research for critical discussion. The focus of the seminar is on the research process and students are expected to present at least once per year. Summer term sessions are given over to professional training, such as CV preparation, conference participation, publishing and teaching organisation.

Teaching: 15 one-and-a-half hour seminars held fortnightly in the MT, LT and ST. First year students must also audit GI400 Gender Theories in the Modern World (lectures only) and GI402 Gender, Knowledge and Research Practice (full course). All students are expected to participate in Methodology Institute or other Gender Institute courses as advised by their supervisors. Students are also expected to participate in research seminars and public lectures.

Indicative reading: PhD chapters and articles suggested by students relevant to their topic.

Assessment: First year students will be assessed by means of a draft chapter setting the research issues and questions in the context of the wider literature, and suggesting and justifying appropriate methodologies and theoretical frameworks; and a proposal following ESRC guidelines, in which the thesis prospectus is revised. The chapter and proposal are read by the main and advisory supervisors, and a third person if necessary. The candidate is evaluated in a viva context, and either asked to resubmit the materials or passed through to the following year. This assessment has to be passed before progress to the second year is permitted. Arrangements for part-time students will be made on a pro-rata basis. After the first year students are expected to upgrade from MPhil to PhD (within 4 terms of registration, pro-rata for part-time students). Students are permitted to resubmit material for the upgrade on one further occasion within two terms of the first attempt, similarly on a pro-rata basis for part-time students. After this students are reviewed on an annual basis until the thesis is complete.

GV501 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lea Ypi CON3.19

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Government. This course is not available as an outside option. Compulsory for second and subsequent year research students in Government specialising in political theory. First year students are encouraged to attend.

Course content: An opportunity for students to present chapters or papers related to their current research for critical discussion.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

GV503 Political Philosophy Research Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lea Ypi CON3.19 and Dr Leigh Jenco

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Theory and MSc in Political Theory (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Other interested students are welcome to attend, if numbers permit.

Course content: Guest speakers present papers and initiate discussion at seminars.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: No assessment

GV510 Ethnicity and Nationalism Research Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Douglas Hutchinson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For MRes/PhD students specialising in Ethnicity and Nationalism, who have attended an LSE Undergraduate or Master's course in this or a related field, or equivalent at another University. By permission, Visiting Students and others may also participate.

Course content: Critical analysis of recent theories and research in the fields of Ethnicity and Nationalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students may also attend the lectures in GV479 Nationalism and participate (subject to space) in the seminars in this course.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course.

GV513 Qualitative Methods in the Study of Politics

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog CON4.01

Availability: This course is available on the MRes Political Science. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

MRes Political Science Stream B (compulsory); other PhD students with permission of class teacher and subject to capacity.

Course content: This course introduces and critically evaluates, at the advanced postgraduate level, a key range of qualitative techniques and methods in political science, in order to provide a powerful resource for students to evaluate qualitative methods for themselves, and to select, reject, and deploy them in research theory, design and practice.

The course begins with debates over the place of qualitative methods in political science, and the question of how to match ideas to methods. The rest of the course is devoted to exploring a range of qualitative techniques, including case studies, qualitative comparative analysis, questionnaires, interviews, reading texts, and ethnography.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Critiques of articles or books that use the various methodologies discussed in the course.

Indicative reading: G. King, R. Keohane, and S. Verba, Designing Social Inquiry: Scientific inference in qualitative research (Princeton, 1994). Antoinette Burton ed., Archive Stories: Facts, Fictions, and the Writing of History (Duke University Press, 2006). Paul Rabinow, Reflections on Fieldwork in Morocco, first published 1977 (University of California Press, 2007); David Collier and Henry Brady, Rethinking Social Inquiry (Rowman and Littlefield 2010); John Gerring, Case Study Research: Principles and Practices (Cambridge University Press 2007).

Assessment: Essay (30%, 1500 words) in the MT.

Project (70%, 2500 words) in the LT.

EITHER (1a) A thorough critique of an article which uses one of the methods discussed in the course (1500 words) OR (1b) A short project using one of the methods discussed in the course, focused on how to analyse and present qualitative findings (e.g. a short content analysis, a set of interviews around a particular topic, etc) (1500 words) AND FOR ALL STUDENTS (2) A complete "mock" research design, preferably (although not necessarily) on their own research question (2500 words).

GV514 Political Science and Political Economy Doctoral Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Eggers CON5.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Mainly for second and subsequent year research students and staff in Government and elsewhere in the School involved in research in political science and/or political economy. First year MRes and research students may also attend if they wish.

Course content: Research students will present papers that are either close to submission or are work in progress. In weeks when students do not present, we will have presentations from departmental staff and occasional visitors. Several sessions might be set aside for research students to practice their 'Job Talk' presentations.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

The workshop will meet every second week in the MT, LT and ST.

Assessment: Not assessed.

GV515 Researching People, Politics and Organisations

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Bruter CON406 and Prof Edward Page CON3.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Optional for second and subsequent year research students in Government and elsewhere in the School involved in researching political science topics. First year students may attend if numbers permit.

Course content: The workshop is for all PhD students doing empirical work in political science, whether quantitative, qualitative or mixed, and whatever theoretical approach they take. Around six of the twelve regular sessions are to be devoted to PhD student presentations and concentrate on setting the problems faced and choices made in approaching the empirical research. In the remaining four sessions we will arrange workshops involving outside speakers dealing with crosscutting issues for which we have experienced substantial demand including issues closely related to the empirical analysis of government such as interviewing techniques and the availability and use of international data banks as well as sessions of more general appeal including on how the UK and US job market works, the journal publishing process and presenting at academic conferences and job interviews. If numbers of students mean that we need more than 10 sessions, we will arrange extra late afternoon sessions, up to five throughout the year, to accommodate the crosscutting issues.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Workshops will tailor reading to the research of the participants.

GV555 Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Maja Rasmussen CON4.17, Dr Waltraud Schelke COW1.06 and Dr Jeffrey Chwioroth CLM5.11

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This workshop is jointly organised by the European Institute, the Government Department and the International Relations Department for research students of these departments working in the general area of political economy and public policy and who have usually passed their first year. Research students from other departments wishing to attend should contact the teachers responsible.

It should be noted that the course has three codes- EU555, GV555 and IR555.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis chapters and related work. A detailed syllabus is fixed at the start of the year. Seminar presentations by outside speakers may be added.

Teaching: 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending student has to give at least one presentation.

GV599 Research Prospectus in Political Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Mitchell CON5.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes/PhD Political Science (Qualitative stream B) and MRes/PhD Political Science (Quantitative stream A). This course is not available as an outside option.

For MRes/PhD students in Political Science only.

Course content: A research paper, not to exceed 10,000 words, related to the student's designated major field, to be submitted on 1st September.

Assessment: Research project (100%, 10000 words) in September.

GV5X1 Research Design in Political Science

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Mitchell CON5.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Government and MRes Political Science. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: PhD students taking this course will find the focus on developing a research design for their PhD thesis immensely useful. The importance of a solid understanding of the principles of social scientific research design to the development of the PhD project cannot be underestimated. Students will learn to develop their research questions, to choose a feasible data collection strategy, and how to match data collection and analytic methods to the aims of the PhD project.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: This is a PhD level Research Design course – we do not intend to have additional essays. Students will give presentations and receive extensive feedback on their work in progress. These are part of formative rather than summative assessment and are an important part of professional development. The main learning outcomes are to help the PhD students develop professional research designs.

Staff / Research Students Seminars

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olmo Silva S506A, Dr Simon Dietz TW3 11.01C and Dr Claire Mercer STC.418

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Geography. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Regional and Urban Planning Studies. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. For all MPhil/PhD students registered in the Department of Geography and Environment and staff. Other interested students may attend.

Course content: Topical seminar series involving presentations by speakers from both inside and outside the Department on aspects of their own research.

Teaching: There are three different seminar series taking place regularly throughout the year, organised by each of the three research clusters in the Department of Geography & Environment. The Economic Geography cluster seminar series is organized in conjunction with the Spatial Economics Research Centre (SERC); the Environmental Economics & Policy cluster seminar series is organized together with the Grantham Research Institute on Climate Change and the Environment; and the Urban/Development seminar series is organized with the Urban Research Centre. The timing and length of each seminar series vary across research clusters.

Urban/Development Cluster: 5 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 4 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT

Economic Geography Cluster: 10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in MT and 10 x one-and-a-half hour seminars in LT

Environmental Economics and Policy Cluster: a 'brown-bag' seminar series involving speakers from the cluster, meeting up to 5 times in each of the MT and LT, and 3 seminars with external speakers in each of the MT and LT.

Assessment: This course is not intended as preparation for any particular examination. But, students will find it useful in increasing their awareness of current research and the application of research methods across the discipline. Attendance is strongly recommended.

International History Research Student Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antony Best E405

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in International History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The workshop aims to introduce students to effective archival research, issues in the preparation of a thesis and means of launching a career in academic or related fields; and the opportunity to present research in progress. Students yet to pass their upgrade from MPhil to PhD attend the Introductory Workshop, which meets weekly in the Michaelmas term. Meetings are devoted to research and interviewing techniques and mainly practical issues of historical research. Students due to be upgraded attend the Advanced Workshop held in the Lent and Summer terms, the frequency of meetings depending upon the number of participants. The meetings are intended primarily as a forum for reviewing research in progress, with a view to enabling students to pass their upgrade.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of seminars in the LT.

Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Beunza NAB4.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Management. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Management. This course is not available as an outside option. ID500 is a compulsory, assessed course for first year students on the PhD Management (Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour) programme. The course is optional for second year students on the PhD Management (Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour) programme. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other tracks of the MPhil/PhD Management where regulations permit.

Course content: The PhD seminar in Employment Relations and Organisational Behaviour draws upon organisational, psychological and employment relations theories to advance an understanding of individual, group and firm behaviour. The course covers a number of issues at an advanced level, and introduces students to emerging topics in various fields such as Organisational Behaviour and Employment Relations, including employment systems, employee voice, status, trust, social exchange theory, organisational justice, ethics and ethical climate, and corporate social responsibility. The seminar discussions will be led by a combination of faculty at the EROB group within LSE and prestigious visiting faculty. Throughout the course, students will be exposed to the methodological issues related to conducting research in an up-and-coming area where the research questions may be less known. These methodological issues will provide continuity across the substantively different topics featured on the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: TBC

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

International Relations Research Training Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Federica Bicch CLM 4.13 and Dr Tomila Lankina CLM 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course intended for first-year International Relations Department research students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to methodology and research methods relevant to undertaking a research degree in International Relations. The principal approaches to contemporary research in the main branches of International Relations will be addressed. These include: formal analysis, behaviouralism; quantitative and qualitative methods; comparative case study approaches; documentary and discourse analysis; and different modes of theoretical argument. In addition the course will introduce students to the background debates in philosophy of social science that underpin different methodological approaches. The purpose of the course is to help students identify the appropriate methodological approach for their project; it is not intended as a training in research techniques as such. Students are advised to attend School-based inter-disciplinary seminars on statistical techniques, survey methods, interviewing and any other relevant courses offered by the Methodology Institute. All students not already familiar with IBM PCs, should register on the Computer Service induction courses early in MT and complete the sessions 'Introduction to PCs', 'Word 2000', and 'EndNote'.

Teaching: 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

The course will consist of 12 seminars in MT and LT (IR501). Details of individual meetings and detailed readings will be provided at the beginning of the course. In addition, all students must participate in the Research Design Workshop (IR509), and at least one of the Department's several workshops where staff and research students present preliminary papers and discuss common problems of current research.

IR502

International Theory Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr George Lawson CLM 5.12 MT
Dr. Tarak Barkawi, STC 5.76 (LT)

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

IR502 is part of the research training programme for all new research students working in the area of international theory, broadly defined to include critical, post-modern and normative as well as mainstream and classical theory. IR502 is open to all interested staff and research students.

Course content: The workshop is based around papers in international theory, circulated in advance, and presented by LSE staff, research students and external speakers.

Teaching: 12 hours of lectures in the MT. 15 hours of lectures in the LT.

IR504

Foreign Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christopher Alden CLM 5.13

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course intended primarily for research students. All those working in the general area of foreign policy studies in the International Relations Department should attend. Others who may wish to attend should contact the course organisers in person.

Course content: Students present work in progress and obtain feedback. This enables them to assess how they respond to common challenges in doctoral research on foreign policy issues.

Teaching: 6 hours of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of seminars in the LT.

IR505European International Politics Workshop*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Karen Smith CLM 4.09Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course intended for research students. All those working on international relations topics regarding the European region should attend. Others who wish to attend should contact the course organizer in person.

Course content: This workshop is for MPhil/PhD candidates interested in the international politics of, and within, Europe.Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.IR506*North - South Relations Research Workshop*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Christopher Alden CLM 5.13Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

All interested research students involved in area studies.

Course content: The North-South Workshop is aimed at exploring state and non-state relations between the industrialised North and the Global South with the focus ranging from foreign and security policies to development and interactions at societal levels.Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of seminars in the LT.

Seven meetings, in weeks 2, 4 and 8 of MT and weeks 2, 4, 6 and 8 of LT.

IR507Research Seminar: International Institutions*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 6.07Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course intended primarily for academic staff and research students.

Course content: This research workshop serves as an intellectual forum for faculty and graduate students interested in the theory, history, or practice of international institutions. The workshop's principal objective is to foster intellectual exchange across disciplinary boundaries. It seeks to revitalize the study of international institutions by showcasing new and innovative work from leading and emerging scholars. The focus is on international institutions, broadly defined, with a particular emphasis on international law.Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.IR509*International Relations Research Design Workshop*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Iver Neumann CLM 6.06 and Prof Margot Light

Professor I Neumann (for first year research students),

Professor M Light (for second year research students)

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

This workshop is compulsory for all first-year and strongly recommended for second year International Relations Department

(IRD) research students and open to other interested IRD research students.

Course content: In the first year, this workshop will address issues concerning the formulation and design of the PhD research project. Its principal objective is to assist first year research students in designing a well-thought out and manageable thesis. It seeks to do so by providing a forum in which first year students discuss their research topic, the particular set of questions they intend to address and the methods they wish to use with other members of the workshop. Its aim is to provide students with constructively critical observations about their research project and the problems they may confront. It also seeks to promote an esprit de corps amongst the first-year research students by familiarising them with the work of their peers.

In the second year, the focus will be on preparing students for their upgrade Research Panel in the summer. Exactly how the workshop will proceed will be decided by the members in their first session, but the aim is to give students the opportunity to update and refine their research proposals, get peer reactions to the draft chapters on which the decision to upgrade will be based, and also to talk to each other about the common problems they face. There will also be some sessions to consider such 'professional concerns' as the balance to be struck between teaching and research, the role of presentations at conferences, seminars and similar professional gatherings. The workshop seeks to sustain the esprit d'corps research students developed during their first year.

Teaching: In the first year, the workshop will meet for 11 sessions starting in week six of the MT. All first-year students are required to give a presentation outlining their research to the seminar, a copy of their research proposal (of no more than 5,000 word) being circulated in advance to the workshop participants. There will be two or three presentations per meeting. Students must also attend IR501 Research Methods Training Seminar and participate in at least one of the Department's other research workshops.

In the second year, the workshop will meet for 13 sessions starting in week five of the MT. All members of the workshop are required to present one or more draft chapters of their theses. They will need to provide a copy of the chapter for prior circulation to the workshop participants. Students must also participate in at least one of the Department's other research workshops.

IR512Research Workshop: Security, Conflict & Peace Studies*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr David Rampton CON 3.16Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course is open only to research students who are writing theses on relevant topics.

Course content: The workshop will provide a forum in which research students can present reports on their work and discuss the theoretical and methodological problems involved. The scope of the workshop is: international security including the threat and use of force and its avoidance or amelioration; conflict, war and violence; peacemaking, peace-building, state-building and reconciliation.Teaching: Up to 17 seminars of 1.5 hours, meeting throughout the session, commencing in week four of MT.IR514*Middle East Workshop for PhD Students*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Fawaz Gerges CLM 4.06Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course is open to those writing a PhD on issues related to the Middle East at LSE.

Course content: Nine meetings in which PhD students present papers on issues related to the Middle East.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

MT and LT starting in week 2 on a fortnightly basis.

Formative coursework:

Each PhD student is required to present one paper during the course.

Indicative reading: The course does not have a reading list as it is based on papers generated by PhD students and guest speakers.

IR516

Asia-Pacific Research Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor W. Callahan, STC 5.77

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option.

Available to research students with an interest in the international relations of the Asia Pacific.

Course content: Students and other speakers present work in progress and obtain feedback.

Teaching: 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of seminars in the LT.

3 meetings in the Michaelmas term - weeks 3, 6 and 10 and 4 meetings in the Lent term - weeks 3, 5, 7 and 9.

Assessment: This course is not assessed.

IR555

Political Economy and Public Policy Workshop

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jeffrey Chwioroth CLM 5.11

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/ PhD in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This workshop is jointly organised by the International Relations Department, the Government Department and the European Institute for research students of these departments working in the general area of political economy and public policy. Research students from other Departments wishing to attend should contact the course convenors.

Course content: Presentation and intense discussion of thesis chapters and related work. A detailed syllabus is fixed at the start of the year.

Teaching: 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 7 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT.

Ten 1.5 hour, fortnightly meetings in MT and LT, commencing in week two of MT.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course. Regular attendance and active participation by all students is required. Each attending students has to give at least one presentation.

IS554

Information Systems PhD Seminar Series and Workshops

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24

Availability: This course consists of a series of seminars and workshops at which PhD students present their work in progress.

Course content: This seminar series provides a forum for research students in management to present work in progress. Outside speakers may be invited from time to time.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 20 hours of seminars in the ST.

For 2012/13 this will consist of a weekly, two hour, student-led seminar in weeks 2-9 of all three terms. There will also be one full-day PhD workshop with a guest speaker MT & ST. Details of these workshops are listed on the ISIG News and Events page and emailed to students and staff as they are arranged.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment but all students are expected to attend the one day workshops and must email the course teacher to explain any absences. Attendance at the weekly seminars is more flexible but students should make an effort to attend as many as possible and to be involved in the organisation of at least one per year.

Interpretations of Information

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Information Systems. This course is available on the MSc in Management, Information Systems and Innovation, MSc in Media and Communications, MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance) and MSc in Media and Communications (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Other MSc students may follow this course but a good knowledge of information technology is required.

Course content: The course explores the theoretical foundations of information and the technological and institutional processes by which information is increasingly becoming a pervading and crucial element of organizational and economic life. A central theme of the course is how information and the technologies by which it is produced and disseminated are involved in the constitution and coordination of organizational operations and the control of professional practices and organizational outcomes.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Indicative readings are given below. A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course.

Foundations of Social Research in Information Systems: Paradigms and Traditions

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jannis Kallinikos NAB3.24

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Information Systems. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Compulsory for MPhil/PhD Information Systems and Innovation students in their first year. Students from related PhD programmes who are interested in epistemological paradigms may be able to join the course with the teacher's permission.

Course content: The course introduces the foundations of social research and the key issues concerning the status of knowledge and the forms by which it is acquired. The course deals with the principal paradigms/traditions in the philosophy of science and epistemology and the answers they have provided to the basic questions concerning the status of knowledge claims and the forms by which valid knowledge claims can be made. The main focus of the course concerns the ways by which these key epistemological paradigms have been applied in the fields of Information Systems and Organization Studies. The course is structured around the following basic epistemological paradigms: Positivism Critical Realism Constructivism Hermeneutics, Phenomenology Critical Theory Structuralism Postmodernism

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures, 9 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Indicative reading: Archer, M. et al. (eds.), (1998) Critical Realism, Readings. London: Routledge; Dreyfus, H & Rabinow, P. (1982) Michel Foucault: Beyond Structuralism and Hermeneutics. Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words) in the LT.

An essay of between 5,000-7,000 words to be submitted by the end of March.

IS593 Half Unit Not available in 2013/14 Qualitative Research Methods in Information Systems

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Susan Scott NAB3.12

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed IS492.

Course content: The course will introduce students to concepts and techniques associated with designing and conducting and/or evaluating empirical research of predominantly qualitative character. The course deals with case study and ethnographic research in the fields of Information Systems and Organization Studies and focuses on issues of research design, data collection and interpretation methods. Case study design involves the consideration of conditions (research questions, available research, theory formation in the field studied, data access and availability) on the basis of which decisions concerning research design are made. Single and multiple case study research designs are considered in the course and the advantages and limitations of these alternative designs are examined.

Furthermore ethnography is considered as an alternative option of research design due to its holistic, intensive and longitudinal participation in the institutional settings within which it takes place. The course primarily focuses on data collection and interpretation methods in the fields of Information Systems and Organizations Studies. Observations, interview methods and techniques, archival and documentary data, experiments are considered and issues of validity, reliability cross-checking and triangulation of data obtained through different data collection techniques are examined.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. Ten weekly two-hour lectures and nine one-hour classes in the second half of the course preparing the students for the writing of their course essay.

Formative coursework: Research question exercise (3000 words) due by 4pm, Wednesday, week 7. MT. This exercise is un-assessed, but compulsory. It provides an opportunity for feedback and contributes to the development of the assessed research design report coursework for IS493. Research design essay (6000 words) due by 4pm, Thursday, week 8. LT. This essay presents a hypothetical qualitative research design, i.e. a plan for a scholarly study. This exercise encourages students to explore the conceptual and practical consequences associated with designing a research question (including fieldwork design). This essay is assessed.

Doctoral Research Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Linda Mulcahy NAB7.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Law.

This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Law (Socio-Legal Theory). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with the skills required to undertake advanced legal research. Topics covered include unpacking the idea of originality, legal methodologies, advanced writing skills, giving presentations, managing the supervisory relationship, use of archives and libraries, preparing for upgrade and the viva and time management in academia.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: There are no examination arrangements. However, attendance is compulsory for first year research students and research students in other years are encouraged to attend.

MA500

Mathematics: Research Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Allen COL 4.05 and Dr Ron Perez COL 3.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminar ranges over many areas of pure and applied mathematics. The emphasis is on topics in discrete mathematics and game theory. The seminar is regarded as an important part of research students' formal training and they are expected to attend and contribute.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 20 hours of lectures in the ST.

Research Student Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Allen COL 4.05, Dr Ron Perez COL 3.06, Dr Luitgard Veraart COL 4.11 and Prof Mihail Zervos COL 4.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Mathematics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other members of the research community are welcome to attend.

Course content: The seminars range across many areas of pure and applied mathematics. The emphasis is on topics in discrete mathematics, algorithms and game theory. The seminars are regarded as an important part of research students' formal training and they will all be expected to attend and contribute. Throughout the academic year, students are also invited to give presentations.

See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/maths/Seminars/Lunchtime_Seminar.aspx
There are additional reading groups aimed at students working in financial mathematics. These are compulsory for students working in this area but other students of the MPhil/PhD in Mathematics are welcome to attend.

See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/maths/Seminars/Financial_Mathematics_Reading_Group.aspx

Teaching: 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars, 12 hours of seminars, 10 hours of seminars and 7 hours of seminars in the MT. 4 hours of lectures, 39 hours of seminars, 8 hours of seminars and 13 hours of seminars in the LT. 30 hours of seminars, 20 hours of seminars and 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Approximately 70-80 meetings of between 1 and 3 hours throughout the MT, LT and ST, dependent on speakers. See http://www2.lse.ac.uk/maths/Seminars/Research_Seminars.aspx for schedule and more details.

MC500

Research Seminar for Media, Communications & Culture

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bart Cammaerts STC.S213

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in New Media Innovation and Literacy and MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications. This course is not available as an outside option. For Research Students. The course is compulsory for students in the first and second years of the Doctoral Programmes in Media and Communications and in New Media, Innovation and Literacy. All Research Students in the Department are welcome and encouraged to attend.

Course content: The aim of the course is to raise awareness of theoretical, conceptual and methodological issues in the interdisciplinary field of media and communications research and to develop students skills with respect to theory building, research design and implementation. The course focuses, in particular, on the key conceptual issues and analytical strategies required in media and communication research, with special reference to the study of the changing environment of media production, dissemination and consumption, under conditions of globalization and digitization of information

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Compulsory for first and second year students and open to others. There may be additional seminars or workshops in ST.

Indicative reading: Manuel Castells, Communication Power, OUP, 2009; Lilie Chouliaraki (ed), Self-mediation: New media, citizenship and civil selves, Routledge, 2012; Lilie Chouliaraki, The Spectatorship of Suffering, Sage, 2006; Peter Dahlgren, Media and civic engagement: citizens, political communication, and democracy Cambridge 2008; Klaus B. Other reading will be given as appropriate during the course.

Assessment: This course is based predominantly on student presentations on their work in progress. Students are expected to use MC500 seminars as a key resource towards their Upgrade document at the end of their 1st year of study and towards the submission of their formative assessment document at the end of their 2nd year of study.

MC5M2

Advanced Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis)

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pollyanna Ruiz (STC.S214) - Michaelmas Term, Dr Ellen Helsper (STC.S119c) - Lent and Summer Term

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in New Media Innovation and Literacy and MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: a series of lectures offered by media and communications staff in MT. The lectures will normally cover the following topics central to research design across the social sciences, with a specific emphasis on their application to media and communications contexts: the general nature of research as social inquiry, interviewing, discourse analysis, content analysis, visual analysis, survey design/questionnaires, case studies, ethnography and participant observation, as well as research ethics.

ii. Principles of Social Research: A series of ten three-hour workshops (each comprised of two x 1.5 hour sessions) offered by media and communications staff in LT. Students are required to participate in all ten basic and specialist workshops.

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Students have to take at least one statistics course offered by the Methodology Department. MY551M Introduction to Quantitative Analysis and MY552L Applied Regression Analysis are automatically included when you register for the standard MC5M2 course. (Students are permitted to substitute these for a more advanced quantitative or qualitative course offered by the Methodology Department as long as at least one statistical course is included in the course, with the approval of the MC5M2 course convenor and subject to timetabling constraints.)

Teaching:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: Lecture (one hour) x 10 MT; Lecture on Writing Methodological Critiques (one hour) x 1 LT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: Workshop (three hours) x 10 LT (each comprised of two 1.5 hour sessions).

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: MY551M: Lecture (two hours) x 9 MT; Computer class (one hour) x 9 MT; MY552L: Lecture (two hours) x 9 LT; Computer class (one hour) x 9 LT.

Formative coursework:

i. Principles of Research in Media and Communications: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit one essay of 1,500 words in week 9 of MT.

ii. Principles of Social Research: All students are expected to complete advance readings and submit workshop assignments.

iii. Principles of Social Research Analysis: Most statistics courses require weekly assignments. The qualitative analysis courses vary in their formative assessment.

No one book covers the entire syllabus; students will be expected to read widely in appropriate journals and books, and a list of references will be provided at the start of the course and in advance of the workshops. In Lent Term students will be provided with examples of journal articles in which the discussed research methods are applied.

Assessment:

1. Coursework: One written assignment of either 5,000 or 7,000 words to be submitted in ST, depending on the MY courses selected (66%).
 2. One two-hour examination in ST relating to Quantitative Analysis MY551 and one two-hour examination in ST if another statistics course is taken (see Methodology Department course guides) (34%).
- Note: Summative assignments differ depending on the components of the methodological training taken by the students. PhD students have to pass all components of MC5M2.

MY500 Half Unit Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Jackson COL8.08

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Course content: Research design can be considered as a form of problem oriented practical scholarship. It is one of the key components in the empirical social scientific study of social issues. Design is the means to provide relevant information on a research question in an efficient way that meets the criteria of public accountability, in the sense of openness to public scrutiny. Any research design is characterised by both opportunities and constraints, and the selection of the optimal design is always a trade off between the strengths and weaknesses of different options, viewed in the context of feasibility. Drawing on a variety of examples from the social scientific literature, this course will explore design considerations and options, issues of data quality and analysis, and reporting. The broad aims of the course are to: increase awareness of the role of research design in the social sciences; introduce a range of design options; and foster an appreciation of the strengths and weaknesses of the different options for particular research objectives. At the end of the course, students will be able to bring a more critical reading to the literature and have acquired a basic knowledge of social research design as a contribution to the PhD thesis.

MY521 Half Unit Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06 and Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Course content: This course presents the fundamentals of qualitative research methods. It prepares students to design, carry out, report, read and evaluate qualitative research projects. Students learn how to collect data using methods including interviewing, focus groups, participant observation, and documentary and historical work. The challenges and opportunities of new media including visual images and Internet research are discussed. We then cover analysis, using thematic, content, discourse, and semiotic analysis. Issues of research design, quality indicators, epistemology and ethics are addressed. The course has the dual aims of equipping students with both conceptual understandings of current academic debates regarding qualitative methods, and the practical skills to put those methods into practice.

In seminars, research students gain experience of putting a range of data collection and analysis methods into practice, on topics within, or closely related to, their substantive area of research.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours and 30 minutes of workshops in the LT.

The course runs twice per year: in MT and again in LT.

Indicative reading: M Bauer; G Gaskell, (2000). Qualitative Researching with Text, Image and Sound, London: Sage; U Flick, (2009). An Introduction to Qualitative Research, 4th edition, London: Sage; C Seale, G Gobo, JF Gubrium, & D Silverman, (2004). Qualitative Research Practice. London: Sage. Please Note: No single publication covers the whole content of the course.

Assessment: Project (100%, 6000 words) in the MT and LT.

One final written project of 4000-6000 words, based on seminar exercises (100%).

MY526 Half Unit Doing Ethnography

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Flora Cornish COL8.09

Availability: This course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: A postgraduate qualitative research methods course, such as MY421, as pre- or co-requisite. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent.

Course content: Doing ethnography enables us to examine how social order is produced as people go about their everyday interactions. Multiple sources of naturally-occurring data are used to understand how communities, organisations and institutions work, informally as well as formally. Contemporary conditions of globalisation, individualisation, bureaucratisation and digitisation introduce new challenges for such fieldwork. This interdisciplinary course equips students with a practical understanding of how to do, and to think about, contemporary ethnography. Core conceptual, ethical and methodological debates are introduced through in-depth engagement with book-length exemplars, and through students' experience of fieldwork. Fieldwork is a key component of the course, with students collecting data in a setting closely related to their PhD topic. Data collection is followed by data analysis and presentation activities. Methodological concerns regarding case selection, establishing rigour, reflexivity, representing others, and ethical issues are addressed in detail. Practical issues addressed include access to study sites, studying elite and marginalised groups, innovative sources of data, and writing field notes. Emphasising that ethnography relies on the researcher-as-research-instrument, the course aims to develop students' sensitivity and rigour as ethnographic researchers.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: An excerpt of field-notes from the field visit undertaken as part of the course (up to 2,500 words). Field-notes should record rich details of observations (the data), researcher reflections and brief interpretations of the significance of these observations. Written feedback will be provided.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 4000 words).

MY527 Half Unit Qualitative Research With Non-Traditional Data

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jennifer Tarr COL8.06

Availability: The course is available to PhD students in departments such as Media & Communications and Sociology. Also available where regulations permit and with permission of the teacher responsible.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed CP-MY421, Methods of Research in Media & Communications (including Qualitative & Quantitative Analysis) (MC4M1) and Qualitative Research Methods (MY521).

Introductory course on qualitative methods (e.g. MY421, MY521 or MC4M1) as pre-requisite or co-requisite.

Course content: Most qualitative research is in the form of written or spoken texts, produced through interviews and field notes or collection and analysis of documents. Recently, qualitative researchers have become interested in ways of capturing and documenting other kinds of data and other dimensions of social life, including visual, audio, and other sensory data, space, and time. This course will examine methods for collecting and analysing data which are not primarily textual or linguistic, and how these can be integrated into qualitative research. The course will cover history, memory and longitudinal qualitative research; space and place; research in virtual environments; pre-existing and research-generated images and video; sound and audio data including music; kinaesthetic and movement data; and taste and smell as research data. The aim is to understand how qualitative methods can be applied to these data and how to address traditional methodological concerns such as rigor and representativeness in their analysis and presentation. The course is aimed at students who are considering one or more of these elements as part of their dissertation research design and/or who are interested in gaining advanced qualitative research skills. Seminars will provide practical skills through hands-on exercises in collecting and analysing non-traditional data. These develop skills for a final project of students choosing which is to be submitted at the beginning of summer term.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Seminar activities will receive in-class feedback. A brief proposal for final summative coursework (c. 1000 words) should be submitted and will receive formative feedback and guidance.

Indicative reading: Note: No one text covers the whole course. Pink, S. (2009) Doing Sensory Ethnography, London: Sage. Bull, M. and Back, L. (eds) (2003) Auditory Culture Reader, London: Berg. Assessment: Project (100%, 7000 words).

One 5500-7000 word research project related to the course material, on a topic selected by the student (100%).

MY528 Half Unit Qualitative Text Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Aude Biquelet COL 7.06

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Media and Communications. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed MY421 and Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400).

A postgraduate qualitative research methods course, such as MY421, as pre- or co-requisite. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400 or equivalent Course content: This course covers issues, methods, and applications of qualitative approaches for the analysis of textual data. It introduces techniques and procedures available to researchers to identify and extract information from texts for social scientific purposes. Topics discussed draw on a wide range of analytic traditions such as thematic analysis, content analysis, dialogical analysis and dictionary-based approaches. The aim of this course is to equip participants with the right skills to work within these traditions and select appropriate qualitative methods for analysing textual data according to 1) Research Design 2) Type of data under consideration.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: A project proposal (c.1,000 words).

Students write a proposal for the project that will comprise their summative assessment.

MY529 Half Unit Special Topics in Qualitative Research Methods

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer Col.8.04

Availability: The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: The course will assume good knowledge of qualitative research methods as covered in MY521 and MY530.

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide understanding and competence to students in advanced qualitative research methods used in leading-edge social research.

The content of the course will change from year to year. Possible topics include forms of textual analysis such as rhetorical and argumentation analysis, computerised text analysis, biographical research methods, diary methods, experience sampling and bemetology, qualitative evaluation research, etc.

Details of the content for any one year will be available from the Department of Methodology office.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Readings for this course will vary according to the topics covered each year. A reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: PhD students taking this course will be assessed on the basis of a Research Project (4,000 – 6,000 words).

MY530Advanced Qualitative Research Workshops*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer COL8.04Availability: Research students only, with previous qualitative methods training (e.g. MY400 and MY421 or equivalent) who are undertaking projects using qualitative methods. The course is particularly aimed at second and upper year PhD students but may be undertaken by students at an earlier stage.Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400) and CP-MY421.Course content: MY530 is a series of workshop modules that provide hands-on, in-depth and advanced training for specific methodologies of qualitative data collection, analytic techniques and research design issues. Research students can sign up to as many workshops as they wish. The programme includes topics such as, discourse analysis, qualitative interviewing, focus groups, ethnography and participant observation, narrative interviewing and analysis, visual methods, classical content analysis, experience sampling techniques, rhetorical analysis etc. Each workshop consists of two sessions of two to three hours. In the second session, participants will bring in their own research data for discussion. These interdisciplinary sessions provide a space for students to develop advanced methodological skills and exchange ideas with peers.Teaching: Sessions to be held throughout the year; MT, LT and ST, on Wednesday am or pm. Participants will sign up via MOODLE.Indicative reading: Each session will provide its own recommended reading list; no one publication covers the whole set of workshops.Assessment: This course is non-examinable.MY551 Half Unit*Introduction to Quantitative Analysis*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Ms Sally Stares Col.8.12

Dr Benjamin Lauderdale, COL 8.10

Availability: The course is available to all research students.Course content: An intensive introduction to quantitative data analysis in the social sciences. The course is intended for students with no previous experience of quantitative methods or statistics. It covers the foundations of descriptive statistics and statistical estimation and inference. At the end of the course students should be able to carry out univariate and bi-variate data analysis and have an appreciation of multiple linear regression. The computer classes give hands-on training in the application of statistical techniques to real social science research problems using the SPSS computer package (no prior knowledge of SPSS is necessary).Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the second week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY552M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY552L which is taught in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Weekly assignments are required.Indicative reading: A course pack will be available for download online. Additional reading: many introductory statistics books are available. But we particularly recommend Alan Agresti and Christine Franklin (2009) Statistics: The Art and Science of Learning from Data. Pearson Education. Or Alan Agresti and Barbara Finlay (2009, 4th edition) Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. Pearson Education (note that the second book is more advanced and is particularly useful if you are planning to take MY551 and MY552).Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.MY552 Half Unit*Applied Regression Analysis*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.02Availability: Research students where programme regulations allow. Students are required to have completed MY451, MY551 or an equivalent level statistics course.Pre-requisites: Students must have completed CP-MY451 and Introduction to Quantitative Analysis (MY551).

Students are required to have completed MY451, MY551 or an equivalent level statistics course.

Course content: The course is designed for students with a good working knowledge of elementary descriptive statistics; sampling distributions; one and two sample tests for means and proportions; correlation and the linear regression model with one or more predictor variables. The course is concerned with deepening the understanding of the generalized linear model and its application to social science data. The main topics covered are linear regression modelling and binary, multinomial and ordinal logistic regression. Class exercises and homework will be carried out using the Stata or SPSS package, according to the students choice.Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

This course is given twice per session, starting in the second week of each of the MT and LT. Students must either register for MY552M which is taught in Michaelmas Term, or MY552L which is taught in Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Class exercises and homework will be carried out using the Stata or SPSS package, according to the student's choice.Indicative reading: A Agresti & B Finlay, Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences. A course pack will be provided at the beginning of the course and additional reading will be recommended.Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

A two-hour open book unseen examination in ST.

MY555 Half UnitMultivariate Analysis and Measurement*This information is for the 2013/14 session.*Teacher responsible: Ms Sally Stares COL8.12Availability: The course is available to all research students.Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY552).Course content: An introduction to the application of modern multivariate methods used in the social sciences, with particular focus on latent variable models for continuous observed variables, and their application to questions of measurement in the social sciences. At least the following topics will be covered: principal components analysis, exploratory factor analysis, confirmatory factor analysis and structural equation models. In addition, a selection from the following topics will be covered: cluster analysis, correspondence analysis, multidimensional scaling, latent class models, latent trait models.Teaching: 40 hours of lectures and 8 hours of computer workshops in the LT.Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.Indicative reading: D J Bartholomew, F Steele, I Moustaki ; J I Galbraith (2008) Analysis of Multivariate Social Science Data (Second Edition).Assessment: Research project (100%).

Research paper 25-30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 3,000-4,000 words, answering a set of questions by applying multivariate analyses to some data (100%).

MY556 Half Unit Survey Methodology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jonathan Jackson COL 8.08 and Dr Jouni Kuha COL8.02

Availability: This course is available to all Research students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY500), Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400), Applied Regression Analysis (MY552) and Applied Regression Analysis (MY452).

Knowledge of basic descriptive and inferential statistics, to the level of MY452/MY552 or equivalent. MY556 can also be taken in parallel with MY452L/MY552L. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400/MY500 or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the methodology of the design and analysis of social surveys. It is intended both for students who plan to design and collect their own surveys, and for those who need to understand and use data from existing large-scale surveys. Topics covered include basic ideas of target populations, survey estimation and inference, sampling error and nonsampling error; sample design and sampling theory; methods of data collection; survey interviewing; cognitive processes in answering survey questions; design and evaluation of survey questions; nonresponse error and imputation for item nonresponse; survey weights; analysis of data from complex surveys; accessing, preparing and working with secondary data from existing social surveys. The course includes computer classes, using the statistical computer package Stata; no previous knowledge of Stata is required.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 6 hours of seminars and 4 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the seminars can be submitted for marking

Indicative reading: Groves, R M, Fowler, F J, Couper, M P, Lepkowski, J M, Singer, E, and Tourangeau, R (2009). Survey Methodology (2nd ed.). Wiley.

Assessment: Research project (100%).

Research paper of 25-30 pages, including tables and figures, or approximately 3,000-4,000 words, reporting the data analysis of a given research question and data set (100%).

MY557 Half Unit Casual Inference for Observational and Experimental Studies

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dominik Hangartner COL8.03

Availability: Available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Applied Regression Analysis (MY552), Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY400) and Fundamentals of Social Science Research Design (MY500).

Knowledge of multiple linear regression and some familiarity with generalised linear models, to the level of MY452/MY552 or equivalent. Familiarity with notions of research design in the social sciences, to the level of MY400/MY500 or equivalent Course content: This course provides an introduction to statistical methods used for causal inference in the social sciences. Using the potential outcomes framework of causality, topics covered include research designs such as randomized experiments and observational studies. We explore the impact of noncompliance in randomized experiments, as well as nonignorable treatment assignment in observational studies. To analyze these research designs, the methods covered include matching, instrumental variables, difference-in-difference, and regression discontinuity. Examples are drawn from different social sciences. The course includes computer classes, where standard statistical computer packages (Stata or R) are used for computation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: Rosenbaum, PR. (2010). Design of Observational Studies. Springer; Angrist, J. D. and Pischke, J.-S. (2009). Mostly Harmless Econometrics. Princeton University Press.

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

MY559 Half Unit Special Topics in Quantitative Analysis: Applied Statistical Computing

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Benjamin Lauderdale COL.8.10.

Availability:

The course is available to all research students.

Pre-requisites: The course will assume knowledge of linear and logistic regression models, to the level covered in MY452.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to advanced analytic methods frequently used in leading-edge social research. The content of the course will change from year to year. In the 2013/2014 session, this course will cover computer programming for social science research and some of the advanced data analysis methods that require significant computation.

The main topics covered are data collection and management, nonparametric density estimation and regression, additive models, the lasso, cross-validation, the bootstrap, and permutation/randomization inference. Lectures, class exercises and homework will be based on the use of the R statistical software package, but will assume no background knowledge of that language.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Exercises from the computer classes can be submitted for marking.

Indicative reading: Matloff, N. 'The Art of R Programming' Shalizi, CR. 'Advanced Data Analysis from an Elementary Point of View'

Assessment: Coursework (100%, 4000 words).

MY560 Half Unit Workshop in Advanced Quantitative Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods (Social Policy). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: It is intended to provide research students with an introduction to specific advanced research methods and hands-on training in the use of these tools.

Teaching: One-day introductory workshops consisting of a morning lecture and afternoon computer session during the MT, LT and ST. Participants will sign up via MOODLE.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

MY591 Computing Packages for Qualitative Analysis

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Aude Biquelet COL 7.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods (Social Policy). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For students who intend to use qualitative and quantitative computer packages in their research.

Course content: It is intended to provide research students with an appreciation of various computer packages through introduction and hands-on training in the use of these tools.

Teaching: 63 hours of seminars in the MT. 75 hours of seminars in the LT.

Half-day introductory training courses on computer packages such as, Nvivo, ALCESTE, QDA Miner/Wordstat/Simstat, Stata and SPSS during the MT and LT. Participants will sign up via MOODLE.

Workshop in Information Literacy: Finding, Managing and Organising Published Research and Data

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Maria Bell R102

Maria Bell (Course Convenor), Academic Support Librarian; Dr Jane Secker, Copyright and Digital Literacy Advisor, Centre for Learning Technology; Clive Wilson, Academic Support Librarian.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Research Methods. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

First and second year research students and MSc Social Research Methods students.

Course content: MY592 is a six week programme of 2 hour workshops which aims to develop students' research skills and introduce the essential sources and tools when undertaking research, and the skills required to use them. It is run by the Library and Centre for Learning Technology and is ideal for research students undertaking an extensive literature search and review. Students receive detailed advice on the most appropriate Library resources for their research topics. Materials, online activities and assessment will be available in Moodle to support the teaching.

Teaching: 24 hours of seminars in the MT. 24 hours of seminars in the LT.

Six two hour classes will be held weekly, and students are expected to attend all sessions in order to develop their information literacy skills. MY592 will run in both the Michaelmas and Lent terms and in the Summer term subject to demand. Dates and times will be advertised at the start of each term. Note that not all sessions will last for 2 hours but this will allow for individual contact time at the end of classes with class tutors. If you only wish to attend an individual workshop, consult the Training classes offered by the Library and the Centre for Learning Technology on the LSE Training and Development System. Places on the entire programme can be booked using the LSE Training and Development System.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

Authoring a PhD and Developing as a Researcher

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarabajaya Kumar KSW5.02 and Prof Patrick Dunleavy CON5.19

Availability:

MY593A is aimed at first-year students registered for the MPhil/PhD. It offers you the opportunity to extend your networks with students in other departments and reflect on your research plans in a series of thematic workshops, suitable for students across all disciplines and covering key topics arising in the early stages of your work.

MY593B is intended for second- and third-year students registered for the PhD and embarking on the main body of their research. The thematic workshops are suitable for students in all disciplines across the School.

MY593C is intended for students who are within a year to six months of completing their doctorate. The thematic workshops are suitable for colleagues across all disciplines in the School.

Pre-requisites: Booking is essential for each individual workshop that you wish to attend, and should be done online via lse.ac.uk/tlc/ training

Teaching:

MY593A: Getting Started Using online resources for literature reviews - expert advice from LSE Library and academic staff.

Working with and managing your relationship with your supervisor

- explores the roles and responsibilities of each participant in the student-supervisor relationship and discusses how you can get the most from it. Blogging, press, web presence and social media

- guidance and advice on communicating your research beyond academia. Managing your work life balance - an introduction to life-coaching and time-management tools that you can use to meet the important milestones in both your doctorate and your life. Thinking creatively and mind-mapping your original research - explores what originality means in relation to your research question and how to delimit your topic appropriately; features mind-mapping expert Tony Buzan and renowned LSE academics talking about their own research.

MY593B: The Middle Years Using online resources for literature reviews - expert advice from LSE Library and academic staff. Writing compelling abstracts - expert advice for how to generate interest in your research among the wider academic community. Blogging, press, web presence and social media - guidance and advice on communicating your research beyond academia. Academic job interviews - hints and guidance on preparing for and performing successfully at interviews for academic jobs. Developing as an academic writer - aimed at students in the process of writing up their research and designed to help you develop your own writing style.

MY593C: The Endgame Blogging, press, web presence and social media - guidance and advice on communicating your research beyond academia. Preparing for and handling your viva - covers long-run and short-run things to do in preparation for the final oral examination, with advice from both recent PhD graduates and academics who have acted as PhD examiners. Academic job interviews - hints and guidance on preparing for and performing successfully at interviews for academic jobs. Writing journal articles - guidance on how to turn chapters of your thesis into articles and submit them successfully to journals. Getting published 1, 2 and 3 - expert 'how to' guidance on developing a publishing strategy, getting a journal article published and making a successful pitch for a book proposal.

Research Methods in Philosophy

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Luc Bovens

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Topics in contemporary philosophy.

Teaching: Seminars PH500 15 x two-hour (MT, LT, ST). Different members of the department will lead the seminar in each of the three terms.

A more detailed syllabus will be posted at the beginning of each term.

Assessment: This course is non-examinable.

PH501

Philosophical Problems Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Anna Mahtani

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The idea of the course is to read and carefully discuss together a range of classic papers in contemporary analytic philosophy that might not otherwise be covered in LSE Philosophy Department courses. Topics are selected from the philosophy of logic, language, metaphysics, and the philosophy of mind and action. This list is illustrative.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Specific readings will be announced in a detailed syllabus at the start of the term.

Assessment: Four essays of 2,500-3,500 words each over the course of the two terms.

PH502

Reasoning and Logic

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall LAK 3.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course aims to give a precise formulation of correct deductive reasoning- of what it means for a sentence to follow from a set of other sentences taken as premises- and to investigate on this basis other important logical notions such as that of consistency. The course will also investigate how these formal principles are of use in analysing informal argumentation. Mathematicians lay down certain axioms and establish theorems by deducing them as consequences of the axioms; scientists postulate certain theories and test them by deducing certain consequences from them that can be checked experimentally; ordinary reasoners try to win (intellectual) arguments by showing that some position that they favour follows deductively from assumptions that everyone accepts. This course studies what exactly is involved in correct deductive reasoning. It begins by considering certain very simple inferences that can be formalized in a system called propositional logic. The semantic notion of deductive validity is developed for this system and the truth table, "no counterexample" and tree methods for establishing validity in propositional logic are introduced. The connections between validity and other important logical notions such as equivalence, consistency and independence are precisely detailed. Some simple results about propositional logic are proved. More complex inferences require a system called (first order) predicate logic. The course shows how to formalize some ordinary informal sentences (and therefore ordinary informal inferences) in predicate logic; and introduces methods for establishing the validity or invalidity of predicate logic inferences: both a system based on rules of proof and one based on the tree method will be studied. Again the relationships between validity of inference, on the one hand, and the notions of the logical equivalence of two sentences, the consistency of a set of sentences or the independence of one sentence from a set of sentences, on the other, are investigated for the more powerful system of predicate logic. Both the systems that we shall study - of propositional and predicate logic - are entirely formal. Although we shall emphasize how some especially simple ordinary arguments can be 'captured' within such systems, it is of course true that 'ordinary reasoners' do not explicitly employ such formal techniques. How then, if at all, can formal logic help in assessing ordinary deductive reasoning in science, social science and elsewhere?

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

The exact timetable will be worked out with the individual students on the course at the start of term.

Formative coursework:

Regular exercises will be set on the basis of the material covered in lectures; students are required to complete these exercises and to be ready to present and discuss answers in the associated seminar, where applications of formal logic to informal reasoning will also be investigated.

Indicative reading: Extensive lecture notes will be provided covering all aspects of the course. Students will however find it useful to consult C Howson, Logic with Trees. This text concentrates exclusively on the method of trees, while the lecture also introduces other equivalent methods.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PH551

Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Natural Sciences

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Roman Frigg T501a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Topics in the philosophy and history of modern science, with a special focus on the natural sciences. The seminar incorporates the regular meeting of the British Society for the Philosophy of Science (BSPS) and the Sigma Club. Details regarding BSPS and Sigma can be found on their respective websites (<http://www.thebps.org/> and <http://www.lse.ac.uk/collections/CPNSS/projects/SigmaClub/Default.htm>). Together these take up about 5 meetings each term. The remaining meetings are run as a research seminar, meaning that research students and members of the department present recent research which will then be discussed. In the summer term five seminars are run jointly with the Department of Science and Technology Studies at UCL. The topic of the seminar will be chosen so that it covers aspects of both the history and the philosophy of science. The topic is to be chosen by seminar participants.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 12 hours of seminars in the ST.

PH555

Research Seminar in the Philosophy of Economics and Social Sciences

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Richard Bradley

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Philosophical issues in economics and the social sciences.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework:

Students will be expected to write one essay per term and to give seminar presentations.

PS940

The Psychology Department Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alex Gillespie STC.308

Availability: Open to staff and graduate students in the Institute.

Course content: Papers will be presented by outside speakers.

Teaching: 30 hours of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of seminars in the LT. 12 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: no assessment

PS950

Current Research in Social Psychology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alex Gillespie STC.308 and Dr Caroline Howarth STC.374

Availability: Academic staff and research students only.

Course content: Weekly seminars including plenary and specialist sessions in Michaelmas Term, Lent Term and Summer Term. Seminars for research students in: Health, Community and Development; Social and Cultural Psychology; Organisational and Social Psychology; Social and Public Communication.

Teaching: 40 hours of seminars in the MT. 40 hours of seminars in the LT. 40 hours of seminars in the ST.

Assessment: Non-examinable.

PS960

Classical Texts in Social Psychology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Bauer COL.8.04 and Prof Sandra Jovchelovitch STC.310

Course content: To maintain awareness of classical monographical studies of social psychology, its psychological as well as its sociological tradition. To provide a forum for entire textual reading and contextual discussions of contributions by J Vygotsky, K Piaget, Lewin, G H Mead, LeBon, McDougall, F Bartlett, S Freud, E Goffman, Ichheiser, Buehler and others.

Indicative reading: R M Farr, The Roots of Modern Social Psychology, Blackwell, 1996. Further readings will be suggested at the start of the seminar.

Assessment: Non-examinable.

SA550

Research Student Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jane Lewis OLD1.18 and Prof Anne West OLD1.16

Availability: For all MPhil/PhD students in the Department of Social Policy.

Course content: This course provides background sessions for MPhil/PhD students in their first year of study. It also provides the forum in which first year full-time and second year part-time MPhil/PhD students must present their work in advance of submitting their major review documents.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

SO500

Research Class for MPhil Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bridget Hutter STC.S217 and Prof Charis Thompson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The research seminar aims to provide students with a conceptual and practical framework within which to think through planning their research. This includes devising research questions, how to do a literature review, selecting appropriate methods for research, linking theory and practices, ethical issues and writing. The course will comprise workshops and student presentations. By the end of the course students should be able to formulate clear aims and methods for their own research. All first year MPhil students must attend.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: Other (100%) in the ST.

5,000 word paper on the 'Aims and Methods' of the thesis, and a viva voce examination. For full-time students, three copies of this typed and paginated essay must be submitted to the Sociology Administration Office, Room S219A, by the first Friday in May. Satisfactory completion of the 'Aims and Methods' paper, and the viva are necessary in order to proceed to the next stage of the course. Part-time students may elect to be evaluated in May or September of their first year or May of their second year.

SO501

Research Students' Seminar

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael McQuarrie

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option.

Only available to sociology research students in the second and subsequent years of their MPhil/PhD.

Course content: Seminars will discuss some recent influential or prize-winning articles or books in a number of areas of sociological endeavour. The purpose of the seminars is to introduce research students to what sociologists internationally consider to be leading examples of contemporary research, and to ensure that MPhil/PhD students graduating from the department have a chance to acquire a command of debates beyond the special expertise they develop in their own area of research. The seminars will begin with a thirty minute student presentation on the article or book in question, followed by discussion. On occasion, an academic with expertise in that area may be invited to act as a respondent. In addition, there will be a special day seminar devoted to helping those students who are preparing for their upgrade viva. This will provide them with an opportunity to present and defend a significant aspect of their argument.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 8 hours of seminars in the ST.

Fortnightly seminars in the MT and LT for all sociology research students in their second and subsequent years. For those students preparing for their upgrade viva there will also be a special day seminar usually in ST.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment, but participants are asked to present papers, read the work of selected authors, and contribute to discussion.

SO509

Research Seminar on Modern Theory

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology and MSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For MSc and MPhil students, although numbers will be limited. If space is available, other graduate students may apply.

Course content: Research Seminar on Modern Theory.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the LT.

Two four-hour seminars in the LT. Check timetable for exact dates and times.

Assessment: This course is not assessed

SO511 Not available in 2013/14

Research Seminar in Political Sociology

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

MPhil/PhD students whose research is in the field of political sociology. Students from all departments are welcome.

Course content: Political sociologists seek to understand fundamental political phenomenon by studying them in their social context. This seminar seeks to provide a small, friendly forum in which research students can discuss important recent publications and debates in this field. It often spends a number of weeks reading recent prize-winning books and articles in the field, and sometimes examines a topical theme for part of a term. There are also occasional guest lectures. Last year, for example, there were lectures by Jeff Goodwin (New York University) on the legacy of the revolutions of 1989, and Michael Mann (UCLA) on the rise and fall of neo-liberalism. The seminar also provides an opportunity to develop individual research projects. In each seminar, a twenty or thirty minute presentation is followed by discussion.

Teaching: 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 6 hours of seminars in the LT. Fortnightly in MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A short list of some important recent books and articles that could be discussed in the seminar will be suggested at the beginning of the year, and the seminar is always open to suggestions from participants. Readings continually change, but, for the purposes of illustration, recent seminars have discussed global anti-capitalism, suicide missions, human rights and the new imperialism, Christianity and American democracy, the welfare state, the politics of free markets, labour protest in China, street politics in Egypt, boycotts, and the crisis of capitalism.

Assessment: There is no formal assessment but participants are asked to present papers, contribute to discussion and read the work of selected scholars in the course of the session.

SO521

Research Seminar on Cities and Space

This information is for the 2013/14 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Francine Tonkiss STC 219

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD Cities Programme and MPhil/PhD in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

For MPhil/PhD students doing research on urban and spatial issues in the Cities Programme/Department of Sociology. If space is available, other graduate students may apply.

Course content: This graduate seminar is based on discussion of key readings in the fields of urban social theory and spatial analysis. It also provides a forum for discussion of research issues relating to the study of cities and space

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

One two-hour seminar every two weeks in the MT and LT.

Study Skills and Study Advice and Self-development for Undergraduate and MSc Students

This information is for the 2013/14 session

Teacher responsible: Teaching and Learning Centre staff

Pre-requisites: No previous knowledge required. All students are welcome and all events free of charge.

Course content: This is a year-long series of lectures and workshops designed to complement students' academic learning, with specialist provision for undergraduate and taught Masters students.

Topics include:

- Introduction to study at LSE
- Essay writing
- Effective reading strategies
- Structuring MSc dissertations
- Exam preparation
- Stress management

Teaching: All events follow the dates of the LSE teaching year. Further details, and links to booking pages, can be found at lse.ac.uk/tlc/training

Assessment: No formal assessment undertaken.

Academic and Professional Development for PhD Students (see also MY593A, MY593B and MY593C in Research Course Guides section)

This information is for the 2013/14 session

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarabajaya Kumar (Teaching and Learning Centre), with LSE colleagues and external consultants

Pre-requisites: All PhD students are welcome, but booking for each event is required. For some events, students are requested to bring along current work and/or to be prepared to participate actively.

Course content: This is a year-long series of interdisciplinary workshops designed both to support the writing and completion of theses and to develop students' understanding of how their research can be communicated within and beyond academia. Workshops are divided into three strands to cover the various stages of thesis progression (see MY593A, MY593B and MY593C in Research Course Guides) with subjects including:

- The macro-structure of the thesis
- Writing compelling abstracts
- Academic job interviews
- Getting published
- Preparing for and handling your viva

Teaching: All events follow the dates of the LSE teaching year. Further details, and links to booking pages, can be found at lse.ac.uk/tlc/training

Assessment: No formal assessment undertaken.

Academic and Professional Development for Research Staff

This information is for the 2013/14 session

Teacher responsible: Dr Sarabajaya Kumar (Teaching and Learning Centre), with LSE colleagues and external consultants

Pre-requisites: All LSE research staff are welcome, but booking for each event is required. For some events, participants are requested to bring along current work and/or to be prepared to participate actively.

Course content: This year-long series of interdisciplinary workshops is designed to encourage career researchers to communicate their work effectively beyond academia, with a particular emphasis on media outlets, and to support them generally in planning for their futures. Workshop subjects include:

- Writing for the media
- Developing as an academic writer
- Academic interviews
- Perfecting your one page pitch, focusing on print and radio

Teaching: All events follow the dates of the LSE teaching year. Further details, and links to booking pages, can be found at lse.ac.uk/tlc/training

Assessment: No formal assessment undertaken.

Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education Course: Associate Level

This information is for the 2013/14 session

Teacher responsible: Dr Jane Pritchard (Teaching and Learning Centre)

Pre-requisites: Most participants are likely to be graduate teaching assistants in their first year of teaching, or experienced teachers returning after a break. 20 hours of teaching at LSE (class time or lecture time) are required to undertake the programme as well as attending 20 hours of PGCert workshop sessions throughout the year.

Course content: The course is based on three modules:

- Small group teaching
- Evaluating teaching
- Supporting student learning

Each of these requires course work, delivered after the Christmas and Easter breaks, in the form of a practical assignment and accompanied by a rationale of around 2,000 words explaining the candidate's thinking and showing how it has been informed by reading relevant literature on higher education. A series of workshop-style training events runs throughout the year to support progression through the course.

Teaching: All courses follow the dates of the LSE teaching year. Further details (and links for booking events) can be found at lse.ac.uk/tlc/training

Assessment: Participants are required to submit a portfolio of their course work by end of August which will be assessed. Successful candidates will be granted Associate Level of the PGCertHE and are eligible to become Associates of the HEA and if they choose to progress to year 2 of the programme – the full level.

Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education Course: Full Level

This information is for the 2013/14 session

Teacher responsible: Dr Jane Pritchard (Teaching and Learning Centre)

Pre-requisites: Participants move directly to this course from the Associate Level (see above) and are therefore likely to be graduate teaching assistants in their second year of teaching, or experienced teachers returning after a break. 20 hours of teaching at LSE (class time or lecture time) are required to undertake the programme as well as attending 20 hours of PGCert workshop sessions throughout the year.

Course content: The course is based on three modules:

- Assessment and Feedback
- Lecturing
- Course design

Each of these requires course work, delivered after the Christmas and Easter breaks, in the form of a practical assignment and accompanied by a rationale of around 2,000 words explaining the candidate's thinking and showing how it has been informed by reading relevant literature on higher education. A series of workshop-style training events runs throughout the year to support progression through the course.

Teaching: All courses follow the dates of the LSE teaching year. Further details (and links for booking events) can be found at lse.ac.uk/tlc/training

Assessment: Participants are required to submit a portfolio of their course work by the end of August which will be assessed. Successful candidates will be granted the full PGCertHE and are eligible to become Fellows of the HEA, FHEA.

the Christmas and Easter breaks. Successful candidates will be granted Associate Level of the PGCertHE and are eligible to become Associates of the HEA and to and if they choose to progress to year 2 of the programme – the full level to obtain the full PGCert HE and become Fellows of the HEA (FHEA).

Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education Course: Career Track

This information is for the 2013/14 session

Teacher responsible: Dr Claire Gordon (Teaching and Learning Centre)

Pre-requisites: New Career Track members of faculty with fewer than three years' teaching experience in higher education have been required since 2009 to take the Associate Level Postgraduate Certificate in Higher Education before passing Major Review. Faculty members with teaching responsibilities who have completed their PhD and at least two to three years' teaching experience may also take this programme.

Course content: The Career Track option is a one year, part time course designed around offering an extended orientation to teaching and learning at LSE for academic staff. It focuses on the tasks new faculty are often asked to perform, in particular lecturing, seminar teaching and the proposal of new courses, and provides insight into student learning, feedback on teaching and ideas on how course design and teaching issues are addressed across the School and within the UK HE sector. The course is based on two assignments:

- Developing teaching practice and student learning
- Course design

Participants are strongly encouraged to draw on their previous teaching experience both during discussions and in their assignments and to consider how this informs their teaching at LSE.

Teaching: In addition to the New Academic Induction Programme in September, each assignment is supported by a number of optional lunchtime seminars during Michaelmas and Lent terms, and one-to-one meetings. All dates for sessions will be posted on Moodle and a briefing session will be held before the start of Michaelmas Term.

Assessment: Participants are required to submit a portfolio at the end of August made up of course work from the two assignments, teaching observation reports and student survey results, and start of year and end of year reflections on teaching, observation of teaching and future plans. Building of the portfolio is done throughout the year, with assignment deadlines following
