- Or (subject to approval by the Departmental Tutor) any other paper which is normally available only to second or third year students taught within the School or at other colleges of the University where practicable (see Outside Options). Conditions under which the Departmental Tutor will approve papers are given in the BSc Management student handbook.

Notes LSE100 is taken by all students in the Lent Term of Year 1 and the Michaelmas Term of Year 2. The course is compulsory but does not affect the final degree classification.

* In year one students choose between AC102 and AC103, on financial and management accounting respectively. Students MUST do ONE of these courses in year one; should they wish, they MAY choose to do the other in their second or third year as an option. All students are required to attend the first AC100 lecture to get an overview of the topics to be covered in each course. Students wishing to continue their studies with advanced financial accounting (AC330) in the second or third year should be advised to take AC102 in the first year. Students wishing to continue with advanced management accounting (e.g. AC211, AC310) in the second and third year should be advised to take AC103 in the first year. Should they wish to do both AC102 and AC103 in the course of their degree programme, it is recommended that they opt for the financial accounting unit (AC102) in the first year to ease their way through the management accounting and financial management unit (AC103).

AC211

Managerial Accounting

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Rita Samiolo OLD 3.33, Dr Martin Giraudeau OLD 5.02, Dr Tommaso Palermo KSW 3.07, Dr Matthew Hall OLD 2.11A.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students with permission of the Accounting Department tutor. It is also an option for students taking the Diploma in Accounting and Finance.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Management Accounting and Financial Management (AC103) or Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management (AC104).

Course content: The course analyses the roles and applications of management accounting practices and concepts in contemporary organisations and enterprises. Management accounting is extensively involved in the planning, coordination and control of complex organisations and networks of organisations competing on a global scale. The course explores key management accounting concepts and tools, and their economic, strategic, behavioural and organisational underpinnings.

The course is organised in four modules.

Management Accounting for Decision Making examines how management accounting information can be used in the context of a variety of short- and long-term decision problems, ranging from costing to pricing, outsourcing, investment appraisal and environmental management.

Management Accounting and Strategy looks at management accounting change and at the emerging role of management accounting in strategy making. A special focus is placed on the uses of management accounting for inter-organisational and supply-chain coordination.

Management Accounting and Organisational Control examines intra-organisational planning and control issues, focusing on how managerial action is guided by practices such as budgeting, variance analysis and transfer pricing.

Performance Measurement addresses the use of financial and non-financial performance measures in complex organisational and managerial settings, with particular emphasis on their behavioural consequences and the limits of quantification.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to complete written assignments before each class. Four of these assignments, one per module, will be collected and graded by class teachers. All students will be expected to contribute to class discussions.

Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during class, on written homework assignments, and during office hours.

Indicative reading: Illustrative texts and articles include: Bhimani, Horngren, Datar and Rajan, 2011, Management and Cost Accounting, FT/Prentice Hall; Merchant & Shields, 1993, "When or why to measure costs less accurately to improve decision making", Accounting Horizons 7(2), pp 76-81; Arruñada & Vázquez, 2006, "When your contract manufacturer becomes your competitor", Harvard Business Review, September issue; Miller & O'Leary, 2005, "Managing operational flexibility in investment decisions: the case of Intel", Journal of Applied Corporate Finance, pp 87-93; Cooper & Slagmulder, 2004, "Interorganizational cost management and relational context", Accounting, Organizations and Society, 29(1), pp 1-26; Hall (2008), "The effect of comprehensive performance measurement systems on role clarity, psychological empowerment and managerial performance", Accounting, Organizations and Society, 33(2-3), 141-163. Detailed course programmes and reading lists will be distributed during the first lecture.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

AC310

Management Accounting, Financial Management and Organisational Control

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wim Van Der Stede OLD 2.18 and others

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students. Available to students on other undergraduate/Diploma programmes with the permission of the Accounting Departmental Tutor.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Management Accounting and Financial Management (AC103) or Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management (AC104).

Course content: The course addresses contemporary issues in management accounting, financial management, and organisational control. It focuses on cutting-edge concerns in practice and research, and seeks to foster a critical understanding of both. The course consists of four modules, all of which are taught by faculty with specific expertise in the area. The exact composition of the course may vary from year to year, but issues which are typically addressed include financial controls, organisational structures, performance measurement and incentive systems, budgetary control and public-sector and non-profit financial management.

The Function of management control systems: The course starts with the study of the quintessential role of management control systems in decentralised organisations, with a focus on the measurement and evaluation of the performances of organisational entities and their managers. Focusing on financial control systems, this module analyses issues related to financial target setting (as part of organisations' planning and budgeting processes), performance measurement and evaluation, and the assignment of various forms of organisational rewards, such as bonuses and promotions.

Accounting in non-governmental organisations: Many of the concepts from the first module are then studied in the context of NGOs, including measuring the performance and effectiveness of NGOs, the use of 'business-like' management control and financial management systems, the evaluation of programme efficiency and impact, the accountability to donors and beneficiaries, and the role of accounting in 'Northern' vs. 'Southern' NGOs.

Management accounting, budgets and behaviour: Also building on the first module, this module focuses on budgeting issues, the no-budgeting option, contingency theory, organisational participation, understanding how budgets impact people, and how people impact operations and capital budgets in organisations, through the lens of different organisational theories.

Accounting in the new public sector: The final module studies management accounting and financial management in the 'new public sector', including performance measurement, cost accounting, cost management and pricing; the roles of accounting controls in the health system reforms in the UK and elsewhere.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to present cases and produce written work for classes. Some of this work may be done in groups. Case studies will be used extensively. All students will be expected to contribute to class discussion.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be given out at the start of each part of the course. ### Auditing, Governance and Risk Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Liisa Kurunmaki OLD 3.13

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elements of Accounting and Finance (AC100) or Elements of Financial Accounting (AC102) or Elements of Accounting, Financial Institutions and Financial Management (AC104). Elements of Management Accounting and Financial Management (AC103) is recommended to complement AC102, but not required.

Course content: The course provides a critical analysis of auditing practices and their role in organisational governance and risk management. Auditing is demanded by, and provides assurance to, a variety of internal and external stakeholders, including corporate shareholders and regulators. As societal demands for accountability have increased, auditing has become both more important and more regulated itself. Auditing also remains controversial and this course will address contemporary debates.

The course addresses the theoretical basis of auditing, its role as a risk management function, its practical methodologies and its legal, professional and social environment. The course is divided into four modules.

Corporate Financial Audit provides a basic overview and introduction to corporate auditing theory and practice. The module investigates the roles of corporate financial audit in contemporary society; discusses issues related to the collection of audit evidence and assurance of audit quality; and analyses recent national and international developments in audit regulation and standard setting.

Internal Control and Risk Management critically examines recent developments in risk management and internal control practices, including the role of internal auditing and the problem of reporting on the effectiveness of control systems.

Public Sector Auditing and Accounting considers variants of the audit function in the public sector context, such as value for money auditing.

Sustainability Accounting and Auditing addresses the broader accountability framework of the corporation and related environmental and social accounting and auditing issues. While the primary focus of the course is upon UK practice, international comparisons will also be made. There is also an intention to run a small number of practitioner lectures during the 2014-15 session. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of four written essays per year and one class presentation. All students will be expected to contribute to class discussion. Feedback on performance and progress will be provided during class, on written homework assignments, and during office hours.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus. In addition to professional and academic journals, reading will cover the following: Gray I, & Manson S, The Audit Process, Thomson, 2011; and refer to Power M, The Audit Explosion, Demos, 1996 and The Audit Society, OUP, 1999, Flint D, Philosophy and principles of auditing: an introduction, Macmillan Education, 1988. Background reading for the fourth module may be found in Henriques, A, Corporate Truth: The Limits to Transparency (Earthscan 2007). Students will also be provided with relevant examples of corporate and other reports and referred to relevant websites. Detailed course programmes and reading lists will be distributed at the first lecture of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

AC340 Mazars Prize. The international accounting firm, Mazars, sponsors a prize for the best examination performance in AC340. The prize has a value of £200 and is awarded at the end of the examination period each year.

Reading Other Cultures: Anthropological Interpretation of Text and Film

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Bear OLD 6.09, Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14 and Dr Gisa Weszkalnys OLD 6.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course aims to provide training in the reading and interpretation of visual and textual anthropology for first-year students, and to develop analytic skills. The course introduces students to detailed, holistic study of a culture in its context, and develops skills in bringing together the various elements of cultural and social life analysed by anthropologists. By the end of each term, successful students will have both a detailed knowledge of three important texts, and also have a rounded view of the three cultures studied. They will also have developed the capacity to think critically about ethnographic writing and film-making. In addition, the course aims to enable students to examine in detail the process by which ethnographic texts are produced. The course brings students to a closer understanding of anthropological fieldwork and evidence. Students will usually read three book-length ethnographic accounts of other cultures (or the equivalent) per term, and will study a film (or pictorial, architectural or other visual material) associated with each text. Teaching will normally be arranged in cycles of three weeks; in the first two hour session, students will be given a background lecture, with a one-hour class. In the second week, they will study a relevant ethnographic, documentary or fiction film (eg a significant film from the country under study), followed by a class. In the third week, they will have a two-hour seminar which brings together an overview of the significance of the text studied and its relationship to the visual material with which it is paired. There may be a final integrative session in the final week of each term.

Teaching: MT and LT. Three lectures per term plus an introductory lecture; three films/visual material presentations per term/six discussion classes per term/three two-hour seminars per term. This course will make consistent use of electronic resources, especially the 'public forum' posted on Moodle. Students are encouraged to avail themselves of this opportunity to constructively interact with the class and the class teachers.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to read the three set texts per term, approximately 1/3 text (two-four chapters) each week, and it will be essential to do this in order to pass this course. Students will be asked to give informal and formal presentations in the classes and seminars, and to present an assessment essay after each term's work. Emphasis will be on developing students' abilities to read and analyse texts as a whole, and to relate them to the other material offered on the course. Supplementary readings may be provided during the term. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Indicative reading: Texts may be chosen from among the following and other works; Gayatri Reddy (2005), With Respect to Sex: Negotiating Hijra Identity in South India; Roxanne Varzi (2006), Warring Souls: Youth, Media and Martyrdom in Post-Revolution Iran; Gisa Weszkalnys (2010), Berlin Alexanderplatz: Transforming Place in a Unified Germany; Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (15%, 2500 words) in the MT.

Essay (15%, 2500 words) in the LT.

The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD 6.11 and Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates should have completed an introductory course in Social Anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems, gender roles, personhood and human sexuality, analysed through ethnographic examples from diverse cultures. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'marriage', 'gender', 'sex', 'the person', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture'. The course charts the history of anthropological debates on kinship, relatedness, sex and gender, and familiarises students with a range of contemporary approaches to these themes, placing ethnographic materials into a critical dialogue with recent developments in gender theory, queer theory, the anthropology of colonialism, psychoanalysis, evolutionary theory, and cognitive anthropology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare material for discussion in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Melanesia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott, OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption from the course teacher.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the culture area in the southwest Pacific Ocean known as Melanesia through an examination of classic and contemporary ethnography of Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands, Vanuatu, New Caledonia and Fiji. In the 1880s a hereditary Fijian priest named Dugamoi claimed to have acquired supernatural powers through initiatory out-of-body experiences and prophesied the imminent transformation of the Fijian social order: soon the European colonial rulers would become subject to Fijians and Fijian chiefs would serve the commoners. The wealth of Europeans – cloth, tinned goods, and other manufactured items – would all flow spontaneously and prodigiously to Fiji. In 1919 the 'Vailala Madness' inspired the followers of Evara on the south coast of what is now Papua New Guinea with expectations that the spirits of their ancestors were about to arrive in a huge steamer bearing abundant supplies of flour, rice, tobacco, and knives and transferring control of trade in these goods from whites to blacks.

In the 1940s, Tsek instructed the people of the island of Espiritu Santo (in present-day Vanuatu) to prepare for the advent of cargo-laden Americans by killing their livestock, burning their villages, going naked, and living in communal antinomian anticipation of a new world order.

Collectively labelled 'cargo cults', such religious and political movements have, since the middle of the twentieth century, become iconic for many of the geographic and cultural area known as Melanesia. By tracking the classic ethnographic construction, late twentieth-century critique, and recent reassessment of this category, the course offers a thematically-centred survey of key themes in the anthropology of Melanesia.

Questions and topics considered include: what is 'Melanesia'? Is 'Melanesia' still a useful concept? The place of Melanesia in the history of anthropological theory; cosmologies, mythologies and religious practices; spatiality and emplacement; leadership and community formation; knowledge and secrecy; exchange; gender, race, personhood, and sociality; colonial histories; custom politics; indigenous Christianities; decolonization, nationalism and ethnogenesis; and Melanesian modernities.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in classes and are required to write assessment essays.

The Anthropology of Christianity

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD6.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: The ethnography of local Christianities in the light of differing cultural and social situations including colonial conditions. The relationship between Christianity and the discipline of anthropology. The course will examine a number of anthropological and historical studies of local forms of Christianity, from a range including local forms of Catholicism, Mormonism, contemporary and historical Protestantisms including American Protestant forms and 'heretical' and other unorthodox Christianities. The course asks why anthropologists shied away from analysing Christianity long after studies of other world religions, such as Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism, had become widely established. It looks at the relationship between Christianity and the history of anthropological thought, and locates the place of Christianity in the writings of Mauss, Durkheim, Foucault and others, in order to defamiliarise the religion which Europeans and Americans especially often take for granted. Issues examined may include the nature and experience of belief, conversion and the appropriation of Christian doctrines by local populations, the problems of writing about religion, Christianity and the state, the nature of religious confession, Christian texts, and Scriptural reading practices, Christian objects and materialities, Christianity and women's religious and social experience (from Medieval women mystics to women priests), inquisitions and heretical beliefs, priests and alternative forms of mediation with divine power, miraculous saints, incorrupt bodies and 'non-eaters' and changing ideas about death, Heaven and Hell. Where possible, the course will include a student fieldwork weekend and forms of reflection and reporting on that experience. Please check with the course teacher in any given year whether this is planned as part of the year's programme.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher. Students are asked to participate in the fieldwork trip in years when this is available (please note that costs will be kept to a minimum and consideration will be given in any cases of financial hardship). Fieldnotes and other materials will be prepared by fieldtrip participants.

Indicative reading: M Bloch, From Blessing to Violence: History and Ideology in the Circumcision Ritual of the Merina of Madagascar; F Cannell, Catholicism, Spirit Mediums and the Ideal of Beauty in a Bicolano Community, Philippines (PhD thesis, University

AN223 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: This course will introduce students to selected theoretical and ethnographic issues in the history and contemporary life of Southeast Asia (including Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, The Philippines, and Vietnam). The alleged distinctiveness of Southeast Asian gender relations, political leadership, and experiences of self and emotion have led to ethnographic studies of the region making major contributions to the anthropology of the state, sovereignty, globalisation, gender, identity, violence, and mental health. By providing a strong grounding in regional ethnographic materials, this course will equip students to critically evaluate such contributions and to consider possible further contributions that studies of Southeast Asia might make to anthropological debates. The course will also examine how anthropologists have responded to the interpretive challenges presented by selected aspects of Southeast Asia's social and political life, such as the legacies of mass violence (e.g. the Cambodian genocide, the Vietnam War, or Indonesia's massacre of suspected communists), its ethnic and religious pluralism, and the impact of international tourism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Film screenings will also take place throughout the term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Students are required to facilitate a class in Michaelmas Term. In addition students will submit a written piece of 750-1000 words on the session they facilitated. Facilitation and write up will count for 15% of the overall mark for the course. Students are required to write an assessment essay of 2000-2500 words in Lent Term (15%).

AN227 The Anthropology of Economic Institutions and their Social Transformations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Wieszkalnys OLD 6.08 and Dr Laura Bear OLD 6.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: This course examines 'the economy' as an object of scholarly analysis and a domain of social action. We start by asking how scholars measured, described, modeled, and predicted its behaviour. What forms do economic institutions take cross-culturally? How were these institutions transformed as a result of their incorporation into a wider capitalist markets, state systems, and development initiatives? For example, we will examine the central place of households within capitalist economies, largely overlooked by mainstream economic analyses, and the role that money can play in both dividing and uniting human societies. This first half of the course will familiarise students with fundamental aspects of the field and with core concepts used in economic analysis, such as production, consumption, exchange, property, alienation, scarcity, and value. But we will also try to break open the standard frames of the debate by highlighting, for example, the place of nature in the capitalist expansion, and how economic life is not just life in the ordinary. What progress have anthropologists made in understanding fluctuations, booms and busts? What can ethnography tell us about how people cope with crises, individually and collectively, and what the future may hold?

The second half of the course addresses the anthropology of globalisation. Scholars have various ways of analysing the new forms of production, consumption, exchange and circulation that have emerged since the 1980s. Some emphasise post-Fordist methods of flexible production and neo-liberal elite projects. Others focus on trans-state processes of globalisation. For other theorists shifts in state policies such as austerity, decentralised planning, public-private partnerships and the deregulation of financial markets are at the centre of analysis. Others address new forms of consumer society, popular desires for social mobility and transnational migration. Drawing from ethnographies and anthropological theory the second half of the course will cast a critical eye over these arguments. It will also revisit classic topics from the perspective of present realities — for example production and intimate economies; formal markets in relation to informalised, violent economies; circulation in relation to financial debt and risk; and consumption and consumer citizenship.

Throughout the course, students will become familiar with the key concepts of economic anthropology with reference to selected ethnography and gain a solid understanding of relevant theoretical debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Industrialisation and Industrial Life

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher

Course content: This course deals with anthropological perspectives on the industrialisation process, on industrial life, and the transformation of nature involved, in relation to relevant theoretical debates and with reference to selected ethnographies. The aim is to lead students to develop a critical understanding of the dramatic societal changes brought about by industrialisation and, specifically, of how it affected relations between people and nature, for example, through the increasing exploitation as well as processing of natural resources and the production of energy on a large scale. The course will focus in particular on the practices and cosmologies of those people who in their everyday life or their work participate in these alterations, drawing on case studies from Papua New Guinea, Africa, South America. The themes touched on are likely to include the rural-urban and centre-periphery nexus linking neophyte proletarians with peasant villages and the producers of resources in the periphery with their consumers in the metropolitan centres; the ways in which industrialisation produces new social, environmental, and physical vulnerabilities; the contrast between the organised and unorganised sector; the new kinds of relations formed between companies and local communities in the context of corporate social responsibility programmes; local discourses about industrial pollution and environmental degradation; and the politics of ontology that arise where usable and exploitable nature meet. We will also discuss notions such as development, sustainability, the resource curse and peak oil, which point to the problems in the conduct of industrialised and post-industrialised production as we have come to know it. Throughout, students will be introduced to materials and viewpoints from within and outside the discipline, and will be encouraged to compare and evaluate the nature and value of ethnographic evidence and other approaches to these issues.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. AN237 Half Unit*The Anthropology of Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Katy Gardner OLD 5.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: This course considers a range of contributions made by anthropologists to the analysis of development. It assesses the reconcilability of two divergent perspectives: development anthropology, with its corpus of writings by practitioners working on practical projects, and the 'anthropology of development', comprising a series of critiques of development theory and practice by anthropologists. It examines the historical background, showing how development and its discourses were made in the wake of the colonial encounter and exploring the role played by anthropologists in this process. Critiques of both state-planned and market-driven development are considered and weighed against the

AN238 Half Unit*Anthropology and Human Rights

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher

Course content: The tension between respect for 'local cultures' and 'universal rights' is a pressing concern within human rights activism. For well over two decades, anthropologists have been increasingly involved in these discussions, working to situate their understandings of cultural relativism within a broader framework of social justice. This course explores the contributions of anthropology to the theoretical and practical concerns of human rights work. The term begins by reading a number of key human rights documents and theoretical texts. These readings are followed by selections in anthropology on the concepts of relativism and culture as well as other key frameworks, such as identity and violence. Students will then be asked to relate their understandings of human rights to the historical and cultural dimensions of particular cases, addressing such questions as the nature of humanity, historical conceptions of the individual, colonialism and imperialism, the limits of relativism, and the relationship between human rights in theory and in practice. Case studies focus on Africa and Latin America.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for classes/seminars and are required to write an assessment essay. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Investigating the Philippines - New Approaches and Ethnographic Contexts

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD6.07

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is most suitable for second and third year students but interested first year external students may seek an exemption. Also available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in social anthropology unless granted exemption by the teacher.

Course content: This course offers the chance to look at the ethnography of one country in more detail than is usual for regional courses. It considers topics taken from the ethnography of the lowland and highland Philippines, with a focus on exciting new high quality writing, drawing on the recent renaissance in Philippine Studies. The course will balance works by expert non-Filipino ethnographers with the new writing of 'native ethnographies' by Filipino scholars resident both in the Philippines themselves and in the US. The course will be framed within the colonial, religious and social history of the archipelago, and will consider both new interpretations of Philippine history, and topics on contemporary social issues, as well as using classic works on the Philippines. Teaching each week will normally be organised around the reading of one outstanding ethnography, allowing students to look closely at particular cases. Topics in any year are likely to be drawn from the following list (although obviously only ten topics can be offered in one year) ; Migration, 'mail-order' brides, and the Philippine diaspora ; New religious movements: Philippine colonialism and the processes of conversion: Healing, spirit possession, midwifery and local medicine: The contemporary Catholic Church; Violence in the Philippines; Ecology, landscape and environmental politics: Kinship and its transformations; Gender, Philippine queer theory and Philippine transvestitism: Ritual, drama and local performance traditions: Philippine architecture and material culture.; Philippine cinema: Colonial politics, tribal politics and issues of self-representation: Magic, sorcery and "anitimismo"; Tourism, symbolic economies and the impact of international capitalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for classes/seminars. Students in the Anthropology Department have the opportunity to submit non-assessed essays to their tutor. Students external to the Department may submit a short piece of written work to the course teacher by arrangement.

Indicative reading: Selected texts: Renato Rosaldo Ilongot Headhunters; Vicente Rafael Contracting Christianity; Fenella Cannell Power and Intimacy in the Christian Philippines; Sally-Ann Ness Where Asia Smiles; Heather L. Claussen, Unconventual Sisterhood; J.Neil C. Garcia Philippine Gay Culture: the Last Thirty Years; M. F. ### Children and Youth in Contemporary Ethnography

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should normally have completed an introductory course in anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: For much of its history, and with some notable exceptions, anthropology has paid little serious attention to children. However, recent years have seen a growing interest in both 'childhood' as a historical and social construction, and in children's engagement with their own social worlds. This course aims to introduce students to emerging ethnographic work on children and youth, in order to explore both its theoretical and methodological challenges. Ethnographic studies will cover a wide range of societies and regions, including anthropological work on children and childhood in the US and UK. The course will begin with an investigation of children's place in anthropology, including early anthropological work on 'Culture and Personality' and 'child socialisation'. The course will then move to consider a variety of topics that have been the focus of recent ethnographic study. These may include: children's play, childhood identities and kinship, education and schooling, youth cultures and globalization, children's work, street children and children's competencies in contexts of crisis, including war.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. Weekly lectures and classes in the Lent Term. Film screenings in the Lent Term.

Formative coursework: In addition to preparing discussion material for classes, students will normally write one tutorial essay for the course. Non-Anthropology students taking this course may submit an essay to the teacher responsible.

AN244 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 Anthropology and Media

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Engelke OLD6.10

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates should have completed an introductory course in Anthropology unless granted exemption from the course teacher.

Course content: This course introduces students to anthropological analyses of media, including books and other printed texts, photography, radio, television, film, and the internet. Although 'the anthropology of media' is often understood to be a relatively new subfield, there has been a long-standing interest in media technologies within the discipline. There is also an important manner, from an anthropological point of view, in which 'media technologies' have to be understood not only as these cultural artefacts (radio, film) but also the more elementary senses they express (hearing, sight, etc). We therefore investigate media both as a broad conceptual category and as specific technologies of communication. The course begins with a historical overview of anthropologists' investigations of media technologies, broadly construed. We then move on to consider ethnographic case studies of media in context. Examples may include: photography in India, radio in Zambia, television and cassette circulation in Egypt, mobile phones in Jamaica, book groups in England, and 'indigenous video' in Brazil and Australia. Throughout the course, these case studies are framed in relation to some of the key theoretical debates that have shaped media studies in anthropology and related disciplines since the 1930s. Some attention is also given to the methodological problems involved in studying media, especially the extent to which it challenges the possibility of conducting fieldwork by participant observation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking the course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

AN245 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Borders and Boundaries

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD6.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in social anthropology unless granted exemption by the course tutor.

Course content: How do territorial borders influence human behaviour and thinking, and how, in turn, do citizens manage and manipulate such borders? These questions have become pressing in the current age of globalization and intensifying trans-national connections. The fall of the Iron Curtain and the disintegration of the USSR are but a few of the changes that have rendered ideas of borders as the self-evident limits of notions of society and culture problematic. At the same time, increased porosity of borders may make cultural differences more salient in everyday social and symbolic practice. Moreover, because of the tenuous relations between border dwellers and the state, border studies highlight blind spots in our understandings of concepts as society, identity, culture, ethnicity, and nation. As such, the study of borders links up with central anthropological questions. Whether dealing with ideas about purity, dynamics of inclusion and exclusion, or the (partly artificial) separation of modern society into "spheres," boundaries are being drawn, enlivened, and contested.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

The Anthropology of Post-Soviet Eurasia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD6.13

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in social anthropology unless granted exemption by the course teacher.

Course content: This course discusses recent anthropological literature on the former Soviet Union, focusing on issues such as religion, nationalism and everyday economics. This course will use an ethnographic lens to look at some of the most salient processes occurring in the former Soviet world. We will start by looking at what “really existing socialism” meant for people’s everyday existence during the Soviet period, and how Soviet politics influenced popular ideas of culture and identity. Next, we will examine the varying ways in which inhabitants of the region reconfigured political, economic, and ideological landscapes following the collapse of the Soviet Union. Drawing from ethnographies of Siberia, central Russia, Ukraine, Central Asia, and the Caucasus, the course will provide an overview of debates on religious renewal, nationalism, conflict, economic life, and lifestyle. The course argues that this relatively new field of anthropological research offers fresh and inspiring perspectives on long-standing anthropological debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Pre-requisites: Students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in social anthropology unless granted exemption by the teachers.

Course content: This course will aim to address issues of citizenship, inequality, political participation and democratic governance in rural and urban India. The course will cover both classic and current literature and weekly sessions will be organised thematically. We will start by looking at India’s place in the world as a democracy and emerging economy and the many paradoxes that the country throws up - alongside some of the highest rates of economic growth, India also has one of the lowest performances on development indicators; despite 40% adult illiteracy, India has among the highest voter turnout rates in the world; despite local institutions having the least power compared to state level or the central government, ordinary people feel most invested in local elections; India remains largely rural yet India will hold the largest urban population in the world in less than ten years and so on. In order to understand these paradoxes, it is essential that issues of caste and class be examined in some detail, through the anthropological literature produced on these topics over the past 60 years or so. The changing caste dynamics will be examined through everyday practices of discrimination, violence and endogamy as well as institutional innovations of affirmative action for jobs and education. Class relations have also dramatically changed with land reforms in rural India as well as a substantial middle class has emerged in urban India. Economic reforms introduced since the 1990s have altered modes of retail and consumption in both urban and rural India creating new inequalities and entrenching old ones. In the political arena, these changing practices and dynamics have led to a democratic upsurge from below, leading to a greater participation in the electoral process by members of the lower castes and classes of India. All these issues and more will be addressed in this course through the rich corpus of anthropological literature on the subject alongside examples from India’s vibrant media and popular culture.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Film screenings will be scheduled at the start of term. One revision session in ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their academic advisers. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Indicative reading: Please read at least TWO of the following background readings before the start of the course and certainly by the end of the second week of the course: Sunil Khilnani, The Idea of India; Ramachandra Guha, India After Gandhi; Katherine Boo, Behind The Beautiful Forevers; Amartya Sen, The Argumentative Indian; Corbridge, S. and Harris, J. 2000, Reinventing India: Liberalization, Hindu Politics and Popular Democracy. Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 2500 words) in the MT.

AN251 Half Unit*Cognition and Anthropology: Learning and Thinking in Relation to Social Institutions

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Charles Stafford OLD6.02

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology.

Course content: This course focuses on human learning, thinking and cognitive development, specifically in relation to cultural-historical artefacts (such as writing) and social institutions (such as schools). The topics covered include: (1) cultural models and distributed cognition; (2) attachment behaviours and rites of passage; (3) emotions cross-culturally; (4) incest aversion and incest taboos; (5) morality and ethics cross-culturally; (6) numerical cognition and mathematics; (7) human logic and reason cross-culturally; (8) language and literacy; (9) training, schooling and expertise; (10) exchange, reciprocity and economic psychology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in classes. Students registered for Anthropology degrees will prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting essays to the course teacher and receiving feedback on them.

Indicative reading: Ed Hutchins, Cognition in the wild; Michael Cole, Cultural psychology; A. Wolf; P. Essay (30%, 2500 words) in the LT.

AN252 Half Unit*Anthropological Approaches to Value

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor David Graeber OLD.6.10

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: In this course we will first take stock of the current anthropological theories of value in contemporary anthropology. After a critical appraisal of such theories, we will explore what an anthropological theory of value might actually look like. After a brief exploration of Kluckhohn's "values project", the formalist-substantivist arguments, and debates about the nature of the social role of money, up to the recent neoliberal resurgence in anthropological theory, we'll be looking at the contrasting legacies of Karl Marx and Marcel Mauss. Looking at these as two very different approaches to many of the same problems will provide enormous opportunities for creative synthesis. The course will include some fairly extended case studies (of Tiv fetishism, wampum, and anthropological studies of consumption), to investigate how useful all this theory can actually be in throwing new light on familiar problems.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees may submit formative tutorial essays on the course content and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting essays to the course teacher and receiving feedback on them.

AN268 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15*The Anthropology of Schooling

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Stuart Thompson

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course should have completed an introductory course in social anthropology unless granted exemption by the teacher.

Course content: This course looks at ethnographical and cross-cultural approaches to schooling, language and literacy, and critically examines key theoretical approaches from an anthropological perspective. We will begin by reflecting on students' own conceptions of education, situating these in terms of contemporary paradigms and debates. Next we will examine the efficacy of 'reproduction' and 'resistance' theories of education, and the spread of schooling as a crucial parameter of globalization. Attention will then be paid to schooling and attendant questions of identity, and the cultural production of the educated person. This is followed by a critical examination of bilingual education, racism in education, debates over 'literacy' or 'literatecies', and, relatedly, a critical examination of the language(s) of schooling and a radical re-deployment of Hirsch's notion of 'cultural literacy'. The course concludes with looking at higher education initially by attention to Bourdieu's Homo Academicus, and assessing how 'cultural capital' and the so-called 'audit culture' impacts on conditions of knowledge and involvement in university education.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have the opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their academic tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

AN269 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Amazonia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker OLD6.14

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Unless granted an exemption by the course teacher, students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in anthropology.

Course content: The course will introduce students to selected themes in the anthropology of Amazonia. It will provide a grounding in the ethnographic literature of the region while seeking to engage with current theoretical debates, highlighting their potential importance to the discipline of anthropology. Topics to be covered include history, myth and colonialism; indigenous social movements; sexuality and gender; cosmology and shamanism; trade and inter-ethnic relations; language and power; illness, well-being and death. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the broader relationship between ethnography and theory, to challenge common stereotypes of Amazonia and its inhabitants, and to explore ways in which the region has inscribed itself on the imagination of anthropologists and laypersons alike.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. Ten hours of lectures and ten hours of classes in the Lent Term. Film screenings will also be held throughout the term.

Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees will prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting essays to the course teacher and receiving feedback on them.

Advanced Theory of Social Anthropology

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Graeber OLD 6.10, Dr Johannes Steinmuller OLD 5.06A and Dr Harry Walker OLD 5.06B

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a substantial background in Social Anthropology.

Course content: The aim of this course is to train students to engage critically with classic and contemporary texts in the discipline. It will examine the theoretical implications of particular anthropological approaches by surveying their origins, their strengths and their critique. The course will take the form of an intensive reading group in which approximately six texts (three in each of MT and LT) will be discussed and analysed in depth, along with supplementary reading material where appropriate. Students will be expected to develop their own critical responses to the text, as well as an appreciation of the context in which it was written and its contribution to relevant theoretical discussions and debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in weekly classes and to write short commentaries on the required readings for each week. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Indicative reading: Bateson, Gregory. Naven: Survey of the Problems Suggested by a Composite Picture of the Culture of a New Guinea Tribe. Seligman, Adam B., Robert P. Weller, and Michael J. Puett. Ritual and Its Consequences: An Essay on the Limits of Sincerity. Lévi-Strauss, Claude. The Savage Mind. Descola, Philippe. Beyond Nature and Culture. Laidlaw, James. The Subject of Virtue: An Anthropology of Ethics and Freedom. Graeber, David. Debt: The First 5,000 Years. Supplementary readings will be provided at the start of term.

Assessment: Essay (30%, 2500 words) in the MT.

Essay (30%, 2500 words) and essay (30%, 2500 words) in the LT. Class participation (10%) in the MT and LT.

The Anthropology of Religion

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12 and Dr Michael Scott OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have a substantial background in Social Anthropology.

Course content: This course covers selected topics in the anthropology of religion, focusing upon relevant theoretical debates. In the Michaelmas term, the focus will also be on understanding through specific ethnographic and empirical case-studies, the ways in which lived religious practice, and the understanding of religion, get constituted inside and outside 'Western' and modern contexts. We will also pay attention to cases in which (as in all post-colonial settings, and in relation to so-called fundamentalisms) 'Western' and the 'non-Western' definitions are emerging in interplay with each other, including their relation to understandings of modernity and the secular. Some classic topics in the anthropology of religion are also considered, such as ritual, belief, and sacrifice. In the Lent term, we will consider topics such as shamanism, cargo cults, initiation, witchcraft and sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the classes and are required to write assessment essays. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Ethnography as Research Method and Text

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Social Anthropology and BSc in Social Anthropology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Undergraduates taking this course need to have completed the first two years of either the BA/BSc Social Anthropology or the BA Anthropology and Law.

Course content: The twofold aim of this course is to provide students with deeper insight of the process by which anthropological knowledge is produced, and to develop their skills with regard to the collection, analysis and representation of ethnographic data. Students will carry out a small ethnographic research project and conduct library research, each of which will result in a written text. In the first half of the course the focus is on ethnographic research. We will review the main tools of anthropological research, and discuss the ways in which empirical data are being incorporated in ethnographic texts. The research techniques that will be reviewed include 'participant observation,' various approaches to asking questions and interviewing, and research with documents and in archives. Students will carry out a small research project in London in which they address a specific research question from different angles, employing the various techniques learned during the course. They will report on their research activities and write a short ethnography on the basis of their research findings. For the other half of the course students will write an extended essay based on any topic deemed to be amenable to anthropological analysis, and agreed by the candidate's tutor. The tutor will be concerned that there is an adequate body of relevant literature available for analysis, and that the topic as defined is not unmanageably large. Candidates will be expected to draw widely on their reading from other anthropology courses for their essay.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 1 hour of workshops in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students have the opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course during Michaelmas Term and have the opportunity to submit an abstract and a three-page outline of their extended essay to their mentor during Lent Term.

Indicative reading: Cerwonka, A. and Malkki L.H. Improvising Theory: Process and Temporality in Ethnographic Fieldwork (2007); Davies, C.A. Reflexive Anthropology: A guide to researching selves and others (1999); Engelke, M. (ed.) The Objects of Evidence: Anthropological approaches to the production of knowledge (2009); Epstein, A. The Craft of Social Anthropology (1978); Hammersley, M. and Atkinson, P. Ethnography: Principles in Practice (2007); Jacobson, D. Reading Ethnography (1991); Spradley, J. Participant Observation (1980).

Assessment: Essay (50%, 8000 words) in the ST.

Project (35%) in the LT.

Other (15%) in the MT.

The three elements of assessment are the following: Two "Interim Reports" of 600 – 800 words each during MT (7.5% each). One 4,500-5,000 word "ethnography" or analytical description based on the research project to be submitted in the beginning of LT (35%). One 7,000-8,000 word "extended essay" based on literature research to be submitted in the beginning of ST (50%).

EC100

Economics A

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alan Manning 32L2.36A

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in International Relations and BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This is an introductory course in microeconomics and macroeconomics for those not expecting to take specialist courses in economics. It may not be taken if Economics B has already been taken and passed. No previous knowledge of economics is assumed. The treatment will be non-mathematical, but students are expected to be able to interpret graphs.

Course content: This course provides a foundation in micro and macroeconomics, primarily to those without background in the subject. The course aims to provide students with methods of economic analysis that can enable them to think about when markets work well, when they are likely to fail and what policies might improve outcomes. Macroeconomics is the focus of Lent Term, which covers questions such as unemployment, inflation, monetary policy and an introduction to international economic issues. The analytical methods taught are applied to questions of contemporary importance e.g. issues of inequality, climate change, economic growth.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Lecture handouts are distributed at frequent intervals; they contain the outline of the lectures, details of suggested readings and questions for discussion in classes.

Classes 20 Sessional.

These classes are usually taught by Graduate Teaching Assistants. They deal mainly with questions arising out of the lectures and questions on the lecture handouts. They are also used to discuss students' written work.

Formative coursework: Class teachers will normally set and mark four pieces of written work from each student during the course.

Indicative reading: N. Gregory Mankiw and Mark P. Taylor (2011) Economics, South-Western Cengage Learning, Second Edition.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

A three-hour written examination in the ST based on the full syllabus. The best guide to the year's final examination will be the class exercises undertaken through the year, with previous years' examination papers reflecting different emphases specific to each year.

EC102

Economics B

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francesco Caselli 32L 1.21 and Prof Gianmarco Ottaviano 32L 2.27A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This is an introductory course in microeconomics and macroeconomics for those expecting to take further courses in economics. Students without a mathematical background may consider taking an introductory mathematics course, such as Basic Quantitative Methods, at the same time. EC102 is unavailable to anyone who has passed Economics A.

Course content: Part A Consumer and Producer Theory; Competitive Model; Welfare and Market failures; Monopoly, oligopoly and monopolistic competition; Game Theory; Missing markets. Part B Measurement of the aggregate economy; growth and development, economic fluctuations; stabilization policy; money and inflation; unemployment; financial and sovereign crises.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: Part A: Morgan W., M. Katz and H. Rosen (2009) Microeconomics, 2nd edition, McGraw-Hill. Part B: N Gregory Mankiw, Macroeconomics, Worth, 8th edition.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

The examination is based on the full syllabus of parts A and B of the course.

EC201

Microeconomic Principles I

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margaret Bray 32L4.27 and Dr Erik Eyster 32L4.29

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, Diploma in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics B (EC102) and Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107). This is an intermediate course in microeconomic analysis.

Students are expected to have completed EC102 Economics B or an equivalent introductory course in economics based on textbooks such as D Begg, S Fischer & R Dornbusch, Economics; P A Samuelson & W Nordhaus, Economics; or R G Lipsey, Positive Economics. Students are also expected to have completed an introductory mathematics course such as MA107 Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) and should revise calculus including partial derivatives and the use of Lagrangians.

Course content: I. Consumer Theory. Utility functions and indifference curves. Income and substitution effects. The Slutsky equation. The expenditure function, compensating and equivalent variation, and consumer surplus. Selected applications to savings and labour supply, including the effects of taxes and benefits. II. Producer Theory. Production and cost functions. Firm and industry supply. Perfect Competition and Monopoly. III. Strategic Choice. Basic ideas in game theory. Applications to oligopoly and auctions. IV. General equilibrium and welfare. Competitive equilibrium. Efficiency of equilibrium. Welfare criteria. V. Topics in welfare economics. Public goods and externalities. VI. Uncertainty and information. Choice under uncertainty. Insurance markets. Asymmetric information. Loss Aversion. Moral Hazard.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students should complete the weekly web-based quizzes before attending classes. In addition, at least five pieces of written work will be required and marked by class teachers.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be provided at the start of the course. The main text for the course is Perloff, Microeconomics: theory and application with calculus, (Pearson); Students may also use previous editions. Reference is also made to other texts and to journal articles.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC202

Microeconomic Principles II

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Frank Cowell 32L3.25A and Prof Leonardo Felli 32L4.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance, Diploma in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics B (EC102) and Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107). This is an intermediate course in microeconomic analysis. Students are expected to have completed Economics B or an equivalent introductory course in Economics. Students who have thoroughly mastered mathematics to the level of MA107 should be able to follow the course, but would find it difficult. MA100 would give a better grounding.

Course content: The coverage is similar to Microeconomic Principles I. However a greater mathematical facility will be assumed of the student permitting both greater depth and a number of additional topics, such as duality, to be covered. Further details are available on <http://darp.lse.ac.uk/Frankweb/courses/ec202/>.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. At least four pieces of written work will be required and marked by class teachers.

Indicative reading: The text for the course is Cowell, F.A. (2006) Microeconomics: Principles and analysis, Oxford University Press, Oxford. Additional readings to complement the lecture notes on specific topics from other books or articles will be indicated as needed.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Macroeconomic Principles

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kevin Sheedy 32L1.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics B (EC102).

This is an intermediate course in macroeconomic analysis, for BSc degrees in Economics and is also available to other students as permitted by the regulations. Students are expected to have completed Economics B or an equivalent introductory course in Economics. Students are also expected to have completed an introductory mathematics course such as Basic Quantitative Methods.

Course content: The course will cover: Economic growth, consumption, investment, unemployment, business cycles, inflation, monetary and fiscal policy, financial markets and international macroeconomics.

Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. Two pieces of written work per term will be required and marked by class teachers.

Indicative reading: The main textbook for the course is S D Williamson, Macroeconomics, 5th ed., supplemented by other reading selected by the lecturers. A combined package will be available in the Economists' Bookshop.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Candidates are required to answer eight out of ten short questions from Section A and three out of six long questions from Sections B and C (with at least one question from each section).

EC220

Introduction to Econometrics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jörn-Steffen Pischke 32L2.16

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, Diploma in Accounting and Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Can we please add: It is also open with permission to General Course students. This just makes it clearer that they have to have permission.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).

Those who have taken MA107/ST107 should consider taking EC220 only if they have obtained marks of 65 or better on both courses

Course content: This course is an introduction to econometrics; it aims to present the theory and practice of empirical research in economics. Students will work with Stata analysing actual data sets. The focus of the course is on causal "what-if" questions (e.g. whether our estimates will deliver answers to questions like: "What is the effect of monetary policy on output?").

Topics include: randomised experiments; matching, simple and multiple regression analysis; hypothesis testing; omitted variables bias; functional form; measurement error; instrumental variables; simultaneous equations bias and two-stage least squares; differences-in-differences and panel data; and time series data. Applications are discussed throughout the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

EC220.B for graduate students.

Formative coursework: Exercises are provided each week and are discussed in the classes. Students are required to hand in written answers to the exercises for correction.

Indicative reading: J H Stock and M W Watson, Introduction to Econometrics, Pearson. Further materials will be available on the Moodle website

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC221

Principles of Econometrics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marcia Schafgans 32L4.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics,

BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102). This course is an intermediate-level introduction to the theory and practice of econometrics. Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) or equivalent. Matrix algebra, multivariate calculus and statistics are used intensively.

Course content: Multiple Linear Regression Model: estimation methods (least squares, method of moments, and maximum likelihood) and hypothesis testing under the classical linear regression (also called Gauss-Markov) assumptions. Asymptotic theory. Discussion of Gauss-Markov violations (origin and consequences): perfect multicollinearity, specification errors (e.g., omitted variables), heteroskedasticity, serial correlation and endogeneity (e.g., measurement error, simultaneity). Generalized least squares, instrumental variables and two stage least squares. Single equation versus simultaneous equation models. Maximum likelihood estimation and the trinity of hypothesis testing, with applications in limited dependent variable models (binary choice and count data model). Time series data and non-stationarity (unit roots). An introduction to panel data models will be offered but not examined. Students will be given an opportunity to start using the key econometrics packages, Stata and Eviews, in optional extra sessions.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Additional help lectures 20 x one-hour MT and LT.

Formative coursework: Weekly problem sets are expected to be attempted before each class. Two compulsory problem sets will be designated for each term.

Indicative reading: The main text for the course is J M Wooldridge, Introductory Econometrics: A Modern Approach, Thomson. Other useful texts include: W Greene, Econometric Analysis, Pearson; J Johnston & J Dinardo, Econometric Methods, McGraw-Hill; G S Maddala, Introduction to Econometrics, John Wiley; C Heij et al, Econometric methods with Applications in Business and Economics, Oxford University Press; and J H Stock and M W Watson, Introduction to Econometrics, Pearson.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC230

Economics in Public Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Sinclair 32L.4.15

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is not open to students who are Economics specialists.

Pre-requisites: Students normally will have completed Economics A (EC100) or Economics B (EC102) or their equivalent.

Course content: This course develops economic analysis for the large questions in contemporary public policy, without the need for knowledge of calculus. Precise topics and readings will be announced and are selected to be of current interest. Last year's topics included Global growth and income inequality; the shifting distribution of global economic activity and resulting tensions in international financial and political systems, financial and currency crises, and tax and trade policy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Four pieces of written work to be handed in to the class teacher.

Indicative reading: There is no set course textbook. A list of selected texts and readings will be provided at the start of term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC301 Not available in 2014/15

Advanced Economic Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Keyu Jin 32L 1.17

Dr Camille Landais 32L 2.23

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) and Microeconomic Principles I (EC201).

Mathematics to at least the level of Mathematical Methods.

Course content: This course consists of three lecture topics introducing recent developments in economic theory. The first part focuses on information economics and contract theory, analyzing the optimal design of contracts and the role of incentives. This part emphasizes the methods used to analyze these models and discusses applications in the different fields of economics. The second part studies theoretical determinants of the current account and international portfolio diversification. This part analyzes the causes of large global imbalances across countries and examines optimal international portfolios. The third part discusses the theory and evidence surrounding financial crises of the type the world is currently experiencing. This part analyzes the causes, consequences and cures from a macroeconomic perspective.

Indicative reading: The course is mainly based on lecture notes and journal articles. Relevant textbooks will be announced at the beginning of each term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC302

Political Economy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ronny Razin 32L4.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent.

Course content: The course seeks to introduce students to the major theoretical models of Political. Economy and the available empirical evidence. Sample topics to be covered include: Social Choice theory and Preference aggregation; Comparative electoral systems; Political economy of income redistribution; Turnout in elections; Strategic and Sincere voting; Political Parties; Debates and Communication

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: At least four exercises or pieces of written work will be required and assessed by class teachers.

Indicative reading: There is no text book covering all the material in the course. The following books are recommended as supplements to what is covered in the lectures. Analyzing Politics, Rationality, Behavior and Institutions, K.A. Shepsle and M.S. Bonchek. W. W. Norton & Company, New York, London. Liberalism Against Populism, W.H. Riker, Waveland Press, Prospect Heights, Illinois. For additional readings see <http://econ.lse.ac.uk/courses/ec302/>

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC303

Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Sinclair 32L.4.15
Dr Gabriel Zucman 32L.3.13

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I or II (or equivalent) and Macroeconomic Principles (or equivalent).

Course content: The course will concentrate on selected important economic policy issues and relevant economic tools. It will treat the issues at a level appropriate for students with the knowledge of economics provided by the courses already taken. The specific topics will be of contemporary interest, and will be announced by the start of each year. In any year the topics covered are likely to include some of the following: Globalisation: effects on welfare, development and income distribution. ii Inequality iii. International negotiations and trade policies iv. Global imbalances v. World trade collapse vi. Tax policies vii. Monetary policy and exchange rate frameworks viii. Financial integration and currency unions ix. Financial crises and relevant policies x. unemployment and relevant policies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. At least four pieces of written work will be required.

Indicative reading: There is no course textbook. Detailed reading will be provided in the syllabus at the start of the year. Books that provided useful background reading Lent Term 2013/14 included: (a) General books on the European economy / Union and the Eurozone: R. Baldwin, C. Wyplosz The Economics of European Integration, 3e McGraw Hill 2009 P. de Grauwe The Economics of Monetary Union 8e Oxford UP 2009 F. Allen, E. Carletti, G. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC307

Development Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gregory Fischer 32L3.09 and Dr Gharad Bryan 32L3.10

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I or II (or equivalent) and Macroeconomic Principles (or equivalent). A knowledge of introductory econometrics at least to the level provided by a course such as EC220 Introduction to Econometrics, or EC221 Principles of Econometrics, is also necessary. Students who do not have all three pre-requisites and General Course students must consult with Dr Bryan or Dr Fischer before selecting it.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to selected issues in economic development including theory, evidence and policy. The course will explore the related themes of Economic Growth and Development. The course begins by analysing the growth performance of different countries and by presenting the main growth theories to the purpose of identifying, both theoretically and empirically, the determinants of economic growth. The course will then analyse economic institutions in developing countries focusing around the themes of "Markets, Institutions and Welfare" and "Public Policy and Welfare". Failures in key markets such as those for land, labour, credit and insurance have far reaching implications both for productive efficiency and welfare. The story of economic development is, in many ways, one of how informal, imaginative institutions have evolved to fill the gaps left by these market failures. The course will study how institutions have evolved to cope with missing markets, and how they affect the allocation and the distribution of resources. The course will analyse both the channel through which the institutional environment affects efficiency and welfare and how public policy can be designed to increase welfare and growth. The course has a strong applied focus. Under each section we want to derive testable implications from the theory, subject these to econometric testing, comment on the robustness of the results obtained and draw out policy conclusions.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: Teaching in the course will be done mainly from journal articles drawn from the forefront of theoretical and applied research in development economics. Background texts for the course are A. Banerjee and E. Duflo, Poor Economics, Public Affairs, 2011 and D. Ray, Development Economics, Princeton UP, 1998.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC309

Econometric Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L4.24 and Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L4.20

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Mathematics and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Econometrics (EC221).

A good knowledge of linear algebra, calculus and statistical theory is essential, and therefore MA100 and ST102 or equivalent is required. Students taking this course who are not in BSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics or BSc Mathematics and Economics must consult with Dr. Komarova before selecting this course

Course content: Introduction to the asymptotic theory of estimation and inference of economic models; Basics of large sample theory; Estimation of linear regression models (OLS, GMM, GLS); Testing hypotheses and model specifications; Estimation of nonlinear models (MLE, Nonlinear least squares); systems of equations; time series analysis.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: The main text for the lectures is R Davidson & J G MacKinnon, Econometric Theory and Methods, Oxford University Press (2004). Other useful texts include Davidson (2000), Econometric Theory Amemiya (1985), Advanced Econometrics; and Hayashi (2000), Econometrics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

- Happiness and Adaptation
- Heuristics and Biases
- Inattention and Shrouding
- Nudging and Framing
- Behavioural Welfare Analysis

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: At least four exercises or pieces of written work will be required and assessed by class teachers.

Indicative reading: Congdon, William, Jeffrey Kling, and Sendhil Mullainathan. Policy and Choice: Public Finance Through the Lens of Behavioral Economics (selected chapters). Brookings Institution Press: Washington, D.C. 2011

Behavioural Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L3.21

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students. Students taking the course as an outside option are required to meet the pre-requisites as detailed below.

Pre-requisites: Ideally, students will have completed EC202 (or equivalent). A highly motivated student who has done well in EC201 -- as a guideline 65 or better -- is welcome on the course, if he or she finds handling economics mathematically comes naturally. Any such student should see Dr Levy before the course starts. Fluency in calculus is essential, and some knowledge of methods of mathematical proof, including those using sets, is necessary.

Course content: The course will expose students to a number of major topics in Behavioural Economics, and will link theory with empirical applications. The first half of the course will focus on departures from neoclassical preferences, while the latter half will cover departures from rational expectations. The particular topics to be covered include:

- Reference Dependent Preferences and Loss Aversion
- Social Preferences
- Hyperbolic Discounting
- Naiveté and Self-Control
- Projection Bias

EC311

History of Economics: How Theories Change

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Morgan CMK.C222

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the ways in which economics has developed from the Mercantilists of the 17th century to the Neoclassical thinking of the later 20th century.

The course will explore how the theories, concepts and methods of economics have changed over the last 250 years. We will use the original texts in order to understand how economists of the past approached perennial questions (about for example, the sources of growth or the role of money) and resolved them in the context of the economic conditions of their own time and place; and use theories about scientific change to understand the longer history of economics.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to discuss assigned texts and produce several pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: A reading list of original texts and secondary literature will be given at the beginning of the course. For an introduction, students may read R L Heilbroner's, The Worldly Philosophers; for general background, consult Roger E Backhouse's, The Penguin History of Economics or David Colander & Harry Landreth's, History of Economic Thought.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC313

Industrial Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mark Schankerman 32L4.30

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202). Students who believe they have completed an equivalent course instead of one of these must receive permission from Prof Schankerman first.

Course content: The aim of the course is to understand the structure, conduct, and performance of firms by studying analytical models of imperfect competition, determinants of industrial structure, entry in strategic settings, government regulation of natural monopolies, and markets with asymmetric information. The main subjects include monopoly, price discrimination, vertical and horizontal restraints, transactions costs and contract design, game theoretic models of firm behaviour, collusive arrangements, product differentiation, and strategic entry deterrence. Economic models will be used to address policy issues and will be illustrated in classes with case studies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: At least four problem sets will be required and assessed by class teachers.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. The primary text is Tirole's The Theory of Industrial Organization. Specific sections will be assigned (others are too advanced for this course). A useful, less technical supplementary text is Church and Ware's Industrial Organization: A Strategic Approach. There will be additional required readings on empirical articles and case studies on competition policy.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC315

International Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Keyu Jin 32L1.17 and Dr Swati Dhingra 32L2.31

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent and Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or equivalent.

Course content: International Macroeconomics: This section of the course offers an introduction to international macroeconomic theory and develops the main tools for macroeconomic policy analysis. We start by studying the balance of payments and the causes and consequences of global imbalances, followed by an in-depth study of the determination of exchange rates, money, and prices in open economies. We discuss the costs and benefits of different nominal exchange rate regimes and their sustainability, as well as examine the causes and consequences of debt and default, speculative attacks and financial crises.

International Trade: This section of the course offers an introduction to international trade theory and develops the main tools for trade policy analysis. We start by studying the patterns of trade distinguishing between inter-industry and intra-industry trade flows. We then proceed to an in-depth analysis of the causes and the effects of those flows based on the concepts of absolute and comparative advantage, relative factor abundance and relative factor intensity, increasing returns to scale and imperfect competition. Finally we discuss the gains and losses from trade, their distribution among people and firms, and their implications for the debate on trade liberalization vs. protectionism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete a problem set weekly, and two of these each term will be collected at random for marking and feedback.

Indicative reading: Paul Krugman, Marc Melitz and Maurice Obstfeld; International Economics: Theory and Policy, 10th ed.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC317

Labour Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Esteban Aucejo 32L2.30 and Dr Guy Michaels 32L2.10

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Management, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent and Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or equivalent, as well as Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or equivalent.

Course content: This course is an introduction to the economic analysis of behaviour and institutions in the labour market. Primarily microeconomic models are applied to labour market phenomena, such as labour supply and participation, labour demand by firms, and wage determination under different institutional settings. Students learn how to distinguish alternative theories empirically and how key parameters are obtained from the data. The course explores how the models can be applied to evaluate labour market policies, such as the minimum wage, the welfare reform, or restricting immigration. The goal of the course is to enable students to think independently about labour market issues, drawing on the models and tools developed during the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Problems sets in the course involve hands-on statistical analysis of real world data.

Indicative reading: G Borjas, Labor Economics. Additional reading, drawn from journals, will be suggested during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC319

Economic Theory and its Applications

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Ellis 32L 3.15 and Dr Francesco Nava 32L 3.20

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Economics and MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent. Fluency in calculus is essential, some knowledge of analysis, linear algebra and set theory. A highly motivated student with a less technical background could do the course, if he or she finds handling economics mathematically comes naturally. Any such student should see Dr Nava before the course starts.

Course content: This course reviews fundamental concepts in Economic theory and presents some of its most successful applications. The first part of the course consists of an introduction to Auction Theory. It presents standard auction formats and discusses strategic behaviour in such environments. Auctions will be analysed both in private and interdependent value environments. Fundamental topics such as the revenue equivalence theorem, the optimal auction design problem and the linkage principle will be covered in detail. Departures from the standard model will be also considered allowing for heterogeneity among players, risk aversion, and budget constraints. The focus of the course is mainly theoretical, but when possible some evidence supporting the formal models will be discussed with references to relevant work in the field. The second part of the course will revise concepts in non-cooperative game theory and will introduce students to game theoretic models of bargaining, voting, and communication. After setting up the primitives of the game theory framework, different solution concepts will be analysed with an emphasis on different applications. In studying models of bargaining, both axiomatic and non-cooperative approaches will be examined, such as Nash's axiomatic approach and the Rubinstein-Stahl model.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are urged to attempt the assigned problems before attending classes. At least four pieces of written work will be required.

Indicative reading: M. Osborne, "An Introduction to Game Theory", Oxford University Press, 2003.

V. Krishna, "Auction Theory", Academic Press, 2009.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Monetary Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Professor Charlie Bean 32L 1.18

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent and Macroeconomic Principles (EC210) or equivalent. Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) or equivalent are also strongly recommended. Students who have not taken either of these two courses are still welcome provided they can show other evidence of a strong quantitative background.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to monetary theory, to the effects of monetary variables on the macroeconomic system, the role of the Central Bank and the conduct of monetary policy. Subjects covered include: The nature and function of money. Classical monetary theory, neutrality and inflation. Theories of the demand for money. The banking system, financial intermediation and the determinants of the money supply. The transmission mechanism of monetary policy, including theories of nominal rigidities and the Phillips curve. The term structure of interest rates. The theory and practice of monetary policy and the design of optimal policies. Monetary policy strategies, including inflation targeting and Taylor rules. Policymaking in an uncertain environment. The interaction between monetary and fiscal policy and the arguments for Central Bank independence. The financial crisis and monetary policy. The interest rate zero lower bound and unconventional monetary policy, including quantitative easing and forward guidance.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 7 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students should expect to write two essays or exercises in both the MT and LT, to be handed in to, and marked by, their class teacher.

Indicative reading: The most useful text books are M Lewis & P Mizen, Monetary Economics, and C Goodhart, Money, Information and Uncertainty, 2nd edn. Other useful texts include K Bain & P Howells, Monetary Economics: Policy and its Theoretical Basis; B McCallum, Monetary Economics; D Laidler, The Demand for Money, 3rd edn; A Blinder, Central Banking in Theory and Practice.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC325

Public Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Camille Landais 32L 2.23

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics and BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent.

Course content: The first part of Michaelmas term lectures focuses on the issues of equity, efficiency and the role of the state. We begin by looking at questions of equity and alternative theories of the role of the state. We then look at problems of public choice and political economics, and go on to consider the implications of recent research in behavioural economics for welfare analysis. We conclude the first part by discussing issues of market failure, public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. The second part is devoted to the evaluation problem and empirical methods. The third part studies education policies, and the fourth part is devoted to social insurance programs. The final part is devoted to taxation, behavioural responses and the design of tax policy. We begin by examining the effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply and migration, and then go on to consider incomes and behavioural responses at the top of the income distribution. We look at the implications of taxation for economic efficiency and explore the optimal taxation of commodities and income. The final lecture is devoted to the question of development and public finance.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 7 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Feedback is provided for one class presentation and one essay (1,500 words) each term (Michaelmas and Lent).

Indicative reading: The recommended textbook for the course is Jonathan Gruber (2011) Public Finance and Public Policy, 3rd edition, Worth Publishers. Many of the readings will be journal articles.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC331

Quantitative Economics Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Levy 32L3.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Econometrics (EC221) or exceptionally Introduction to Econometrics (EC220).

Course content: This course provides an opportunity to learn how to do independent quantitative economic research at an advanced level.

Teaching: 2 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Students are expected to pursue research on a question of their own choice under the supervision of a member of staff. They are expected to formulate an initial proposal near the start of MT in order to be matched with a supervisor, refining their choice into a manageable research question during that term. Following independent work during MT, a seminar in week 9 will review student progress. In the LT seminars, each student will present a preliminary outline of the results for comments by fellow students and teachers, and later a follow-up presentation on further, more final results and a draft dissertation. Seminars in LT are formally timetabled as classes.

Formative coursework: Students are required to prepare material for their presentations in the seminar, but this is not formally graded. Students are additionally expected to participate in discussion on the presentations of other students' as this is part of the training of a research economist, but this is also not formally assessed.

Indicative reading: As each student chooses an individual research question, there is no common reading list for this course.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST. A completed dissertation (up to 10,000 words, not including abstract, footnotes, bibliography and tables) on an approved subject will be required to be submitted by 1 May in the year in which the course is taken. There is no written examination. The dissertation carries all the marks.

EC333

Problems of Applied Econometrics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Guy Michaels LRB. R438
Dr Matthew Gentry 32L4.28

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202) or equivalent, and either Introduction to Econometrics (EC220) or Principles of Econometrics (EC221).

Students who have completed EC220 rather than EC221 should refer to Dr Gentry for advice before starting the course regarding additional preparatory work for Lent term course material.

Course content: The purpose of this course is to provide a solid grounding in recent developments in applied econometrics. A major feature of the course is the use of both analytical and computer-based (data) exercises for the classes, which will enable students to gain practical experience in analysing a wide variety of econometric problems. The topics covered in the Michaelmas term include analysis of experimental and non-experimental data, identification of average treatment effects and local average treatment effects, weak instrument problems, quantile regressions, and regression discontinuity. The Lent term will focus on topics in the analysis of panel data of both static and dynamic models, including fixed and random effects, measurement error in panel contexts, instrumental variable regression, and generalized method of moments.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: 2-3 problem sets, usually to include econometric questions and Stata applications. Feedback to be provided by the class teacher.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of each term of the course. In parts of the Michaelmas we will use sections from the textbook "Mostly Harmless Econometrics" by Angrist and Pischke. There is no single text for the Lent term, but useful books (somewhat more advanced than the lectures) are Hsiao, "The Analysis of Panel Data" and Wooldridge, "Econometrics".

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EH101

The Internationalisation of Economic Growth, 1870 to the present day

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christopher Minns CMK.C320 and Prof Stephen Broadberry CMK.C420

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the inter-relationships between the development of the international economy and the growth of national economies since the late nineteenth century. The course is designed to introduce students not only to a wide variety of topics and issues, but also to the wide variety of approaches used by historians. The course includes analyses of the original leading nation, Britain, and its replacement, the United States, as well as the catch-up of areas such as continental Europe, and the failure to catch-up of earlier well-placed areas such as Latin America. The effects of major events - such as wars and debt crises - are investigated, and we also consider the implications of changing global economic institutions, such as the Gold Standard and IMF, as well as the effects of sometimes rapid changes in product and process technology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 7 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Lectures: There is one lecture course (EH101) with 22 lectures in the MT, LT and ST. The lectures are given by Professor Broadberry and Dr Leunig. A lecture programme will be circulated at the first meeting. This course uses Moodle to provide a web based location for your core LSE course materials. Classes The lectures are accompanied by weekly classes (EH101.A). Classes are given by several different teachers. They do not necessarily deal with the same topics each week but they all cover the same ground.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four very short papers during the year and two longer essays.

Indicative reading: The following are particularly useful: A G Kenwood & A L Loughheed, The Growth of the International Economy, 1820-2000 (2000); J Foreman-Peck, A History of the World Economy; R Floud & P Johnson (Eds), The Cambridge Economic History of Modern Britain, Vol 2 & Vol 3 (2004); T Kemp, *The Climax of Capitalism. ### Money and Finance: From the Middle Ages to Modernity

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Olivier Accominotti, C216

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course provides an overview of the main developments in monetary and financial history from 800 to the present day, taking the students from the simple beginnings of medieval European monetary history to the complex financial arrangements of the modern world. The first part of the course covers the emergence of money and finance from the medieval ages to the early modern period. The second part examines the main developments in the global financial system since the nineteenth century. Historical developments in major European and non-European countries (England, Spain, Italy, France, Germany, USA) will be discussed and compared. The course is designed to introduce students to the main concepts of money and finance (financial development, financial integration, monetary policy, banking crises etc.) and to provide a long run perspective to the current policy debate.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: The students will produce 3 formative essays. The exercise will help them practice academic writing (structuring and presenting arguments, providing explanations, referencing etc.); a skill both necessary for the dissertation they are expected to write in year 3 and helpful for the exam of this course that will take place in summer term. The class presentation has a formative character, too. Students will practice presenting complex arguments to their peers and answering questions from the audience.

The Making of an Economic Superpower: China since 1850

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Debin Ma C314

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides a survey of long-term economic change in China from the mid-nineteenth century to the present. It focuses on China's long path to becoming a major global economic power at the beginning of the new millennium. The course examines the importance of ideological and institutional change in bringing about economic transformations by surveying major historical turning points such as the opening of China in the mid-nineteenth century, the collapse of the Qing in 1911, the rise of the Communist regime in the 1950s and the adoption of a reform policy since the late 1970s. It examines both the constraints as well as the capacity of a giant traditional economy to respond and regenerate in the face of external challenge from outside since the Opium War of the mid-nineteenth century. The economic analysis of Chinese economic history will examine both macro and micro level questions.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines aspects of the economic history of sub-Saharan Africa, focusing on the nature and consequences for Africa of its external relationships. Lectures provide a chronological introduction to significant periods in African economic history, from the pre-colonial period through the slave trade, different periods of colonial rule, post-independence state-led development, and Structural Adjustment. Classes focus on case studies from individual countries and regions, which illustrate the diversity of experience across the continent. Primary source material related to the case studies will be included in the readings and facilitate the development of research skills in African economic history.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work during the course

Latin America and the International Economy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alejandra Irigoin CMK.C313

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Environmental Policy, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the development trajectory of Latin America and its relation with the international economy from the Early Modern period (c. 1700) to the present. It focuses on the political and economic factors that drove - and that resulted from- the region's engagement with the world attending to the environment, population and factor endowments, institutions and policies. The causes and outcomes of this 'engagement' will be explored in the following broad themes: the determinants of Latin American growth performance, the political economic legacy of European rule and of the formation of modern states and markets; the ambivalent relation with international markets and institutions, the continuous quest for development together with political and macroeconomic instability; the economic aspects of different political experiments and political culture - from authoritarian to democratic regimes and various generations of populism interspersed with military rule and direct democracy- and the short and long run impact on equality, poverty and the prospect for sustained intensive growth.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Theories and Evidence in Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tamas Vonyo CMK.C316 and Dr Leigh Gardner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines theories and concepts used in economic history, and provides an introduction to the methods used by economic historians to collect evidence and generate inference on relevant historical questions. The course will begin with an examination the development of history as a subject and discipline. Consideration will be given to the assumptions made in economics and their principal applications in economic history. The course will also introduce students to essential methods for the design and execution of a research project. Students will be introduced to the analysis of historical arguments and the critical interpretation of primary and secondary sources. The course will also provide students with the basic quantitative skills required to pursue an independent research project, and to engage critically with current scholarship in economic history.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Business and Economic Performance since 1945: Britain in International Context

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Peter Cirenza STC.S481

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course looks at the history of British business and industry, with an emphasis on the post-war period. It examines some of the hypotheses on why the UK economy grew more slowly than other OECD nations with particular reference to the decades after the Second World War. Explanations of relative economic decline are examined in the context of comparisons with other European nations and with the US and Japan. The main attention is on recent decades, including current changes in performance, but the historical roots of Britain's poor performance are also considered. The focus is on business performance in the public and private sectors, including scale effects, multinationals' comparative performance, technology, labour management and management quality. Other factors alleged to have contributed to Britain's poor performance, ranging from 'culture' through government policy to education and trade unions, are also discussed.

Formative coursework: During the course students are expected to write four essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Indicative reading: The course textbook is: Geoffrey Owen, From Empire to Europe: The Decline and Revival of British Industry since the Second World War. Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics and BSc in Economics and Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: South Asia is one of the fastest growing economies of the world. The region is also home to nearly one-third of the world's poorest people. How did this paradoxical mix between the creation of wealth and persistence of poverty come into being? Does economic history suggest an answer? The course introduces the stylized facts and major debates in the economic history of modern South Asia. It considers the legacies of empires and developmental states, globalizations of the past and the present times, and the role of indigenous institutions and resource endowments. The course begins with a discussion of empires and markets before European colonial rule began, with special reference to maritime trade and craft production, in which the European East India companies were interested in. For the colonial period, the major theme is the transformation engendered by colonialism and international economic integration. In the sixty years since the end of colonial rule, developmental states tried to overcome the obstacles to growth as the economists interpreted them. The course considers how successful they were in meeting the aim, and why they were limitedly successful.

Historical Economic Geography: Cities, Markets and Regions in the 19th and 20th Centuries

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Juan Roses Vendoiro STC.S483

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The course explores how and why the location of economic activities changes across time and space from industrialization up to the present. One goal for this course is to demonstrate the importance of history in the formation of the present-day economic landscape. An equally important goal is to demonstrate the applicability of the study of economic geography to the understanding of historical patterns of development and underdevelopment. The course is not organized chronologically but thematically. Particular attention focuses on four major issues: the development of cities, the creation of national markets, the historical basis for manufacturing agglomeration, and the historical evolution and sources of regional inequality.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write three essays or equivalent pieces of written work.

Innovation and its Finance in the 19th and 20th Centuries

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gerben Bakker CMK.C214

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Economic History, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History and BSc in Economics with Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students taking the course as an outside option must have completed at least one other economic history course.

Course content: The course explores the relationship between innovation and the financing of it in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, the impact on economic growth and how policy makers managed (or failed) to encourage innovation investment and technology adoption.

Technological change and organizational innovation are critical determinants of the pace of economic growth. This course looks at the specific ways in which innovation transformed industries around the world in the modern era. The course has a global reach though it will concentrate on countries in Northern Europe and the United States. Particular attention focuses on links between innovation and finance: finance is a fundamental input for almost every type of productive activity. The course will explore issues such as; the relationship between market size and structure and technological progress; how firms developed the capabilities to profit from new technologies; and how policy makers attempted to nurture institutions to stimulate investment and technology adoption. The course will therefore cover themes such as the process of invention, innovation typologies, the history of R&D management, anti-trust policy, corporate governance, organisational change, incentives, intellectual property rights and the regulation of technology and its finance more broadly.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Corporate Finance, Investments and Financial Markets

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Dong Lou

Dr Claudia Custodio

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212).

Including both portfolio theory and corporate finance (FM212 or equivalent course).

Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and will be a broad-based follow-up to FM212 Principles of Finance. The goal is to broaden, and selectively deepen, students' understanding of finance, building on their existing knowledge of financial economics. The course will cover a broad range of topics, with both a theoretical and an empirical emphasis. These include topics in corporate finance, investments and performance evaluation and international finance. The course consists of two interchangeable ten-week components, one on investments and international finance, and the other on corporate finance.

The first component provides students with a way of thinking about investment decisions by examining the empirical behaviour of security prices. We first study the empirical evidence of the CAPM and other asset pricing models, and then analyze different tests of market efficiency focusing on event studies and investment anomalies. We also study the main empirical findings in behavioural finance. We then learn how to measure the performance of a portfolio manager and to attribute it to different types of skill. Finally, this section of the course introduces the foundations of international finance and explores issues related to international portfolio management.

The second component of the course examines theory and evidence concerning major corporate financial policy decisions. We focus particularly on the firm's decision to finance with debt vs. equity, the impact of taxes on such decisions, and the role of dividends. We will begin with the Modigliani and Miller proposition and discuss the firm's choice to raise capital using debt versus equity and the firm's choice to payout earnings using dividends versus repurchases. We will analyze the impact of taxes, financial distress, and asymmetric information on such decisions. We will also cover optimal managerial compensation, take on the role of the policy maker to learn about corporate governance mechanisms and discuss some recent corporate scandals. Finally, we will review empirical evidence from a wide range of international sources to support or refute the theories we discussed.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussions.

Indicative reading: Detailed course programmes and reading lists are distributed at the start of the course. Illustrative texts include: Bodie, Kane & Marcus, Investments (Irwin) and Grinblatt & Titman, Financial Markets and Corporate Strategy (Irwin, McGraw-Hill).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Quantitative Finance

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jon Danielsson OLD 4.20 and Dr Rohit Rahi OLD 3.43

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Principles of Finance (FM212), Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).

Introduction to Econometrics, Principles of Econometrics or other statistical courses where at least linear regression models are covered are recommended but not required. Students who have not taken Principles of Finance, but have an excellent quantitative background, may be allowed to take this course at the discretion of the course leader.

Course content: This course is intended for third-year undergraduates and builds upon FM212 Principles of Finance. The main topics covered are financial risk analysis and financial risk management (first part of the course) and derivatives pricing (second part). As such, this course is complementary to FM300 Corporate Finance, Investments and Financial Markets, with minimal overlap. The first part of the course provides students with a thorough understanding of market risk from both a practical and technical point of view. We discuss the empirical properties of market prices (fat tails, volatility clusters, etc.), forecasting of prices, concepts of financial risk (volatility, Value-at-Risk, etc.), volatility models (ARCH, GARCH, etc.), and we analyse how interactions and feedback between market players can generate endogenous risk and liquidity crises. Finally, we discuss credit markets and liquidity, with applications to the current situation in financial markets. This part of the course presents methods and models used by banks and other financial institutions in the management of risk and allocation of risk capital, as well as models of financial crises. Students apply the models to real financial data using Matlab, a computer software popular in both industry and academia. No prior knowledge of programming is assumed: students will learn-by-doing in class. Students will at times use data and software for classwork assignments. The second part of the course focuses on derivatives, with a particular emphasis on equity derivatives (European call and put options, exotic options), futures and forward contracts, and interest rate derivatives (swaps, caps and floors, swaptions). We systematically address three basic questions: how do these products work, i.e. what are their payoffs? How can they be used, for hedging purposes or as part of trading strategies? And above all: how are they priced? The course emphasizes a small number of powerful ideas and concepts: absence of arbitrage, replication, and risk-neutral pricing. These are typically introduced in the context of discrete-time models, but the course also covers some well-known continuous-time models, starting with a comprehensive treatment of the Black-Scholes model. The level of mathematics is appropriate for third-year students with a solid quantitative background. Continuous-time stochastic processes and stochastic calculus will be introduced as we go.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce written work for classes and to make positive contributions to class discussion.

Indicative reading: J Danielsson, Financial Risk Forecasting: The Theory and Practice of Forecasting Market Risk will be the required textbook for the first half of the course. J Hull, Options, Futures, and Other Derivatives, will be the required textbook for the second half of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

GV101

Introduction to Political Science

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Simon Hix CON3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course is an introduction to politics in a globalised world, with a focus on how political science tries to understand and explain cross-country and cross-time differences. The course will begin by introducing students to some of the main empirical variations in political behaviour, institutions, and outcomes across the world, focusing mainly on democratic and partially democratic countries (in both the developed and developing world), and introducing students to some of the basic theoretical ideas and research methods in political science. Each subsequent week will be devoted to a substantive topic, where a more detailed analysis of political behaviour, institutional design, or political outcomes will be presented and various theoretical explanations will be assessed. Most weeks will involve an interactive element. For example, students will be required to 'adopt a country', from the range of democratic or partially democratic countries across the world (which cannot be a student's home country). The aim is for a student to become an expert on the political behaviour, institutions and outcomes in his or her adopted country, particularly to provide material and knowledge for class discussions.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative Assessment:

- Problem set (Week 6 MT)
- Mock exam (Week 1 ST)
- Moodle entries on adopted country task (most/every week/s)

Public Choice and Politics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Torun Dewan CON 6.07 and Dr Rafael Hortalá-Vallve CON 4.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Government and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Government, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students will normally be expected to have taken GV101 Introduction to the Study of Politics, or equivalent, in a previous year. An introductory knowledge of economics would be useful.

Course content: This course is concerned with positive political economy and public choice theory applied to the study of political conflicts, democratic institutions and public policy. The course covers the main tools for the study of public choice (rational decision-making theory, game theory, social choice theory) and a number of both theoretical and applied topics, including the empirical study of institutions. This course will cover the main topics in positive political economy and institutional public choice. These include: the aggregation of preferences; voting paradoxes and cycles; electoral competition and voting behaviour; the problems of and solutions to collective action; welfare state and redistribution; the impact of information and mass media on voting behaviour and public policy; the theory of coalitions, the behaviour of committees and legislatures including agenda-setting and veto-player power; principal-agent problems in politics; models of bureaucracy.

The Politics of Economic Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mark Thatcher CON 4.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Economics, BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students will normally be expected to have taken GV101 Introduction to Political Science or equivalent, in a previous year. An introductory knowledge of economics would be useful.

Course content: The aim of this course is to look at political science explanations of changes in public policy, and to apply that literature to major cases of economic policy (both contemporary and historical). In particular, it aims to examine the extent to which economic policy change is affected by ideas, interests and institutions, and the interaction between international and national factors. The material for the course is drawn mainly from the comparative literature on the politics of markets in industrialised countries. Course topics will include privatisation, delegation to non-majoritarian institutions, varieties of capitalism, regulatory reform and supranational regulation of markets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 6 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 4 hours of workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two formative essays of 1,500 words each as set by class teachers. One presentation to be given in class.

Indicative reading: W. ### Theories and Problems of Nationalism

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Breuilly CON3.04 and Dr Douglas Hutchinson CON 3.21

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History, BSc in Politics and Philosophy, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology, BSc in Social Policy with Government and BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed a suitable course in Anthropology, Sociology, Political Science, International Relations or History. Government students should have completed GV101 Introduction to Political Science.

Course content: This course considers debates concerning the increasing importance of nationalism and ethnic identity in modern history, their impact on political movements, states and international relations.

There are three principal concerns:

1. Theories of nationalism and ethnicity, including primordialist, ethno-symbolic, modernist and post-modernist approaches. These will be compared and critiqued.
2. The development of various kinds of nations, nation-states and nationalisms from pre-modern Europe to the global present, and a consideration of various concepts (e.g. civic/ethnic, political/cultural, Asian and African forms of nationalism) frequently used to understand as well as evaluate these historical and contemporary phenomena.
3. Nationalism and transnational politics, including problems of state sovereignty, secession and national self-determination; the European union, globalisation and religious fundamentalism.

Power and Politics in the Modern World: Comparative Perspectives

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr David Woodruff CON.317

Other members of Government Department staff will also teach on the course.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Other background in political science will be considered as a substitute for GV101 for students outside of Government.

Course content: This course will acquaint students with the contemporary study of comparative politics, focusing on theories susceptible to testing with narrative historical evidence. Students will learn to address the methodological challenges of developing and testing such theories. The course will treat a wide variety of themes, including ethnic and political violence, natural resources and economic development, social movements and revolution, imperial and post-imperial power, the political economy of distribution, and political ideologies. With respect to each theme, students will receive a grounding in theories of the topic and then engage with at least two case-studies in depth. Case studies will be drawn from throughout the developed, developing, and post-Communist world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays in the MT and LT.

Contemporary Political Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Spiekermann (MT) & Dr Laura Valentini (LT)

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is a pre-requisite for students wishing to take either of the third year options in Political Theory.

Pre-requisites: Introduction to Political Theory or equivalent.

Course content: This course provides an advanced introduction to contemporary political theory. The course is divided into two parts. The first focuses on key political concepts, such as liberty, equality, justice, rights, authority and democracy. The second turns to particularly pressing ethical questions characterizing the political domain. Some of these questions arise within the domestic political arena (e.g., the limits of freedom of speech; the regulation of abortion; respect for minority cultures), others in the international/global one (e.g., global poverty relief; terrorism; global climate change). Although the course will be concept and problem-driven, along the way, students will also be exposed to the views of leading contemporary political theorists, including John Rawls, Robert Nozick, Ronald Dworkin and many others. This course will provide students with a good grounding in the methods and substantive concerns of contemporary political theory as well as familiarity with the works of major thinkers in the field.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: The course requires ability to organize workload/do readings in advance/prepare for seminars. The course will present students with normative/ethical dilemmas they will need to tackle, and will enhance their analytical skills. As a course in political theory, verbal and written communication will be very much emphasized throughout.

Politics and Institutions in Europe

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vesselin Dimitrov CON 3.06, Dr Michael Bruter CON 4.06 and Dr Eiko Thielemann CON 3.14

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: The course aims to give students an understanding of the full range of leading topics and areas of debate and research relevant to the analysis of political institutions and politics in Europe. The course focuses on both traditional fields of comparative enquiry, such as the study of party competition and voting behaviour, and emerging fields of interest, such as national and European identities, immigration and Europeanisation. The course places particular emphasis on the diverse experiences of liberal democracy in different parts of Europe. The course covers not only long-established democracies in Western Europe, but also the relatively new democracies in Central and Eastern Europe. In the Lent Term, the course will study in detail a number of European countries, analysing the main developments in the country concerned in the last twenty years (elections, parties, governments), and then examining issues of particular interest related to that country. Course topics include: electoral behaviour; parties and party systems; government formation and coalitions; regionalism and federalism; national and European identities; immigration; and the challenge of Europeanisation.

Key Themes in the History of Political Thought

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Johannes Olsthoorn

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Social Policy with Government.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

This course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: Students will normally be expected to have taken Introduction to Political Theory or equivalent, in a previous year.

Course content: A thematic study of political thought in Ancient, Medieval/Renaissance and Modern periods. This advanced course treats some of the major themes in the history of western European political thought as drawn from the writings of selected political philosophers of the ancient Greek, Roman, medieval, renaissance, early modern and modern periods. The aim is to demonstrate, and explain, some of the continuities and discontinuities in ethical and political problems and their solutions over time and changing context.

Examples of such themes: different views on the nature of "man" and the consequences for political agency of different perspectives on human reason, will, desire; debates on the origins of law and the purpose of legislation; changing conceptions of justice; different views on government and the state's relation to the individual; on the sources of public authority and the nature of legitimate sovereignty; on the relation of property ownership to personal identity and to participation in collective governance; the historical and socio-political presuppositions behind the different constitutional regimes: democracy, monarchy, republic etc; on the role of religion in politics; the changing perspectives on the relationship between life in the family and a life of active citizenship; theories of natural law and natural rights; contractarianism; idealist political theory; utilitarianism; nationalism; liberal, conservative and socialist traditions of thought; anarchism and feminism.

The themes, thinkers and primary texts will be selected each year to reflect the current debates in contemporary scholarly literature on them and the research interests of the lecturer.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: Jonathan Israel, Enlightenment Contested and Radical Enlightenment.

Primary Sources: A selection of the following (this list should not be taken as exhaustive): Plato, Republic; Aristotle, Politics, Machiavelli, Discourses, Hobbes, Leviathan, Locke, Second Treatise on Civil Government, Rousseau, The Social Contract, Marx, The German Ideology.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Theory (GV100) or Introduction to Political Science (GV101) or equivalent.

Course content: This course is an introduction to the analysis and design of policies meant to address the challenges of sustainability. Sustainability problems are often particularly difficult for policy analysts and decision makers because of their complexity and uncertainty in both the technical and political realms. They often require interdisciplinary approaches, drawing on fields from economics to sociology to political science to ecology. Sustainability science seeks to develop and use rigorous methodologies and tool-sets to approach some of the most difficult problems at the intersection of human well-being and the environment. The goal of the course is to explore how policy makers and policy analysts can make use of this interdisciplinary approach to be effective in the design and implementation of policies that impact both society and environment. This year-long, project based course will have three main goals.

- 1) To examine some of the major problems of sustainability, including issues such as climate change, green technology, global health, agriculture, biodiversity and natural resource management.
- 2) To introduce the different disciplinary perspectives that can be brought to bear in the study and analysis of these kinds of problems.
- 3) To learn tools and methods, including analytical techniques and presentation skills, that are required for effective policy analysis and decision making in this area. Work in the course will be largely case based, and topical issues will be presented and mastered alongside different analytical skills and techniques. Students will be expected to work in teams to produce presentations and policy memos on specific topics. For the final project, the students will choose a local-level sustainable development problem and produce a policy analysis aimed at the appropriate decision maker.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 20 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete 2 formative written assignments and 1 group presentation each term.

Torun Dewan

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government and BSc in Government and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Public Choice and Politics (GV225).

Course content: Good leadership is central toward having effective organisations, well functioning institutions, and attaining desirable policy outcomes. But what is good leadership? What is successful leadership? Can we distinguish outcomes as causally related to the actions taken by good and successful leaders? And how important is a leader's style? The course will look at both theoretical and empirical frameworks for analysing these questions developing in particular rational choice accounts of leadership. Different notions of leadership will be discussed including: (1) Leading by Example; (2) The Leader as a Focal Point and (3) The Leader as an information source. These will be illustrated by specific examples.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

In preparation for each class, students will read one or two core texts on political leadership and write a one page piece that reflecting upon these readings. This will then be used as a basis for class discussion. This will be marked as follows: completion and quality of the weekly statements (10%) and in class participation (10%). Each student will also be asked to produce a brief outline and 5 min presentation on the final essay (5%)

Politics of Money and Finance in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Cheryl Schonhardt-Bailey CON6.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics and BSc in Government and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

A minimum attendance of 80% of the course is required. This course is capped at two groups.

Pre-requisites: A background in political economy would be advantageous.

Course content: The course focuses on the role of institutions, ideas and interests in the process and formulation of both (a) monetary policy, and (b) financial stability & regulation. We examine in particular the causal influences of institutions, ideas and interests in independent central banking, financial stability and financial regulation (including times of financial crisis), and the oversight and accountability of independent financial agencies. Focusing predominantly on OECD countries, we draw on theories from economics and political science to analyse both decision making and policy outcomes, using both contemporary and historical perspectives. The course adopts a comparative country perspective, rather than an international relations perspective.

Teaching: 8 hours and 20 minutes of lectures and 8 hours and 20 minutes of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: The full reading list for this course is currently available on Moodle for GV353. Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: The course will provide an introduction to contemporary British government, notably the institutions involved and processes of policy-making. The first part of the course will explain the evolution of British government from the earliest times, including the philosophical ideas that have come to underpin contemporary politics. The key institutions of British government will be described and analysed, focusing on factors that explain the functioning of a complex modern State. By the end of the course, students will have a practical understanding of the entire system of British government and the influences that affect it.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit 2 unassessed essays in both the Michaelmas and Lent Terms.

Political Economy of the Developing World

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Steffen Hertog CON4.01

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

This course is capped at one group.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Political Science (GV101).

Course content: This course aims to introduce students to the broad theoretical traditions in the study of political economies outside of the OECD world, and to provide an analytical overview of a number of concrete social structures that shape the interplay of the political and economic realms in different world regions. It will address puzzles like: Why did some developing countries grow much faster than others after WWII? Are some forms of corruption more compatible with development than others? Which impact do natural resource rents have on politics and development? Under which conditions can countries with a short history of independent statehood build efficient institutions?

GV366 will engage with broad theoretical traditions like modernization theory, dependency theory, and neo-patrimonialism, and with concrete empirical topics like state-business relations, the developmental state, corruption and clientelism, the politics of public enterprise, and the political economy of resource-rich countries.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: Bardhan, Pradeep (1997). "Corruption and Development", Journal of Economic Literature, Vol. 35. ### Government Dissertation Option

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Bruter CON4.06

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Government and History and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course may be taken only in the third year. A BSc Government and History student cannot choose both HY300 and GV390 and a BSc Politics and Philosophy student cannot choose both GV390 and PH299.

Course content: A dissertation of not more than 10,000 words on a topic to be approved by a proposed dissertation advisor and the Departmental Tutor. The topic should be chosen from any area within the field covered by the degree course and supported by a member of the academic staff from the Government Department willing to act as dissertation advisor. Following the dissertation information session organised by the Department in the second year of the students' curriculum, candidates should approach their tutor during the Lent Term or Summer Term of their second year to discuss the possibility of a proposed dissertation topic.

After having received approval for a topic by a prospective advisor, students must submit a dissertation form detailing final title and synopsis/prospectus to the Departmental Tutor for approval by the fourth week of the third year.

Teaching: 2 hours of seminars in the MT. 3 hours of seminars in the LT.

Five seminars split between the Michaelmas Term and Lent Term as well as individual supervision. Dissertation advisors can be expected to offer advice on reading and guidance on the organisation of the dissertation; they may also read and comment on a draft outline of up to 1,000 words. Tutors or other teachers are not permitted to read or comment on a final draft of the whole dissertation or any part of it. The number of individual meetings with the students will be strictly limited but should be at least once per term in the student's third year. It should be stressed that no member of staff is under an obligation to agree to supervise any proposed dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST. The completed 10,000 word dissertation must be submitted to the appropriate LSE Office by the second week of the Summer Term. Footnotes are to be included in the word limit - but not the bibliography. The examiners may determine that the candidate should be called for an oral examination.

Environment, Economy and Society

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Riccardo Crescenzi STC414, Dr Michael Mason STC510 and Dr Claire Mercer STC418

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to Geography at LSE. The global population faces critical policy choices now and in the future including climate change and persistent economic and social inequality in an increasingly globalized world. This course examines critical elements of these challenges to the environment, the economy and society. In doing so, it will cover the temporal (from the near-term to the far-off future) and geographical dimensions (from local to global) and provide students with key theoretical concepts, empirical evidence and analysis of policy responses at these different levels. The course is divided into three sections. Section 1: Geography and nature; Global and local environmental problems; Urban sustainability and the compact city. Section 2: Economy: The changing location of economic activity, inequalities within and between countries, regions and cities. The rationale, objectives and tools of local and regional development policies in a globalizing world. Section 3: Society: Contested geographies and histories of globalization and contemporary development. Global mobilities, culture and place. Transnational communities. Migration and development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 16 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading-lists related to the different topics within the course will be provided at the start of the course. ### Environmental Change: Past, Present and Future

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Jones STC S417

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course focuses on developing an appreciation of the Planet Earth as the home of human societies. The analysis focuses on the physical nature of the 'natural' or biophysical systems and involves consideration of how the solid earth, the gaseous atmosphere, the hydrosphere and the biosphere, were formed, have evolved, interact and have changed over time due to both external (extra-terrestrial) and internal factors, including humans. Consideration of 'material properties', 'processes' and 'fluxes' is undertaken with the purpose of better understanding the varying causes and scales of 'environmental change' that have occurred. From this, an appreciation of change and evolution over differing time-scales is developed which will serve as an essential basis for students when evaluating the contemporary two-way interaction between humans and the environment. The course consists of the following sections:

A. Introduction to Environmental Change: The structure and functioning of the Earth as a set of systems (The Geosystem). The Scientific Method. The systems approach and its application to environmental studies. Ecosystem concept. Biogeochemical cycles. The nature and causes of Environmental Change and Climate Change; "Change" and "Variability".

B. Key Aspects of Environmental Change:

(i) The Contemporary Atmosphere. Composition and structure of the atmosphere. Radiation and selective absorption (Greenhouse Effect). Global energy budget and global energy transfers.

(ii) The Hydrosphere: Hydrological cycles. Cloud formation, precipitation and evapotranspiration. General introduction to hydrology and the "Hydrological Cascade". Human Influences. Flooding.

(iii) The Biosphere; Development and change of Biodiversity over time due to evolution through Natural Selection

C. Long-term Geosystem Change: From Creationism to Deep Time. Consideration of relevant aspects of the following: The nature, origin and evolution of the Solar System and Planet Earth. Catastrophism versus Uniformitarianism. The evolution of the solid Earth, lithosphere, atmosphere, hydrosphere and biosphere. Plate tectonics and environment/ climate change. Mass extinctions and the development of biodiversity. The Gaia Hypothesis..

D. Quaternary Environmental Change: Environmental Change over the last 2.6 million years. The paradigm of Quaternary environmental change, i.e. the "Ice House - Hot House" paradigm. Ice cores, ocean sediment cores, isotope analysis, The Milankovitch Mechanism. Holocene Climate Change (i.e. the last 11,700 years) and debates regarding reconstructions and human influences. The nature and causes of sea-level change. Isostasy. Human impacts on the Ecosphere.

E. Global Environmental Change: Contemporary Climate/ Environmental Change and the basis of predictions to AD 2100.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two essays during the year and give class papers.

Sustainable Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Giles Atkinson

Dr J. Baka

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: "Is development sustainable?" While this is undoubtedly a challenging question, the purpose of this course is to provide building blocks that will allow an answer to be formulated. In doing so, we will seek to understand better how the natural world is affected by development decisions and crucially how those decisions shape human development prospects or widen the gap between development outcomes across geographical regions and socioeconomic groups. All of this gives rise to a rich array of themes and debates, which are reflected in distinct sections of the course. We begin by introducing the concept of sustainable development and by asking what exactly it is that should be sustained (and why) and what are the pathways whereby human development is influenced by resource and environmental scarcities. We then proceed to consider the viewpoint that society is being 'guided by the wrong compass' in the way that social and economic progress conventionally is measured. As such, we scrutinize proposals for better metrics of sustainable development that, for example, take human-induced environmental change into account. We will also investigate the way in which this change affects human populations particularly those who are amongst the most vulnerable. Finally, resource scarcities are frequently relative and the uneven distribution of, or access to, resources has implications for how development outcomes and prospects are distributed globally and within countries. Our last section, therefore, examines issues of resource security drawing on examples from debates about food and energy availability as well as broader debates about North-South resource conflicts, population growth and changing technology.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce class essays during the year and to give class presentations.

Indicative reading: There are a variety of texts available for this course. A detailed reading list will be given at the beginning of each term but will include: G Atkinson, S Dietz, E Neumayer and M Agarwala (eds) Handbook of Sustainable Development, 2nd edition, Elgar, 2014; WM Adams (2009) Greening Development: Environment and Sustainability in the Developing World, 3rd Edition, Routledge, JA Elliott (2012) An Introduction to Sustainable Development, 4th edition, Routledge, RB Potter, T Binns, JA Elliott and D Smith (2008) Geographies of Development: An Introduction to Development Studies, 3rd edition, Pearson. United Nations Development Report, Human Development Report 2011, UNDP, 2011; World Bank, World Development Report on Climate and Development 2010, World Bank, 2009.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%) in the LT.

Methods in Spatial and Social Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alan Mace STC513a and Dr Murray Low STC512

Dr Romola Sanyal

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Introduces students to a range of qualitative and quantitative research approaches and methods used in the construction of contemporary knowledge related to human geography and the environment. The course covers an introduction to philosophy of science and discusses philosophical approaches to research such as Marxism, feminism, and postmodernism. The quantitative component of the course covers approaches to describing data visually and numerically, sampling techniques, the basics of statistical inference, and the principles of structured hypothesis testing. The course uses statistical software to analyse social deprivation data as well as the use of mapping software to represent these data spatially. The qualitative component of the course discusses research design and epistemology, the selection and analysis of case studies as a research method, the collection and analysis of primary data through fieldwork, and methods of interpreting primary and secondary texts. The final module includes a full week of fieldwork day trips to East and South London investigating themes of the impact of industrial restructuring, globalization, regeneration, and social exclusion, during which students are required to apply various methods from the course in their own research.

Compulsory fieldwork: one week, London, week 10 of LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to read and review research that employs a range of qualitative and quantitative methods. There is also an essay (750 words) in MT. Classes in MT serve as direct preparation for statistical methods to be used in the assessed practical exercise.

Indicative reading: A Blunt et al. (Eds), Cultural Geography in Practice, 2003; D Ebdon, Statistics in Geography, 1985; R Flowerdew; D Martin (Eds), Methods in Human Geography, 1997; I Hay (Ed), Qualitative Research Methods in Human Geography, 2010; K Hoggart, L Lees; A Davies, Researching Human Geography, 2002.

A number of more specialised texts will be recommended.

Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (30%) in the LT.

Coursework (30%) in the ST.

In the examination students answer two questions out of six (20% + 20%). The coursework comprises of (i) A practical exercise (30%); (ii) Field work report (30%).

Economy, Society and Space

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alan Mace STC513a

Dr Ryan Centner

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: From a global perspective this course examines the inter-relatedness of economy and society and the spatiality of social and economic phenomena in contemporary societies. Issues covered include: political economy and theories of uneven development; changing working conditions and patterns of inequality at different spatial scales; gentrification and displacement; and urbanisation in comparative perspective. We will examine relationships between economic and social restructuring; the geographies of privilege, exclusion and marginality; as well as responses through urban regeneration, urban renewal and city planning. At the end of the course students should be able to understand the relationship between the economic, social and spatial realms and communicate and apply these understandings to the contemporary geographies of everyday life.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare written work for weekly classes, and write one formative essay each term related to course readings.

Indicative reading: N. Brenner and N. Theodore, Spaces of Neoliberalism, 2002. D. Harvey, A Brief History of Neoliberalism, 2005. D. Massey, World City, 2007. P. McMichael, Development & Social Change: A Global Perspective (5th edition), 2012. K. Polanyi, The Great Transformation, 1944.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

In the examination students answer three out of nine questions. Details of the style and layout of the essay will be provided at the start of the session.

Urban and Spatial Economic Analysis I

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Henderson STC.S506b

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Economics, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Economics B (EC102) is normally required;

Economics A (EC100) is essential.

Course content: This course provides students with a theoretical and empirical understanding of spatial economic processes and how these influence the behaviour of firms and households and the wider economy. The course draws primarily on international and urban economics. Topics covered include: causes and consequences of international trade; the winners and losers from globalization; multinational companies; trade, firms, and productivity; offshoring and outsourcing; the function of cities and the urban system; cities as engines of growth; the sources of agglomeration and dispersion; the determinants of urban structure and the role of land markets and land market regulation.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare for group discussion of some readings and hand in short essays and problem sets in both terms.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be given out at the beginning of each term. Readings will include journal articles. Some important items include: A O'Sullivan, Urban Economics (8th edn 2012), Irwin/MacGraw-Hill; T A Pugel & P Lindert, International Economics, (14th edn) McGraw Hill, 2009

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Political Geographies, Policy and Space

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low STC.S512

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: An introduction to the relevance of a geographical perspective for explanation of contemporary political processes, and of a political perspective for explanation of contemporary geographies, at scales from the local to the global. Topics covered include: states; geopolitics; empires and national states; citizenship rights, migration and national 'closure'; nationalism, territory and identity; geographies of elections and representation; democratization; globalisation, neo-liberalism and governance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to submit one formative essay per term of up to 1,500 words.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will include journal articles, but indicative texts include: J Agnew, Making Political Geography, 2002; C Barnett and M Low (eds.) Spaces of Democracy 2004; J Agnew & S Corbridge, Mastering Space, 1995; K Cox, M Low and J Robinson (eds) The Sage Handbook of Political Geography, 2008.

Environment: Science and Society

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Mason STC.510 and Prof David Jones STC.417

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Geography with Economics and BSc in International Relations. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines debates concerning the nature, cause, and effects of, and alternative solutions to, the key natural environmental degradation and pollution problems faced by human societies. It highlights the role of science in environmental understanding and governance.

The course consists of three sections, although the specific content, order and relative proportion of teaching may change with staff availability. Part A: Introduction and Themes: this introduces students to social scientific perspectives on scientific knowledge and environmentalism. Part B: Environmental Risk and Science: this section examines the physical science basis of current regional and global environmental risks, including geohazards and global atmospheric pollution. Part C: Science and Environmental Governance: this final section of the course examines how environmental science is incorporated in global environmental governance. The course concludes with an examination of the notion of sustainability science.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: No one book or small group of books adequately covers the themes considered in the course, and separate reading lists are provided for each distinct part of the syllabus. Basic reading material includes; T. Forsyth, Critical Political Ecology; The Politics of Environmental Science, 2003; A. Goudie (Ed), The Human Impact Reader, 1997; C. L. Harper, Environment and Society, 2002; M. K. Hill, Understanding Environmental Pollution, 1997; J. Houghton, Global Warming: The Complete Briefing, 4th edition, 2009; M. ### Applied Environmental Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Susana Mourato STC. S420 and Prof Eric Neumayer STC. S503

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course is an introduction to economic principles in the analysis of environmental change and natural resource use, and in designing appropriate policy responses. The first part of the course largely covers the concepts and tools of environmental economics, while the second part applies these concepts and tools to specific challenges for real world policy-making. Topics to be covered include: the evaluation of regulatory and market based instruments in controlling pollution; moral suasion and voluntary regulation; economics of natural resource use; economic growth, the environment and sustainable development; cost-benefit analysis and environmental valuation; economics of biodiversity and ecosystem services conservation; trade and the environment; behavioural and happiness economics and the environment.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of two (non-assessed) essays during the year and will also be expected to give class presentations.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided to support each course component. For an overview and introduction to the main issues covered by the course students may wish to consult the following: N Hanley and EB Barbier, Pricing Nature: Cost-Benefit Analysis and Environmental Policy, 2009; J Kahn, The Economic Approach to Environmental and Natural Resources, 3rd ed. 2005; B Field and M Field, Environmental Economics, 6th ed. 2012; DW Pearce, G Atkinson and S Mourato, Cost-Benefit Analysis and the Environment: Recent Developments, 2006; E Neumayer, Weak Versus Strong Sustainability: Exploring the Limits of Two Opposing Paradigms, 4th Edition, 2013.

Research Techniques (Spatial, Social and Environmental)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Murray Low

Dr Neil Lee, Dr Ryan Centner

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course is similar to GY2A0 and shares most teaching arrangements with that course. It does not include the week long field-course associated with GY2A0.

This course aims to prepare second year students, who already have some grounding in social science methodology, to undertake individual research projects. It examines the methodologies used in Geographical research and evaluates their application to different kinds of research problems. It considers the choice of methodology which may be used in the student's own Independent Research Project (IRP) and how to plan research. It enables students to acquire familiarity with, and practice of, contemporary research techniques and to examine different ways of, and gain experience in, presenting research results. A further aim of the course is to enable students to evaluate critically the methodological validity of geographical literature.

The course covers a variety of different approaches to social science methodology including: (i) analysis of quantitative data using linear regression including hypothesis testing, (ii) analysis of quantitative spatial data using geographic information systems (GIS) software, (iii) techniques for qualitative data analysis including structured and unstructured interviewing, participant observation, and research ethics, including research ethics when conducting fieldwork (vi) techniques for the economic analysis of environmental issues; and (v) techniques for designing, carrying out and presenting an Independent Research Project

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 6 hours of classes and 6 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT.

GY240 shares most teaching arrangements with GY2A0.

Formative coursework: In the MT classes, and during the field-course, students work on elements of the summative assessment for the course with opportunities for support and feedback from staff as they do so. In addition, there is one piece of formative assessment (no more than 1000 words) in each term.

Indicative reading: Assigned readings may include: A H Studemund (2001 or later edition) Using Econometrics: A Practical Guide; J Bell, Doing your Research Project - Guide for first time researchers in education and social science (2nd edition), 1993; J Burt & G Barber, Elementary Statistics for Geographers, 1996; I Heywood, S Cornelius & S Carver, An Introduction to GIS, 1998; P Kennedy, A Guide to Econometrics, 1985; A MacEachren, Some truth with maps: a primer on symbolization and design, 1994; K G Esterberg, Qualitative methods in social research, 2002; I Hay (Ed), Qualitative research methods in human geography, 2010. Students unfamiliar with basic inferential statistics and/or those who anticipate difficulty with the linear regression analysis component of the course in Michaelmas Term weeks 1-5 should prepare in advance by studying Chapter 16: Statistical Principles in Studemund, A H (2000) 'Using Econometrics: A Practical Guide.' Fourth edition (or later). Boston: Addison Wesley. or a similar text.

Assessment: Project (50%) and other (15%) in the LT.

Project (35%) in the ST.

(i) Quantitative methods/Geographical Information Systems project (50%)

(ii) Project in environmental and economic analysis (35%)

(iii) Proposal for 3rd Year Independent Research Project (15%)

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.Course content: This course introduces students to socio-cultural and historical geography through past and present London. The city provides an opportunity for thinking about the interplay of culture, society, and space as we consider a series of questions about urban and social transformation. An important 'lab' component involves leaving the classroom to enter the LSE Archives and to walk the streets to interpret London's geographies. Michaelmas Term begins with a series of 'great transformations' in the making of the modern world, culminating in the spatial and social divides of Victorian London. The founders of the LSE were centrally concerned with understanding these divides in order to change them. The course then turns to the 20th and 21st century processes, and challenges that have tested the possibilities of this great metropolis including migration and racism, gentrification, inequality and labour politics. The course uses theoretical and historical insights to better understand the city that surrounds us. A detailed syllabus handed out in the first week of the course will include the following topics: the great transformations of time, space and nature; labour and class politics; sexuality and the Victorian city; the foundations of social science; the docks and the Empire; race, racism, immigration and the question of security; and urban inequality and labour politics today.Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 8 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the LT.Formative coursework: Students are expected to write two formative essays and to participate actively in classes led by the Class Teacher.Indicative reading: P Linebaugh and M Rediker, The Many-Headed Hydra, 2000; R Porter, London: A Social History, 1994; G Stedman Jones, Outcast London, 1984; L Nead, Victorian Babylon: People, Streets and Images in Nineteenth-Century London 2000; S Koven, Slumming: Sexual and Social Politics in Late Victorian London, 2004; S Wise, The Blackest Streets: The Life and Death of a Victorian Slum, 2009; J Schneer, London 1900: The Imperial Metropolis, 2001; S Hall et al, Policing the Crisis: Mugging, the state, and law and order, 1993; K Datta, Y Evans, J Herbert, J May, C Mclwaine and J Wills, Global cities at work: New migrant divisions of labour. Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: It would be an advantage if students have some grounding in gender and/or development issues from a second year course such as GY200 Economy, Society and Space, or GY202 Introduction to Development in the South.

Course content: An analysis of the geography of gender in high income, emerging economies and in the developing world. The course focuses on the variability of gender roles and relations and their socio-spatial implications in different geographical contexts. MT: Gender in high income and emerging economies: Gender inequality in a global context; Production and reproduction; Gender work and identity; Theorising the changing organisation of work, gender divisions between paid and unpaid work; Global cities: polarisation and feminisation of work; Migrant workers and the global care chain. Changing gender divisions in high income and emerging economies – China; Economic crisis and gender equality; Policies for gender equality.

LT: Gender in the Global South- 'Engendering' the development agenda; Conceptualising and measuring gender inequality; the UNDP gender indices and beyond; Fertility, reproduction and health; Households and families; Global production and the 'informalisation' and 'feminisation' of labour; sex/work and HIV/AIDS; Gender and development policy; Men and masculinities.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce one essay per term, and will also be expected to give class papers.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus, but the following are useful basic reading:

Urban and Spatial Economic Analysis II

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olmo Silva STC.S506a

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have taken one or more from: EC100, GY201, GY222.

Course content: The aim of the course is to develop theoretical and empirical understanding of spatial economic processes in order to study and evaluate a wide range of issues and policies. Particular emphasis will be put on urban and regional economies and business and worker location decisions. More specifically, the first part of the course will study models of the location of economic and innovation activity with a particular emphasis on regional economies. The second part of the course continues to study location, but focuses more on household location decisions, personal mobility and their implications for spatial labour markets and residential neighbourhood.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of two essays during the year.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be given out at the beginning of the course. Reading will predominantly include journal articles and policy documents.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Geographies of Race

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Austin Zeiderman

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Geography, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course will critically analyze the intimate relationship between race and space in the modern world. Through a range of historical and contemporary examples, it will examine how interconnected forms of racial and spatial difference are produced, reproduced, and transformed. Focusing on the material and cultural formation of racialized geographies, students will learn to recognize how racially inflected discourses and practices shape the production of space and how geographical location matters to racial classification, identification, and discrimination. The course will be organized around a series of archetypal spaces: for example, the body, the home, the ghetto, the wild, the frontier, the prison, the plantation, the border, the colony, the school, and the street. In each case, students will examine the confluence of race and space as well as their intersection with broader socio-spatial processes, such as colonialism, capitalism, urbanization, globalization, environmentalism, migration, and incarceration. Since race is often entangled with other forms of difference, students will also learn to interrogate the influence of gender, class, religion, and sexuality on the production of space. Texts from human geography, critical race theory, colonial and postcolonial studies, and related fields in addition to other media, such as film, literature, journalism, and photography, will provide students with conceptual resources and methodological tools. Ultimately, the objective of the course is to advance a comparative, critical analysis of the relationship between race and space, past and present, and to explore the conditions of future possibility for the linked political projects of anti-racism and spatial justice.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed syllabus will be provided at the beginning of the course, but will include works such as: CLR James, The Black Jacobins, 1989; F Fanon, Wretched of the Earth, 1963; E Said, Orientalism, 1983; K Jackson, Crabgrass Frontier, 1985; A McClintock, Imperial Leather, 1995; TB Hansen, Wages of Violence: Naming and Identity in Postcolonial Bombay, 2001; RW Gilmore, Golden Gulag: Prisons, Surplus, Crisis and Opposition in Globalizing California, 2005; O Yiftachel, Ethnocracy: Land and Identity Politics in Israel/Palestine, 2006; KM Clarke and DM Thomas, Globalization and Race, 2006; JN Brown, Dropping Anchor, Setting Sail: Geographies of Race in Black Liverpool, 2005; L Pulido, Black, Brown, Yellow and Left: Radical Activism in Los Angeles, 2006.

Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Mason STC.510, Dr Carmen Marchiori KGS.102 and Dr Richard Perkins STC.413

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course seeks to explore and critically interrogate the evolving patterns and processes of environmental governance. The course begins by introducing different conceptions of environmental governance, highlighting the multiple actors, scales and interactions involved. It then considers the role of the territorial state, focusing on the organisations of national environmental governance, and how public environmental policy is made and implemented. The next part switches focus to the role of corporations in environmental governance, outlining the motives, practices and outcomes of corporate environmentalism. Lent Term provision examines the issues, actors and processes that shape environmental governance at the transnational and global scales. Introductory lectures on the global environmental policy process introduce different scholarly perspectives informing current research (e.g. regime analysis, critical political economy and constructivism): these perspectives will be referred to as subsequent lectures address particular actor groups and issues (e.g. sustainable energy transitions, climate security). Students will be encouraged to think critically about the ways in which the regulation of global environmental risk is framed and politically contested.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce a minimum of three 1,500 word formative essays/projects during the year.

range of important natural resource and environmental issues in developing countries, and provides students with the necessary tools to critically evaluate how these issues have been addressed by different stakeholders and at different levels of governance. Using concepts and analytical tools grounded in political ecology and economics, the course will examine a range of topics, including: the politics of sustainable development; property rights and governance; the food-energy-water nexus; the resource curse; critical resource issues (including forestry, fresh water, and fisheries); biofuels; and urbanization.

By the end of the course, students should be able to:

- Assess key debates related to sustainable development
- Critically evaluate relationships between development, poverty, natural resource use and the environment
- Understand the natural resource linkages between developing and developed countries

Independent Research Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael Mason STC.S510

Other teachers responsible: Student's Academic Adviser in the Department of Geography and Environment

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Geography. This course is available on the BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

For students required to, or choosing to, submit an independent research project ('IRP') as part of a Bachelor's degree within the programmes' listed above.

Pre-requisites: GY2A0 or GY240 Geographical Research Techniques (Spatial, Social and Environmental) are a pre-requisite.

Course content: Students plan their own independent research project from start to finish on a geography topic of their choice. Carrying out the project generally includes reviewing the literature in their chosen topic area, formulating a viable and geography-relevant research question, analysing primary or secondary evidence or other material appropriate to the investigation (often a case study, data set, archival source, fieldwork observation, survey results or interviews, but also other material), and drafting the findings from their investigation into a final, polished submission. Students are expected to deal with the many procedural and analytical decisions that arise in independent research themselves, with guidance from

Environment and Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Charles Palmer KGS2.06
Dr Jennifer Baka

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Environment and Development and BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available on the BA in Geography and BSc in Geography with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Applied Environmental Economics (GY222) and/or Intermediate Microeconomics (EC201)

Course content: This course explores the complex relationships between development, poverty and the environment. It covers a Academic Advisers and others.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the LT.

In the course of conducting their independent research students can draw on various forms of teaching support. Students regularly report on their research progress to their Academic Advisers during regular meetings in MT and LT. Students are also assigned a PhD student in the Department who is familiar with their general research topic. Students have the option to arrange further supervision with their PhD Adviser on an individual basis. Students will also present their research in progress to their peers and their Academic Advisor in Michaelmas Term.

Formative coursework: Students are required to produce an extended proposal which they must submit during the MT. They will be expected to report regularly to their Academic Adviser on the progress they are making on their independent research project, at least during regular termly Advisee meetings, if not more frequently. Students may also choose to arrange additional oversight and update arrangements with either their Academic Adviser or PhD Adviser.

Students are also expected to deliver a presentation of their dissertation project in a workshop during the MT.

Assessment: Research project (100%) in the LT.

IRPs should not exceed 10,000 words, exclusive of appendices and other supportive material. Appendices may be used for supporting documentation and evidence, but not for discussion and analysis. One bound copy of the IRP must be submitted to the Undergraduate Office in S406 by the published deadline, and by the same deadline an electronic copy must be submitted on Moodle.

International History since 1890

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sonke Neitzel E603

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Economic History and BSc in Government and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The history of international relations from the 1890s through the 1990s. The course emphasises the changing character of international politics over the course of the 'long twentieth century', and aims to equip students with a comprehensive knowledge of international politics since 1890, to provide the factual grounding and conceptual apparatus necessary to understand the contemporary world, and to gain a sense of how some of the main historiographical debates have developed over the last few decades. Lectures and classes fall into six distinct chronological and analytical phases. The first segment covers the 'globalization' of the European balance-of-power system after 1890 through the advent of extra-European great powers: Russia-in-Asia, Japan, and the United States, and the crisis and collapse of the system in the First World War. The second segment covers the failure of both attempts to tame the resulting chaos: Wilson's new vision of international politics and British and French efforts to reconstitute the 1914 world. The consequences of failure, the successful revolt against world order of four discontented powers, Imperial Japan, Fascist Italy, National Socialist Germany, and the Soviet Union, and the outbreak of the 'second round of the German War', close the third phase. The fourth phase opens with the expansion of European war into global war and closes with the birth of a bipolar world dominated by the United States and the USSR. The ensuing era of superpower rivalry forms the fifth segment; themes covered include the origins of the Cold War in both Europe and Asia, decolonisation, European unity, the 'American war' in Vietnam, and the rise and fall of superpower détente. The final phase of the course examines the causes and consequences of the collapse of the Soviet empire, the rising power of China; and the patterns of international disorder in the post-Cold War era.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write three 2,000-word essays during the course of the year, two in MT and one in LT, from topics designated in the course reading list, and in addition to complete a one-hour mock examination in ST. Essays and mock examination do not form part of the final course Assessment. But they are required components of the course, and students must complete them in order to be admitted to the course examination.

Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, will be provided at the first lecture, and will also be found, along with other course materials, in the public folders. The following works offer useful background; students should consider reading one or two of them in advance: W R Keylor, The Twentieth Century World: an International History; C J Bartlett,

The Global Conflict, 1880-1970; D Stevenson, The First World War and International Politics; P M H Bell, The Origins of the Second World War in Europe; Akira Iriye, The Origins of the Second World War in Asia and the Pacific; J P Dunbabin, International Relations since 1945 (2 vols).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Faith, Power and Revolution: Europe and the Wider World, c.1500-c.1800

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan E391

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the international history of the early modern period by examining the complex political, religious, military and economic relationships between Europe and the wider world. The period between 1500 and 1800 enables the course to introduce students to a crucial period in international history. In political terms, it covers the rise of major dynastic states, with increasingly centralized institutions and concepts such as absolutism to promote the authority of the monarch, as well as the challenges to that authority and growing interest in political and social reform, culminating in the revolutions examined at the end of the course. Internationally, the period witnessed the gradual consolidation of leading European powers, as reflected in the Treaty of Westphalia (1648), with formerly peripheral states emerging to challenge their position by the early eighteenth century. At the same time, the rise of major Islamic empires in Eurasia and the growing contact between Europe and the wider world provide students with important points of comparison between European and non-European states. The intellectual, religious and cultural developments of this period provide a constant context for these major political events. The course will discuss the influence of key movements, such as the Renaissance, the Scientific Revolution and the Enlightenment, which re-ignited an interest in the Classical past and fostered a culture of rational enquiry into the natural world. Yet religion remained a vital component in the world-view of contemporaries, whether Christian, Muslim, or Jewish. This world-view was subject to challenges throughout the period, as during the Reformation, and often sought to impose its own orthodoxy, whether through religiously-motivated conflicts or the persecution / conversion of certain groups. The course seeks to familiarize students with some of the most important issues and current debates on these aspects of this period. While its scope is necessarily broad in nature, the course will help students to deal with the dynamics of continuity and change over a long period of time.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 19 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 20 hours of classes and 1 hour of workshops in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 piece of coursework in the ST. The formative essay in the Summer Term takes the form of a mock exam answer, which will be graded and given feedback.

The International History of the Cold War, 1945-1989

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Odd Westad TW1 9.01A

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The Cold War dominated the second half of the 20th century, but until recently we had only an imperfect sense of what it was all about. Historians wrote about it, of necessity, from within the event they were seeking to describe, so that there was no way to know its outcome. And because only a few Western countries had begun to open their archives, these accounts could only reflect one side of the story. Cold War history, hence, was not normal history: It was both asymmetrical and incomplete. The end of the Cold War and the subsequent partial opening of Soviet, Eastern European, and Chinese archives have revolutionised the field. Everything we thought we knew is up for reconsideration, whether because of the new documents available to us, or as a consequence of being able to reflect on how it all came out in new ways - given that the historical discipline has evolved methodologically as well.

The course will provide an introduction to key topics in the new, international history of the Cold War. The selected topics vary from the study of specific Cold War crises to the exploration of broader themes such as the roles of ideology and technology.

Course objectives: (i) To equip students with comprehensive knowledge of the international politics of the Cold War; (ii) To offer a firm basis for more advanced historical work in this area; (iii) To provide some of the factual grounding and conceptual apparatus necessary to understand the contemporary world.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Students are expected to keep up with readings for weekly seminars, and to participate in the class discussions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Barrass, G, The Great Cold War (2009); Gaddis, J L, The Cold War: A New History; Hanhimäki, J & Westad, O A, The Cold War: A History in Documents and Eyewitness Accounts; Leffler, M P, For the Soul of Mankind (2007); Leffler, M P & Painter, D, Origins of the Cold War (2005); Reynolds, D, One World Divisible: A Global History since 1945 (2001); Sarotte, M, 1989 (2009); Westad, O A, Reviewing the Cold War: Approaches, Interpretations, Theory (2000); Westad, O A, The Global Cold War (2005);

Course content: The course aims to explain the history of these regions as expressed and moulded by the peoples and their leaders during a particularly turbulent period in European History. Attention will be paid to two European wars and the Russian Revolution, all of which had a profound impact on these countries' freedom to determine their destiny. The study of the inter-war period will include a debate of the reasons for the collapse of democratic institutions, the emergence of patriotic and anti-Semitic movements, economic failures and responses to German and Italian aggression. The establishment, development and the collapse of Soviet domination of the region after the Second World War will be discussed on the background of ethnic and inter ethnic conflicts. In addition political, economic and cultural theories, which formed the background to the emergence of the independent states of Eastern and South Eastern Europe, will be considered. The course will develop these themes in the history of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania, Yugoslavia, Albania and the Baltic States. Final lectures will concentrate on the transition from Communism to democratic states. The break up of Yugoslavia and the wars in the Balkans will be considered in a separate lecture.

Course content: This course examines the history of South Asia from the eighteenth century to the present day. Focusing on the imperial relationship between Britain and India, it investigates the ways in which imperial rule shaped South Asian society, studies the nature of anti-colonial nationalisms, and explores the legacies of British rule for the independent states of South Asia. The course will explain how and why the East India Company acquired an empire in India, and will explore the techniques by which the British sought to derive profit, prestige and power from its empire in South Asia. It will ask, to what extent did the British seek to reform India, and what were the consequences - intentional or otherwise - of imperial efforts to understand and change Indian society? The course will examine the ways in which different groups of Indians responded to, benefited from, and resisted colonial rule in India. The economic impact of colonialism will be considered, as the course asks, did British rule drain India of its wealth? In the second term, it will assess the impulses behind the emergence of Indian nationalism, and discuss Gandhi's philosophy and his political strategies. The course will consider why British India was partitioned in 1947 when India and Pakistan gained independence, and it will investigate the long-term consequences of partition, including the conflict over Kashmir. The course concludes with a discussion of the impact that colonialism has had on the political and economic development of independent India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

May be taken by 3rd years where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is concerned with providing a comparative political history of the major East Asian countries, China, Japan and Korea, in the period from the Opium War to the 1990s. The course is concerned with providing a comparative political history of the major East Asian countries, China, Japan and Korea, in the period from the Opium War to the 1990s. It begins by looking at the impact of the arrival of Western imperialism in the mid-nineteenth century and the respective approaches taken by Japan, Korea and China in response to this encroachment. For Japan, it covers the rise of the Meiji state, the beginnings of constitutional government and the development of Japanese imperialism. This naturally is linked with the study of Korea's failed efforts to maintain its independence; in regard to China it deals with the attempts by the Qing state to introduce reforms and the final collapse of Imperial China. It then deals with the difficulties provoked by modernization and nationalism in the first-half of the twentieth century, taking in the rise and fall of Taisho democracy and the drift towards fascism in Japan and the Guomindang's revolution and state-building and the birth of the Chinese Communist Party in China. The course then concentrates on the aftermath of the Second World War for East Asia, studying the Chinese Civil War and the emergence of the People's Republic, the course and legacy of the US occupation of Japan and the formation of the two Koreas. The last part of the course covers the development of the People's Republic under Mao and Deng, the rise of Japan as an economic superpower and the emergence of South Korea and Taiwan as economic powers.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to submit three 2000 word essays in all and to sit a mock exam.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be issued at the start of the course, but the following survey texts are essential: W G Beasley, The Rise of Modern Japan; P Duus (Ed), The Cambridge History of Japan: The Twentieth Century; L Eastman (Ed), The Nationalist Era in China, 1927-1949; J L McLain, Japan: A Modern History; R MacFarquhar (Ed), The Politics of China, 1949-1989; A Buzo, The Making of Modern Korea; J Spence, The Search for Modern China.

What is History? Methods and Debates

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hochstrasser E407

Dr Elizabeth Shlala, E306

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: What is history? How and for what purposes do we study the past? What kinds of debates and controversies result from historical study? The purpose of this course is to provide undergraduate students with an introduction to these important issues. We will discuss the history of history from ancient times to the present and how it has changed as an intellectual pursuit over the years. We will think about different types of history – for example, international history, intellectual history, economic history, or the history of religion – and we will discern their different concerns and priorities. We will analyse some of the most important themes in modern historical study: empires and imperialism, revolutions, nationalism. We will outline different ideological frameworks for conducting historical research, for example Marxism, postmodernism, and gender studies. We will debate some of the key philosophical questions surrounding historical research: for example, how historians determine facts, and whether or not historical study can ever be truly objective? Finally, we will look at different ways of presenting the past: from traditional history books to museums and TV history. The course is highly recommended for all those students studying history, especially those completing a history-based dissertation.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course but will include the following introductory surveys:

Berger, Feldner and Passmore, Writing History; D Cannadine (Ed), What is History now?; L Jordanova, History in Practice; R Evans, In Defence of History; J Tosh, The Pursuit of the Past; M Bloch, The Historian's Craft; R G Collingwood, The Idea of History.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course will cover the history of the Soviet Union, from its inception as a combination of the Russian Revolution and a Bolshevik dictatorship, through the Stalinist terror and its role as an international centre of the 'socialist camp' during the Cold War, to its eventual, peaceful demise in 1991. Many courses on Soviet history deal separately with politics, social history, foreign policy, and intellectual/cultural developments. This course seeks to connect disparate threads into one historical and analytical narrative by focusing on major issues confronting the interpretation of the Soviet Union and its role in the international history of the twentieth century. The following questions will be examined during this course. Was the Soviet Union a continuation or rejection of its Russian heritage? What were the sources of Soviet legitimacy, modernization, and expansionism? What was Stalinism about? Can Soviet history be better understood as a multinational, imperial, or transnational history? How did the outside world affect Soviet domestic evolution? Why did the militarily successful Soviet state that emerged strongly from the Second World War then collapse so suddenly only a few decades later? Finally, the course will examine the legacy of the Soviet Union and the extent to which there is a Soviet 'path dependency' for today's Russia.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write two 2,000-word essays (one in Michaelmas Term, one in Lent Term) and one in-class mock examination question at the beginning of the Summer Term. Although essays are not a formal part of the final course assessment, they are a required component of the course, and students must complete them on time in order to be admitted to the course examination.

Islamic Empires, 1400 - 1800

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gagan Sood

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Following the Mongol incursions into the Islamic heartlands and India, the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires arose to become among the richest and most powerful known to the early modern world. Supported by an array of provincial and local elites, these empires were at the height of their powers in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, presiding over territories that extended from the Mediterranean to the Bay of Bengal, from Yemen to the Crimea. Their subjects were producers, consumers, importers and exporters of goods critical for global trade; their location accorded them a vital role in the flow of ideas and information; there was a remarkable flowering of the arts in the period; and conversion to the region's dominant religious tradition, Islam, continued apace, forging new frontiers. By the eighteenth century, however, the empires were shadows of their former selves, with power devolved to a variety of successor regimes vying with each other for supremacy. It is this struggle that paved the way for the region's later incorporation into Europe's global empires of modern times.

This course will examine the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires, and the larger world of which they were part, from their origins in the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries to their 'decline' in the eighteenth century. We will study how temporal authority was expressed symbolically and through governance; the patterns of daily life found in urban and rural settings, and on the frontier; Islam in theory and in reality, and its relationship to the region's other major religious traditions; diplomacy within and without the Islamic world, and the ways in which it intersected with the new techniques and technologies of warfare; inherited and collective knowledge of other lands, near and far, and the everyday movement of people, goods and news; the signal achievements in the literary, visual and architectural realms; secular changes to the region's societies and economies; early modern millenarianism, fundamentalism and reformism; and the reasons for the eighteenth-century demise of the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires as world powers.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gagan Sood

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in History. This course is available on the BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: A thesis of not more than 10,000 words on a topic to be approved by the candidate's teachers. It is designed to allow a detailed and thorough exploration of an area of interest to the candidate. The thesis should be on a topic within the field of the degree course. It should include the examination of primary sources, printed or in manuscript form.

Teaching: 1 hour of workshops in the MT. 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

Candidates should secure the agreement of a supervisor in the department (who need not be their personal tutor) on a suitable topic before the end of the LT of their second year, and submit a title to the Undergraduate Programme Administrator by Wednesday, ST week 2 in their second year. Supervisors can be expected to offer advice on reading, guidance on the construction of the work, and will read an outline of up to 1,000 words.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%) in the ST.

The thesis must be submitted to the Departmental Office by the published deadline in week 1 of the ST in the student's third year. It should be typewritten. Precise details on length, format, presentation and deadline will be issued by the Department at the end of the second year of study. Candidates may be called for an oral examination if the Examiners wish to satisfy themselves that the thesis is the candidate's own work.

The European Enlightenment, c.1680-1830

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Timothy Hochstrasser E407

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The European Enlightenment of the eighteenth century is conventionally taken to be the period in which the disciplines of philosophy, history, economics and anthropology, and other social sciences began to emerge as discrete disciplines independent of state and church control. This course therefore sets out to explore the new ideas generated in these areas as a result of a fresh understanding of man's place in the physical world. But while the course aims to look at ideas and concepts in themselves it is also concerned with the way that they were applied in political practice and adapted to provide new understanding of social structures, or as contemporaries put it, a 'Science of Man'. The chronological context of the Enlightenment is taken to be Europe between the reign of Louis XIV and the end of the Directory in France in 1799. Within this broad framework the following large themes provide the subject matter of both lectures and classes in the Michaelmas Term: the impact of the Scientific Revolution upon institutionalised religion; the emergence of a 'Republic of Letters'; English and French critiques of absolutist monarchy; the creation of scientific approaches to the study of ethics and politics; the political theory of enlightened despotism; the intellectual origins of the French Revolution; intellectual encounters with the New World; the concept of a Counter-Enlightenment; and the move from a private to a public sphere of cultural inquiry. The contributions of Newton, Locke, Voltaire, Montesquieu, and Rousseau - among others - will be highlighted. In the Lent Term the focus will be more narrowly directed to the study of individual key authors and texts and on the impact of enlightened ideas in particular countries, notably England, France, Prussia, Russia and the Habsburg Monarchy. Space will also be found for an examination of the contribution of enlightened thought to the visual arts and music in the 18th century. The course gives students the chance to consider whether or not the Enlightenment was an era of European history that fostered the application of reason to political and social reform, an end to censorship, torture, and hierarchical social models, and a beginning to religious toleration and recognizably modern concepts of human rights, international law and social equality. The focus throughout will be on the writings of the philosophes themselves and their attempts to convert theoretical innovation into practical reform through the agency of bureaucracy and rulers.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two pieces of formative assessment are required, the first a source-criticism exercise in the Michaelmas Term (week 4), and the second a conventional essay in the Lent Term (week 4). In addition every student MUST give an assessed presentation in either the first or second terms, and there will be a mock-exam in the Summer Term.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the start of the course. The following represent basic introductory reading only, and an indication of some primary sources: T C W Blanning, The culture of power and the power of culture (2002); D Outram, The Enlightenment (1995); T Munck, The Enlightenment (2000); R Porter, The Enlightenment (2001). Anthologies: I Kramnik (Ed), The Portable Enlightenment Reader (1995); S Eliot & B Stern (Eds), The Age of Enlightenment (2 vols, 1979).

Napoleon and Europe

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Keenan

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History, BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The Napoleonic Empire was crucial in the formation of modern Europe. Much of Europe was covered by the Napoleonic Empire and its impact was felt on all of Europe and parts of the non-European world. The course is taught thematically and also by country/geographical area. Themes covered include the impact of the empire on the European international system, as well as on law, constitutionalism, the economy, religion and culture. By studying how Napoleon's empire was created and destroyed, the course will also focus on the nature of power in this era. An attempt will also be made to place the Napoleonic empire in a global context. The impact of the Napoleonic era on the rise of nationalism will be considered as part of the legacy of this period. The course ends with an assessment of the historiography of both the man – the 'Napoleonic myth' – and the period.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two conventional essays, one set of gobbet answers and one timed essay.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful introductory reading includes: G. Ellis, The Napoleonic Empire; M. Broers, Europe under Napoleon, 1799-1815; C. Esdaile, Napoleon's Wars; S. J. Woolf, Napoleon's Integration of Europe; P. G. Dwyer (Ed), Napoleon and Europe; M. ### The Cold War Endgame

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Aino Spohr E500

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Based upon a variety of primary sources, this course will explore why and how in the second half of the 1980s the Cold War confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union transformed itself so suddenly and peacefully into the collapse of (European) communism, German unification and the end of the USSR and her empire. In doing so, we will ask what was the correlation between “high” and “low politics” in these events and processes? Topics will include: the onset of détente and neue Ostpolitik; the impact of Helsinki (1975) and human rights; détente’s death, Euromissiles and the war in Afghanistan; the second Cold War of the early 1980s, pacifism and transatlantic turmoil; the Pope and the Polish crisis of 1980-81; Gorbachev’s new thinking and reforms in the USSR; Reagan and Gorbachev: superpower summitry; German unification: domestic and international aspects; Kohl, Mitterrand and the road to the European Union; the eastern European revolutions and the collapse of the Soviet ‘empire’; the Baltic independence struggle, Yeltsin, the coup and Soviet disintegration; explanations and interpretations of the end of the Cold War. The discussion in each seminar will draw on a combination of primary and secondary material.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

20 two-hour seminars, a mock exam, and a revision class.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to present one short class paper as well as undertaking small weekly tasks on Moodle, and to submit two essays à 1500 words and one document answer during MT and LT. There will also be a timed mock exam in ST.

Indicative reading: A detailed course outline and reading list, subdivided by weekly topics, as well as a document pack will be available at the beginning of the course on Moodle. The following works are recommended as essential reading: A Brown, The Gorbachev Factor (1996); S Dockrill, The End of the Cold War Era (2005); R L Garthoff, The great transition: American-Soviet relations and the end of the Cold War (1994); Idem, Détente and confrontation: American-Soviet relations from Nixon to Reagan (1985); J Levesque, The Enigma of 1989: The USSR and the Liberation of Eastern Europe (1997); C S Maier, Dissolution: the crisis of Communism and the end of East Germany (1997); P Zelikow & C Rice, Germany unified and Europe transformed: a study in statecraft (1995); H Adomeit, Imperial overstretch: Germany in Soviet policy from Stalin to Gorbachev (1998); H Adomeit, Imperial Overstretch: Germany in Soviet Policy from Stalin to Gorbachev (1998); A Lieven, The Baltic states: Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia, and the path to independence (1993); R Summy & M E Salla (eds), Why the cold war ended: a range of interpretations (1995); O A Westad, Reviewing the Cold War: Approaches, Interpretations, Theory (2000); Idem, The fall of detente: Soviet-American relations during the Carter years (1997); Idem et al (eds), The Cambridge History of the Cold War, vols 2-3 (2010); M E Sarotte, 1989 (2009). Also students should familiarise themselves with the Cold War International History Project homepage (<http://www.wilsoncentre.org>) and in particular: Bulletins No 5 ‘Cold War Crises’, No 8-9 ‘The Cold War in the Third World and the Collapse of Detente in the 1970s’, and No 12/13 ‘The end of the Cold War’.

The Struggle for the Persian Gulf, 1945-2003

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Roham Alvandi E310

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: This course examines the international history of the Persian Gulf as an ongoing struggle among external powers and local actors for regional supremacy. Through the use of documentary primary sources, the course covers the history of this struggle for mastery in the Gulf in three stages. It begins with the decline of the British Empire and the rise of American power in the Gulf after the Second World War, in the face of Arab and Iranian nationalism. It then examines the long era of intense regional competition for primacy between Iran and Iraq, with particular reference to the Cold War and the 1979 Iranian Revolution. Finally, the course turns to the renewed Anglo-American military intervention in the Gulf since 1991 that continues until today. As a List B paper, the course makes extensive use of primary sources as part of the weekly reading assignments. These will include government documents, public statements, diaries, and memoirs. These primary sources will all be in English and will all be available on Moodle for students to access. Key topics covered in the course include: nationalism in Mosaddeq’s Iran and Qasim’s Iraq; the Arab Cold War and the civil war in Yemen; the Cold War politics of reform in Mohammad Reza Shah’s Iran and King Faisal’s Saudi Arabia; the British withdrawal from the Persian Gulf between 1968 and 1971; Nixon and Kissinger in the Persian Gulf; the secret war between Iran and Iraq in Kurdistan from 1972 to 1975; the rise of OPEC and the 1973/74 energy crisis; the 1979 Iranian Revolution; the Iran-Iraq War of 1980 to 1988; the Persian Gulf War of 1991; the rise and fall of Iranian-American détente under Khatami; Saudi Arabia and the United States before and after 9/11; and the 2003 Anglo-American invasion of Iraq.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit one essay of 2000 words in the MT; one set of gobbet answers during the LT; and one 1-hour timed mock exam in ST.

Nazi Germany and the Second World War – Causes and Course, 1933-1945

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sonke Neitzel E603

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course is capped at 30 students.

Course content: The Second World War is the most pivotal event of the 20th century. It was the most global war in history and involved almost every country. Although a huge number of nations fought in Europe, Asia and Africa, Nazi Germany was the central actor in WW II. Germany's radical war aims led to an unparalleled war of annihilation which included the Holocaust and the mass killing of millions Soviet POWs and civilians. The military success of Hitler's army in 1940/41 was the precondition for Italy's and also Japan's entry into the war. This course will explore the role of Nazi Germany in WW II in an international context. Starting with an analysis of WW I and its legacy to the International system in general and to Germany in particular, the course will investigate how the three revision powers – Germany, Italy and Japan – destroyed the system of International relations founded in Paris 1919/20 and followed their aggressive foreign policy which finally led to WW II. We will then analyse the character of the war in Poland, in Western Europe and in the Soviet Union with an emphasis on the cultures of violence and the perceptions of the war/holocaust by ordinary Germans. New methodological approaches will be discussed which include the history of mentalities whilst we seek to define the specific character of WW II, also by a comparison of the European and Asian theatres of war. The Grand Strategy of the Allies, the role of economies, the controversial debates about Strategic Air War will lead us finally to the end of the Third Reich in 1944/45.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write two conventional essays of 2000 words and one set of gobbet answers during MT and LT; and one timed mock exam in ST.

Travel, Pleasure and Politics: The European Grand Tour, 1670-1825

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Stock E490

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Throughout the eighteenth century thousands of young British men and women embarked on extensive journeys to continental Europe – an activity known as the Grand Tour. 'Travel, Pleasure and Politics: The European Grand Tour 1670-1825' explores who these people were, where they went, and the reasons for their expeditions. For some, the Tour was the final stage of formal education; to others an opportunity for sexual adventures and pleasure-seeking. The course discusses the practical challenges of eighteenth-century travel, the political, religious, and cultural contexts of the Tour, as well as the key places to visit and the reasons for their popularity. It also considers what the Tourists brought back with them: from physical artefacts for public and private collections, to new ways of seeing and understanding the world. 'Travel, Pleasure and Politics' introduces students to the actual writings of the Tourists, showing how they experienced international travel and shaped the modern tourist industry.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the LT, 1 piece of coursework in the ST and 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Specifically, the course's formative coursework will consist of two essays (MT and LT), one document analysis (LT) and one mock exam (ST).

HY324*Muslim-Jewish Relations: History and Memory in the Middle East and Europe, 622-1945

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Marc Baer E307

Availability: This course is available on the BA in History, BSc in Government and History and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: Because of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, most discussions of Muslim-Jewish relations focus on the period after 1948. Muslims and Jews, however, have engaged with one another for over 1,400 years. Just as at the beginning, when Muhammad first met Jewish Arabs in Medina in 622, Jewish and Muslim relations have spanned the whole range of human interaction. What approaches have historians taken to understand the connected histories of Jews and Muslims in Middle Eastern and European history, from their earliest relations in seventh-century Arabia to mid-twentieth-century Europe? Through attention to historical events and personalities as well to religious texts, language, law, ritual, sacred spaces, intellectual and spiritual movements, art, architecture, and literature we will explore different approaches to the history and memory of Muslim-Jewish relations in the Middle East and Europe, evenly divided between the pre modern and the modern period. Students are advised that this is not a history of the Palestinian-Israeli struggle, although its impact on the memory of Muslim-Jewish relations in history will be discussed.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

20 two-hour seminars in the MT and LT; two revision seminars in the ST. Students will be expected to read essential primary and secondary material for each weekly meeting and to participate in the seminar discussions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 exercise in the MT and 1 exercise in the LT.

Students will be required to produce two primary document analyses during the year.

Foreign Policy Analysis 1

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Christopher Alden CLM 5.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations. This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course analyses various theoretical perspectives on foreign policy, and the means of conduct of the main actors in the international system towards each other. It focuses mainly, but not entirely, on states. Foreign Policy Analysis as a sub-discipline of IR; the problem of formulating goals and choosing policy instruments; the role of leadership and psychological elements in policy making; the rational actor model; bureaucratic politics; the impact of history and identity on foreign policy; domestic sources of foreign policy including public opinion, pressure groups and constitutions; the motivations underpinning foreign policy; the role and influence of transnational actors in relation to foreign policy making; foreign policy crises. The discussion classes combine a discussion of these themes with their application to the foreign policies of major powers in the international system. A detailed programme of lectures will be provided at the start of the session.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write three essays of about 1,500 words each for their class teachers during the course and to make presentations in the discussion classes.

Indicative reading: C Alden and A Aran, Foreign Policy Analysis – New Approaches, Routledge, 2011; C Hill, The Changing Politics of Foreign Policy, Palgrave, 2003; Steven Hook (Ed), Comparative Foreign Policy: adaptation strategies of the Great and Emerging Powers, Prentice-Hall, 2002; S Smith, A Hadfield and T Dunne (Eds), Foreign Policies: Theories, Actors and Cases, Oxford University Press, 2007.

International Organisations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have solid foundations in International Relations (including international political theory and international history). Prior or concurrent study of international law, although not a pre-requisite, will be an advantage.

Course content: Major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role of international organizations in international politics, including, inter alia, their impact on the practice of international cooperation and conflict, the maintenance of international peace and security, the management of international economic relations, the promotion of international environmental standards, the prosecution of international crimes, and related matters of concern to international society. International organizations to be discussed range from the League of Nations to the United Nations, from the World Bank to the World Trade Organization, from the European Union to the African Union, and from NATO to the International Criminal Court.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays of a maximum length of 1,500 words each in addition to at least one presentation (introduction to discussion) given in class. Class teachers will set and mark the essays and provide feedback on student presentations.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading [Please note: 10 titles, only one of which is introductory; the 2009-2010 entry contained 8 titles, most of which were introductory]

Systemic Change in the 20th Century: Theories of the Cold War

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christopher Kent CLM 4.05

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the nature of the Cold War system, the theories of its origins, causes and consequences, its relationship to systemic change and the reasons for its end. The course will provide a general analytical overview of the nature of and debates on the Cold War system and why it has been confused with all aspects of Soviet-American relations between the end of the Second World War and the collapse of the Soviet Union. The nature and significance of the systemic changes which its onset and sudden end produced will be analysed. And from a regional and systemic perspective the course will attempt to provide explanations of how the Cold War was fought in different time periods and how the goals changed. Emphasis will be given to the changing nature of the relationship between ideology and power politics within the international system and to the differences and links between Cold War and Hot War and their respective requirements. There will be coverage of how domestic aspects of the Cold War, including intelligence, propaganda and culture interacted with regional and international developments, covert operations and psychological warfare. There will be a requirement to study at least one area of the world in more detail and an opportunity briefly to examine the historical characteristics of the Cold War and the international systems which preceded it.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 5 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays, each of a maximum length of 1,500 words, during the course of the year.

IR312 Half Unit

Genocide

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 6.07

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This lecture course provides an introduction to the study of genocide. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, it explores major theoretical and empirical aspects of the role(s) of genocidal campaigns in international politics, inter alia, their origins, development, and termination; the manner of their perpetration, progression, and diffusion; their impact on the maintenance of international peace and security; their consequences for the reconstruction and development of states and the building of nations; and their adjudication in domestic and international courts and tribunals. Empirical cases to be discussed include Australia, Cambodia, China, the Democratic Republic of Congo, East Timor, Nazi Germany, Guatemala, Iraq, Northern Ireland, the Ottoman Empire, Rwanda, Uganda, the Soviet Union, Sudan, and the former Yugoslavia, among others. The course is designed to equip students with the analytic tools necessary for making sense of the evolution of the international system from the nineteenth century to the present - and for critically assessing the promise and limits of responding to collective violence.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to research and write two essays (1,500 words each). In order to ensure a broad acquisition of knowledge, students should diversify the subject matter of their essays. In addressing a given essay topic, students must seek to integrate theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen. In constructing their answers, students may examine a number of cases, drawing comparisons among them, or may focus on a single case. Essays must be fully - and carefully - referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Weeks 4 and Week 8 and must be made in hard copy. Feedback is to be sought from class teachers, who are responsible for marking essays.

Managing China's Rise in East Asia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jurgen Haacke CLM 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: The main focus of this class-based half-course on the contemporary international relations of East Asia is the management of China's rise. The course begins by exploring China's re-emergence as a major regional power, in part by discussing the economic, political and military dimensions of Chinese power, as well as the major aspects of its declaratory and substantive foreign and security policy. It also examines from different theoretical and political perspectives the implications that China's rise has been posing for East Asia. As regards the management of China's growing capabilities and influence, the course explores what political and security strategies vis-à-vis China have in turn been adopted by the key states that are either resident in or have a significant presence in the wider East Asia, such as the United States, Japan, Russia and India. The course also explores the ways in which China's rise has impacted on two key conflicts: the cross-Strait conflict and the conflict on the Korean peninsula, and the nature of the management of China's rise by states from continental and maritime Southeast Asia. It moreover examines how regional arrangements and institutional frameworks for dialogue and cooperation led by lesser regional states have served the management of China's rise. Concepts and theories from International Relations will be drawn upon as appropriate.

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write two essays with a maximum length of 2,000 words and present on class topics.

Indicative reading: William A. Callahan, China the Pessimist Nation (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2010); Bill Emmott, Rivals: How the Power Struggle between China, India and Japan will Shape our Next Decade (London: Allen Lane, 2008); Christopher R. ### Southeast Asia: Intra-regional Politics and Security

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jurgen Haacke CLM 7.09

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This class-based half unit course examines key aspects of the contemporary international relations of Southeast Asia, with the primary focus being on the intramural relations of the member states of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). In order to contextualise these intramural relations, the course first explores the different domestic political contexts in which Southeast Asian decision-makers operate, the historical backdrop to the region's major intrastate and interstate conflicts and disputes, the key security issues and challenges affecting the region and individual states, as well as the wider geopolitical context. The course also, secondly, engages in a comparative analysis of the foreign and security policies of the five original member states of ASEAN that will, for instance, take account of the influence of geographical factors, the relevance of ethnic politics and nationalism, political change, leadership ambitions, and the main economic and security interests pursued by governments. Finally the course explores how the respective domestic backdrop and foreign policy outlook of Southeast Asian states have shaped the nature, effectiveness and limits of ASEAN as a vehicle for intramural political-security cooperation. In this context, the course assesses the grouping's efforts to establish an ASEAN political-security community. The course will conclude by comparing the role played respectively by the ASEAN states and extra-regional powers in managing regional security and order. Concepts and theories drawn from International Relations, and especially Foreign Policy Analysis, will be applied as appropriate.

Teaching: 20 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write two essays with a maximum length of 2,000 words and present on class topics.

Indicative reading: Beeson, Mark (2009) Contemporary Southeast Asia, 2nd ed. ### The Middle East and International Relations Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katerina Dalacoura CLM 4.11

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200) or an equivalent course.

Course content: The course applies the theories and conceptual tools of the discipline of International Relations to the study of the Middle East region. It uses the empirical material offered by the history, politics, political economy and international politics of the region to explore these concepts and theories. More specifically, it concentrates on the areas of foreign policy analysis, international political economy, gender, the study of international norms and conflict and peace studies. It explores the applicability of various International Relations theories (for example, realism and neo-realism; neo-liberalism; constructivism; English School; neo-Marxism and structuralism; and post-colonialism) to the study of the region.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Three essays of 1,500 words each.

Indicative reading: Raymond Hinnebusch, The International Politics of the Middle East (Manchester University Press, 2003); Fred Halliday, The Middle East in International Relations: Power, Politics, and Ideology (CUP, 2005); Shibley Telhami and Michael Barnett, Identity and Foreign Policy in the Middle East (Cornell University Press, 2002); Michael Barnett, Dialogues in Arab Politics (Columbia University Press, 1998); Simon Bromley, Remaking Middle East Politics (Polity Press, 1994); Baghat Korany and Ali Dessouki, The Foreign Policies of Arab States (The American University of Cairo Press, 2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

IR316 Half Unit

United Nations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jens Meierhenrich CLM 6.07

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This lecture course provides an introduction to the politics, law, and practice of the United Nations. The course's disciplinary ambit ranges from anthropology to economics, from history to law, and from political science to sociology. Against the background of diverse disciplinary approaches, the focus is on the power and pathologies of this most important of international organizations. To this end, the course highlights major theoretical and empirical aspects of the UN's role(s) in international politics, inter alia, its institutional origins and development; its contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security; the nature and consequences of the UN's promotion and dissemination of norms; the operation of its agencies, programmes, and subsidiary bodies; and the prospects for institutional reform. Substantive issue areas to be discussed include collective security, peacekeeping, international territorial administration, R2P, human rights, development, refugees, and international courts and tribunals. Aside from providing introductions to the UN's principal organs, the course elucidates the UN system by exploring international bodies ranging from the UNHCR to UNDP, from the Human Rights Council to UNESCO, and from the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and Rwanda (ICTR) to the UN's many international commissions of inquiry.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to research and write two essays (1,500 words each). In order to ensure a broad acquisition of knowledge, students should diversify the subject matter of their essays. In addressing a given essay topic, students must seek to integrate theory and history and bring empirical evidence to bear on the research question they have chosen. In constructing their answers, students may examine a number of cases, drawing comparisons among them, or may focus on a single case. Essays must be fully—and carefully—referenced using one of the major conventions consistently. Submissions are due in Weeks 4 and Week 8 and must be made in hard copy. Feedback is to be sought from class teachers, who are responsible for marking essays.

American Grand Strategy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Peter Trubowitz

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: None

Course content: This course explores American foreign policy at the broadest level of analysis – the level known as grand strategy. The course showcases the main theoretical perspectives that inform the study of grand strategy and applies them to historical and contemporary cases of American statecraft. In this connection, we will assess the relevance of the U.S. experience for theorizing about power politics and the implications of alternative theories for thinking critically about American international behavior. Emphasis is placed on the debates and controversies that animate the study of grand strategy, as well as of the unique challenges posed by making foreign policy in the American political, economic, and cultural context.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 9 essays in the LT.

Indicative reading:

Visual International Politics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof William Callahan STC 5.77

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200).

Course content: We live in a visual age. Images play an increasingly important role in shaping international political events and our understanding of them. The objective of this course is to examine how visual sources - maps, photographs, film, television, new media - influence international political phenomena, our perception of them, and public responses to them. The course has conceptual and empirical objectives. At a conceptual level students will acquire knowledge of key theoretical and methodological debates necessary to study visual international politics. At an empirical level, students will gain a better understanding of several concrete instances where images helped to shape international political phenomena, from wars to humanitarian crises, from global social movements to alternative world orders.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures and 14 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 case study and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Campbell, David (2007) 'Geopolitics and Visual Culture: Sighting the Darfur Conflict 2003-05'. Political Geography 26(4): 357-382. Der Derian, J. ### Empire and Conflict in World Politics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tarak Barkawi STC 576

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in International Relations and History. This course is available on the BSc in International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed International Political Theory (IR200).

Course content: Many places and peoples in modern world politics have been shaped by relations and histories of imperialism. Across the social sciences and humanities, as in International Relations, there has been an explosion of interest in empire in recent decades. This course explores the violent dimensions of the imperial past and present. It covers histories and social relations of armed conflict in imperial context from "small war" to "counterinsurgency" and the War on Terror; it looks at the ways in which warfare shapes (and is shaped by) the societies, cultures and polities that populate world politics; and it considers some of the intellectual traditions that have arisen out of the experience of, and inquiry into, colonial violence, from the thought of resistance leaders to subaltern and postcolonial studies. The premise of the course is that warfare and violence have been generative forces in shaping world politics, well beyond the times and places of specific battles and killings.

This course aims to familiarise students with scholarship on empire and conflict in International Relations and related disciplines. This involves, first, understanding the limitations of the sovereign nation-state as the basic unit of world politics. For most people in most times and places, international relations have taken imperial form of one kind or another. What would it mean to take empire seriously in international thought and inquiry? The course approaches this question by looking at the relations between empire and globalization in historical and theoretical context. Second, although much scholarship on empire concerns economy and culture, the history of empire is a history of continual warfare and armed resistance. Such "small wars" have shaped society and politics in both the core and periphery of the international system, and often continue to do so long after the guns fall silent (as for example in the case of the US and the Vietnam War). The course will cover the histories, strategies and theories associated with such wars and their effects. Third and finally, the course will explore the intersection between empire and knowledge in political theory and social inquiry. Not only did anti-colonial resistance produce its own theorists, such as Frantz Fanon and Mao Zedong, but in recent decades empire has been the site of new turns in social and political theory and inquiry, as for example in subaltern studies and postcolonialism. The course will introduce students to this work and its applications to understanding world politics.

Dissertation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Wilson CLM 5.10

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in International Relations. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Candidates are required to submit a dissertation of 9-10,000 words, excluding bibliography, but including notes and any appendices and tables, by the beginning of May of their final year. The subject of the dissertation can be anything within the syllabus of the undergraduate degree in International Relations at the School. Candidates are required to submit the title of their dissertation for approval by the Course Co-ordinator before the last day of the Michaelmas Term of their third year. They are also required, by the same deadline after the last Michaelmas term class, to submit to the Course Co-ordinator a brief plan and structure of how their proposed study will be carried out.

The dissertation is unsupervised and must be entirely the candidate's own work. Before they choose to do a dissertation it is vital that candidates identify an interest in a particular field of study that they wish to explore in more depth. All teachers are prepared to give advice of a general and bibliographic nature on chosen topics within the areas of their particular expertise. This is a learning experience where students are not expected to perform a number of specific weekly tasks set by a particular teacher. The Course Co-ordinator will hold one general class at the beginning of Michaelmas term, one at the end of the LT for second year students considering doing dissertations in 2014-15 and one class early in the ST, also for 2nd year students, on general approaches to dissertation writing. Candidates will be given guidance on whom to consult for initial advice on reading material in order that they can have the opportunity to begin reading over the summer vacation. 2014-15 candidates will discuss their dissertation topics in small groups in the latter weeks of Michaelmas term and in the middle weeks of Lent term. Each candidate will be required in Michaelmas term to produce for circulation to other members before the class in no more than one A4 page, a draft plan of how the dissertation will answer the research question(s) inherent in the title. The draft plan should provide, in the form of headings, more details of how the topic will be covered. Allocation to classes will be done early in Michaelmas term and further email appointments can be made with the Course Coordinator to deal with any issues that are problematic or if there are further questions candidates might have about their approach to the topic after their classes. Detailed information concerning footnotes and referencing etc., is available on Moodle.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Classes to be in groups of three students.

Advice and Assistance

In no circumstances are teachers within the School or the wider university community, permitted to read or comment upon a draft of the dissertation or any part thereof. Advice may be given of a general nature through the Course Co-ordinator on points of difficulty that arise during its preparation. The dissertation should contain a coherent argument based on independent and critical analysis of a relevant body of theoretical or empirical material. This may consist entirely of secondary literature. There is no requirement, and no special credit will be given, for the use of original material such as unpublished documents, archives, or personal interviews.

Dissertations offer the chance to discover, and deal with, new and interesting material. Students are encouraged to participate in this challenge, which assesses different skills from examinations, and to use the opportunity to enhance their knowledge in an area of particular interest to them. The aim is to develop the ability to make independent judgements and decisions on extracting and analysing the most important and relevant material. The outcome will be the provision of coherent, clearly argued answers to significant questions candidates identify in their particular topic.

The final text should contain a full bibliography of utilised sources. Direct quotations from published or unpublished work must be fully referenced. Standard scholarly practice with regard to referencing the ideas of other scholars should be followed. The completed dissertation must be typed with double spacing on one side of the paper and with a wide left-hand margin. The pages must be numbered consecutively and adequately secured. The first page should contain the full title, the candidate's number (but not name), together with the rubric: 'BSc International Relations 2014/15. Dissertation submitted in partial fulfilment of the requirements of the degree.' All students must add on the cover page of their dissertation a declaration which is required for all work submitted as part of the formal assessment of degrees other than work produced under examination conditions, to the effect that they have read and understood the School's rules on plagiarism and assessment offences at <http://www.lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/academicRegulations/RegulationsOnAssessmentOffences-Plagiarism.htm> and that the work submitted is their own apart from properly referenced quotations.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the LT. Examiners of the dissertation look for a variety of skills and qualities such as: conceptual precision, skill in analysis, organisation of material, clarity of exposition, and capacity for logical reasoning. Examiners also attach weight to accuracy in English spelling, grammar, and punctuation. The dissertation must consist of not more than 10,000 words (including footnotes or endnotes, tables and appendices but excluding bibliography, contents page and, where relevant, a list of acronyms). A penalty will be deducted from the given mark for any dissertation that exceeds the word limit of 10,000. The penalty will be a deduction of 5 points for each 500 words above the word limit (i.e. a 5 point reduction from 10,001 words; a further 5 points from 10,501, etc.). Dissertations over 12,000 words will automatically fail. For further details, please see the IR398 Moodle site.

The dissertation must be handed in to room CLM 6.11 by 5 pm on Tuesday 5 May 2015.

Penalties for the late submission of course work.

- (i) Where a course includes course work as part of its assessment, the LSE requires that all students must be given clear written instructions on what is required and the deadline for its submission;
- (ii) if a student believes that s/he has good cause not to meet the deadline (e.g. illness), s/he should first discuss the matter with his/her academic advisor or Course Coordinator and seek a formal extension from the Chair of the Examination Sub-Board. Normally extensions will only be granted where there is a good reason backed by supporting evidence (e.g. medical certificate);
- (iii) if a student misses the deadline for submission but believes that s/he has good cause which could not have been alerted in advance s/he should first discuss the matter with his/her academic adviser or the Course Coordinator and seek a formal extension;
- (iv) any extension should be confirmed in writing to the student;
- (v) if a student fails to submit by the set deadline (or the extended deadline as appropriate) the following penalty will apply: Five marks out of 100 will be deducted for a Dissertation submitted within 24 hours of the deadline and a further five marks will be deducted for each subsequent 24-hour period (working days only) until the Dissertation is submitted.

Criminal Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Ramsay

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the 'general part' of criminal law and selected areas of the special part of criminal law in the context of theories of the aims and functions of criminalisation. The course will discuss the limits to criminalization; the conceptual framework of criminal liability (conduct, responsibility, capacity, defences); criminal law's construction and regulation of interests in property (with particular reference to the offences of theft and fraud); attempts; 'pre-inchoate' offences; regulatory offences (with special reference to drugs); homicide; sexual offences; non-fatal violence against the person; secondary participation in crime.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

This will be set by the teacher in charge of the class. A minimum of two pieces of written work will be required, usually one essay and one problem.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be distributed at the start of the course (for the current list, see the public folders). A number of criminal law textbooks are available, and students will be expected to read the relevant parts of the most recent editions of one of these, e.g. Nicola Lacey, Oliver Quick & Celia Wells, Reconstructing Criminal Law; Andrew Ashworth and Jeremy Horder, Principles of Criminal Law; Jonathan Herring, Criminal Law: Text, Cases and Materials; M. Allen, Introduction to Criminal Law. They will also be expected to read all cases and materials marked as primary on the detailed reading lists provided.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL201

Administrative Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Poole NAB7.19

Additional Teachers: Professor Linda Mulcahy

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Outline:

Administrative Law is a vital subject throughout the modern world. An understanding of the role which it plays is essential to private practitioners. Commercial lawyers frequently come into contact with regulatory agencies whose special procedures derive from administrative law. Dealings with international agencies (including the European Union) are often governed by administrative law. Public law expertise opens the way to good careers in government service. There is a flourishing Administrative Law Bar, reflected in well-established sets of chambers.

The course aims to reflect the wider dimensions of administrative law, stressing links with public administration, commerce and politics. We emphasise the functions of law in the administrative process and the constitutional role of judicial review. We also aim to show how membership of the European Union and adherence to the European Convention on Human Rights has influenced our system of public law. We look at the way in which changed systems of governance, especially the rapid growth of regulatory agencies, can be reflected in and controlled by traditional rules of administrative law. We consider alternative dispute resolution, including public inquiries or the Citizens' Charter. In addition to compulsory essays there are opportunities for presentation of papers.

Syllabus: Theories of administrative law. Decision-making and the administrative process: rules and discretion. The 'contracting state': administrative law and new public management. Risk and the regulatory state (including responses to the financial crisis of 2008-9). The changing nature of judicial review. Judicial review and the Human Rights Act. The role of public inquiries. European influences on national administrative law. 'Global administrative law'. The Ombudsman and complaints.

Teaching: 18 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Main texts: C. Harlow & R. Rawlings, Law and Administration (3rd ed., 2009); P. Cane, An Introduction to Administrative Law (2004); M. Taggart (ed.), The Province of Administrative Law (1997); N. Bamforth and P. Leyland (eds.), Public Law in a Multi-Layered Constitution (2003).

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (40%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Commercial Contracts

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Solene Rowan NAB 7.26

Additional Teachers: Professor Michael Bridge, Dr Jan Kleinheisterkamp

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Completion of LL104 - Law of Obligations is normally a prerequisite.

Course content: Objectives:

LL202 Commercial Contracts comprises a study of the general principles of English law governing commercial contracts. Its examination of this subject-matter divides into two parts. Part 1, 'Fundamentals of Commercial Contracting' examines several important aspects of, or themes in, the law's regulation of commercial contracting. The topics are chosen because of their intrinsic interest, and because of the opportunity offered for an advanced contextualised examination of contract law fundamentals. Part 1 therefore explores the process of commercial contracting; long-term relationships; multi-party transactions; agreed remedies; and alternative dispute resolution. Part 2, 'Fundamentals of Commercial Law' examines core topics in commercial law. It begins by examining the sale of goods contract, before proceeding to examine several important allied topics: money, payment and payment methods; credit, security and reservation of title; agency; and assignment.

Topics are likely to include:

1. Aspects of commercial contracting:
  - Freedom of contract and its restrictions
  - Agreed remedies
  - Interpretation of contracts
  - Pre-contractual duties and good faith
  - Privity of contract; multi-party transactions
  - Problems arising out of long-term contracts
  - Arbitration and international contracting
2. Aspects of commercial law:
  - Contracts for the sale of goods
  - Credit and security
  - Agency
  - Assignment

Banking law: money, payment and payment methods

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One formative essay per term.

Indicative reading: The principal textbooks for the course are:

Chen-Wishart, Contract Law, 4th edn (OUP 2012)
 McKendrick, Goode on Commercial Law, 4th edn (Penguin 2010)
 Beale, Bishop and Furmston, Contract: Cases and Materials, 5th edn

(OUP 2007)

Sealy and Hooley, Commercial Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 4th edn (OUP 2008)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL203

Law of Business Associations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eva Micheler NAB7.35

Additional Teachers: Professor David Kershaw and Mr Leslie Kosmin, QC.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Experience suggests that third year students are more successful.

Pre-requisites: It is helpful to have studied or be studying Property II, although this is not a formal pre-requisite.

Course content: Outline:

This course examines the nature of the legal vehicles available for the carrying on of entrepreneurial activities, paying particular attention to the analysis of companies. It examines the core features of the company. These are: separate legal personality, limited liability, centralised management, the allocation of control rights, and free transferability of shares. The course analyses how the law implements these features and the policy trade-offs among them. The course discusses the relationship between various groups with an interest in the affairs of the company – shareholders, directors, managers, financiers, trade creditors, employees, consumers and regulators – and the balance of power between them. The course looks beyond purely technical legal issues and encourages a critical examination of the system and proposals for reform.

Registered companies are creatures of statute and close attention to the Companies Acts and related legislation is essential. However, no attempt is made to deal with all, or even most, of the complex technical aspects of the legislation and non-statutory regulation. The course concentrates on the problems and policies underlying the legislation, with some more detailed consideration of selected provisions. The increasing influence of European Directives and Regulations on UK company law is also reflected.

Despite the importance of statute, common law and equitable principles have played a major role in the development of company law by the courts. This has relied heavily on principles of agency and the equitable principles relating to fiduciaries. Case analysis is therefore a major element of the course. Excellent case books are available.

This subject covers a wide range of businesses – from the one-person firm (the local greengrocer or plumber) to family companies, to major multinational groups listed on the Stock Exchange. This wide coverage plus the policy emphasis means that this course should appeal to all students with an interest in the economic, social and political aspects of business organisations and not only to those wishing to practise commercial law.

Topics usually covered are:

- Introductory concepts and themes including limited liability and corporate personality.
- Capacity of companies & the powers of individuals acting for companies.
- Shares and share capital.
- Directors: powers, duties and corporate governance issues.
- The role of shareholders in companies: rights, decision-making and governance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 14 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Lectures are accompanied by fortnightly two-hour seminars, which follow the lectures closely. Reading lists provided by the lecturer in each topic are used as the basis for seminar work.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Gower and Davies, Principles of Modern Company Law (9th edn, 2012); David Kershaw, Company Law in Context (2nd edn, 2012); Sealy and Worthington, Cases and Material on Company Law (10th edn, 2012)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL204

Advanced Torts

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Helen Reece NAB6.24

Additional Teachers: Dr Emmanuel Voyiakos and Dr Charlie Webb.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Law of Obligations (LL104).

Course content: Our course aims to broaden and deepen your knowledge of tort law in two ways. First, it looks at a range of important torts that are not covered in the Law of Obligations course. Second, it tackles the 'big' theoretical questions of tort law. On finishing the course, you will not only have gained a better understanding of the rules and principles that govern specific torts, but you will also be able to engage critically with different views about the overall purpose and the moral and social function of tort law.

Here are some topics we usually cover:

- (1) Theories of tort law: what is the aim of tort law and do judges need a theory of it?
- (2) Tort law and the 'compensation culture'
- (3) Tort law, moral responsibility and luck
- (4) Negligence focus: the position of public authorities; negligent endangerment
- (5) Wrongful life and wrongful birth
- (6) Interference with the person: assault; battery; harassment; the Wilkinson v Downton tort
- (7) Problems of causation: loss of chance
- (8) Illegality
- (9) Strict liability regimes: vicarious liability; liability for ultra-hazardous activities; liability for defective products; the justification of strict liability.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: Introductory Texts: John G. Fleming, An Introduction to the Law of Torts (2nd ed., 1985); Carol Harlow, Understanding Tort Law (3rd ed., 2005). General Texts: W V H Rogers, Winfield & Jolowicz on Tort (18th ed., 2010); N J McBride & R Bagshaw, Tort Law (4th ed., 2012); B A Hepple, D Howarth & M H Matthews, Tort: Cases and Materials (6th ed., 2008); S Deakin, A Johnston & B Markesinis, Markesinis and Deakin's Tort Law (7th ed, 2012); P Cane, Atiyah's Accidents, Compensation and the Law (7th ed., 2006). Advanced/Specialised Texts: Robert Stevens, Torts and Rights (2007); Jules Coleman, Risks and Wrongs (2002); Guido Calabresi, The Cost of Accidents: A Legal and Economic Analysis (1970); David Owen (ed.), Philosophical Foundations of Tort Law (1997); Harvey Teff, Causing Psychiatric and Emotional Harm: Reshaping the Boundaries of Legal Liability (2008); Nicolette Prialoux, The Harm Paradox: Tort Law and the Unwanted Child in an Era of Choice (2007). If all goes according to plan, the degree of depth we will attain in the course and the focused nature of our reading lists for each topic will make textbooks redundant, or at least useful only as a basic introduction to the issues we will be covering. This means that the tort textbook you may have purchased for the LL104 Law of Obligations course will probably be good enough for the latter purpose. Here are some other introductory or general texts that you might like to consult from time to time, just to get a different perspective on things, and some more advanced or specialised books from which we will be setting reading for certain topics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL205

Medical Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Emily Jackson NAB7.07

Additional Teachers: Dr Julie McCandless

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: Medical law is a rapidly developing and increasingly important subject. The rationing of expensive new drugs, and the future of the NHS have become central political issues. New scientific developments, such as cloning, face transplants, stem cell research and direct-to-consumer genetic testing, are invariably accompanied by demands for their regulation. In this course we examine the legal framework within which health services are provided, and we explore some of the difficult ethical dilemmas that arise when determining the limits of medical innovation.

Subjects include malpractice litigation; consent; capacity; confidentiality; research on human subjects; resource allocation; abortion; surrogacy; assisted conception; 'designer babies'; embryo and stem cell research; cloning; mental health law; organ transplantation and assisted dying.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Jackson, Medical Law: Text, Cases and Materials 3rd edition (Oxford UP, 2013).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

LL207

Civil Liberties and Human Rights

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kai Moller NAB 7.01

Additional Teachers: Dr Thomas Poole, Dr Peter Ramsay.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Course content: The course provides a challenging introduction to human rights law. The first term focuses on the European Convention on Human Rights with an in-depth analysis of the case law on several important rights, including but not limited to freedom of expression, freedom of association, freedom of religion and the right to private life. The second term deals with the UK Human Rights Act and builds not only on the first term's work but also on the knowledge that students have acquired in Public Law in year one. Thus, students must engage with the law of two legal systems here: the European Convention on Human Rights and U.K. law.

The course takes a highly analytical approach; it will not be sufficient to approach the issues in a descriptive, "black letter" way.

Rather, an overall aim is to enable students to critically assess the European Court's and the U.K. Supreme Court's arguments about the compatibility of a policy or administrative decision with human rights and the particularities of human rights adjudication within the U.K. legal system. To this end, the course will focus on the necessary doctrinal and conceptual framework – such as positive obligations, the margin of appreciation and proportionality –, an overview of the relevant case law, and in-depth analysis of selected problems in human rights law.

This course does not touch upon strategic or policy issues (such as the most effective ways to promote human rights, NGO practices, etc.); rather it focuses on the controversial and often difficult moral and political issues that arise in human rights adjudication and on unravelling the implications of the unusual (some would say idiosyncratic) way in which U.K. law has incorporated the ECHR. Regard will however be had to the current argument over whether or not the Act should be repealed.

The teaching of this course is mainly case-based. To complete it successfully, students must prepare for each seminar by reading and thinking through the relevant cases; the seminars will be conducted on the basis of the expectation that the students are familiar with the materials. There is no comprehensive textbook available for this course.

Syllabus: The history of human rights protection in the UK; theoretical aspects of human rights; the Human Rights Act 1998; human rights and parliamentary sovereignty; human rights and standards of review; human rights and the common law; precedent and human rights law. The rights to life and freedom from torture; freedom of expression; freedom of association and 'militant democracy'; freedom of religion; the right to respect for private and family life; equality and non-discrimination. Mental health and human rights. Terrorism, security and states of emergency; 'social learning'. Anomalous zones.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: For European Convention law there exists no textbook which deals with the issues in adequate depth, but interested students may want to take a look at:

Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick, Law of the European Convention on Human Rights 2nd edn (OUP, 2009) for an overview. For the more theoretical aspects of the course, see K. Moller's The Global Model of Constitutional Rights (OUP 2012). For the second term, C. Gearty's book Principles of Human Rights Adjudication (2004) is a good starting point for further analysis but now rather dated. See the same author's Civil Liberties (OUP, 2007), Liberty and Security (Polity, 2013), and A Kavanagh, Constitutional Review under the UK Human Rights Act (CUP, 2009).

In both terms, in-depth engagement with the primary materials and active participation in the seminars is essential for successful completion of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Commercial Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Ewan McGaughey

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Commercial law is an introduction to the basic institutions of the market economy and corporate governance in a post-financial crisis world: the law of contract, companies and insolvency.

In contract, we cover how agreements become legally binding, basic consumer protection laws and the regulation of unfair terms, cancelling a contract for misrepresentation or coercion, and claiming damages when a contract is breached.

In company and insolvency law, we examine how company directors are held accountable to shareholders and stakeholders through corporate governance mechanisms, and litigation in court. We also look at the place of companies within private law, how banks create security interests through lending, the consequences of corporate insolvency, the processes of administration and liquidation, and holding wrongdoing directors accountable.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Core texts:

E McKendrick, Contract Law (10th edn 2013)

A Dignam and J Lowry, Company Law (7th edn 2012)

A Burrows, A Casebook on Contract (4th edn 2013)

L Sealy and S Worthington, Cases and Material in Company Law (10th edn 2013)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Information Technology and the Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr. Orla Lynskey NAB 6.23

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Statistics with Finance and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This course does not require an in-depth understanding of contemporary computer technology – we are primarily interested in the implications of the use of information technology, and the intended and unintended consequences of regulating that use.

Course content: This survey course, which is divided into six modules, introduces students to a selection of fundamental legal issues in the field of Information Technology (IT) Law. It begins by examining ongoing debates regarding the correct theoretical framework applicable to internet regulation and governance. It then examines substantive legal topics, such as data protection, cybercrime, intellectual property and digital rights management and online freedom of expression, against this theoretical backdrop. In particular, students are encouraged to consider both how the law has responded to the challenges of information technologies, and the extent to which legal issues have shaped the development of information society policy.

The focus will be initially on English law, although the increasingly global nature of IT law means that there are already strong EU and US legal influences upon the English system, so comparative aspects will be introduced in places, and readings will include materials drawn from, amongst others, US law journals.

At the end of the course, students should be able to critically assess on-going developments in law relating to information technologies and to evaluate the internal coherence of these developments and their doctrinal and political implications.

Indicative Content:

Michaelmas 2014

- Introduction to Internet Regulation and Governance
- Intellectual Property Rights in the Online Environment
- Freedom of Expression Online

Lent 2015

- Cybercrime

- E-Commerce
- Data Protection and Online Surveillance

For a more detailed outline, please visit the course Moodle page.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: **Murray: Information Technology Law: Law and Society 2nd ed, 2013, OUP. Reed (ed): Computer Law 7th ed., 2011, OUP. ### Conflict of Laws

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jacobus Bomhoff NAB6.29

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: A good knowledge of law is required. The majority of students taking this course tend to be in their third year. That said, many second year students have done very well on this course over the past years.

Course content: Conflict of laws - also known as private international law - is the area of law concerned with cases in which the facts present one or more international elements. The field's three main questions are (1) jurisdiction (will an English court or a foreign court hear a case?), (2) choice of law (should the court apply its own law or that of a foreign country?), (3) the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgements. During the course, these three questions will frame reflection on a range of topics, including commercial/practical issues (e.g. how can companies structure their cross-border transactions), but also questions of a more political nature (e.g. to what extent should States be able to regulate matters beyond their own borders?) or with a strong social/cultural dimension (e.g. how should foreign cultural understandings of justice be accommodated in domestic law?). Because of the growing role of the European Union in this area, the interaction between English and European approaches to conflict of laws issues will be an important running theme throughout the course.

Syllabus

-Jurisdiction: Brussels I Regulation (2001 and 2012); English traditional rules; Comparative case studies (US and Canadian law); Choice of court agreements; Anti-suit injunctions.

-Choice of law: Contract and Tort (Rome I and Rome II Regulations); Comparative case studies; Public policy; Foreign illegality; Overriding mandatory rules.

-Foreign judgments: Brussels I Regulation (2001 and 2012); English traditional rules; Comparative case studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Students will be provided with a Course Reader, which is posted on Moodle in instalments throughout the year. The following texts may serve as sources of reference throughout the course: Jonathan Hill & Adeline Chong, International Commercial Disputes (Hart Publishing); Trevor Hartley, International Commercial Litigation (CUP); Peter North & James Fawcett, Cheshire & North's Private International Law (OUP); Adrian Briggs, The Conflict of Laws (OUP). Always make sure you have the most recent edition.

Family Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Miss Helen Reece NAB6.24

Additional Teacher(s): Dr Julie McCandless

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This is an exciting time to study Family Law! Maybe more than ever before, the family is in flux. With marriage rates tumbling, divorce rates escalating and reproductive technologies becoming normalised, record numbers of children are living outside the traditional nuclear family of their biological married mum and dad (the heteronormative family). What's more, after centuries of exclusion, lesbians and gay men are on the brink of entering into the most sanctioned relationship of all – marriage. Is the traditional family dead, has it changed beyond all recognition, or is the family functioning much as it always has done? How does the law respond to the modern family, and how should the modern family be regulated? If you want to chew over these and a host of other fascinating questions, Family Law is the course for you.

Term 1: Adult Relations: 1. Introductory concepts: (a) Intervention in the family; (b) Discrimination against families, in the context of human rights legislation. 2. Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Students are provided with a detailed syllabus and reading list for class topics. Basic reading for each topic will be drawn from a number of sources including text books, cases and articles. In case students wish to purchase any books the following are suggested:

Textbooks: Stephen Gilmore and Lisa Glennon, Hayes and Williams' Family Law (3rd edn, 2012, Oxford University Press); Rebecca Probert, Cretney and Probert's Family Law (8th edn, 2012, Sweet and Maxwell); Frances Burton, Family Law (2012, Routledge); Jonathan Herring, Family Law (5th edn, 2011, Longman)

Casebooks: Alison Diduck and Felicity Kaganas, Family Law, Gender and the State (3rd edn., 2012, Hart Publishing); Sonia Harris-Short and Joanna Miles, Family Law: Text, Cases and Materials (2nd edn, 2011, Oxford University Press); Brenda Hale, David Pearl, Elizabeth Cooke and Daniel Monk, The Family, Law and Society: Cases and Materials (6th edn, 2009, Oxford University Press)

Reader: Jonathan Herring, Rebecca Probert and Stephen Gilmore, Great Debates in Family Law (2012, Palgrave Macmillan); Rob George, Ideas and Debates in Family Law (2012, Hart Publishing)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Approved statutory materials may be taken into the examination in accordance with School Regulations.

LL232*Law and Institutions of the European Union

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Floris De Witte

Additional Teachers: Dr Jacco Bomhoff, Dr Veerle Heyvaert, Dr Jan Komarek, Dr Jo Murkens, Dr Michael Wilkinson.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available on the BSc in Management and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course is an introduction to European Union Law. The course considers a legal and political system which has become the most formidable system of transnational government in modern times. Comprising over 10,500 laws and 17,000 judgments at the end of 2011, it affects significant parts of social and economic life both within the European Union and beyond, and has been looked at as a model across many parts of the world. It is a system which has been constantly in flux and, in recent years, a source of continual conflict: conflict both over the content of its measures and the presence of its involvement in many spheres of activity. The course covers both the institutional and constitutional structure of the European Union. It then looks at the central policies of the European Union, notably the single market, the area of freedom, security and justice, and EU social policy as well as those fields which have generated most conflict, most notably the euro area crisis. Finally, it considers not simply how the Union binds those living within it but how it would affect those who would leave it. Topics will be taken from:

- (1) Evolution of the European Union
- (2) Institutions and Law-Making of the European Union
- (3) Sovereignty and EU Law
- (4) The Authority of EU Law Outside the EU
- (5) Subsidiarity and when the EU Should Act
- (6) Policing of National Observance of EU Law
- (7) Judicial application of Union law within the Member States (e.g. Direct effect, indirect effect, state liability) and relations between the Court of Justice and National Courts
- (8) Fundamental Rights
- (9) The euro area crisis
- (10) Free Movement of Goods
- (11) Free Movement of Persons and European Citizenship
- (12) Free Movement of Services and Establishment
- (13) The Area of Freedom, Security and Justice and the European Arrest Warrant
- (14) EU Social Policy and Anti-Discrimination Law
- (15) The Single Market

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

This may include a mock exam and a moot court exercise.

Indicative reading: The core text for this course is Chalmers et. al., EU Law (2nd edn, CUP 2010). An alternative textbook that is useful to consult is Craig & De Burca, EU Law (5th edn, 2011); other useful sources include Kaczorowska EU Law (2nd edn, 2010); Weiler, The Constitution of Europe (1999); Hix, What's Wrong with the European Union and How to Fix It? (2008); Ward, A Critical Introduction to European Law (2009); C Barnard, The Substantive Law of the EU (3rd edn, 2010). In addition, the course uses a broad range of on-line reading material. Students are expected to retrieve and print these materials themselves: there is no course pack. The recommended statute book is Blackstone's EU Treaties and Legislation (OUP).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

The examination will contain 10 questions (of which some may be 'either/or') of which four are to be answered, and at least one question must be answered from each of two sections, which represent Lent and Michelmas term work respectively.

LL233*Law of Evidence

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michael Redmayne NAB6.13

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: If a person is suspected of committing a crime, how does the prosecution go about proving that they are guilty? Are there any restrictions on the type of evidence that the prosecution can use to prove its case? What protections does the law offer to defendants, to safeguard them against false conviction? These are the central questions in the law of criminal evidence, which looks at the rules governing the use of evidence in criminal trials.

This course concentrates on criminal, rather than civil evidence. The course is taught by seminar, and emphasis is placed on matters of principle and conceptual issues rather than the fine detail of legal rules. The aims of the course are to teach students how to reason about evidence, and to encourage them to reflect critically on the modern law of criminal evidence.

At a more detailed level, we look at issues such as the standard of proof, asking why the standard of proof in criminal trials is beyond reasonable doubt and what reasonable doubt means. We consider how inferences are drawn from evidence, and how basic ideas of probability can give insights on this process. We examine how the police gain confessions from suspects, and how the law regulates the admissibility of confessions. An important theme on the course relates to questions about what makes a trial fair, and here the European Convention on Human Rights is relevant. In this context, we look at whether courts should admit illegally or improperly obtained evidence and ask what the privilege against self-incrimination is and whether it can be justified. Much of the law of evidence involves rules of admissibility, and here we cover hearsay evidence (a topic now with an important human rights angle) and character evidence (can a defendant's previous convictions be introduced against him at trial?). We also look at expert evidence, concentrating on particular examples such as DNA evidence and fingerprint evidence.

Syllabus: While coverage may vary from year to year, we usually look at the following themes and topics:

Analysing evidence: Probability and reasoning under uncertainty; Inferences from silence. Risk allocation: Burden and standard of proof. Frail evidence: its creation and admissibility; Confessions; Eyewitness identification. Fair trials: Illegally/improperly obtained evidence; The privilege against self-incrimination; Entrapment. Exclusionary rules: Hearsay; Bad Character; Sexual history evidence. Expert evidence: Fingerprints, DNA and others.

The course has a moodle page which you could look at to get a better idea of the topics and the sort of material we look at.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: There is no set text for the course, but standard texts, eg Ian Dennis, The Law of Evidence (4th edn, 5th edn expected 2013) are useful on many topics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

LL241*European Legal History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umberto-Igor Stramignoni NAB7.34

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course aims to equip students with an in-depth understanding of the social and cultural history of the Western legal tradition (from its foundations in Ancient Rome to the onset of modernity), in order to engender a solid grasp of the basic assumptions and practises that underpin the legal systems of today's Europe.

The seminars are built around certain significant traces left by Roman law, the heartland of the Western legal tradition, from its mythical beginning in the 8th century BCE all the way through to the French Revolution and the astonishing story of the birth of the French Civil code.

In the first part of the course we will study: law and religion in ancient Rome; the space of the law; the emergence of the people's legislative assemblies in Republican Rome; women, slaves, and foreigners in the eyes of the law; the rise to power of Augustus and his Chancery; the great jurists of the Empire; the challenges of the "new religion", Christianity, for the Roman constitution; the turmoil and decline of Empire; and the rise of the Eastern Emperors and of Byzantium as the "new Rome".

In the second part of the course we will be considering how Roman law, now increasingly referred to by English common lawyers as 'Civil Law', transformed itself from the Middle Ages onwards, continuing to play a very central role in the imagination, thought and language of Europe and the world over. We will look at: how Roman law became immensely influential once again (both in Europe and beyond), upon its reappearance in new and different guises, at the end of the Middle Ages; the consequences of the rediscovery of the Justinian Digest and the challenge it represented for the law of the mediaeval world of the Christian Church; the cultural revolution of the Italian Renaissance; the emergence of legal Humanism and of the "scientific" method; the early Enlightenment; the modern movement for legal codification; the French Revolution; and the birth of the French Civil Code and its influence of contemporary Europe.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 18 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT and 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: The general textbook for the course is the short yet iconic book by Peter Stein Roman Law in European History (1999). However a mixture of visual aids and further readings will be used to complement the textbook, including journal articles and chapters from other monographs. Students are encouraged to explore the course Moodle page for more information.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Assessment path 2

Dissertation (100%, 12000 words) in the ST.

in a course in Public International Law or in Civil Liberties Law.

Course content: This course aims to provide a comprehensive and analytical account of the application of human rights standards in international law, and the operation of the existing international machinery for the protection of human rights. The course is designed to be both theoretical and practical.

The course deals with important conceptual issues: What are human rights? What is their purpose and status in international law?

Are they absolute or relative? Can they be of equal significance to societies at different stages of development? When may they be qualified? What is the relation between economic and social rights as well as civil and political rights? Are rights attributable to groups as well as to individuals? Why are there special categories of protection, e.g. minorities, indigenous peoples, children, women and refugees?

Extensive use is made of relevant case law, of the Civil and Political Covenant, the European Convention, the American Convention, the African Charter, and the International Court of Justice; and particular rights (such as those of persons belonging to minorities, the right to life, the prohibition of torture, the right to a fair trial, family life, and the fundamental freedoms) are studied in considerable detail.

The law of human rights reflects attempts made internationally to articulate basic legal standards for the protection of individuals and groups in their relations with the state, and to use the authority of international law, institutions, and procedures, to secure compliance with such standards. Human rights law is a modern phenomenon; but it has an ancient lineage. Some account of its evolution is given, from natural rights, civil liberties, the history of minorities protection, and the progressive development of human rights in public international law since 1945.

However, the major part of the course relates to post-1945 events concerning the protection of human rights. A section of the course deals with the role and reform of the United Nations to promote and secure the observance, on a universal basis, of international standards of human rights. The development of important legal standards (such as those of non-discrimination) is traced; and the work of various UN bodies in applying human rights is analysed.

The International Covenants on Human Rights are closely studied, with equal emphasis on the Committee under the Civil and Political Covenant, and the Committee under the Economic Covenant.

Comparisons are also drawn with regional attempts to promote and protect human rights, with the European system, the Inter-American system and the African system receiving special attention as regards their treaties, their institutions, procedure, and case-law.

By the end of the course students should have a good understanding of the substantive content of contemporary human rights and of the existing and alternative means available for protecting these rights and fundamental freedoms.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: R. Smith, International Human Rights; S. Joseph, J. Schultz, M. Castan, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: Cases, Materials and Commentary; Jacobs and White, European Convention on Human Rights or Harris, The Law of the European Convention on Human Rights or Janis, European Human Rights Law. A detailed reading list is also provided.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

LL242 Not available in 2014/15*International Protection of Human Rights

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Chaloka Beyani NAB7.04

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students need to have already taken and done well

LL250*Law and The Environment

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Veerle Heyvaert NAB7.06

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The aim of this course is to study and understand how law can be used as a tool to pursue environmental goals and to think critically about law's contribution to local and global environmental protection.

THEMES:

I. General features of environmental law in the UK:

The introductory sessions examine how we understand 'the value of the environment' as an object of legal protection, and how environmental law evolved through time. We study the notions of 'risk' and 'precaution' as key concepts of environmental regulation, and examine how the relationship between Parliament, the Government and the Environment Agency affects the effectiveness of environmental laws and rules in the UK.

II. Controlling space

This section reviews legal strategies for environmental protection through the management of the built environment, parks and nature. It covers planning law, environmental impact assessment, and nature conservation law.

III. Controlling climate change

Studies international law and politics of climate change, the UK approach to climate change mitigation and adaptation, and discusses the pros and cons of market-based regulation as a response to the climate change challenge.

IV. Controlling enterprise

Section IV looks at how environmental harm can be prevented or limited by regulating particular industries (such as heavily polluting industries and the waste treatment sector), by targeting particular products (such as dangerous chemicals), or by focusing on particular activities (such as international trade). We examine how environmental regulation aims to balance between restricting hazardous activities on the one hand, and fostering free enterprise on the other, and review the court's role in adjusting this balance.

V. Remedying environmental harm

The final section examines the role of both case law and regulation in the remediation of environmental harm, paying attention to clean-up of contaminated land, common law and human rights based approaches to compensation, and legal responses to international environmental disasters.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write a formative essay; answer a problem set in writing; and participate in a mock exam.

Indicative reading: There is no set book that covers the entire course, however, several sessions use Bell, McGillivray & Pedersen, Environmental Law (8th edition, Blackstone Press, 2013). Holder & Lee, Environmental Protection, Law & Policy (CUP, 2007) is a good additional source. A detailed reading list is provided for each seminar. Materials that are not sourced from Bell, McGillivray & Pedersen or Holder & Lee are made available on Moodle. Useful introductory books include: Ashford & Caldart, Environmental Law, Policy and Economics, 2008; Lazarus, The Making of Environmental Law, 2004; Holder & McGillivray, Locality and Identity: Environmental Issues in Law and Society, 1999; Chertow & Esty, Thinking Ecologically. The next generation of environmental policy, 1997; Churchill, Warren & Gibson (Eds), Law, Policy and the Environment, 1991; R Carson, Silent Spring, 1962; R Eckersley, Environmentalism and Political Theory, 1992.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Intellectual Property Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Sivaramjani Thambisetty Ramakrishna NAB 7.29

Additional teacher(s): Prof Robert Pottage NAB 7.21

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Content and Scope: Intellectual Property Law consists in the rules determining when, and subject to what conditions, the activity of producing information (broadly conceived) can generate rights to exclude others from access to information. Given that information is an increasingly important source of commercial value within the modern economy, particularly for the entertainment and media sectors and science-based industries, it is not surprising that IP law is such a fast-growing field here and abroad. However its apparently relentless growth is the focus of vigorous debate.

Copyright already provides the legal foundation for the well-established film, music, TV and publishing industries, and its continuing expansion is said by some to be crucial given the trend towards media convergence in the 'digital future', and by others to be a threat to free speech and freedom of access to information. Patents sustain such key sectors as pharmaceuticals, and increasingly now biotechnology, and their availability in this context raise complex ethical and political issues.

Trademarks are central to effective advertising and marketing but at the same time exemplify the tendency of more and more aspects of our cultural landscape to be 'commodified'; they have attracted support and denigration in equal measure for this reason.

This course will provide students with an introduction to the law relating to patents, trademarks and copyright, and to the factors responsible for the continuing rapid expansion of each of these regimes of rights. We will reflect upon the variety of economic, cultural, political and technological pressures for the reform of Intellectual Property Law, and upon the processes by which these become translated into legal initiatives. And we will evaluate critically the implications for economic activity and social life generally of recognising intellectual property rights.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: The recommended text will be Lionel Bently and Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law (4th ed., Oxford University Press 2013), and students will also be required to purchase one of the available edited collections of statutes. For a critical introduction to the field, see Peter Drahos with John Braithwaite, Information Feudalism: Who Owns the Knowledge Economy? (London: Earthscan, 2002); and James Boyle, The Public Domain: Enclosing the Commons of the Mind (Yale University Press, 2008), ebook available free online

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Candidates will be required to answer a total of three questions out of nine (one from each of three sections).

LL253

The Law of Corporate Insolvency

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The Law of Corporate Insolvency forms an increasingly important legal arena, which is now recognised as meriting study in its own right. The last twenty years has seen great strides in the development of corporate insolvency law in England. We have seen the adoption of an enhanced legislative framework and the development of conceptual aspects and jurisprudence of the subject. As the recession of the early 1990's eased off there was a period of reflection and assessment of our insolvency law and procedures. This culminated in major insolvency law reform and legislative changes – reforms which will be well-tested (and debated) in the current times of financial instability.

The course looks at the legal rules affecting distressed and insolvent companies and those concerned with them (for example, creditors, directors and employees) and it assesses the issues and principles underlying a corporate insolvency regime. (Corporate Insolvency Law bears a close relationship to the Law of Business Associations (BA) and students may find that taking BA as well as Corporate Insolvency will give them a broad understanding of major themes relating to corporate activity.)

Outline Syllabus

The Role and Objectives of Corporate Insolvency Procedures

(a) Introduction: Aims and Objectives

(b) The Legal Identity of the Enterprise, the Significance of Limited Liability and the Problem of Corporate Groups

(c) Insolvency Practitioners/Turnaround Professionals

Corporate Borrowing

(a) Outline of corporate borrowing and development and nature of security interests: fixed and floating charges; security by the use of ownership rights.

(b) Types of creditor.

Averting Liquidation: Rescue

(a) Rescue Procedures I

Causes of corporate failure: the decision to rescue or wind-up.

Informal Rescues.

(b) Rescue Procedures II

Receiverships – a continuing role?; Administration Orders; Liability of Receivers and Administrators; Comparisons with US Bankruptcy Code Ch.11; Voluntary Arrangements; Role of Creditors and Management.

Liquidation

(a) Winding-Up and Control of Procedures

(b) Gathering-In the Assets: setting aside transactions; the pari passu principle; preferential claims; unsecured creditors

(c) Secured creditors

(d) Security devices for consumer creditors and commercial suppliers
Repercussions of Corporate Insolvency on Individuals

(a) Company Directors

(b) Employees

The European and International Dimension

Insolvency Regulation of EU – the road to a universal bankruptcy system for member states? International cooperation on insolvency matters and reciprocal assistance between insolvency courts.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Students will be expected to prepare for participation in weekly seminar discussion.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be provided during the course. The recommended book is V. Finch, Corporate Insolvency Law: Perspectives and Principles (2nd ed., 2009) (Cambridge University Press).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

The examination will be based on the full syllabus. Unmarked, unannotated versions of the relevant legislation may be taken into the examination.

Labour Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Astrid Sanders

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This subject builds on contract and tort, and to some extent public law and EU law, but introduces the distinctive legal regulation of employment relations, such as the law of dismissal and discrimination law, and the institutional arrangements of industrial relations, including trade unions and collective bargaining. The course looks at these topics in an industrial relations context informed by sociology and economics. Labour law is an important area of legal practice, with employment law disputes representing one of the largest topics of civil litigation.

Syllabus:

Contract of Employment: the duties of employer and employee; the variety of work relations; vulnerable workers and the personal scope of employment law.

Regulation of the Employment Relation: minimum wage, working time.

Anti-Discrimination Law: implications of the Equality Act 2010.

Dismissal: wrongful and unfair dismissal.

Human Rights in the Workplace: civil liberties of employees at work.

Membership of Trade Unions, Worker Representation, and Collective Bargaining: freedom of workers to associate with each other and to act in association with each other.

Industrial disputes: strikes and other industrial action; rights and liabilities of individual workers who take industrial action; civil liabilities for organising industrial action – the economic torts, the 'golden formula' immunities and loss of immunity – industrial action ballots.

Business restructuring: economic dismissals and redundancy.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Reading lists are supplied for each week's seminar and links are supplied on Moodle for most readings. For a concise overview of the subject a suggestion is: H. Collins, Employment Law 2nd edn (Oxford University Press, 2010). See also Kahn-Freund's Labour and the Law (3rd ed. by P. Davies and M. Freedland, 1983) chapter 1. The leading textbooks are H. Collins, K.D.Ewing, A. McCollgan, Labour Law: Law in Context (2012); S. Deakin & G. Morris Labour Law 6th edn 2012; A.C. L. Davies, Perspectives on Labour Law 2nd edn (Cambridge University Press, 2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Candidates are permitted to take into the examination an unmarked copy of a collection of statutes.

Legal and Social Change since 1750

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines developments in British legal history in the era from 1750 to 1914. Drawing on printed and electronic primary sources, as well as secondary literature, it will explore the changing nature of law in a number of areas. The course begins with an exploration of the nature of eighteenth century criminal justice, and how this was transformed in the nineteenth century. It will then examine the nature of the system of civil justice, and how this was reformed in the era before the Judicature Acts. In the second term, the course will explore topics relating to status, examining the attitude taken by the law to women, workers and slaves. A final set of topics will turn to explore the impact of law on economic change, looking at how the law facilitated the growth of a modern economy.

The course will be taught by a combination of lectures and seminars in the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. Seminars take the form of a short introductory presentation by one or more students followed by class discussion in which all are expected to participate.

Lecture and Seminar Topics

Michaelmas term: The first term is devoted to an examination of the criminal and civil justice systems in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Topics covered in the first term include the prosecution of crime in the era of the 'Bloody Code', the nature of the criminal trial before and after the arrival of criminal barristers in the courtroom, the reform of criminal punishments and the rise of the prison and modern policing. In the second half of the term, the course looks at the system of the civil courts, the nature of civil litigation and the reform of the major courts. It looks at topics including the 'old corrupt' court of Chancery depicted in Dickens's Bleak House and its reform into the modern Chancery Division.

Lent term: The second term is devoted to exploring the impact of law on society and the economy. Topics explored include the law relating to married women and the custody of children, the law of slavery, and the law relating to workers and trade unions. The economic topics addressed include the law relating to the environment, the transformation of tort and contract law, and the law relating to business organisation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Students who choose to be assessed by unseen examination must submit one essay each term. Those submitting a dissertation will produce outlines and drafts that will be used for formative coursework purposes.

Indicative reading: Reading will be suggested during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Students can choose to be assessed by 100% examination or 100% dissertation.

will be examined. Other significant issues in criminology – such as the measurement and extent of crime, the role of demographics (age, race, gender, social class) in the causation of and reaction to crime, and the changing boundaries of criminological research – will also be discussed.

Course content:

1. The history of criminological theory.
2. Trends in crime and crime statistics. How official statistics can be interpreted and the role of crime surveys
3. 'Classical' criminology, rational choice, and crime prevention theories.
4. Individual explanations of crime: biological, psychological and psychoanalytical theories.
5. Sociological explanations of crime, including macro and micro approaches and recent critical theories
6. Criminal justice policy and 'law and order' politics.
7. Discrimination, Inequalities, crime and criminal justice
8. Crime and the mass media

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: Recommended Readings:

Property II

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Neil Duxbury NAB 6.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

This course is compulsory on the BA in Anthropology and Law and is available on the LLB in Laws. It is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students requiring exemption from the Law Society's Part I exam are strongly advised to take this course in their 2nd or 3rd year

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Property I (LL105).

Course content: Property II examines principles of Land Law and the Law of Trusts. Land Law is taught in the first term and Trusts in the second term. The Land Law component of Property II is designed to introduce students to the fundamental principles of the law of real property (i.e. land). The course examines the general principles governing the ownership and occupation of land, including concepts of estates and interests, legal and equitable ownership (trusts of land, including co-ownership and modes of transfer) and title registration. It also considers the law governing specific interests in land (licences, proprietary estoppel, easements, covenants and mortgages).

The Trusts component of the course focuses on general principles of trusts law and examines the circumstances in which trusts arise, the obligations of trustees, and the remedies available to beneficiaries when these obligations are breached. It also considers

Outlines of Modern Criminology

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Meredith Rossner

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Some familiarity with sociological or psychological literature would be an advantage, but is not a prerequisite.

Course content: This half unit course is a general introduction to the study of modern criminology. The course is highly selective and every effort is made to hold the reading requirements within reasonable limits. It is suitable for General Course students, and a limited number may be admitted on application.

The main focus is on the classical and contemporary theories developed over the past two hundred years to explain and predict criminal behaviour in society. The propositions, assumptions, empirical validity, and policy implications of these criminological theories, as well as the social context in which they were developed, the nature and classification of trusts, including the applications and classifications of resulting and constructive trusts, and how the law of trusts relates to and impacts on the law of contract, wrongs and unjust enrichment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 essays in the MT, LT and ST.

Students will be expected to produce four essays (two in the MT, one in the LT and one for the first week of the ST).

Indicative reading: Advice on reading, including textbook recommendations, will be provided and the beginning of the first and second terms. An essay which students might valuably read before the commencement of the course is Peter Birks, 'Before We Begin: Five Keys to Land Law', in Land Law: Themes and Perspectives, ed. S. Bright & J. Dewar (OUP, 1998), 457-86.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Students are required to answer questions on both the Land Law and Trusts components of Property II.

Public International Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Lang

Additional Teachers: Dr Devika Hovell, Dr Stephen Humphreys and Dr Chris Thomas

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in International Relations and History and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the concepts, principles, institutions and debates that define public international law today. We begin with an overview of the international legal system, considering how international law is made, how it relates to national legal systems, and what scope exists for pursuing those who violate it. In this connection we examine the work of the International Court of Justice, the International Criminal Court and the various ad hoc international criminal tribunals, along with judgments of national courts invoking international law. We then take up a range of topical issues of global concern, studying the ways in which they affect and are affected by public international law. The issues to be discussed include: war, trade and investment, and the protection of human rights. We also investigate aspects of the history of international law, its role in relation to the establishment and retreat of European empires, and its contemporary significance and prospects. Overall, our aim is to lay the basis for an informed assessment of the contribution and limits of international law as a force in world affairs.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Students are expected to participate actively in weekly classes in addition to writing assignments during the year. All formative coursework is set by class teachers.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be provided for each topic on Moodle. You are asked to buy M. Evans (ed.), International Law (3rd ed., 2010) and Blackstone's International Law Documents. Some other works to which you may wish to refer include: D. Harris, International Law: Cases and Materials; H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law; M. Shaw, International Law; M. Koskeniemi, From Apology to Utopia; V.

Lowe, International Law; and J. Crawford, Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Sentencing and Treatment of Offenders

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jill Peay NAB6.11

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: Scope

In recent years sentencing issues have been matters of considerable debate and conflict amongst the public and politicians alike. The syllabus is liable, therefore, to alter year by year, with a focus on recent issues and cases. The course examines both the climate in which sentencing occurs and the justifications for punishment, and looks at how courts practically carry out their sentencing function in the context of persistent statutory reform. The various custodial and non-custodial measures available are examined and their effectiveness assessed. Finally, responses to specific groups of offenders, such as 'dangerous' offenders, are explored together with an examination of the reality of treatment within confinement.

Content

The context of sentencing and the justifications for punishment
Sentencing - theory, practice and possibilities for reform

Custody - containment, treatment, mandatory life sentences

Community based penalties - their scope and future

Sentencing Rioters

Mentally disordered, dangerous and persistent offenders - the penal response to problematic groups.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT.

Indicative reading: A list will be supplied at the beginning of the term together with key questions to be addressed in class. The recommended text for the course is A. Ashworth (2010) Sentencing and Criminal Justice. (5th edition) Cambridge University Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Taxation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Michael Blackwell

This course is capped at 15 students.

Course content: Taxation is a topic that pervades political debate and is encountered in every area of life. This is recognised in the LSE Taxation course, where the approach to the subject includes a strong policy perspective. Legal issues are still important, but are placed in their economic and social context. This makes it easier to understand the purpose of the legislation, the reason for the problems encountered and why difficulties remain. So this taxation course suitable for a wide range of students – not just those interested in commercial law. The substantive law element of the course is UK based, but the issues that arise are ones that all jurisdictions have to face.

Students taking this course should be prepared to use a variety of sources ranging from statute and case law to literature on public policy. The precise balance of materials used varies from topic to topic. All the readings set will be accessible and non-mathematical. NO COMPUTATION is required and no knowledge of any discipline other than law is required. The course is open to second and third year law students, and experience suggests that it is equally suitable for both years.

The syllabus is set out below, although there is some variation of topics selected from year to year, depending on the focus of current debate, and in the order of topics. The course starts with an examination of the objectives of a tax system. What is meant by a 'good' or 'fair' tax? What is progressivity in taxation and how might it be achieved? What are the advantages and disadvantages of using the tax system to redistribute wealth or to provide incentives for certain types of behaviour? The course examines how employees and the self-employed are taxed and the differences between them, the taxation of business profits, how this is influenced by accounting developments and the ways in which we can tax companies and capital. We also study tax avoidance – how is this distinguished from evasion and is there a distinction between unacceptable tax avoidance and legitimate tax planning? Other issues that may be covered are taxation of the family and integration of tax and social security, international taxation, and constitutional issues relating to the use of 'discretion' by the Inland Revenue.

Syllabus Topics

1. General principles of taxation, objectives of a tax system, types of taxation, capital and revenue. Structure and administration; powers of HM Revenue and Customs. Outline of the British tax system. Taxation of the individual: rates, allowances and treatment of the family, national insurance contributions.
2. Business income (trading income) – taxation of business profits, income taxation of unincorporated businesses.
3. Tax treatment of capital – capital gains tax; other taxes on capital and on income from capital – objectives and effectiveness.
4. Alternatives to income tax – comprehensive income and other definitions of income; expenditure taxes and other taxes on consumption; indirect taxes (such as VAT).
5. Corporations – legal forms for carrying on a business, reasons for taxing corporations, corporation tax, integration with taxation of individuals, distributions to shareholders, taxation of groups of related companies.
6. Employment income – taxation of salaries, wages and other remuneration of employees and officers.
7. Expenditure – examination and comparison of the deductions available from business and employment income for different types of expenditure; the distinction between capital and revenue expenditure.
8. Statutory interpretation – application and interpretation of tax legislation by the courts; tax evasion and tax avoidance and methods of controlling these activities.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Introductory reading:

Williams and Morse, Davies: Principles of Tax Law, Sweet & Maxwell, 7th ed., 2012)

James and Nobes, The Economics of Taxation, Financial Times/Prentice Hall

Avi-Yonah, Sartori and Marian, Global Perspectives on Income Taxation Law, Oxford, 2011 (copies of these books are available in the Library or electronically)

The principal book for the course is expected to be Lee, Revenue Law Principles and Practice (Bloombury Professional). Tiley, Revenue Law (Hart Publishing) will also be referred to. These texts are supplemented by the other readings that will be set. The cases and readings are readily available electronically or in the LSE library. Vouchers are available for students on the course to purchase of published copies of the tax legislation at a substantial discount. N.B.: most tax law textbooks are revised extensively on an annual basis, so do not buy an old one!

Watch the debates on this year's Autumn Statement (in December) and Budget (in March), particularly in the more serious newspapers and weekly papers, as an introduction to some of the policy issues.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

Selected 'Legislation' may be taken into the examination, with non-verbal markings only.

Media Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Scott NAB6.25

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the legal and administrative regulation of the press and broadcast media. It focuses on three areas: the regulation of content to protect private interests (such as those in privacy and reputation), the regulation of content in the public interest, and the control of news-gathering practices. The course centres on law and regulation in the UK, as influenced by European law. The course is introduced with an overview of two overarching areas: first, the media landscape and the main social, technological and regulatory influences shaping its development, and secondly, the protection of freedom of expression and freedom of the press in national and international law. It then proceeds to review potential restrictions on these values that are aimed at promoting or preserving specific private and/or public interests. The key private interests included are those in reputation, privacy, confidentiality, and intellectual property. The key public interests included are those in preservation of the integrity of the judicial process, the fairness of political debate, the protection from offensive content, and the protection of consumers. The third part of the course focuses on the regulation of journalists' news-gathering practices, and covers such themes as harassment, surreptitious methods (the 'Dark Arts'), cheque-book journalism, protection of sources, and access to state-held information.

Teaching: 9 hours of lectures and 16 hours of classes in the MT. 14 hours of lectures, 14 hours of classes and 20 minutes of help sessions in the LT. 20 minutes of help sessions in the ST.

The course is taught through a series of plenary lecture sessions, and group-based problem exercises in seminars that build progressively over the six weeks dedicated to each of the three parts of the course. In addition, a set of policy-focused questions is set out for consideration in seminars. This contact time will be supported by a series of pre-recorded lectures covering each course theme. Students will also receive supervision in respect of a short research paper.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 15 problem sets in the MT and LT.

Each week seminar group-work will focus on 2 sets of problem exercises, and 1 set of policy-focused themes. The problem exercises are designed to allow students to build the knowledge necessary to complete the summative problem-based assessment. The policy-focused sessions are intended to introduce students to themes that may be picked up as topics for the summative coursework.

Indicative reading: Parkes and Mullis (eds), Gatley on Libel and Slander (Sweet & Maxwell, 12th ed, 2013); Millar and Scott, Newsgathering: Law, Regulation and the Public Interest (OUP, forthcoming 2015); Barendt et al, Media Law, Texts, Cases and Materials (Pearson, 2014); Fenwick and Phillipson, Media Freedom Under the Human Rights Act (OUP, 2006); Robertson and Nicol, Media Law (Sweet & Maxwell, 5th ed 2007); Doley and Mullis (eds), Carter Ruck on Libel and Privacy (6th edn, Lexis Nexis, 2010), Warby, Moreham and Christie (eds) Tugendhat and Christie The Law of Privacy and the Media (2nd edn, OUP, 2011).

Assessment: Coursework (50%, 2000 words) in the MT and LT.

Essay (50%, 4000 words) in the ST.

The assessment for the course comprises two elements: x3 group-based coursework problems and x1 individual coursework essay. During the year, students must complete three problem exercises in groups, following extensive preparatory group-based problem exercises in seminars. These group-based problem exercises are released at the beginning of each part of the course, and the answers developed progressively over the subsequent six weeks. Submission of the group-based answers will take place in week 7 MT, week 3 LT and week 10 LT respectively. The best two grades achieved in these three exercises will comprise 50% of the overall grade for each student for the course. Each student must also complete one 4,000 word research paper on a theme to be agreed with class teachers. The grade achieved for this paper will comprise the remaining 50% of the overall grade for the course. This work is supported through the policy-focused element of each seminar and through short supervision meetings in LT and ST as required.

Half-Unit Dissertation on an approved legal topic

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: Where either a second or third year LLB student is taking the equivalent of three-and-a-half subjects she/he may make up the final half-subject by writing a 6- 8,000 word half-unit dissertation on a legal topic approved by the Law Department. Students wishing to do a half-unit dissertation should first consult their academic adviser in the preceding summer term to discuss:

- whether an essay is a suitable option for the student
- the particular essay topic
- who might be an appropriate essay supervisor

In light of their discussion with their academic adviser, a student wishing to pursue this option should approach a possible supervisor for their approval. The supervisor of the essay must be a permanent or ex-permanent member of staff.

It is not possible to submit a full unit essay, LL299 and half unit essay, LL298 in the same year.

Because this option requires considerable independent study, it is generally not advisable to opt to write a dissertation unless the student has been achieving marks of an upper second class standard in their examinations to date. The essay subject must be of a suitable academic character which has not already or will not have been explored in depth in any taught subject taken by the student but is related to subjects taught in the School. It is necessary for a student to have the approval of both a member of staff who is willing to supervise the essay and the Chair of the LLB Part I and II Exam Board for the proposed essay by 31 October of the year in question. Once they have their supervisor's approval, students will need to make a formal detailed application to the Chair of Exams for approval; a form for this will be circulated to those writing a dissertation early in the MT.

The essay should be word processed and be accompanied by a bibliography. Footnotes can be placed at the end of the text or at the bottom of the page to which they relate (the latter is preferable). The essay should be 6,000-8,000 words in length (including footnotes and excluding bibliography). The supervisor will be available to provide some guidance but it is intended that the student should do his/her own research. The essay should be submitted not later than the first day of the ST.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

LL299

Full- unit Dissertation on an approved legal topic

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: A second or third year LLB student may write a full-unit dissertation on a legal topic approved by the Law Department. Students wishing to do a full-unit dissertation should first consult their academic adviser in the preceding summer term to discuss:

- whether an essay is a suitable option for the student
- the particular essay topic
- who might be an appropriate essay supervisor

In light of their discussion with their academic adviser, a student wishing to pursue this option should approach a possible supervisor for their approval. The supervisor of the essay must be a permanent or ex-permanent member of staff.

It is not possible to submit a full unit essay, LL299 and half unit essay, LL298 in the same year

Because this option requires considerable independent study, it is generally not advisable to opt to write a dissertation unless the student has been achieving marks of an upper second class standard in their examinations to date. The essay subject must be of a suitable academic character which has not already or will not have been explored in depth in any taught subject taken by the student but is related to subjects taught in the School. It is necessary for a student to have the approval of both a member of staff who is willing to supervise the essay and the Chair of the LLB Part I and II Exam Board for the proposed essay, by 31 October of the year in question. Once they have their supervisor's approval, students will need to make a formal detailed application to the Chair of Exams for approval; a form for this will be circulated to those writing a dissertation early in the MT.

The essay should be word-processed and be accompanied by a bibliography. Footnotes can be placed at the end of the text or at the bottom of the page to which they relate (the latter is preferable). The essay should be 12,000-15,000 words in length (including footnotes and excluding bibliography). The essay should be submitted not later than the first day of the ST.

It may be possible to use the essay option to do some work in a subject which is not being offered as a taught course in the year in question. Alternatively, students may be able to use it to do some more detailed work on a topic of particular interest to them, providing that this does not overlap with any course that they are taking to an unacceptable extent. It should be stressed that no member of staff is under an obligation to agree to supervise any proposed essay. However where a member of staff agrees to act as supervisor, students can expect to see their supervisor to discuss their work on a regular basis in each of the first two terms, with at least three meetings in each term.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 15000 words) in the ST.

Competition Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pablo Ibanez Colomo NAB5.16

Availability: This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law and LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: It is widely accepted that competition is the best means to deliver better products at lower prices for consumers. The point of competition rules is to ensure that the expected benefits of rivalry between firms actually materialise. This is an area of the law that applies in a very wide range of scenarios. In some cases, competition authorities take action against powerful firms (think of giants such as Microsoft, Google, or Intel) that have the ability to influence market conditions and to exclude smaller rivals. In others, these same authorities block mergers and acquisitions damaging the competitive process (think of a merger creating a monopoly). They also intervene frequently against attempts by firms to avoid competing by means of secret price-fixing arrangements (the so-called 'cartels').

Competition law has become a major feature of legal systems around the world. It is a discipline with a long tradition in the US and Europe (under the lead of the European Commission). Competition law regimes have now been adopted (and/or actively enforced), inter alia, in jurisdictions like Brazil, China, Hong Kong, India, Malaysia or Singapore. This is a truly cosmopolitan field, in the sense that the relevant provisions are virtually identical in their form and substance around the world and are enforced in very much the same way.

Following an introduction in which competition law is put in its economic and institutional context, this module will address the main substantive and procedural aspects of the discipline.

Topics covered include the following:

- Anticompetitive agreements between firms (including 'cartels' and distribution agreements).
- Abusive practices by dominant firms.
- Mergers and acquisitions, including both mergers between competitors and vertical and conglomerate arrangements.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 5 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 4 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Global Commodities Law

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephen Humphreys 5.12
The course is convened by Dr Stephen Humphreys.

Availability: This course is available on the LLB in Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides a critical introduction to the legal regulation of global commodities, with a focus on the colonial histories of Asia, Africa and the Americas. Taking some of the world's most heavily exchanged primary commodities as examples, we will track the development of their production and consumption, from their domestic origins to their circulation in the global sphere today. The histories of the principle commodities – such as coffee, cocoa, rubber, oil – tell the story of today's global economy in microcosm. Most significantly, their evolving regulation has provided the base for many central elements of the contemporary international and transnational legal architecture. In exploring this history, we will also touch on cross-cutting issues relating to human rights, trade law, environmental law, food security, investment arbitration, anti-slavery, labour law and animal welfare law. We will also be looking at theories of consumption and production more generally, to enrich our discussions of these topics.

Michaelmas term begins with an overview of the global commodity trade and an introduction to terms as well as key legislative instruments, and a look through some basic theoretical and historical texts. This is followed by a series of lectures that situate the regulation of the global economy through the histories of specific commodities, cognizant of the state-formation processes and trans-global networking generally entailed in the consolidation of key commodity markets. What is the role of the state in farming out resource production? What is the relationship between the state and the corporation in the creation and maintenance of markets? In Lent term we will look at the livestock and meat trade, at crops such as corn, oats, soybean and rubber, and finally, at the global trade in oils, metals and gases. How has the legal regulation of these commodities changed over time? And how has this shaped our understanding and expectation of the world in which we live? Finally we will come up to date with a look at current international regimes, such as the WTO, the International Coffee Agreement 2007, the International Sugar Agreement 1992, and the International Natural Rubber Agreement 1995.

The course begins with an overview of the global commodity circulation and an introduction to terms as well as key legislative instruments. This is followed by a series of lectures that situate the regulation of the global economy through the histories of specific commodities, cognizant of the state-formation processes and trans-global networking generally entailed in the consolidation of key commodity markets. Commodities covered will be taken from among the following:

- Cocoa: From the Aztec to the European Empires
- Coffee: A Revolutionary Beverage
- Tea: Asia and the British East India Company
- Timber: Conservation in the 1700s through to REDD+
- Wheat: Colonial Settlers to the Big Five
- Rice: The First Futures Market
- Sugar: Slaves and Sweeteners in the New World
- Cotton: Industrial Revolutions, Civil Wars and the Fair Trade Movement
- Pigs and Chickens: 'A Mobile Source of Fresh Meat' in the Colonies and at Home
- Cattle: Milk, Hide and Steak
- Sheep: Wool and Veal from the Antipodes
- Corn: Feed for Meat, Fuel and Food
- Oats: From England to New England
- Soybean: From Asia to the Americas and Back Again
- Rubber: 'Devil's Milk' in the Belgian Congo and the Amazon Basin
- Palm Oil: From Cooking Oil to Biofuel in West Africa and South East Asia
- Petroleum: Nigeria, the Middle East and the Modern Economy
- Precious and Industrial Metals: From the London Metal Exchange to Blood Diamonds
- Carbon: New Futures

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Students will be expected to submit one 2,000-word essay in MT.

Indicative reading:

Jurisprudence

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emmanuel Melissaris NAB5.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the LLB in Laws. This course is available on the BA in Anthropology and Law. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The aims of the course are: To introduce students to thinking philosophically about the law. To familiarise students with the main methodological, ontological, and normative questions concerning the law and its legitimacy. To provide students with knowledge of some of the most influential legal and political philosophies and their theses on law. To encourage and enable students to think about doctrinal legal questions from a philosophical perspective. To help students develop legal reasoning skills by training them in constructing abstract, philosophical arguments. Some of the themes that the course covers: natural law; conventionalist and epistemic legal positivism; the rule of law; principles and coherence in legal reasoning; law and authority; some central accounts of the legitimacy of the modern state and its law (Hobbes; Kant; Rawls); Marxist approaches to law; law and economics; Arendt's political philosophy and its implications for law.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 18 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 4 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write one essay each term.

Indicative reading: Students are provided with outlines and readings for topics discussed in the Michaelmas and Lent Terms. For introductory and background reading see: J.E. Penner and E. Melissaris, McCoubrey & White's Textbook on Jurisprudence, OUP 2012; Brian Bix, Jurisprudence: Theory and Context (3rd ed.), Thomson Sweet & Maxwell 2003.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours, reading time: 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

French Language and Society 4 (proficiency)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Francois Simon CMK. C802

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed French Language and Society 3 (advanced) (LN130).

An interview with FRANCOIS SIMON OR FLORENCE NICLOT prior to registration is compulsory.

Course content:

- Further advanced (up to proficiency) study of French language within the framework of social sciences and culture.
- dynamic and communicative way the course develops all four language skills (i.e. speaking, listening, reading and writing) through individual and group work, topical discussions, authentic and studio-based multi-media materials.
- The focus is on accuracy as well as communication that advance students' language competence, transferable skills and cultural awareness.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 18 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 21 hours of classes in the LT. 5 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the ST.

Three hours per week, which will feature: (a) Lectures; (b) Oral Classes; (c) Workshops; (d) Tutorials; and (e) Guided study using Language Showroom, IT and web-based material including a virtual learning environment supported by Moodle.

Indicative reading: Students are encouraged to make full use of the resources of French books in the Library as well as reference books. Students are also strongly advised to use the French language resources available on the World Wide Web.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Hua Xiang CMK.C516

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mandarin Language and Society 3 (Advanced) (LN140).

An interview with the course co-ordinator prior to registration is compulsory.

Course content: Further advanced (up to proficiency) study of the Mandarin language within the framework of social sciences and culture. In a dynamic and communicative way the course develops all four language skills (i.e. speaking, listening, reading and writing) through individual and group work, topical discussions, authentic and multi-media materials. The focus is on accuracy as well as communication that advance students' language competence, transferable skills and cultural awareness. At this level, the students are required to read and write up to 3500 Chinese characters.

Teaching: 30 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of classes in the LT. 12 hours of classes in the ST.

Three hours per week, (72hrs in total) which will feature: (a) interactive topical work; (b) oral practice; (c) grammar and vocabulary work; (d) tutorials; and (e) guided study using IT and web-based materials.

Formative coursework: The students will be required to complete weekly exercises. This includes newspaper reading, research projects and online communicative materials.

Indicative reading: X Liu (ed.), 2006, New Practical Chinese Reader, Vol. 5, text book and workbook, Beijing. Beijing Language and Cultural University Press.

Authentic materials from newspaper, web and journals.

English Literature and Society

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angus Wrenn CMK. C614

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations. This course is capped at 32 students.

Pre-requisites: An A-level pass or equivalent is recommended but not required (especially for General Course students).

Course content: (a) Study of 20th century British literature (prose, poetry and drama) in its socio-political context; Study of individual authors (in weekly lectures) - these form the basis of the examination assessment (b) Study of major cultural themes running through the century e.g. Literature of War; Imperialism; Feminism; Modernism; Postmodernism; Political writing - these form the basis of the student's extended coursework essay. (c) Several trips to theatre productions during the year; (d) Extensive use of archive recordings of authors, and video; (e) Students encouraged to draw upon background in their main discipline, and to read widely.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 4 hours of classes in the ST.

Two hours per week, featuring: (a) Lectures on a range of authors and themes; (b) Classes including students' presentations; (c) Revision Workshops; (d) Tutorials.

Formative coursework: Two essays per year; presentations.

Indicative reading: (Primary texts) Conrad Heart of Darkness; T S Eliot The Waste Land; Virginia Woolf Mrs Dalloway; James Joyce Portrait of the Artist Forster Passage to India George Orwell Nineteen Eighty-Four; Larkin Collected Poems; Heaney Collected Poems; (Secondary text) Malcolm Bradbury, The Modern British Novel.

Comparative Literature and 20th Century Political History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angus Wrenn CMK. C614 and Dr Olga Sobolev CMK. C614

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Pre-requisites: Although an A-level pass or equivalent in Literature is useful, it is not an absolute requirement (especially for General Course Students).

Course content: Comparative literature of the twentieth century leading up to and including the Cold War. (a) Study of major authors (prose, poetry and drama, in English translation where relevant) on both sides of the Iron Curtain with a focus on the recurrent cultural themes: Fabianism; Utopia/Dystopia; Socialist Realism/Art with a Social Function; Cold War (b) Use of video-recording related to the texts (c) Several related trips to galleries and theatre productions during the year; (d) Students encouraged to draw upon background in their main discipline, and to read widely.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 8 hours of classes in the ST.

Two hours per week, featuring (a) Lectures on a range of authors and themes; (b) classes including students' presentations; (c) revision workshops; (d) tutorials.

Formative coursework: Two essays per year; presentations.

Indicative reading: H. G. Wells The Time Machine; A. Huxley Brave New World; G.B. Shaw Back to Methuselah; E. Zamyatin We; G. Orwell Animal Farm & 1984; M. Bulgakov The Heart of a Dog; W. H. Auden poems; V. Mayakovsky poems; A. Solzhenitsyn A Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich; A. Makine A Life's Music; M. Kundera The Unbearable Lightness of Being; Ian Fleming From Russia with Love; T. Stoppard Professional Foul; B. Chatwin Utz.

Society and Language: Linguistics for Social Scientists

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Skrandies CMK. C616

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Course content: The course will introduce students to key (socio) linguistic concepts (semantic and pragmatic meaning, discourse, register, genre, dialect, idiolect, sociolect) employed in the analysis of language use as a social process. Students will explore the reciprocal relationship between language and specific social contexts and structures (class, gender, ethnicity), and study the role that language plays in the creation, maintenance and change of social relations and institutions. Important themes are changing attitudes to language and the prestige afforded to particular languages and language varieties. The use of language for academic purposes will be analysed, as will be situations of language contact, multilingualism and the role of translation in intercultural and international communication. The implications and consequences for less widely used languages of the emergence of English (and other widely spoken languages) as global lingua francas will be outlined and discussed.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 4 hours of classes in the ST.

Two hours per week, featuring: (a) Lectures on a range of concepts and themes; (b) classes including students' presentations; (c) revision workshops; (d) tutorials.

Formative coursework: Short essays, linguistic analyses, presentations.

Indicative reading:

- Mesthrie, Rajend (ed) (2011) The Cambridge Handbook of Sociolinguistics, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press

Spanish Language and Society 5 (mastery)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Rafael Penas Cruz CMK. C806

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Pre-requisites: Completion of the Spanish Language and Society 4 (Proficiency) course (LN220) or its equivalent is required. An interview with the course co-ordinator prior to registration is compulsory.

Course content: Further advanced (up to the level of mastery) study of the Spanish language through themes related to Spanish speaking societies within the framework of social sciences and culture. In a dynamic and communicative way the course develops all four language skills (i.e. speaking, listening, reading and writing) through individual and group work, topical discussions, authentic and studio-based multi-media materials. The focus is on accuracy as well as communication that advance students' language competence, transferable skills and cultural awareness.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Two hours per week, which will feature: (a) interactive topical work; (b) oral practice; (c) grammar and vocabulary work; (d) tutorials; and (e) guided study using IT and web-based materials

Formative coursework: The students will be required to complete weekly language exercises

Indicative reading: The following works are core texts:

- Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Cien Años de Soledad;
- Carmen Laforet, Nada;
- Tomas Eloy Martinez, Santa Evita,
- Luis CERNUDA, "La realidad y el deseo", Fondo Cultura Económica, Madrid, 1982,
- Poesia; Jaime GIL DE BIEDMA, : Antología poética (2001); Alianza Editorial, SA; Fuguet, Alberto; Sergio Gomez (Eds),
- Presentación del país McOndo, En McOndo, Barcelona: Grijalbo, 1996;
- Amores Perros (2000) Filmax DVD;
- Ay Carmela! [1990] Arrow Warner Home Video DVD;

Students will be advised to buy any relevant materials at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

French Language and Society 5 (mastery)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Francois Simon CMK802

Availability: Available as an outside option to all undergraduate and General Course students. Students can take this course in any year of their studies following approval from the teacher responsible and subject to their own programme regulations.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed French Language and Society 4 (proficiency) (LN230).

An interview with the course co-ordinator prior to registration is compulsory.

Course content: Course content

- Further advanced (up to the level of mastery) study of the French language within the framework of social sciences and culture. In a dynamic and communicative way the course develops all four language skills (i.e. speaking, listening, reading and writing - including grammar) through individual and group work, topical discussions, authentic and studio-based multi-media materials.
- The focus on accuracy, near native command of the target Language, maximisation of cultural awareness through the latest developments with a particular emphasis on using student centred approach in course delivery, preparing the students to be fully operational in a French speaking company or any other Organisation where near native command of French is an essential requirement.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 10 hours of seminars in the ST.

Two hours per week, which will feature: (a) Lectures; (b) Oral Classes; (c) Workshops; (d) Tutorials; and (e) Guided study using Language (f) grammar. Showroom, IT and web-based material including a virtual learning environment supported by Moodle.

Indicative reading: Students are encouraged to make full use of the resources of French books in the Library as well as reference books. Students are also strongly advised to use the resources available on the World Wide Web. The course is in the process of being supplemented with new activities, topics and themes that underpin French Modern Society.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

LSE100

The LSE Course: Understanding the causes of things

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof George Gaskell KSW4.08

The LSE100 lectures are given by lecturers from a range of departments.

Availability: Compulsory course on all undergraduate programmes: students complete term one in Lent Term of their first year and term two in Michaelmas Term of their second year. The course is not available to General Course students or to second-year direct-entry students.

Course content: The course introduces students to the fundamental elements of thinking like a social scientist. Running through all of the social sciences are questions of evidence, explanation and theory. LSE100 uses current issues of public concern and intellectual debate to explore these questions from the perspective of different disciplines. No important issue can be fully understood through a single lens. The goal of the course is to enable students to complement the intellectual grounding in their discipline with a broad understanding of different ways of thinking. In six three-week modules the course will examine 'big' questions, such as: How should we manage climate change? Do nations matter? Why are great events so difficult to predict? Who should own ideas? Who caused the financial crisis? Through questions like these (this list is only illustrative), students will explore different types of evidence, different forms of explanation and different strategies for abstraction and modelling that are used across the social sciences. The intention is not only to broaden students' intellectual experience, but also to deepen their critical understanding of their core disciplines. The course also helps students to develop the skills necessary to act effectively as social scientists in the world. The focus on the core elements of social scientific reasoning will therefore be accompanied by a strong emphasis on critical thinking, research and communication skills.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students complete formative assessment activities in Modules 1 and 2 in term one, and in Module 4 in term two. These in-class activities may include writing assignments and problem sets or data analysis tasks.

Indicative reading: Readings are module-specific. Class reading packs are provided in hard copy and are all available from the LSE100 Moodle site with additional reading and resource recommendations.

Assessment: Term one: a 400-500 word in-class written assessment activity and a 1,500 word essay. Term two: a 400-500 word in-class written assessment, a group presentation project and a two-hour examination. Students receive an overall mark for the course of Distinction, Merit, Credit or Fail.

MA100

Mathematical Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ioannis Kouletsis

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economic History with Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This course assumes knowledge of the elementary techniques of mathematics including calculus, as evidenced for example by a good grade in A Level Mathematics.

Course content: This is an introductory level course for those who wish to use mathematics seriously in social science, or in any other context. A range of basic mathematical concepts and methods in calculus of one and several variables and in linear algebra are covered and some applications illustrated. It is an essential pre-requisite for any mathematically orientated economics options and for many further mathematics courses. Topics covered: Matrices, reduced row echelon form, rank. Systems of linear equations, Gaussian elimination. Determinants. Vector spaces, linear independence, basis, dimension. Linear transformations, similarity. Eigenvalues. Diagonalization. Orthogonal diagonalization. Complex numbers. Vectors. Functions of several variables, derivatives, gradients, tangent hyperplanes. Optimisation including Lagrange's method. Vector-valued functions, derivatives and their manipulation. Inverse functions, local inverses and critical points, use in transformations. Integration, differential and difference equations. Some applications of the above topics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to complete exercises assigned weekly in the lectures. Written answers to specified exercises are submitted to the appropriate class teacher for evaluation. Success in this paper depends on dealing with this written work as it is assigned, in a regular and systematic manner.

Indicative reading: Ken Binmore & Joan Davies, Calculus, Concepts and Methods; Martin Anthony & Michele Harvey, Linear Algebra, Concepts and Methods.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA103

Introduction to Abstract Mathematics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Graham Brightwell and Prof Bernhard Von Stengel

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business

Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have taken, or be taking concurrently, the course Mathematical Methods (MA100).

Course content: The course is an introduction to the use of formal definitions and proofs in mathematics, and to basic results of elementary set theory, number theory, linear algebra, algebra and analysis. Specific topics covered are as follows: Logic, integers, sets and functions, prime numbers, relations, real and complex numbers, greatest common divisor and modular arithmetic, infimum and supremum, sequences, limits, continuity, groups and vector spaces.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 8 hours of classes and 9 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Students are expected to have one of the recommended textbooks: N L Biggs, Discrete Mathematics (2nd edn) or P J Eccles, An Introduction to Mathematical Reasoning. Further background reading can be found in R Allenby, Numbers and Proofs; M Liebeck, A Concise Introduction to Pure Mathematics; V Bryant, Yet Another Introduction to Analysis; R Bartle & D Sherbert, Introduction to Real Analysis and H Anton, Elementary Linear Algebra.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA107 Half Unit

Quantitative Methods (Mathematics)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Ward

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: This is a basic course in Mathematics for students who have at least at an AS-level in Mathematics, or equivalent, and are able to use basic calculus (some revision of this basic material is given in the lectures). It is also appropriate for students with A-level in Mathematics. Students with A-level Mathematics who are confident of their mathematical skills may also consider the full unit MA100.

Course content: The aim of this course is to develop the basic mathematical tools necessary for further study in economics and related disciplines. To this end we focus on: techniques of calculus (differentiation, partial differentiation, optimisation and integration), methods of linear algebra (use of matrices), and the solution of difference and differential equations. The ideas are taught systematically, with emphasis on their application to economic problems. Examples are used throughout the course for motivation and illustration.

Specific topics are as follows: sets, functions, equations, graphs. Difference equations, sequences, limits. Differentiation, inverse functions, exponential and logarithmic functions. Partial differentiation, chain rule, homogeneous functions. Optimisation in two variables: unconstrained and constrained. Lagrange multipliers. Vector notation and convexity. Matrix notation, systems of linear equations, inverse matrices. Integration. Differential equations.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 9 hours of workshops in the MT. 1 hour of classes and 1 hour of workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: The course follows M Anthony & N L Biggs, Mathematics for Economics and Finance: Methods and Modelling, CUP, 1996. A useful background text which is the basis of a follow-on course is A Ostaszewski, Mathematics for Economics: Models and Methods, Blackwell, 1993. There are many other books with titles like Mathematics for Economists but none of them are close enough for use in this course. Further information will be provided in the lectures.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA110

Basic Quantitative Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Ward and Dr Pavel Gapeev

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance and BSc in Government and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: The course is not available for students with A-level Mathematics (or equivalent). Students with a basic understanding of calculus e.g. AS-level Mathematics (or equivalent) are normally expected to take MA107 Quantitative Methods (Mathematics).

Course content: The course is designed to provide students with the elementary mathematical tools that are needed to study Economics. Students will be introduced to basic mathematical concepts and manipulations. Examples of applying these techniques to a variety of economical and management problems are given throughout the course. Content - Part A: Arithmetic operations, powers and roots; basic algebra; introduction to linear programming; logarithms and exponential growth; sets, functions and graphs; differentiation of functions of one variable; marginal cost and marginal revenue; optimisation of functions of one variable; difference equations; equilibrium and stability in dynamical models. Content - Part B: Introduction to integration; consumer and producer surplus; matrix algebra; systems of linear equations; functions of several variables; partial differentiation; optimisation and the Lagrange multiplier method.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 10 hours of workshops in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: The course will be mostly taught from the lecturers' notes. The following books can provide additional material: T Bradley & P Patton, Essential Mathematics for Economics and Business; E T Dowling, Mathematics for Economists (Schaum's Outline Series); I Jacques, Mathematics for Economics and Business; M Rosser, Basic Mathematics for Economists; M Anthony & N L Biggs, Mathematics for Economics and Finance: Methods and Modelling, CUP, 1996.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA203 Half Unit

Real Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konrad Swanepoel

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103), or some equivalent giving experience with formal proofs, convergence of sequences and continuity of functions.

Course content: This is a course in real analysis for those who have already met the basic concepts of sequences and continuity in R. Here we generalize these concepts to  $\mathbb{R}^n$  and to more general normed spaces and metric spaces. These more general spaces are introduced at the start and are emphasized throughout the course. Topics covered are: metric and normed spaces, open and closed sets, sequences in metric spaces, pointwise and uniform convergence of sequences of functions, series in  $\mathbb{R}$  and in normed spaces, continuous functions between metric spaces, compactness, uniform continuity, the mean value theorem, differentiation of functions between  $\mathbb{R}^n$  and  $\mathbb{R}^m$ , partial derivatives, the Riemann integral.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful: Robert G Bartle & Donald R Sherbert, Introduction to Real Analysis; K G Binmore, Mathematical Analysis: a straightforward approach; Victor Bryant, Yet Another Introduction to Analysis; W A Sutherland, Introduction to Metric and Topological Spaces.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA207 Half Unit

Further Quantitative Methods (Mathematics)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Ward

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Management and BSc in Management Sciences.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have previously taken Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107). It is not available to students who have taken Mathematical Methods (MA100), or equivalent, nor higher level methods courses.

Course content: This is a second course in quantitative methods, following on directly from Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107). This course will contain further algebra and calculus. As with the course MA107, the emphasis will be on applications in economics and finance. Topics covered: Matrix methods in portfolio analysis. Linear independence. Rank of a matrix. Eigenvalues and eigenvectors. Diagonalisation. Linear systems of recurrence equations. Markov process. Second-order recurrence equations. Macroeconomic models. Vector geometry. Gradient and directional derivative. Tangent hyperplanes and the optimal bundle. Resource allocation and Pareto efficiency. Orthogonal matrices and quadratic forms. Critical points of quadratic functions. Taylor's approximation. Optimisation of functions of two or more variables.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: M Anthony & N Biggs, Mathematics for Economics and Finance (Cambridge, 1996); A Ostaszewski, Mathematics in Economics (Blackwell, 1993).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA208 Half Unit Optimisation Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bernhard von Stengel COL 4.12

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) are pre-requisites. Real Analysis (MA203) is desirable, and students who have not done MA203 should contact the teacher responsible.

Course content: The course describes various techniques of optimisation, gives a mathematical presentation of the relevant theory, and shows how they can be applied. Introduction and review of relevant mathematical background Introduction to combinatorial optimisation; shortest paths in directed graphs; algorithms and their running time. Classical results on continuous optimisation: Weierstrass' Theorem on continuous functions on compact set; optimisation of differentiable functions on open sets; Lagrange's Theorem on equality constrained optimisation; Kuhn and Tucker's Theorem on inequality constrained optimisation. Linear programming and duality theory (time permitting). Finite horizon dynamic programming.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Information on important and required texts will be provided at the beginning of the course. Good sources of literature are R K Sundaram, A First Course in Optimisation Theory; N L Biggs, Discrete Mathematics (2nd edition). Additional notes will be handed out throughout the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA209 Half Unit Differential Equations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleni Katirtzoglou

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) are pre-requisites. Real Analysis (MA203) and/or Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) are highly desirable, and students who have done neither MA203 nor MA212 should contact the lecturer.

Course content: The course concentrates on the theory and qualitative analysis of (ordinary) differential equations, although some solution techniques will be considered as well. Special attention will be paid to geometric concepts and the role of differential equations in the theory of dynamical systems. Specific topics covered are: First examples; illustrations of use of the computer package Maple. Existence and uniqueness of solutions. Autonomous 1-dimensional systems. Linear equations and systems: phase portraits; classification of systems in the plane; higher dimensional systems and higher order equations. Nonlinear systems in the plane: local and global behaviour; linearisation and stability at fixed points; Lyapunov functions. General nonlinear systems: attracting sets and attractors; conservative systems and integrals.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Full notes will be handed out throughout the course. A good additional text book is D K Arrowsmith & C M Place, Dynamical Systems - Differential Equations, Maps and Chaotic Behaviour. Other books closely related to R Grimshaw, Nonlinear Ordinary Differential Equations and W A Brock & A G Malliaris, Differential Equations, Stability and Chaos in Dynamic Economics.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA210 Half Unit Discrete Mathematics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jan van den Heuvel

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MA103 Introduction to Abstract Mathematics, or an equivalent course giving a background in rigorous mathematics.

Course content: A second-level course covering some of the main concepts and techniques of discrete mathematics together with its applications. Topics covered: Counting: selections, inclusion-exclusion, partitions and permutations, generating functions, recurrence relations. Graph Theory: basic concepts (graph, adjacency matrix, etc), walks and cycles, trees and forests, colourings. Optional topics include coding theory, designs, and algorithms and their efficiency.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: PJ Cameron, Combinatorics (CUP 1994); NL Biggs, Discrete Mathematics (OUP 2004)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA211 Half Unit Algebra and Number Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konrad Swanepoel

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) and Mathematical Methods (MA100).

Course content: The aim of this course is to continue (from MA103) the study of abstract algebraic structures. There are two main strands in the course. First, we develop further the theory of groups, using permutation groups as a key example. We investigate the important concepts of normal subgroups and quotient groups. Secondly, we introduce rings, and study factorisation in rings, where we also look at some connections with number theory. Groups: Review of basic group theory; permutations and permutation groups; homomorphisms; conjugation, normal subgroups and quotient groups; the first isomorphism theorem for groups. Rings:

basic properties of rings and examples (including polynomial rings, matrix rings, and number rings); subrings, ideals and ring homomorphisms; divisibility in integral domains; greatest common divisors; Euclidean rings and unique factorisation; applications to number theory; principal ideal domains.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Introduction to Algebra, Peter J Cameron (OUP 1988); Rings, Fields and Groups: Introduction to Abstract Algebra, Reg Allenby (Butterworth-Heinemann, 2nd edition 1991)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA212

Further Mathematical Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jozef Skokan and Prof Adam Ostoja-Ostaszewski

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme) and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should ideally have taken the course Mathematical Methods (MA100) or equivalent, entailing intermediate-level knowledge of calculus and linear algebra, linear independence, eigenvalues, diagonalisation, and proficiency in techniques of differentiation and integration.

Course content: This course develops ideas first presented in MA100. It is divided into two halves: calculus and linear algebra. The calculus half explores how integrals may be calculated or transformed by a variety of manipulations, and how they may be applied to the solution of differential equations. This aim is achieved by studying the following topics: Limit calculations. Riemann integral. Multiple integration. Improper integrals. Manipulation of integrals. Laplace transforms. Riemann-Stieltjes integral (permitting application of the Laplace transform to discrete and continuous probability distributions), to a level of detail dependent on time constraints. The linear algebra half covers the following topics: Vector spaces and dimension. Linear transformations, kernel and image. Real inner products. Orthogonal matrices, and the transformations they represent. Complex matrices, diagonalisation, special types of matrix and their properties. Jordan normal form, with applications to the solutions of differential and difference equations. An application to population dynamics. Singular values, and the singular values decomposition. Direct sums, orthogonal projections, least square approximations, Fourier series. Right and left inverses and generalized inverses.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 11 hours of classes in the LT. 5 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: A Ostaszewski, Advanced Mathematical Methods for both halves.

Useful background texts:

(i) for the calculus half: Ken Binmore & Joan Davies, Calculus, Concepts and Methods; M R Spiegel, Laplace Transforms; R A Adams, Calculus.

(ii) for the linear algebra half: Martin Anthony and Michele Harvey, Linear Algebra: Concepts and Methods (Cambridge University Press 2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA300

Game Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ron Perez

Prof Bernhard von Stengel COL 4.12 and Dr Paul Dütting

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of matrices as covered in Mathematical Methods (MA100) or Quantitative Methods (MA107). Some knowledge of probability. Knowledge of economics as covered in Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202).

Course content: Concepts and methods of game theory with applications to economics. Part I: same as for Game Theory I (MA301). Part II: Coalitional game theory - central solution concepts with application: the core, Shapley value, stable sets, weighted majority games, market games, stable matching.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. K Binmore, Playing for Real: Game Theory CUP, 2007; R Gibbons, A Primer in Game Theory, 1992; Mas-Colell, Whinston, and Green: Microeconomic Theory, Osborne and Rubinstein: A course in Game Theory. Supplementary reading: E Mendelson, Introducing Game Theory and Its Applications. Part II: Lecture slide will be provided, as well as, references to selected papers. M Maschler, E Solan, S Zamir, Game Theory.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MA301 Half Unit

Game Theory I

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bernhard von Stengel COL 4.12 and Dr Paul Dütting

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Basic knowledge of matrices as covered in Mathematical Methods (MA100) or Quantitative Methods (MA107). Some knowledge of probability.

Course content: Concepts and methods of game theory with applications to economics. Game trees with perfect information, Nim. Backward induction. Extensive and strategic (normal) form of a game. Nash equilibrium. Commitment. Zero sum games, mixed strategies. Maxmin strategies. Nash equilibria in mixed strategies. Finding mixed-strategy equilibria for two-person games. Extensive games with information sets, behaviour strategies, perfect recall. If time permits: The Nash bargaining solution. Multistage bargaining.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. K Binmore, Playing for Real: Game Theory CUP, 2007; E Mendelson, Introducing Game Theory and Its Applications.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA303 Half Unit Chaos in Dynamical Systems

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Olivier Gossner

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Mathematical Methods (MA100) is a pre-requisite. Background in rigorous mathematical methods, such as provided in Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103), is desirable. In particular, some familiarity with proving theorems would be useful.

Course content: Given a function  $f: X \rightarrow X$ , what is the (iterative) behaviour of  $f^n(x) = f(f(\dots(f(x))))$  ( $f$  applied  $n$  times). What do 'orbits' of  $f$  look like - an orbit has the form  $x, f(x), f(f(x)), \dots$ . Particular emphasis is given to long-term evolution and stability analysis of such systems  $f: X \rightarrow X$ . We explore connections with so-called fractal sets, which are roughly sets that look the same at any degree of magnification, and may have a dimension which is not an integer. We also discuss chaotic maps  $f$ , where  $f^n(x)$  cannot be determined if there is any small uncertainty about  $x$ . Topics covered: Iteration of discrete maps. Orbit analysis. Contraction mapping theorem. Quadratic maps. Bifurcations. Definition of chaos. Sarkovskii's theorem. Fractal sets.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful, R Devaney, A First Course in Chaotic Dynamical Systems; R Devaney, An Introduction to Chaotic Dynamical Systems; E Scheinerman, Invitation to Dynamical Systems. A fun and interesting read might be Gleick, J., Chaos: Making a New Science.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA305 Half Unit Optimisation in Function Spaces

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Adam Ostoja-Ostaszewski

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have attended a course in Mathematical Methods, ideally Further Mathematical Methods (MA212).

Course content: This is a course in optimisation theory using the methods of the Calculus of Variations. No specific knowledge of functional analysis will be assumed and the emphasis will be on examples. This course develops a geometric approach to those optimisation problems which involve the choice of functions. Applications relevant to Economic Theory are studied. It introduces key methods of continuous time optimisation in a deterministic context, including the Calculus of Variations, Pontryagin's Principle and Bellman's Principle. Specific topics include: Introductory examples. Calculus of variations. Euler-Lagrange Equations. Necessary conditions. Maximum Principle. Transversality conditions. Linear time-invariant state equations. Controllability. Dynamical programming. Applications to Economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: A full set of lecture notes will be provided. D. G. Luenberger, Optimization by Vector Space Methods, Wiley, 1969.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA310 Half Unit Mathematics of Finance and Valuation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christoph Czichowsky

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MA313 Probability for Finance is required

Course content: Main mathematical ideas in the modelling of asset price evolution and the valuation of contingent claims (e.g., calls, puts); discrete methods will dominate. Introductory treatment of the Black-Scholes continuous-time model. This course introduces a range of mathematical concepts and techniques of modern finance. It considers discrete and continuous time models for the price dynamics of actively traded assets. It develops the basic principles of risk-neutral valuation of contingent claims, such as call and put options. The course contains some elements of stochastic analysis such as Brownian motion, stochastic integration, stochastic change of variable formula, change of probability measures. These analytic tools are used for the pricing of contingent claims in stochastic models of financial markets. Specific topics studied include: one-period and multi-period binomial tree models; the Black and Scholes model; self-financing replicating portfolios; martingales and conditional expectation; Itô calculus; risk-neutral valuation of call and put options in the absence of arbitrage; the Black and Scholes formula; option deltas, gammas, vegas, and other sensitivities.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided. Background texts: T Bjork, Arbitrage Theory in Continuous Time, Oxford Finance, 2004; A Etheridge, A Course in Financial Calculus, CUP, 2002; M Baxter & A Rennie, Financial Calculus, CUP, 1996; P Wilmott, S Howison & J Dewynne, The Mathematics of Financial Derivatives, CUP, 1995; J Hull, Options, Futures and Other Derivatives, 6th edition, Prentice-Hall, 2005. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA313 Half Unit

Probability for Finance

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eleni Katirtzoglou

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103) or equivalent, together with Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102). Attendance at more advanced courses, eg, Real Analysis (MA203), Further Mathematical Methods (MA212) and/or Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) would be highly desirable.

Course content: The purposes of this course are (i) to explain the formal basis of abstract probability theory, and the justification for basic results in the theory, and (ii) to explore those aspects of the theory most used in advanced analytical models in economics and finance. The approach taken will be formal. Probability spaces and probability measures. Random variables. Expectation and integration. Markov chains. Convergence of random variables. Conditional expectation and martingales, in the discrete case.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Full lecture notes will be provided. The following may prove useful: J S Rosenthal, A First Look at Rigorous Probability Theory; G R Grimmett & D R Stirzaker, Probability and Random Processes; D Williams, Probability with Martingales. ### Algorithms in Java

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Paul Dütting

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Introduction to Abstract Mathematics (MA103), or an equivalent course giving a background in rigorous mathematics.

Course content: Basics of Java programming. The Euclidean algorithm. Time complexity of algorithms. Asymptotic notation. Heaps. Sorting. Recursive algorithms. Stacks and queues. Linked lists. Graphs. Breadth-first and depth-first search. Connectivity and topological sorting. Dijkstra's algorithm. Closest pair in the plane.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: T H Cormen, C E Leiserson & R L Rivest, Introduction to Algorithms, MIT Press 1990 (or 2nd edn, 2001 or 3rd edn, 2009); J R Hubbard, Programming with Java, Schaum's outlines, McGraw-Hill, 2nd edn, 2004; R Sedgewick, K Wayne, Introduction to programming in Java, An interdisciplinary approach, Addison Wesley, 2008; D Flanagan, Java in a Nutshell, 3rd edn, or later, O'Reilly 1999

Algebra and its Applications

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robert Simon

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have passed MA103 Introduction to Abstract Mathematics and, ideally, have taken MA211 Algebra and Number Theory. Students who have not taken MA211 may still take the course with the lecturer's permission. (A small amount of additional reading on their part will be required).

Course content: The aim of the course is to continue the study of abstract algebraic structures and show how these structures can be used to solve concrete problems. There are three strands: Group actions; Rings, polynomials and fields; Applications, including coding and cryptography. Group actions; revision of permutation groups; orbits and stabilizers, the orbit-stabilizer theorem; applications to counting problems. Rings, polynomials and fields: revision of rings; quotient rings; polynomial rings and the Euclidean algorithm for polynomials; irreducible polynomials and factorisation of polynomials. fields; fields as quotients of polynomial rings; construction and properties of finite fields: Applications: Designs and orthogonal latin squares ; Error-correcting codes, including linear codes, cyclic codes and perfect codes; cryptography.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be provided but additional reading is recommended. Discrete Mathematics, N L Biggs, (specifically Chapters 20-24, together with some introductory material from earlier chapters). Introduction to Algebra, Peter J Cameron (OUP 1988); Rings, Fields and Groups: Introduction to Abstract Algebra, Reg Allenby (Butterworth-Heinemann, 2nd edition 1991). Codes and Cryptography, D J A Welsh (Clarendon Press 1988) Codes, N.L. ### Graph Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tugkan Batu and Dr Robert Simon

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MA103 or equivalent course giving a background in rigorous mathematics.

Course content: This course examines the basic concepts and techniques of graph theory. The topics to be covered are: fundamental concepts, flows, connectivity and matchings, colourings, extremal problems. Optional topics include Ramsey theory, matroids, spectral graph theory, or random graphs.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: D. B. West, Introduction to Graph Theory, Prentice Hall 2001; N. L. Biggs, Discrete Mathematics, OUP 2004; J.A. Bondy and U.S.R. Murty, Graph Theory with Applications, North-Holland, 1976; B. Bollobas, Modern Graph Theory, Springer 1998.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MA317 Half Unit Complex Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Amol Sasane

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Solid grounding in mathematics, especially analysis, in particular MA203 Real Analysis.

Course content: The course will cover the fundamental concepts and methods in complex analysis. The basic object of study in the course will be a complex differentiable function in a region, and the far-reaching consequences of the notion complex differentiability will be dealt with in the course. The specific topics that will be covered are: the geometry of complex numbers, complex differentiation, Cauchy-Riemann equations, Cauchy's integral theorem, Cauchy's integral formula, Taylor series. We continue by covering: Liouville's Theorem, Maximum Modulus Theorem, Rouché's Theorem. We also give a brief introduction to Laurent Series and use of the Residue Theorem. The core results will be illustrated with computational examples and applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

MA318 Half Unit History of Mathematics in Finance and Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Norman Biggs

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Course content: This course surveys the development of mathematics from the beginning of history with an emphasis on its applications to finance and economics. Major themes are the development of arithmetic and geometry, the use of algebraic symbolism, the creation of the calculus, geometry, probability, and game theory. In order to give this course a distinctive flavour, we will illustrate these themes with examples taken from the social sciences, broadly interpreted. For example, the algorithms of arithmetic will be illustrated by their applications in finance, rather than astronomy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit written work on a weekly basis. One of these assignments will be a short essay of 1000-1200 words.

Indicative reading: The course is based on source material which will be distributed to students as hard copy. J. Stedall's 'History of Mathematics: A Very Short Introduction' (Oxford 2011) is recommended for background reading.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 1650 words).

The assessed essay is due for submission in the Spring Vacation.

MG100 Half Unit Leadership and Communication in Teams

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Emma Soane NAB 4.02 and Dr Hayley German NAB 4.23

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Course content: This course is designed to provide students with the knowledge, skills and analytical capabilities needed to exercise leadership in organisations. It explores several facets of leadership and considers how leadership develops. The emphasis will be on application of theory, comparing and contrasting approaches to leadership, and self-reflection. The group essay provides the opportunity for students to not only exercise leadership within their group but also apply the theories to a real-life leadership situation. The course examines: leadership and management; trait, behavioural and contingency theories of leadership; individual differences in leadership; the dynamics between leaders and their followers; transformational and transactional forms of leadership; team leadership and co-leadership; leadership communication; leadership development; the future of leadership.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

The Summer Term teaching will be review sessions.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment will be a mock exam during the Lent Term.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the term. The main text is: Northouse, P. (2009). Leadership. Theory and Practice (5th ed.) Thousand Oaks: Sage. Additional readings are: Daft, R. (2010). The Leadership Experience (5th ed.). Mason, OH: Thomson/South-Western. Goffee, R. and Jones, G. (2006). Why Should Anyone Be Led By You? Boston, MA: Harvard Business School Press. Yukl, G. A. (2009). Leadership in Organizations. (7th ed.). Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in March.

Other (5%) in the LT.

Assessment will be 25% group essay (2000 words), 5% Peer Evaluation of individual contribution to the group essay, and 70% Summer Term exam (2 hours). The group essay and peer evaluation will be submitted one week after the end of Lent Term.

MG101 Half Unit

Core Business Disciplines I: Finance and Operations Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr David Newton and Dr Elisabetta Bertero

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: This course is the first part of two integrated core courses in management. The aim is to provide students with an understanding of the drivers of organisational performance and with an introduction to finance. Organisational performance will include process flow analysis, inventory management, assembly line balancing; supply chain management; quality management and scheduling. The Finance part will include an introduction to the financial decisions of firms, in particular capital budgeting; the financial decisions of households; elements of international finance; the role of the financial system in the economy and the flow of funds; causes and consequences of the recent financial crises.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One formative essay of 2000 words will be set in the Michaelmas Term for the Operations Management part and classwork exercises will be set in the Lent Term for the Finance part.

Indicative reading: Krajewski, L. J. and L. P. Ritzman (2002). Operations management: processes and value chains. USR, NJ, Prentice Hall; Hopp, W. J. (2011). Supply chain science. Waveland Press; Hillier, D., Iain Clacher, S. Ross, R. Wetschfield and B. Jordan (2011) Fundamentals of Corporate Finance, McGraw-Hill.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 1 hour and 30 minutes) in the main exam period.

Project (50%, 4000 words) in the MT.

The exam will assess the Finance part of the course; the group project will assess the Operations Management part of the course. Students must pass both project and exam to pass the course.

MG102 Half Unit

Organisational Behaviour

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alexandra Beauregard NAB 4.14 and Dr Shasha Dobrow NAB 4.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with MG203.

Course content: This course introduces students to social science theories and research related to understanding employee attitudes and behaviour. Each week focuses on a different topic investigating individual, group, and organisational issues. Weekly topics include: personality, motivation, emotions, perception and decision making, values, teams, mentorship, justice, the work-life interface, and culture and creativity.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay of 1,500 words in the MT.

Indicative reading: The course relies on journal articles (for example, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behavior. A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Sample texts include the following: Colquitt, J.A., LePine, J.A., & Wesson, M.J. (2009) Organizational Behavior: Improving Performance and Commitment in the Workplace (International edition). New York: McGraw-Hill and Nelson, D.L. & Quick, J.C. (2013) ORGB3. Cengage Learning.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the LT.

MG103

Management, Labour and Work

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eddy Donnelly NAB 4.07

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course was formerly known as ID100 Employment Relations

Course content: The syllabus introduces students to the complex relationships between employers, managers, workers, trade unions and the state. It builds from the perspective of the individual worker and his/her job and proceeds, via discussion of management strategies and trade union responses, to contemporary views on globalisation and its impact on state policy.

The employment relationship in theory. Work organisation and work methods. Emotional labour. Japanisation. Human Resource Management. Pay and reward. Individual and collective resistance at work. Collective bargaining and trade unions. Industrial conflict and the right to strike. Comparative models of employment relations. The role of the state. Corporate governance. Globalisation and migrant work. International labour standards.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: As well as contributing to class discussion, students are expected to provide one piece of written work at the end of each term (MT and LT) in preparation for their final exam.

Indicative reading: The lecture course does not follow a single prescribed textbook. A detailed reading list will be supplied. However the following are useful; M Noon, P Blyton & K Morrell, The Realities of Work, 4th edn, 2013; P Blyton & P Turnbull, The Dynamics of Employee Relations, 3rd edn, 2004; John W Budd, The Thought of Work, 2011; C Frege & J Kelly, Comparative Employment Relations in the Global Economy, 2013, Routledge.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG201

Core Disciplines II: Marketing, Human Resource Management and Information Systems

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Will Venters, NAB 3.13

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is not available to General Course students.

Course content: This course is the second of two integrated core units in management, which aim to provide students with an understanding of the drivers of organisational performance. In this course, we cover perspectives and issues in (i) human resource management, (ii) marketing and (iii) information systems. (i) will include job design, job analysis and competency modelling; recruitment and selection methods; socialization, turnover and retention; training and development; performance appraisal and management. (ii) will include customer behaviour; segmentation, targeting and positioning; product management and diffusion; pricing, placement and promotion; and marketing relationships. (iii) will include data, information and knowledge; the evolution of IS management practices; information systems strategy; information systems projects and organisational change; ebusiness; globalisation and IT; information systems outsourcing; and IT infrastructure. The course will be explicitly integrative and a key part of the assessment process will be an integrative group exercise around a case study.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Three formative assignments will be set, consisting of one mock exam question to be completed at the end of each of the three sections of the course. The purpose of the mock exam is to provide - as realistically as possible - a practice session for the real exam.

Indicative reading: Barrick, M., Feild, H. S., & Gatewood, R. (2011). Selection in Human Resource Management (International 7ed.). Andover: Cengage Learning. Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (40%, 4000 words) in the LT.

MG202

Analytical Methods for Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniela Lup NAB 3.28
Dr Nuno Oliveira NAB 3.20

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

BSc Management students must take either MG202 or MG205 in their second year.

Pre-requisites: ST107 or equivalent is recommended but not required.

Course content: This course will provide students with the knowledge and tools required to perform qualitative and quantitative analysis in support of managerial decision making, and to read and interpret the management research literature. The course introduces the fundamentals of behavioural research design, and provides an introduction to various methods used to gather data, analyse data, and communicate results. In the course, students will: 1) acquire the knowledge needed to act as critical consumers of a wide range of academic and commercial research, 2) acquire some facility in designing valid research and reporting research results, and 3) be exposed to a range of stock knowledge regarding research design and research methods. A particular focus of the course will be on methods which are used in management research, and which are useful in doing applied research within a management context.

Topics covered: Introduction to behavioural research and causality. Designing valid research. Experimental design. Bivariate analysis. Survey design. Multivariate analysis. Measurement analysis. Semi-structured interviews and focus groups. Collecting and coding recorded behaviours. Collecting and analysing network data. Collecting and analysing process data. Communicating results. Forward engineering with data.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be provided with regular opportunities to submit formative work, consisting of both quizzes administered in class and short individual or group assignments to be discussed in class. Students will be expected to provide and receive formative peer feedback on all written assignments during class, and designated written formative assignments will be marked and commented on by course instructors.

Indicative reading: Cozby, and Bates, S 2012. Methods in Behavioral Research, New York: McGraw-Hill; Blumberg, B., Cooper, D. and Schindler, S. 2011. Business Research Methods, Berkshire: McGraw-Hill; King, G., R. Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

Project (25%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Lent Term coursework will be an individual essay; Summer Term coursework will be a group project.

MG203

Organisational Theory and Behaviour

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alexandra Beauregard NAB4.14

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Statistics with Finance and Diploma in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with MG102.

Course content: Individual behaviour including: attitudes, motivation, personality, emotion, work-life balance and stress. Group and inter-group processes including: social networks, cohesion, power, and leadership. Organisational dynamics including: structure, learning, cross-cultural issues, responses to work-life conflict, and change. This course introduces students to social science theories and research regarding individual, group and organisational issues in order to analyse employee behaviour in the context of work organisations.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit three pieces of written work throughout the year, in the form of two unassessed essays and one mock examination.

Indicative reading: A complete reading list will be provided at the start of the course. Sample texts include the following: J Child, Organisations; S Dawson, Analysing Organizations; S Robbins & T Judge, Organizational Behaviour; R Steers & L Porter, Motivation and Work Behaviour.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG205

Learning from Quantitative Data

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jordi Blanes i Vidal (NAB 5.28)

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

BSc Management students must take either MG205 or MG202.

Course content: Simple and Multiple Regression; Hypothesis Testing; Mechanics and Limitations of OLS; Causality; Natural, Field and Laboratory Experiments. Panel Data and Fixed Effect Models. Instrumental Variables Regression. The main aim of this course is to provide a thorough understanding of the quantitative techniques which guide evidence-based managerial decision-making. It seeks to develop a framework in which students can examine whether the predictions of managerial, social or economic theory are supported by empirical evidence. Particular emphasis is made on (a) illustrating the many ways in which evidence is abused in the academic or managerial debate, and (b) trying to establish causality in the relationship between variables. The approach is both formal, as the course makes extensive use of econometric theorems and techniques, and solidly grounded in intuition, as it provides numerous examples of tests of real-life relations. Many of these examples will be illustrated using the STATA software package, and the students will be expected to learn the basics of data manipulation and regression running. A solid base of introductory statistics and probability (equivalent to that provided by ST107) and introductory algebra and calculus (equivalent to that provided by MA107) will be expected.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 6 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: In the classes, students will be expected to have worked on 12 sets of exercises and 8 empirical exercises (studies of real research questions involving actual datasets). Each term one set of exercises will be used to provide personalised feedback to students.

Indicative reading: The textbook for the course is: James H. Stock and Mark W. Watson, Introduction to Econometrics, Second Edition, Pearson, 2007.

Two other very useful (complementary) books are: Christopher Dougherty, Introduction to Econometrics, Third Edition, Oxford University Press, 2007; Jeffrey M. Wooldridge, Introductory Econometrics - A Modern Approach, Third Edition, South-Western, 2006.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

topics to be covered will include distinctive capabilities of firms, organisational design, decision making in firms, organisational routines, managerial leadership and the role of ethics. Particular attention will be given to firms in technology-based industries and the management of innovation and contrasts will be made with public sector management.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce one piece of written work and to do the weekly class exercises

Indicative reading: A reading list will be available to students taking the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG207

Economics for Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kristof Madarasz NAB 5.30 and Prof Saul Estrin NAB 4.32

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Management Sciences. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: EC102 Economics (B) or equivalent is a pre-requisite. This course cannot be combined with Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or Microeconomic Principles II (EC202).

Course content: The objective of the course is to provide students with insights from economic theory which are relevant to applications in managerial decision making. The emphasis is on applying microeconomics ideas to solve problems. Topics covered include consumer theory, production, applications to the labour market, market structure, monopoly, oligopoly, product differentiation, pricing, game theory, decision analysis, bargaining, auctions, and asymmetric information.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare answers to set problems on a weekly basis. Some of this work will be assessed. Assiduous preparation for the weekly tutorials is essential to achieve a good exam performance.

Indicative reading: No textbook covers the whole course but Hal R Varian, Intermediate Microeconomics (1990) is a good reference book for the course. In addition students are advised to use T C Bergstrom & H R Varian, Workouts in Intermediate Microeconomics (1990), and P Milgrom & J Roberts, Economics, Organisation and Management (1992) and J Tirole, The Theory of Industrial Organisation (1990) will also be referenced.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Firms, Management and Competitive Advantage

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Nilesh Dattani NAB5.02

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed EC100 OR EC102 OR equivalent.

Course content: This is not a course on corporate strategy. It focuses on the evolution of thinking about firms and the activity of management and examines firm advantages through conceptual ideas and empirical knowledge. There will be an emphasis on analysing firms as reservoirs of resources and capabilities and

MG208 Half Unit

Business Transformation and Project Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Elzbieta Klecun-Taylor NAB 3.37

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management and BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Projects are the way that organizations manage change. This course aims to review the theory and practice of project management in order to develop a critical understanding of the processes involved in business transformation. It will cover history and foundations of project management, responding to changing environments, governance and control, contracting and relationships, managing risk and organisational learning. The course will focus on issues and challenges raised by business analysis and project management. Example topics of study include: questioning business transformation and projects as a mode of organising; understanding the dynamics and relations involved in IT-enabled business transformation; strategy formation; business process analysis; projects as an organisational form; project escalation; project management approaches and techniques; and change management. To develop students' practical knowledge and skills and to prepare them for future employment as business analysts / project managers students will participate in group work based on a 'real-world' scenarios of business transformation projects. They will also be required to sit a 2 hour exam.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A variety of types of assignments are given for class discussion including exercises and case studies. Written feedback will be given on three pieces of formative assessment related to the group project or to the examination. Formative coursework will include case study analysis. Case analysis forms part of the examination and therefore feedback on case analysis will support the students' preparation for the summative assessment. Reflecting on case studies will also help them to prepare for the group project and contribute to class discussions.

E-business

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Antonio Cordella NAB 3.30

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management and BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course presents an analysis of the management, economics and information systems theories and practices in online business. This is a management information systems course and not a technical course. It is mainly directed at undergraduate students. It focuses on the study of the impact of digital technologies on business strategies and market configurations. Internet-based systems offer new means to operate businesses and to compete in the global marketplace and it is important for future executives and entrepreneurs to understand the economic and managerial implications of these transformations. Students will gain a good understanding of why and how successful companies are taking advantage of e-business, as well as an understanding of the main challenges and risks associated with different e-business models and strategies in a fast changing technological and business environment.

The course is structured into four main sections:

1. Strategic, technological, and economic foundations of e-business
2. E-business and its configurations: B2C and B2B
3. E-business: strategic and organisational challenges
4. Implementation of e-business strategies'

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the LT. 3 hours of lectures in the ST.

Students will be taught in groups of maximum 30 students each. Each group will cover the same content but will be taught separately. Each group will have 1x3 hours lecture per week in the Lent Term.

A 3 hours revision session will be offered in the summer terms

Formative coursework: Students will complete a formative assessment based on previous exam questions.

Each student will receive feedback on the approach to the question, the structure of the presentation, and the argumentation they have proposed to discuss the assigned question.

Aim of the formative work is to offer students the opportunity to self-evaluate their understanding of the subject, to test their preparation, to help them better understand what are the criteria of assessment, and to help them to better identify what is need to achieve the desiderated outcomes.

Corporate Social Responsibility and International Labour Standards

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Sarah Ashwin NAB 4.19

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Human Resource Management and Employment Relations and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Any social science background

Course content: Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) is becoming an expected element of business strategy. This course critically evaluates CSR from a number of perspectives, drawing on material from a variety of different disciplines. Students analyse the emergence of CSR, its theoretical basis, the business case for the adoption of CSR programmes, as well as the social impacts of such policies. The opening lectures of the course focus on globalisation and international labour standards, and provide an understanding of how CSR relates to international regulatory institutions such as the International Labour Organisation. Subsequent lectures focus on the different aspects of CSR mentioned above, as well as topics such as comparative CSR. In terms of the impact and design of CSR policies, the course mainly focuses on issues relating to labour standards. As well as traditional academic readings and case studies, students will critically examine publically available material such as corporate policies and reports. Seminars will follow a mixture of formats including group activities and presentations. The course will include one interactive lecture from a CSR professional.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

MG211

Operational Research Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Giacomo Zambelli NAB 3.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students. This course was formerly known as OR202 Operational Research Methods.

Pre-requisites: Mathematics, Statistics and Probability Theory to the level of the courses Quantitative Methods and Introduction to Statistics for Accounting and Finance is required. In particular, students should have covered elementary distribution theory and the Poisson Process, and have an elementary knowledge of linear algebra. Students must be prepared to use computer packages when required. A further half-unit course MG313 Practical Optimisation Modelling which focuses on applications of Mathematical Programming for modelling real-world problems may be taken after or in conjunction with this course.

Course content: An introduction to all the main theoretical techniques of Operational Research. MG211.1 Operational Research Techniques. Some methodological aspects of operational research, and some of the main OR techniques, including: Critical Path Analysis, Production, Scheduling, Markov Chains, Queueing Theory, Replacement, Simulation, Stock Control, Dynamic Programming, Decision Theory, Theory of Games. MG211.2 Mathematical Programming. Linear programming: from the most basic introduction to sufficient conditions for optimality; duality; sensitivity of the solution; discovery of the solution to small problems by graphical methods, and proof of optimality by testing the sufficient conditions; solution to larger problems by using a computer package. The transportation programme: properties of solution, connection with graph theory, an algorithm for hand computation. Full lecture notes are provided.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 18 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 13 hours of classes and 5 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 5 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Please note that lectures and classes are divided between the two parts of the course (MG211.1 and MG211.2), and that the computer workshops are optional help sessions.

Indicative reading: Recommended books are H G Daellenbach, J A George & D C McNickle, Introduction to Operations Research Techniques, Allyn & Bacon; A Ravindran, D T Philips & J J Solberg, Operations Research; H P Williams, Model Building in Mathematical Programming, Wiley; H P Williams, Model Solving in Mathematical Programming, Wiley; Wayne L Winston, Operations Research, Duxbury Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours and 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

MG228 Half Unit

Managing the Stone-Age Brain

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Satoshi Kanazawa NAB 5.33

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course will introduce second- and third-year Management students to the new science of evolutionary psychology and explore the biological and evolutionary foundations of human behaviour. In the first few weeks, various critiques of and competing perspectives on evolutionary psychology, with regard especially to the relative importance of biological/ evolutionary vs. social/cultural determinants of human behaviour and its sex differences will be discussed and debated. In later weeks, an evolutionary perspective will be applied to various topics in management such as organizational behaviour, occupational choice, productivity, and status hierarchy. The study of business and management is currently dominated by economic perspectives, supplemented by sociological and social psychological perspectives, in American business schools. The course will provide a necessary corrective to the dominance of economics perspectives in the study of business and management by providing biological and evolutionary perspectives and thereby throwing a new light on the old problems (and finding potential solutions for them) in organizations and organizational behaviour. The course will provide evolutionary and biological perspectives on management and organizational behaviour. It will introduce the students to the following topics: Principles of evolution; Principles of evolutionary psychology; Sex differences in preferences, values, cognition, emotions, and behaviour; Physical attractiveness; General intelligence; Evolutionary constraints on human behaviour and their relevance to organizational behaviour.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Each student will give a class presentation on the week's readings and their presentation will be evaluated by the course instructor and the feedback will be given to the student within one week. During the first few years of the course, mock examinations will be given to the students in order to familiarize them with the anticipated exam contents and format.

MG301 Strategy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vincente Alonso Maranon NAB 5.31

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available with permission to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed Economics B (EC102) or equivalent, Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107) or equivalent and Quantitative Methods (Statistics) (ST107) or equivalent, and Economics for Management (MG207) or Microeconomic Principles I (EC201) or equivalent.

Course content: The first half of the course studies strategic situations (competition and rivalry, entry deterrence, standard setting, etc.) and formulates decision models of these situations. While the modelling is based on game theory, students will be taught how players play in real life games according to growing empirical evidence.

The second half of the course studies the way managers interact with the different constituencies inside the firm- workers, board members, and other managers. It presents, again with a heavy emphasis on the evidence, different managerial styles and their impact on firm process, entrepreneurial management styles, organisational change and technology, managerial compensation and governance, and corporate culture. Beyond the emphasis on the content of the course, the course also aims to be a course where students learn to think critically and analytically. Students will learn to read the primary literature, discuss papers in class, interpret the evidence etc. Students will learn to ask questions such as: What is the evidence? What evidence would convince me of the opposite hypothesis?

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative work such as problem sets and mock exam questions will be set.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

MG302 Half Unit Topics in Management Research

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Diane Reyniers NAB 5.22

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MG207 (formerly MN201, intermediate microeconomics) or equivalent and MG205 (formerly MN203, research methods/econometrics) or equivalent.

Course content: This course addresses various topics in management research which will be used to encourage creative and logical thinking, structuring of clear arguments and critical assessment of evidence. The focus is on interpretation of findings rather than statistical or econometric techniques.

The intellectual backbone of the course is applied and empirical economics (including behavioural economics) and finance but wherever appropriate contributions from the psychology, sociology and management literature will be discussed. We will mainly deal with issues which are amenable to rigorous empirical investigation. The course is designed around a set of empirical research papers. Examples of questions considered are whether pain killers are more effective when they are expensive, whether successful entrepreneurs tend to have been juvenile delinquents, gender differences in negotiation.

The main objective of the course is to enable students to comprehend and critically assess the literature on selected management topics, to evaluate statements in terms of evidence and to detect false reasoning or logic.

We investigate aspects of Management and what motivates people in organisations. Topics vary each year (based on student feedback) but examples are Entrepreneurship, Racial discrimination, Negotiation, Experiments on Incentives, Placebo effects of price, Leadership, Corporate Culture.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two take-home mock exam papers.

Indicative reading: A paper course pack containing all materials (lecture slides, articles, class sheets) will be available to students taking the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG303 Half Unit Foreign Direct Investment and Emerging Markets

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Saul Estrin NAB 4.32

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with MG307.

Pre-requisites: BSc Management students should be in their 3rd year. Other students should have taken Economics A or Economics B, or equivalent.

Course content: This course analyses the emergence of firms which operate on a global scale and their current and likely future interactions with emerging markets. It will combine the development of conceptual frameworks primarily through the lectures with the analysis of key cases in the classes. There will also be some external speakers from large international firms and from the banking and consulting community to bring contemporary views and arguments to bear.

Multinational firms have been an increasingly significant aspect of the corporate environment in developed countries since the 1960s, and are responsible for a high proportion of global output, exports and investment, as well as the bulk of foreign direct investment. In the past few decades their activities have been increasingly focused to developing economies, notably those which have liberalised and entered a more rapid growth phase. These economies, emerging markets, include some important world economies including China, India, transition economies such as Russia, and Latin American countries such as Brazil and Argentina. The “new institutional economics” has recently developed as a field to understand the impact of variation in institutions on economies’ performance. This course will focus on how the institutional characteristics of emerging markets affect the choices and behaviour of multinational firms, now and into the future. We commence with the basic framework of analysis of the behaviour of multinational enterprises (MNEs), outlining models of the MNE which draw on transaction cost economics, the eclectic OLI paradigm of Dunning, and more recent concepts such as the resource based view. We will provide an analysis of economic performance and growth in emerging markets building on the new institutional economies and working with a large variety of datasets and sources. The course will then turn to key topics. These will include the determinants of FDI; the effects of FDI on the host economy; entry mode choices; measures of institutional and cultural distance; and the growing importance of multinationals from emerging markets.

Students will work with case material as well as the required reading, and the group project will comprise a case write up, which will be presented prior to submission in class for comment and discussion.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write a 1,000 word essay and will be provided with feedback. They will also be required to present their group project in class.

Indicative reading: R. Caves, Multinational Enterprise and Economic Analysis, 2nd Edition, Cambridge University Press 1996; P. Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 1000 words) in the ST.

Project (25%, 2000 words) in the LT.

LT coursework will be a group project.

MG304 Half Unit

Digital Platform Innovation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Carsten Sorensen NAB 3.11

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course provides students with both practical and theoretical insights into the dynamics of large-scale digital service platforms and their associated ecosystems. The course will begin by exploring the span of business innovation challenges from securing intimate user-technology relationships to the establishment and control of global service ecosystems based on digital platforms. The course examines the components, operations and trends of digital ecosystems, for example focusing on the role of large distributed datasets applied for organisational intelligence of various forms. The course, furthermore, considers social networks both in terms of large distributed datasets, and as innovation platforms relying on associated service ecosystems. The course addresses the general challenges of business digitalisation and platformisation with specific focus on mobile smartphone and tablet platforms. The course will conclude with a broader consideration of digital infrastructures and the dynamics associated with their innovation and growth.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: The classes will engage students in discussions and they will form the foundation for checking, on a continuous basis, the progression of student understanding. Classes will entail small assignments and written and oral feedback will be given during the classes.

MG305 Half Unit

Innovation and Technology Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nathalie Mitev NAB 3.27 and Mr Dimitris Boucas

Jonathan Liebenau NAB 5.14 (on sabbatical in 2014/15)

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Human Resource Management and Employment Relations, BSc in Management and BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The main focus of this course is on how innovative technologies are managed and their consequences.

It includes technological innovation in areas such as telecoms, hi tech industries, pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, space technology, nuclear technologies. Aspects covered are how new industries are created, how existing industries can be transformed by new technologies, linkages between technological development and the creation of wealth, and implementation success and failure of technological systems. Topics include: technology and entrepreneurship, technology strategy, R&D management, patents and intellectual property, disruptive technologies, project escalation, technological disasters. Economic, systems, managerial and sociological approaches will be compared using a variety of case studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. Lectures will be shared with MSc students.

Formative coursework: Classes are based around reading and discussing selected journal articles and case studies from the course study pack. Formative feedback is provided on class participation. In addition, students will present an essay plan in preparation for the final case-based essay, on which formative feedback will be provided.

MG306 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 Managing Diversity in Organisations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alexandra Beauregard NAB4.14

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Human Resource Management and Employment Relations and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

The course will be capped at 15 students.

Pre-requisites: None, but some background in either Organisational Behaviour (MG102 or ID200) or Human Resource Management (MG201 or ID290) would be useful.

Course content: The primary aim of the course is to develop students' understanding and critical awareness of issues associated with managing a workforce characterised by diversity in age, gender, race, religion, disability, and sexual orientation. The course endeavours to combine academic rigour with a practical focus on promoting equality, diversity and inclusion in the workplace, enabling students to both develop a critical understanding of relevant theoretical and empirical literature and apply acquired knowledge to specific diversity management scenarios. Seminars will require participation in group exercises designed to enhance students' appreciation of the wide range of issues associated with categorizing individuals as members of different groups, on whatever basis.

Students will become familiar with the drivers of increased workforce diversity, the psychological and sociological theories underlying discrimination and exclusion, current employment legislation related to diversity in the UK, and the barriers to equality of opportunity in the workplace for minority groups. Students will examine "best practice" in diversity management programmes and learn to critically assess organisational policies and practices for managing workplace diversity with regard to their ability to enhance organisational performance and avoid costly litigation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Lectures will be shared with MSc students, but separate classes will be held for undergraduate students.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit an essay of 1,800 words

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Key texts include:

Danowitz, M. A., Hanappi-Egger, E., & Mensi-Klarbach, H. (Eds.). Diversity in organizations: Concepts and practices. Basingstoke, UK: Palgrave Macmillan. Kirton, G., & Greene, A-M. (2010). The dynamics of managing diversity: A critical approach. Oxford, UK: Elsevier.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG307 Half Unit International Context of Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Nilesh Dattani NAB5.02

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with MG303.

Course content: The course aims to apply social science theory to the analysis of the conduct and management of transnational activities; to critically appraise concepts such as globalisation, regionalisation, national competitiveness, transnationality of firms, etc. in the context of international management structures and processes; to delineate the international political, economic, social and legal structures and environments within which the activity of management takes place. The topics to be covered will include: the nature of the contemporary global political economy; the globalisation of business, finance and trade in goods and services; Global competition; the transnational corporation in the global economy; the tension between globalisation and regionalisation; the international trading order; the international monetary regime; the impact of culture on global business; the changing position of the state in the global economy; the new diplomacy of states and firms.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce one piece of written work and do the weekly class exercises.

Indicative reading: P Dicken, Global Shift: Mapping the Changing Contours of the World Economy (6th edn), Sage Publications (2011); R W Griffen & M W Pustay, International Business: A Managerial Perspective (7th edn), Pearson Prentice-Hall (2013); O Shenker & Y Luo, International Business, (2nd edn) John Wiley (2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG308 Half Unit Simulation Modelling and Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alicia Mejia-Salazar

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Elementary statistical concepts and experience of standard computer software is assumed.

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce students to the concepts, techniques and applied aspects of the development and analysis of simulation models. The course will cover two main approaches for modelling problems bound by uncertainty (stochastic behaviour): Monte-Carlo Simulation (static problems) and Discrete Event Simulation (dynamic problems). Topics covered will include: types of uncertainty; types of simulation modelling; sampling methods; the simulation process; structuring problems for simulation; running simulation models; analysing simulation outputs; risk analysis using simulated models; testing and validating simulation models; applications of simulation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Three individual or small-group assignments will be required during the course.

Indicative reading: JR Evans & DL Olson (2002) Introduction to Simulation and Risk Analysis. Prentice-Hall: Upper Saddle River, NJ; AM Law (2006) Simulation Modelling and Analysis. McGraw-Hill: Boston, 4th ed.; M Pidd (2004) Computer Simulation in Management Science. Wiley: Chichester, 5th ed.; S Robinson (2004) Simulation - The Practice of Model Development and Use, Wiley: Chichester; D Vose (2008) Risk Analysis - A Quantitative Guide, Wiley: Chichester, 3rd ed.

Assessment: Project (100%, 2000 words) in the ST.

An individual management report (maximum 2000 words) describing the modelling and results from a simulation study of a realistic decision problem. The problem will be defined by the end of the LT, the project should be completed by the beginning of the ST.

MG309 Half Unit

International Human Resource Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Virginia Doellgast

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: None for students on the BSc Management degree. Students on other degrees and General Course students require permission of the instructor. Background in human resource management, employment relations, or sociology of work is recommended (e.g. ID100, ID205, SO212).

Course content: This course examines the human resource management (HRM) strategies of global corporations, with the aim of understanding both the causes of different strategic choices and the consequences of these strategies for diverse stakeholders. In course modules, we will evaluate the strategic choices facing global corporations, including the choice between adopting highly centralized or predominantly decentralized HR policies; HR considerations in the outsourcing and offshoring of work; and the role of HRM in managing international mergers and acquisitions. A central area of concern will be to analyze how institutional and cultural factors affect HRM policies and outcomes across the 'global supply chains' of MNCs.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation and 1 exercise in the LT.

Indicative reading: Edwards, T. and C. Rees. (2011) International Human Resource Management: Globalization, National Systems, and Multinational Companies (2nd Edition). Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (20%, 2000 words).

MG310 Half Unit

Risk and Decision Analysis for Management and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gilberto Montibeller NAB 3.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MA107 and ST107, or the equivalent.

Course content: This course is focused on the analytic ability to make strategic decisions. Strategic decisions are hard to make, requiring large commitments of resources, involving long-term consequences that are hard to predict and multiple conflicting strategic objectives that are difficult to balance in the presence of risk and uncertainty. The course will present the cutting edge developments in risk and decision analysis, which allow the modelling and analysis of such decisions. (This is a course that is a natural complement for MG311, which aims at improving the intuitive decision abilities to make strategic decisions.)

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 pieces of coursework in the LT.

Indicative reading: Indicative reading:

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG311 Half Unit

Behavioural Decision Science for Management and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Barbara Fasolo NAB 3.15

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Management Sciences. This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MA107 and ST107, or the equivalent.

Course content: This course develops intuitive decision abilities and decision style, to better understand how we and others normally decide. We examine heuristics and biases that make strategic decisions challenging and learn ways around these obstacles. Strategic decisions are hard to make, requiring large commitments of resources, involving long-term consequences that are hard to predict and multiple conflicting strategic objectives that are difficult to balance in the presence of risk and uncertainty. This is a course which is a natural complement for MG310, which aims at improving the analytic ability to make strategic decisions via modelling and decision analytic techniques.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 piece of coursework in the MT.

MG312 Half Unit

Extreme Organisational Behaviour: Examining behaviour in non-normative organisational contexts

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tara Reich and Dr Chia-Huei Wu

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: MG102 or ID200.

Course content: Extreme OB seeks to understand atypical forms organisational phenomena. Alternative forms of organisations and unique individual circumstances have become more commonplace in recent years; however, OB theories—designed to apply to “typical” workplace behaviour and contexts—have not kept pace. The emphasis in this course will be on critically evaluating existing OB theories as they relate to extreme forms of workplace behaviour (e.g., workaholism, pro- and antisocial behaviour) and contexts (e.g., military, hospital, and surf culture). Weekly topics include isolated and high pressure work environments, passion work, virtual and flexible teams, and compliance and proactivity.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 pieces of coursework (1 essay outline and 1 mock exam) in the MT.

Indicative reading: The course relies heavily on journal articles (for example, Academy of Management Journal, Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Organizational Behaviour). An extensive reading list is provided at the start of the course. Indicative readings include: de Croon, E. M., Sluiter, J. K., Blonk, R. W., Broersen, J. P. J., & Frings-Dresen, M. H. W. (2004). ## MG313 Half Unit

Practical Optimisation Modelling

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Thomas Lidbetter NAB 3.20

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have a knowledge of Mathematics and Statistics to the level of MA107 (Quantitative Methods - Mathematics) and ST107 (Quantitative methods - Statistics), or ST102 (Elementary Statistical Theory). OR202 is not a prerequisite but is advisable to be taken previously or in conjunction with the course.

Course content: Mathematical Optimisation is one of the most powerful and widely-used quantitative techniques for making optimal decisions. The course has a pragmatic focus and aims at enabling students to model and solve real-life management problems. An overview is provided on fundamental technique, most importantly linear and integer programming, emphasising modelling and solution concepts and methods (e.g. feasibility, optimality, duality, multiple objectives, using binary variables for modelling, network models). The students will learn to formalise management problems using linear and integer programming models, to implement these models using specialised optimisation software, and to analyse and interpret the results, reflecting on the limitations of the models.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 13 hours and 30 minutes of classes and 7 hours of help sessions in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of classes and 2 hours of help sessions in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 projects in the MT.

Indicative reading: H. Paul Williams: Model Building in Mathematical Programming, Fifth Edition, Wiley 2013. F S Hillier and G J Lieberman: Introduction to Operations Research, McGraw-Hill

D Bertsimas and J N Tsitsiklis: Introduction to Linear Optimization, Athena Scientific. A Ravindran, D T Philips, J J Solberg: Operations Research: Principles and Practice, Wiley. AIMMS Optimization Modeling Handbook, Paragon Decision Technology (available online)

Assessment: Project (100%).

MG314 Half Unit

Principles of Marketing

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Haider Ali

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Principles of marketing will include an introduction to the 3C's (Customer, Competition, Company), Marketing Strategy - particularly Segmentation, Targeting & Positioning, and the 4P's - Product, Price, Place, Promotion. Contemporary issues in marketing taught in lecture, will be brought to life by classes dedicated to examining the application of these ideas through the use of case studies looking at marketing problems faced by organisations such as the London Olympics Games Organising Committee, Barack Obama's use of technology throughout his election campaign, as well as more traditional consumer products companies such as Starbucks and Mountain Dew.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 2 hours of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 other piece of coursework in the MT.

Formative assessment will take the form of one group case write up which will be specified at the beginning of the course – this will be presented in class according to a published timetable. There will also be an opportunity to submit a practice exam, completed privately in exam conditions for formative assessment.

Indicative reading: Philip Kotler and Kevin Keller (2011), Marketing Management (14th edition), Pearson PrenticeHall Alex Chernev (2011), Strategic Marketing Management (6th edition), Cerebellum Press Philip Kotler and Gary Armstrong (2001), Principles of Marketing (9th edition), Prentice Hall Lambin, J-J, Chumpitaz, R. & Schuiling, I. (2007), Market-driven management: Strategic and operational marketing (2nd edition). London: Palgrave Macmillan

Further references will be provided during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

MG315 Half Unit

Marketing Action Learning Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mrs Jill Nurse

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Principles of Marketing (MG314) or Core Disciplines II: Marketing, Human Resource Management and Information Management (MG201) plus 2 x 2 hour additional seminars in week 1.

Course content: This course will build on theoretical concepts taught in Principles of marketing or MG201, by applying these theories and concepts to a real life situation. Working in groups, students will develop a marketing plan for a new product/service launch; from ideation through to setting marketing launch budgets, and considering Return on Investment. With support from the course leader, who has herself been involved in business start-ups, and outside commercial guest speakers/consultants, students will get the opportunity to use knowledge gleaned from many management courses to craft a compelling business plan. Every year some groups decide to pursue their ideas by actually becoming entrepreneurs and launching their products for real. Could you be our next marketing success story?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 4 hours of seminars and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

The two two-hour week 1 seminars are compulsory for students who have previously only taken MG201. Students who have previously taken Principles of Marketing (MG314) do not need to attend these sessions.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 other piece of coursework and 2 other pieces of coursework in the LT.

In addition to the final report, there are three intermediate midterm requirements – Formative assessments.

- i) One page memo drafting the scope of the project area
  - ii) Mid Term Report One – proposing the market segment to be targeted (based on relative attractiveness)
  - iii) Mid Term Report Two – Research Plan
- Indicative reading: Malcolm McDonald, Marketing Plans: How to Prepare them, How to use them, 7th Edition, Wiley Business Model Generation, Osterwalder & Pigneur, Wiley

Assessment: Project (90%, 5000 words) and presentation (10%) in the LT.

The project will be completed in a group. A Group Evaluation Form will be required, where students' comments on their peers can affect the final grade allocated.

Logic

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall LAK3.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: We reason or make deductions all the time - both in intellectual disciplines and in everyday life. For example, a scientist will test a particular theory by reasoning that if that theory were true then some other claim, one that can be checked observationally or experimentally, would have to be true as well - that is, by showing that some observationally testable claim is deducible from the theory. Mathematics is of course concerned with proofs and proofs are deductive inferences. Finally, philosophy is centrally concerned with arguments or deductions. To take one example, many have argued that the presence of evil in the world is incompatible with the existence of an all-powerful, all-knowing, all-merciful god as proposed in, for example, Judaeo-Christian theology. That is, they have claimed that if you assumed that there is such a god, then it would follow, or you could infer that, there would be no evil in the world. But since there is evil, it follows that there can be no such god. More mundanely, we reason, or make inferences, all the time - though we don't always think of it that way.

Deductive Logic is the study of such inferences - it therefore has an enormously broad scope. Different disciplines have different ways of garnering information in the first place (the way that we arrive at a scientific theory is different from the way that we arrive at an axiom in mathematics or a thesis in philosophy), but the way that we reason from that information is the same no matter what the discipline. The main task of logic is to give an explicit characterisation of those inferences that are correct, or as we shall say, VALID (and hence differentiate them from those that are invalid). Logic tells you exactly when some conclusion really does follow from some premises and when it does not.

The course begins with a simple system called propositional or truth-functional logic, which despite its simplicity captures a great range of important arguments. The system of predicate logic that we study next is, however, still more powerful and provides the logical basis not only for ordinary inferences but also for inferences in the sciences. In both the case of propositional and of predicate logic, the course also covers other notions, such as the consistency of a set of sentences, and the independence of one sentence from a set of assumptions, that are closely related to validity of inference. Finally the course covers some issues in the foundations of logic - to do with truth and sets.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework will take the form of a number of computer based quizzes and a number of regular exercises. Both of these will be set on the basis of the material covered in lectures. In the case of the computer based quizzes, students are required to complete them before a specific deadline; these will be discussed in class. In the case of the regular exercises, students are required to complete these and to be ready to present and discuss answers in the associated class; some of these will be formatively assessed by the class teachers. Successful completion of both the quizzes and the regular exercises is regarded as a prerequisite for admission to the examination for this course.

Indicative reading: Detailed course notes are provided and are intended to be sufficient reading for the course. However for those who like to have a book the one whose treatment is closest to that adopted in the lectures is P. Suppes Introduction to Logic (Van Nostrand).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PH103

Reason, Knowledge and Values: An Introduction to Philosophy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Khoury

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available on the BSc in International Relations and BSc in Social Policy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: In his Letter to Menoeceus, Epicurus (341-271 BC) advises us that the successful study of philosophy will help one to "live like a god among men." The aims and objectives of this course are more modest. Reason, Knowledge and Values provides an introduction to analytical philosophy by using classic and contemporary texts to study a selection of philosophical problems. It aims to acquaint students with some of the central questions of philosophy and to engage students in critical analysis of classic answers to these questions by authors including Plato, Wittgenstein, Popper, Nagel, Frankfurt and others. It also aims to develop students' ability to think about and discuss philosophical issues systematically, critically, and patiently, and to develop their philosophical curiosity and imagination. Students should complete this course with knowledge of the basic types of philosophical argument and of the following questions and some classic answers to them:

- What is the meaning of life?
- Does morality depend on religion?
- Is morality relative?
- Is the existence of evil compatible with the existence of God?
- What is the relationship between determinism, free will, and moral responsibility?
- Do animals think?
- What is the nature of human rationality?
- Do we know anything for certain?
- Is there any difference between science and pseudo-science?
- What is the relation between science and philosophy? Students should also develop the ability to:
- Think clearly and thoroughly about philosophical issues.
- Understand a philosophical text on its own terms: determine the aims the author sets him- or herself, consider the meaning of words, concepts, and expressions particular to the text and the argument; ask questions about the context in which the argument is situated.
- Critically evaluate arguments: distinguish valid from invalid, sound from unsound, deductive from inductive, plausible from implausible arguments.
- Debate and write about these issues in a philosophical manner.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 5 hours of workshops in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 5 hours of workshops in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST. Parallel to this course, we will run a short five week course on 'Argumentative Writing in Philosophy' with practical advice to improve your writing style and with writing exercises. Students in the BSc Philosophy and Economics and in the BSc Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method are required to attend (5 hours of workshops in either MT or LT) and do all assignments. Other students are invited to do so.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays per term.

Indicative reading: The readings will be articles and excerpts from books and will be made available via Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Philosophy of Science

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Bryan Roberts

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Science is chock full of miraculous predictions, shocking revolutions, and utterly strange results that few science fiction writers could have ever dreamed of. What makes science so special? This course is a tour of the philosophical underpinnings of modern science. Some of the questions we will tackle include: What is a scientific theory? What is the logical structure of confirmation by experiment? Are unobservable entities like quarks and gluons real? What are causes and effects? Does science undergo revolutions? More generally, our inquiry will cover the following kinds of questions:

1. metaphysical questions of what science is and is about;
2. methodological questions of how science works; and
3. some conceptual questions that arise in the context of the special sciences.

No background in any science is needed for this course; everything you need to know will be covered. In Michaelmas Term, our topics will include: the nature and definition of philosophy of science and of science (weeks 1-3); scientific realism (weeks 4-5); thought experiments and confirmation of theory by experiment (weeks 6-8); reduction and laws of nature (weeks 9-10). In Lent Term, we will turn to: how science represents and explains the world (weeks 11-12), the nature of causes and effects (weeks 13-14), scientific research programmes and revolutions (weeks 15-16), as well as some conceptual issues in the special sciences (biology, physics and the social sciences, weeks 17-20).

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write 2 formative essays per term, submit a few short answer questions before each class/seminar, and participate in class discussion.

Indicative reading: P. Godfrey-Smith: Theory and Reality: An Introduction to the Philosophy of Science. C. Hitchcock (editor): Contemporary Debates in Philosophy of Science.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

PH203

Philosophy of the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jason Alexander LAK. T501b

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in International Relations, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: No formal pre-requisites, but PH103 Reason Knowledge and Values: An Introduction to Philosophy or equivalent is recommended.

Course content: Philosophical issues concerning the nature of social scientific theory and its applications.

Topics to be covered will include some or all of the following: the explanation and interpretation of action; naturalist and hermeneutic social theory; the nature of social facts; reductionism and methodological individualism; functional and structural explanations; rationality and relativism; the role of values in social science; social norms; the construction of social reality; methods of evolutionary explanation in the social sciences; philosophical and methodological critiques of evolutionary psychology. In addition, philosophical problems of particular social sciences such as anthropology, sociology, and economics will also be addressed.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays per term and to give class presentations.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list may be found on the Moodle page for the course. Useful preliminary background readings include: The Philosophy of Social Science Reader Francesco Guala and Daniel Steel (eds); Daniel Little, Varieties of Social Explanation; Alex Rosenberg, Philosophy of Social Science; Martin Hollis, The Philosophy of Social Science; Brian Skyrms, Evolution of the Social Contract. A useful anthology is Readings in the Philosophy of Social Science, edited by Michael Martin and Lee McIntyre.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the LT.

PH211

Philosophy of Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Joseph Mazor CONNAUGHT 3.01 and Dr Alexander Voorhoeve LAK 401

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method, BSc in Politics and Philosophy and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Economics A (EC100). Intermediate microeconomics and/or public economics recommended but not required for the material in the Michaelmas Term of the course.

Course content: The first term, 'Welfare Economics', covers several topics in the analysis of public policy, including efficiency and its critics; optimal taxation and its critics; cost-benefit analysis; public goods; externalities; fair prices; paternalism and behavioural economics; and the ethics of the discount rate.

The second term falls into two parts.

Part A: 'Markets and Morals' covers key historical and contemporary thinkers on the moral advantages and disadvantages of market institutions. Among others, we will cover Bernard Mandeville's thesis that 'Private Vices' lead to 'Public Benefits'; David Hume's account of how self-interest and sympathy combine to generate our moral code; Adam Smith's analysis of the working of the 'Invisible Hand' and of the vices and virtues of commercial society, and Marx's idea that markets lead to the improper 'commodification' of non-market goods. We will also cover contemporary debates on the moral limits of markets, focusing especially on the question which goods ought (not) to be for sale.

Part B: 'The Value of Economic Models' focuses on questions in the philosophy of science, including, 'Does it matter that economic models have false assumptions?'; and 'What makes for a good (or bad) model?'

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 5 hours of help sessions in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 5 hours of help sessions in the LT.

Each lecture will be followed by a non-mandatory 30-minute Q&A 'help session' for interested students. This 'help session' will not cover new material. Instead, it will allow some discussion with the lecturer of the material just covered in the lecture. Students who are unable to regularly attend this session may still take the course.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay and 2 presentations in the LT.

Indicative reading: L. Robbins, "The Nature and Significance of Economic Science"; A. Sen, "Equality of What?"; D. Hausman and M. McPherson, "Economic Analysis, Moral Philosophy, and Public Policy"; John Broome, "Discounting the Future"; C. Sunstein and R. Thaler, "Preferences, Paternalism, and Liberty"; B. Mandeville, "The Fable of the Bees" (excerpts); D. Hume, "A Treatise on Human Nature" (excerpts); L. Heilbroner, "The Essential Adam Smith (Reader)"; A.O. Hirschman, "Rival Interpretations of Market Society: Civilising, Destructive or Feeble?"; K. Marx, "Capital" (excerpts); M. Friedman, "Capitalism and Freedom" (excerpts); D. Satz, "Why Some Things Should Not Be for Sale: The Moral Limits of Markets"; J.S. Mill, "On the Definition and Method of Political Economy"; M. Friedman, "The Methodology of Positive Economics". Additional readings will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

PH213

Scientific Revolutions: Philosophical and Historical Issues

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall LAK 3.02

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: No prior systematic knowledge of physical and biological science is presupposed.

Course content: The course examines a number of fundamental issues in philosophy of science, as they arise from instances of important theory-changes (so-called 'scientific revolutions') in the history of science. It is therefore by no means a 'straight' course in history of science: it looks at historical episodes to test and/or illustrate philosophical theses about science and its development. It consists of two parts: in the first term Professor Worrall considers some cases from physics, particularly the "Copernican Revolution", its development by Kepler, Galileo and Newton, and some fundamental changes in the accepted theory of light in the 18th and 19th centuries; and in the second term Dr Birch considers some general issues associated with the 'Darwinian Revolution'. PART A (First term - John Worrall)

1. The Copernican revolution: the switch from the Ptolemaic geocentric view of the world to the Copernican heliocentric view was probably the greatest revolution in human thought ever: What justified the switch? Was Ptolemaic theory definitively refuted by the data? Was Copernican theory simpler? Was the Church's view that Copernican theory should only be thought of as an instrument for calculating astronomical data purely theologically motivated or does it have some scientific rationale? What role was played in the eventual acceptance of the Copernican view by predictive success? Do we need to invoke social or other non-intellectual factors to explain why this 'revolution' occurred?

2. Galileo: Galileo and the telescope: are all observations 'theory-laden' and does this mean that there is a subjective element to all theory-choices?

3. The Newtonian revolution: What was the relationship between Newton's theory and Kepler's and Galileo's laws? What does this tell us about theory-change in general?

4. 19th Century 'revolutions' in Optics: the switches from the corpuscular theory to the wave theory of light and from the wave theory to the electromagnetic theory. What do these cases of theory-change tell us about the twin theses of scientific rationality and scientific realism?

PART B (2nd term - Jonathan Birch)

In the second half of the course, we examine the 'Darwinian revolution' precipitated by the publication of Darwin's Origin of Species in 1859. We proceed to consider the lasting impact of Darwinian thought on the biological and social sciences — and on society as a whole.

Topics covered include:

Darwin's argument: What is the structure of Darwin's argument in the Origin? Is it a good argument? What were its main intellectual influences?

Darwin's critics: Why were many early readers of the Origin sceptical of its central claims? How do these criticisms differ from the present-day critiques offered by 'Intelligent Design' theorists? Are any of these criticisms justified?

Biology after Darwin: Is it true that 'nothing in biology makes sense except in the light of evolution'? How did Darwin's ideas transform our understanding of basic concepts such as 'species' and 'function'?

Darwin and society: How did Darwin and his contemporaries apply Darwinian ideas to human behaviour? How have more recent research programmes (such as 'sociobiology') attempted to do so? Do the social sciences need a 'Darwinian revolution', or are there limits to the power of Darwinian explanation in a human context? Extending Darwin: Are we on the verge of an 'extended evolutionary synthesis'? If so, what should be included in it, and how should it differ from traditional neo-Darwinism?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write two essays per term of 1500 words maximum, and to give class papers.

Indicative reading: Background reading: T S Kuhn, The Structure of Scientific Revolutions; I Lakatos 'Falsification and the Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes' in his The Methodology of Scientific Research Programmes, Philosophical Papers 1; G Holton (revised by S Brush): Theories and Concepts in Physical Science. Recommended reading: The central text for PART A is T S Kuhn, The Copernican Revolution, Harvard University Press. Suggested Introductory Reading for PART B Darwin, C. (1859) On the Origin of Species. [Out of copyright; various editions available] Dennett, D. (1995) Darwin's Dangerous Idea. Penguin. Kitcher, P. (2007) Living with Darwin. Oxford University Press. Lewens, T. (2007) Darwin. Routledge. Sober, E. (2011) Did Darwin Write the Origin Backwards? Prometheus.

For each topic there will be handouts including (i) a list of essential reading and suggestions for further reading and (ii) 'study questions' to guide your work. Readings for specific topics will be made available electronically

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in the ST.

PH214

Morality and Values

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Michael Otsuka LAK.3.03 and Dr Andrew Khoury LAK.4.04

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Michaelmas Term: Morals (Michael Otsuka weeks 1-5; Andrew Khoury weeks 6-10)

In weeks 1-5 of MT, Michael Otsuka will discuss the ethics of harming and saving from harm: (i) Should one save the greater number from harm?; (ii) Can contractualism justify the saving of the greater number when and only when we ought to?; (iii) Should one be solely concerned with how badly off people are, or should one also care about inequality?; (iv) Does it make a moral difference that a person is less well off than she could have been?; (v) Why is it permissible to divert a tram so that it runs over one rather than five, whereas it is impermissible to kill a single individual in order to redistribute his vital organs to save the lives of five? (a.k.a. 'the trolley problem').

In weeks 6-10 of MT, Andrew Khoury will cover the following more theoretical topics in moral philosophy: (vi) Moral intuition; (vii) Kantian moral theory; (viii) Moral luck; (ix) Virtue ethics; (x) Concern and moral worth.

Lent Term: Politics (Michael Otsuka all ten weeks)

Lent Term will be devoted to the topics of justice and legitimacy. We will begin with the following questions: What does justice require? Does it demand the redistribution of income from rich to poor in order to create a more egalitarian society? We'll discuss the answers to these questions that John Rawls and Robert Nozick have provided. Rawls argues that such taxation is just, since it would be endorsed under fair conditions in which people are deprived of knowledge of whether they happen to be rich or poor, talented or unskilled. Nozick argues that redistributive taxation is unjust because on a par with forced labour. In addition, we'll consider their answers to the following questions: When it is unjust to constrain the liberties of some in order to prevent harm to others? What sort of equality of opportunity for jobs and university places does justice require? Are people entitled to compensation for historical injustices? What are the just conditions of acquisition of unowned natural resources? In answering the last question, we will also draw on the writings of John Locke, whose related views in his Second Treatise on the legitimacy of government we will also consider, along with the Locke-inspired views of Thomas Jefferson.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to participate in class discussions and to write two essays per term.

Indicative reading: John Taurek, 'Should the Numbers Count?' Philosophy & Public Affairs, 6 (1977) 293-316; Derek Parfit, 'Equality and Priority', Ratio, 10 (1997): 202-221; Derek Parfit, Reasons and Persons, Oxford University Press; Mark Timmons, Moral Theory, 2nd ed., Rowman & Littlefield; Immanuel Kant, Groundwork of the Metaphysics of Morals; John Rawls, A Theory of Justice, revised edition, Harvard University Press; Robert Nozick, Anarchy, State and Utopia, Blackwell; John Locke, Second Treatise of Government.

Set Theory and Further Logic

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Makinson, David

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Logic (PH101).

Course content: The aim of the course is to render students of philosophy familiar with the elements of naive set theory, classical logic, and modal logic. From set theory, the course covers both 'working' set theory as a tool for use in formal reasoning, and 'conceptual' set theory of philosophical interest in itself particularly in its treatment of infinite sets, cardinals and ordinals. From classical logic, the course deals with propositional and first-order inference from both semantic and axiomatic viewpoints. The material on modal logic presents the main modal propositional systems and their analysis using relational models. Throughout, a balance is sought between formal proof and intuition, as also between technical competence and conceptual reflection.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write one essay each term on a topic from a list and are supposed to hand in solutions for two sets of problems.

Indicative reading: Sections of: Makinson, David 2012 Sets, Logic and Maths for Computing, 2nd edition. Springer; Cameron, Peter 1999 Sets, Logic and Categories. Springer; Sider, Theodore 2010 Logic for Philosophy. Oxford University Press.

Governing Knowledge: Foundational Issues in Science Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Peter Dennis

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Policy makers typically take an interest in three aspects of scientific activity: agenda (What should be researched?); ethics (Which research practices should be permitted?); and dissemination (How should the results of research be made available?). We'll investigate the extent to which policy makers should be allowed to exert influence in these areas, and what good policies might look like in each case. Topics include (inter alia) democracy and peer review; privatisation; 'useless' and 'forbidden' knowledge; clinical equipoise; science teaching in schools; and the role of public intellectuals.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will write a 2,000 word formative essay, due in week 5 of the Michaelmas Term.

Indicative reading: Brown, M. (2009) Science in Democracy. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press. Dewey, J. Democracy and Education. Kitcher, P. (2003) Science, Truth, and Democracy. ### Scientific Method and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Katie Steele

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Policy decisions should be responsive to our best evidence. But what does that mean? How should we negotiate conflicting evidence? Can some evidence be disregarded due to cultural and political biases? What should we do when there is little evidence available about the issues at hand?

The course is divided into three main topics.

The first topic concerns the strength and the quality of the available evidence. This is a central issue in the 'evidence-based' policy-and-medicine movement. Are randomised controlled trials really the gold standard? Can evidence be statistically significant without being scientifically or practically significant, and vice versa? What is the role of quantitative versus qualitative evidence?

The second topic concerns the relationship between scientific and policy aims. To what extent should individual rights be compromised to enable scientific research? What issues arise when scientists interpret and measure ethically-loaded concepts like poverty, well-being or bio-diversity? How should broader social-political values influence priority-setting in public science?

The final topic concerns the role of the scientist as policy advisor.

What is the 'Precautionary Principle' and how is it used in policy decision-making? What does it mean to say that there is a scientific consensus? Does expert knowledge of scientists constitute a threat to democratic processes?

Examples referred to in the course are drawn from various areas of science in policy-making, including climate, conservation, international development, poverty, education, medicine, and health.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 3 essays and 1 presentation in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course. Useful background readings are: Cartwright, N. and Hardie, J. (2012) Evidence-Based Policy: A Practical Guide to Doing it Better; Mackie, J.L. (1980) The Cement of the Universe; Howson, C. and Urbach, P. ### Problems of Analytic Philosophy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Anna Mahtani

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Pre-requisites: PH103 Reason, Knowledge and Values.

Course content: Short description: Some central topics in metaphysics, epistemology, the philosophy of mind and the philosophy of logic and language. Topics may vary by year. More detailed description: This course covers some of the philosophical questions that have occupied the greatest minds of analytic philosophy.

We start by exploring three problems in epistemology and metaphysics: (i) Scepticism. Does the external world exist? Might we be no more than brains in vat (or computer programmes), and our apparent experiences illusory? Do we have the cognitive means to confidently reject this hypothesis? (ii) Causation. Can we give an analysis of what it is for one event to cause another event? Causation is clearly more than mere correlation, but it is notoriously difficult to spell out what else is required. (iii) Time. Here we consider a famous argument to the conclusion that time is not real. We then move on to the philosophy of language and logic: (i) Meaning. We consider how something (such as a string of squiggles on a piece of paper) comes to have meaning. (ii) Definite Descriptions and Names. What are logicians doing when they give 'formalizations' of bits of natural language? We reflect on the difficulty of this project, taking as our example the task of formalizing definite descriptions and proper names. (iii) Paradoxes. We grapple with some puzzles and paradoxes: the paradox of the heap and the surprise exam paradox.

Finally we address some contemporary questions in the philosophy of mind: (i) Consciousness. What constitutes consciousness? Do lower animals have consciousness? Can inanimate objects (such as robots), whose behaviour may be indistinguishable from human behaviour in some respects, have consciousness? (ii) Personal identity. Are you the same person as you were when you were six years old? What does it mean for objects and, more specifically persons, to be the same across time? And does this matter? Do you care whether you exist tomorrow, or would a perfect replica of you do just as well? (iii) Free Will. To what extent is our behaviour determined by outside forces? Is an action ever freely chosen? How does this affect our views about moral responsibility?

Lectures are taught alongside PH501 postgraduate students.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to participate actively in their classes and to write 3 formative essays, each with a 2000 word limit. None of these may be a draft of the summative assignment.

Indicative reading: We will read one or two papers or extracts each week, which will be available via Moodle. Some of the papers that we will read are written by early or mid 20th Century authors, such as Bertrand Russell (a chapter from The Problems of Philosophy), George Edward Moore ('Proof of an External World'), and Elizabeth Anscombe ('Causality and Determination'). Other readings are more recent, including papers and extracts from Derek Parfit (extract from Reasons and Persons), Timothy Williamson (extract from Vagueness), Thomas Nagel ('What is it Like to be a Bat?'), Frank Jackson ('What Mary Didn't Know') and Peter van Inwagen ('The Incompatibility of Free Will and Determinism'). Specific readings will be announced in a detailed syllabus.

Philosophy and Public Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Andrew Khoury and Dr Alexander Voorhoeve

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course offers critical reflection on the design and evaluation of public policies from the perspective of moral and political philosophy. To this end, we study a range of theories and concepts that are used in policy evaluation. We often discuss and evaluate them by focusing on specific policy proposals. The course addresses questions such as: 1. What is well-being, how is it measured, and how should it be measured? 2. When, if ever, is paternalism justified? 3. What is the role of personal responsibility in determining people's claims on public resources? 4. When, if ever, is equality in the distribution of goods (such as health, income, or well-being) important? 5. How should we evaluate risks of harm and chances of benefit to people? 6. When is it permissible to harm others in self-defence? 7. What are our rights to freedom of expression? 8. Is torture ever justified? 9. What are the limits on privacy? 10. What moral principles govern our treatment of non-human animals?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT and 1 essay and 1 exercise in the LT.

Business and Organisational Ethics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gabriel Wollner

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Management, BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This introductory course to business and organisational ethics is divided into three parts. The first part raises normative questions about the structure in which firms operate, including questions about the proper scope of markets and questions of distributive justice. The second part outlines a framework for incorporating moral principles into the decision-making of business professionals. The course introduces basic approaches in normative theory, explains how these approaches relate to standard ways of managerial and economic decision-making and discusses to what extent business professionals are bound by ordinary moral requirements. The third part focuses on firms and corporations as units of moral concern, with a particular focus on their role in international and global affairs. The course discusses justice and democracy at the workplace, the significance of international labour standards, how business professionals may or may not respond to practices like bribery and insider trading, and how responsibility is properly distributed between corporate and individual actors.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: Two essays of 1500 words

Indicative reading: Arthur I. Applbaum (2000), Ethics for Adversaries, Princeton University Press
 Robert Audi (2005), 'The Place of Cost-Benefit Analysis in Business and the Professions', Business and Professional Ethics Journal, 24 (3), 2-21. Norman E. Bowie, (2001), The Blackwell Guide to Business Ethics (Blackwell Philosophy Guides), Wiley-Blackwell

Genes, Brains, and Society

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Jonathan Birch

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics and BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course examines, from a philosophical perspective, the ways in which recent developments in genetics and neuroscience challenge our conceptions of what we are — and what we could become.

Topics covered include:

Human nature: Does the concept of 'human nature' have any biological basis? Can we distinguish between those traits which are part of 'human nature' and those which are not? And is 'human nature' fixed, or can it be altered by technological means?

Sex and gender: Are 'sex' and 'gender' the same thing? Are gender categories natural or social? Are there robust psychological differences between men and women? If so, are they explained by genes or by culture? And should we reconcile ourselves to these differences, or should we try to eliminate them?

Race: Do races exist? Is there any objective biological basis for racial categorization, or are races socially constructed? Does the concept of 'race' have a future, or will human societies soon become racially undifferentiated?

Free will and responsibility: Has neuroscience debunked the notion of 'free will'? If so, can we still be held responsible for our actions? Should neuroscientific data be used to predict—and prevent—wrongdoing?

Right and wrong: Has neuroscience shown that morality is more a matter of emotion than reason? Can we use neuroscience to help us choose between ethical theories, and to help us improve our own behaviour?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to submit two 1,500 word essays, one of which will be a draft of the assessed essay.

Indicative reading: Suggested introductory reading:
 Fine, C. (2011) Delusions of Gender. Icon Books.
 James, M. (2011) "Race", in the Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy [URL: <http://plato.stanford.edu/entries/race/>].

Emotion, Cognition and Behaviour: Science and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Jonathan Birch.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the (i) philosophical foundations and (ii) ethical, social and political implications of contemporary cognitive science. No background in either philosophy or cognitive science is required.

Topics covered include:

Part I: Foundations

Thought as computation: What does it mean to say that thought is 'computational'? What is getting computed, and how? Are there limits to the 'computer' analogy?

The boundaries of thought: Are thoughts wholly 'in the head'? How might they extend beyond it? Where does cognition begin and end?

The fate of 'folk psychology': Are there really such things as beliefs and desires? Or is the 'common sense' conception of human thought radically mistaken?

'Dual-process' theories of cognition: Do cognitive processes come in 'fast' and 'slow' varieties? Is the mind partitioned into two systems? Or is the true picture more complicated than this?

Part II: Consequences

Emotion and morality: Is explicit moral reasoning nothing more than the after-the-event rationalization of snap judgements made in the emotional heat of the moment? If so, where does that leave ethics?

Implicit bias: Could we be unaware of our own racial and gender biases? Are we responsible for the decisions they influence? And is there anything we can do about them?

Improving decisions: Can policymakers exploit cognitive science to 'nudge' our behaviour in the direction of desirable social outcomes? If so, should they?

Cognitive enhancement: What are the prospects for enhancing human cognitive capacity by technological means? What are the ethical limits? Are there any?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT.

Formative coursework: One formative essay and comments on a draft of the assessed essay.

Indicative reading: Crane, T. (2003), The Mechanical Mind. Routledge. Haidt, J. (2012), The Righteous Mind. Allen Lane/Penguin. Thaler, R. H. and C. R. Sunstein (2008), Nudge. Yale/Penguin. Kahneman, D. (2011), Thinking Fast and Slow. Allen Lane/Penguin.

Global Justice

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Alice Obrecht

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: This course addresses normative challenges that arise from globalization with a particular focus on the global economy. In doing so it raises foundational questions in moral and political philosophy (e.g., about the grounds and scope of justice), it reflects questions of method (e.g., about how to do empirically informed normative theory able to guide the action of real world actors), and tackles applied public policy issues (e.g., of how to make the international financial system more just). The course is divided into three parts. The first part examines how principles and values traditionally used to morally assess the political and economic institutions of domestic society apply beyond the nation state. The questions discussed include: What are normatively significant differences between the domestic basic structure and the international order? Do conditions of coercion or reciprocal cooperation give rise to obligations of distributive justice? Do individuals possess human rights simply in virtue of being human, or should we think of such rights as arising within particular political practices? The second part focuses on particular aspects of global capitalism and its institutions. Beginning with the problem of global poverty, which raises empirical and normative questions about the nature of both the interactions and obligations between various actors in the global economy, the course explores what moral principles apply to the practice of global trade, the international financial system and the distribution of natural resources. The third part explores different ways of bringing the global economy in line with the normative requirements that apply to it. Particular attention will be given to questions like: What is the promise of international taxation as an instrument for making the global order more just? Under what circumstances, if any, may the victims of global injustices resort to violence and war as a means of bringing about justice? How should policy makers balance the need for short-term improvements with the aspiration of long-term transformation?

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: 2 formative essays.

Indicative reading: Dobos, Ned, Christian Barry, and Thomas Pogge (eds.), Global Financial Crisis: The Ethical Issues. ## PH231 Half Unit Evidence and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Worrall LAK 3.02

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Although the emphasis throughout will be on ideas rather than formal techniques and although all the ideas will be explained simply and intuitively, much of the evidence relevant for policy is evidence about probabilities and so the course will centrally involve issues about the correct interpretation of probability and statistics. Although no detailed formal manipulations will be required, students will need to feel happy thinking about the intuitive ideas underlying probability and statistics.

Pre-requisites: Although the emphasis throughout will be on ideas rather than formal techniques and although all the ideas will be explained simply and intuitively, much of the evidence relevant for policy is evidence about probabilities and so the course will centrally involve issues about the correct interpretation of probability and statistics. Although no detailed formal manipulations will be required, students will need to feel happy thinking about the intuitive ideas underlying probability and statistics.

Course content: Good policy decisions - whether concerning climate, conservation, international development, poverty, education, medicine, health, or whatever - require a rationally-based view of whether the proposed policy will (or is likely to) bring about the intended outcome: will reducing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions reduce global warming? will mass mammography decrease deaths from breast cancer? will reducing class sizes enhance scholastic achievement? The obvious suggestion is that such views are rationally-based just in case they are based on evidence. Reducing class sizes, for example, is a good policy for enhancing scholastic achievement just in case there is evidence that the policy works. But what counts as evidence? What happens when different kinds of evidence pull in opposite directions? Are certain types of evidence more telling than others? And if so, why? Does evidence that the policy works in one country mean that we should have confidence that it will work in another country? These are the central issues addressed in this course. It might seem initially that only experts, only scientists involved in the field, can tell what counts as good evidence. But this is not true. You can learn how to be 'evidence-savvy', how to ask the right questions about evidence, without needing to know the detailed science involved.

Very few, if any, policies are guaranteed always to work in every member of the population to which they are applied. Nearly always the issue is whether the policy will increase the probability of the desired outcome: is it probable that mass mammography will reduce breast cancer deaths? is it probable that reducing CO<sub>2</sub> emissions to extent x will decrease global warming to extent y? will making drug D for condition C available on the NHS have a positive effect on the average (i.e. not for every patient suffering from C but probabilistically)? So an important part of the course will be involved with probabilities, statistics, risk-assessment and the like.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: Gigerenzer, G. (2002) Reckoning with Risk: Learning to Live with Uncertainty; Cartwright, N. and Hardie, J. (2012) Evidence-Based Policy: A Practical Guide to Doing it Better; Worrall, J 'Evidence in Medicine and Evidence-Based Medicine', Philosophy Compass 2007.

This will be supplied at the beginning of the course via an electronic pack organised through the Library

Assessment: Exam (67%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (33%, 2000 words) in April.

The summative essay can be a more developed version of the second formative essay in the light of feedback.

Essay on an Approved Subject in Philosophy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marie Milofsky

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Philosophy and Economics, BSc in Philosophy, Logic and Scientific Method and BSc in Politics and Philosophy. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The essay may be on any topic falling within the scope of the philosophy courses for Philosophy.

Selection of topic: Candidates should have the subject of their essay approved by their tutor.

Arrangements for supervision: The essay should reflect the candidate's own views but must develop out of some established part of the philosophical literature. Students should carefully discuss the topic and approach of the essay with their tutor who will also advise on background reading. Students may ask a member of the Department other than their tutor to supervise the essay if this is more appropriate. Students must have regular meetings with their supervisor and keep a formal record of their work and progress.

Teaching: 1 hour of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 7000 words) in the ST.

Essays must be submitted by 5pm June 2nd. They should be 5,000-7,000 words, and should be typewritten.

Social Psychology

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christopher Tennant STC.312

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Social Policy and BSc in Sociology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. This course is available to General Course students.

Course content: Theories and concepts such as: self and identity; attitudes; communication, influence and persuasion; groups, organisations and crowds; social cognition, e.g. how our expectations influence our perception of the social world, and how our culture and social world influences those expectations. Applications such as: exploring the meaning of public opinion polls; the social and psychological sources of prejudice; rioting; economic behaviour; crime and eyewitness testimony; media influence; leadership and motivation; the commons dilemma.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 5 essays in the MT and LT.

Students are expected to produce four assignments as coursework, two in MT and two in LT. The first assignment comprises of three separate short answers responding to a choice of questions, comprising up to 1,200 words in total. The other three assignments are essays of 1,500 words each. These will be assessed by the class teachers. Students are expected to give class presentations.

Indicative reading: Recommended reading: M Hogg & G Vaughan, Social Psychology, 7th edn, Prentice Hall, 2014; C.A. Sanderson, Social Psychology, Wiley, 2009; M Hewstone, W. Stroebe, K. Jonas. This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology.

This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course discusses major areas of application of social psychology to real-world issues. Emphasis is put on the complexities of translating theory into practice and on the theoretical developments which are prompted by research on topical social issues. A recurrent theme is the reciprocal interaction between theory and practice in relation to social issues of theoretical interest and practical importance. The interplay of theory and practice will be examined in relation to selected topics which illustrate the application of social psychology in real world settings, such as: crime and anti-social behaviour; mass media; gender and sexuality; evolution and social relationships; identity and community; prejudice and racism; language and communication; religion and cultural beliefs.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Attendance at all classes and submission of all set coursework is required.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to write four essays during the Session, which will be assessed by the class teachers, and to give class presentations. These will not count towards the final examination result.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be distributed at the beginning of the course. The following are useful preliminary reading: . P Boyer, Religion Explained: The Human Instincts That Fashion Gods, Spirits and Ancestors. Vintage, 2002; D. Sperber, Explaining Culture, Blackwell, 1996; D M Buss, The Evolution of Desire. Strategies of Human Mating, Basic Books, New York, 1994; X Chryssochoou, Cultural Diversity: Its Social Psychology, Blackwell Publishing, Oxford, 2004; H Himmelweit & G Gaskell, Societal Psychology, Sage, 1990; D Matsumoto & D Juang, Culture and Psychology (3rd edn), Thomson Wadsworth, 2004; F M Moghaddam, Social Psychology: Exploring Universals Across Cultures, W H Freeman and Co. 1998; J McGuire, Understanding Psychology and Crime: Perspectives on theory and action, Open University Press, 2004. Additional references and a synopsis of lectures and class topics are distributed in the first lecture of the series and are also available in Outlook/Public Folders/Departments/ Social Psychology/ PS203

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

The Foundations of Social Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Isabel Shutes OLD 2.46

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course examines the nature of social provision in different policy fields and for different groups of people. This work is contextualised by reference to different kinds of welfare systems in developed countries, changes in role of the state and other providers of welfare, and changes in ideas and key concepts. The course considers how social problems are defined and policies formulated with reference to the fields of poverty, health, education, housing and income maintenance; discusses key concepts (for example, citizenship) and the position of different social classes, generations, ethnicities, and men and women; explores the changing boundaries between the roles of the state, the market, the family and the voluntary sector in the mixed economy of welfare; and considers the economic, social and political factors that are important to an understanding of policy formation and policy change.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

(Including 2 revision classes in the ST).

Formative coursework: Students are expected to submit four pieces of written work (two in MT and two in LT), and to read for and prepare contributions to class discussion each week.

Indicative reading: P Alcock, M May & Rowlingson, K (Eds), The Student's Companion To Social Policy, 4th edn, 2012; J Baldock, N Manning & S Vickerstaff (Eds), Social Policy, 4th edn, 2011; A Deacon, Perspectives on Welfare, 2002; H Dean, Social Policy, Short Introductions, 2nd edition, 2012; H Glennerster, British Social Policy Since 1945, 2007; C Pierson, Beyond the Welfare State, 1998; C Pierson and F G Castles (eds), The Welfare State Reader, 2000, P Thane, The Foundations of the Welfare State, 1982; These are introductory texts; a full reading list will be provided in the first lecture of MT.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the ST.

Sociology and Social Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Lucinda Platt OLD 2.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy and Sociology. This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course introduces students to sociological ideas and thinking, and how they link to key illustrative social policy issues. The course is organised around certain major social policy concerns such as: inequalities in health, labour markets, and education; social stratification and social segregation; housing provision and neighbourhood deprivation; ethnic and racial inequalities; families, care and ageing, which are then related to key classical and contemporary theoretical perspectives and concepts that have been used to describe and explain them, such as theories of class and status, social control, gender and the division of labour, socialisation and intergenerational transmission, identity and belonging, urbanisation, globalisation and risk.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: One essay in the Michaelmas term.

Indicative reading: The course will be drawing on three four core texts: David Grusky, D. and Szelenyi, S. (Eds.) 2011 The Inequality Reader: Contemporary and Foundational Readings in Race, Class, and Gender. 2nd Edition. Westview Press; Fulcher, J. and Scott, J. (2011) Sociology, 4th Edition. Oxford University Press; Payne, G. (ed.) Social Divisions. Third Edition. Palgrave Macmillan; and Platt, L. 2011 Understanding Inequalities: Stratification and Difference. Polity Press.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the ST. Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the LT.

Introduction to Global Population Change

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tiziana Leone OLD2.56

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Environment and Development, BSc in Environmental Policy, BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: As a general introduction to Population Studies, it assumes no previous knowledge of the subject.

Course content: The course is concerned with inter-relationships between the population characteristics of a society (fertility, mortality and migration) and their economic and social context. Both the causes of population change and their consequences are examined. The approach of the course is comparative across time and space: it covers population issues across the developed and developing world, and examines trends over time in both regions. The course will address key global debates which include: is population growth sustainable; what is the relationship between population size and available resources; what are the social, biological and economic influences on population growth rates, especially the role of famine, disease and war. What role have family planning programmes in decreasing population size; is ageing a threat. A wide range of topics is covered, including the demographic and health transitions; HIV/AIDS; fertility decline; the changing characteristics of the family; global trends in population ageing and their social and economic consequences for the elderly; theories and trends in migration; urbanisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare at least one class presentation per term and submit two essays per term.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of each term. Key overview texts include: M Livi-Bacci, A Concise History of World Population; H Jones, Population Geography; E A Wrigley, Population and History; W Lutz, The Future Population of the World.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. Essay (25%, 1500 words) in the LT.

Social Economics and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kitty Stewart OLD 2.36 and Prof David Piachaud OLD 2.64

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course has two parts. The first part uses economic principles to help students to understand the characteristics of different social policy areas and how the markets and the government may fail. The second part tries to analyse the causes of and possible solutions to poverty and inequality.

The key subjects will include: the nature of economic problems; basic economic theories; economics of healthcare, social care, housing, education and environment; market and government failures; private insurance and social insurance; quasi-markets; technology and productivity change; the distribution of income; concepts of poverty and inequality; the determination of wages; the role of trade unions; minimum wage legislation; low pay and poverty; unemployment and government economic management; education and human capital theory; policies of income redistribution.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Essays and presentations will be required.

Indicative reading: J Le Grand, C Propper & R Robinson, The Economics of Social Problems, Fourth Edition, Palgrave, 2008; A B Atkinson, N Barr, Economics of the Welfare State, Fifth Edition, OUP 2012; J Le Grand, The Other Invisible Hand Delivering Public Services through Choice and Competition, Princeton, 2007; H Glennerster, Understanding the Finance of Welfare. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

SA105 Crime and Society

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Coretta Phillips OLDM2.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy and Criminology. This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course introduces students to the study of crime and its control in contemporary society. It begins by considering different conceptualisations of crime, and its measurement, before critically examining the multiple ways in which crime patterns are understood by the public, politicians, the media, and criminologists. These understandings are used to explore particular crime types such as white collar crime, drugs, and violent crime. Next the course explores the impact of major social divisions - such as gender, age, ethnicity, class and community - on the social distribution of crime and considers how these patterns influence political responses to controlling crime. Lastly, the course selects key controversies in controlling crime, focusing on criminal justice agencies such as the police and considering sentencing practices of imprisonment and community punishment and restorative justice.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

In ST there will be a revision lecture, class and mock examination.

Formative coursework: Two non-assessed essays will be required. Students will be expected to do the reading associated with the classes.

Indicative reading: T. Newburn Criminology, 2nd edn, 2012; E. Carrabine et al Criminology: A Sociological Introduction, 2nd edn, 2009; Hale et al. Criminology, 3rd edn, 2013; M Maguire, R Morgan & R Reiner, The Oxford Handbook of Criminology, 5th edn, 2012; Y Jewkes & G Letherby, Criminology: A Reader, 2002; E McLaughlin & J Muncie, Criminological Perspectives: Essential Readings, 3rd edn, 2013, A. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

SA201 Research Methods for Social Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Eileen Munro OLD 2.46 and Prof Amanda Sheely OLD 1.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: The course aims to give students a comprehensive introduction to methods of social research in social policy.

The design and analysis of social policy research. The nature of social measurement. The concept of statistical inference. Data collection by means of social survey, depth interviews, participant observation and documentary methods. Descriptive and inferential statistics, including bivariate and multivariate techniques. Analysis of data particularly from surveys. The use of computers in data analysis. Ethics and politics of Social Policy Research. Strengths and weaknesses of commonly used research methods. Methods of analysing qualitative data. Case studies and experimental designs.

Teaching: The course combines two elements:

SA201.1 Data Analysis for Social Policy: Dr A Sheely.

Lectures: 9 x SA201.1. Classes: 9 x SA201.1.

Weeks 7, 8, 9, 10 (MT); and 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 (LT).

Five additional classes during the last 5 weeks of the LT covering the Individual Project.

SA201.2 Research Methods for Social Policy: Professor E Munro & Dr I Shultz

Lectures: 11 x SA201.2.fortnightly Classes: 11 x SA201.2.

Weeks 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 (MT); 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 (LT); and two revision classes (ST).

Formative coursework: For the Research Methods class, students work in small groups on a research project of their choice and then write individual essays on an aspect of this exercise of 2,000-3,000 words. Participation in group work in class and preparation for classes is essential.

For the Data Analysis class, students will use a computer to analyse data, and will be expected to produce summaries and interpretations of their results. Students are also expected to submit an essay based on a past exam question at the beginning of the Lent term. Completion of a project report (Individual Project) is a condition of examination entry.

Indicative reading: Alan Bryman (2012) Social Research Methods, 4th edition Oxford University Press; Alan Bryman and Duncan Cramer (2005) Quantitative Data Analysis with SPSS 12 and 13, Routledge Press; Joseph Healey (2005) Statistics: A Tool for Social Research, Wadsworth Press.

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (25%) in the LT.

Demographic Description and Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Moshi Herman (office TBA)

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Environmental Policy, BSc in Management Sciences, BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology, BSc in Social Policy with Government and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Assumes no previous knowledge of the subject. The course is not particularly mathematical or statistical and students with non-mathematical backgrounds should not be at a disadvantage.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the techniques of demographic analysis and the interpretation of demographic data. The main style of presentation is to introduce and discuss techniques of analysis and then examine examples of their use to illustrate demographic concepts and trends. Topics covered include sources of information about demographic data; period and cohort methods of description and analysis; the construction of life tables; measurement of fertility, mortality, nuptiality and migration; the determinants of age structure and the intrinsic growth rate; use of survey data; the interpretation of demographic statistics; population dynamics and population projection.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: A number of practical exercises involving either computations or the interpretation of data will be set during the course and discussed in classes. In addition, a number of brief essays will be required from each student.

Indicative reading: A general reading list is circulated at the start of the course. In each lecture attention is drawn to the relevant readings. The following, however, are useful introductions: A Hinde, Demographic Methods; S H Preston, et al, Demography: Measuring and Modelling Population Processes; R Pressat, The Dictionary of Demography, edited by C Wilson.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Assessing Social Progress

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Jenkins OLD2.29

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Government, BSc in Social Policy, BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology, BSc in Social Policy with Government and BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Demonstrated familiarity with research methods to at least the level of SA201 (Research Methods for Social Policy) or equivalent.

Course content: The course aims to facilitate student understanding of key issues in assessing social progress. 'Assessing' is shorthand for developing a critical understanding of the relevant concepts and their policy relevance, practical issues associated with data collection and monitoring, and the policy implications of different findings. 'Social progress' is shorthand for 'are we getting better off'? There are many potential benchmarks that could be used for answering this question: comparisons with the past, with other countries, or with some absolute standards (e.g. meeting some basic needs). And at the personal level, one might compare one's self relative to other people within your 'society'. There are multiple domains that are relevant too: ranging from conventional summary measures such as income to life satisfaction and happiness, employment, health, housing and education. Much information about 'social progress' already incorporated in official statistics (from national and international agencies), and in more specialist academic analysis. But other interpretations of what social progress exist and are not routinely incorporated in existing monitoring exercises, and some say they should be. The course aims to reflect this diversity – to critically analyse both existing approaches and others that have been proposed. The course starts with relatively conventional approaches to assessment including macroeconomic indicators such as GDP and cross-national comparisons, income and work, and then considers newer approaches and related measures. The course also considers progress in several specific life domains. For each of the topics considered, the course addresses a specific question relating to social progress. In providing answers to the question, the course considers, from a critical perspective, relevant analytical approaches, data sources and empirical findings, and also discusses policy implications.

A Long Essay on an Approved Topic

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Departmental Tutor, Department of Social Policy.

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy. This course is available on the BSc in Social Policy and Criminology, BSc in Social Policy and Economics, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Social Policy with Government. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: An essay of not more than 8,000 words on a topic to be approved by the candidate's academic advisor. It is designed to allow a detailed and thorough exploration of an area of interest to the student. The essay should be a dissertation on a topic area within the field of the degree programme; it may involve original fieldwork, or the analysis and appraisal of existing literature.

Teaching: 5 hours of lectures in the MT.

Students will have preliminary discussions about the topic of their essay with their academic advisor in the ST of their second year. They will pursue their long essay under the supervision of their new academic advisor during the third year of their studies. There will also be a total of five support sessions taught in weeks 2-6 of the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will agree with their academic advisor, and submit to the departmental tutor, a final title for the essay by Friday 5th December 2014 in the third year. Academic advisors can be expected to offer advice on reading, guidance on the construction of the work, and comment on an initial draft, which should be handed in before the end of the LT.

Indicative reading: Students will be expected to draw extensively from the reading they have done throughout their programme of study, to read such specific materials as may be recommended by their academic advisor and, most importantly, to identify for themselves such additional literature as may be required for their studies. Students might in the first instance wish to consult H Dean, 'Doing projects in social policy', in P Alcock, et al (Eds) The Student's Companion to Social Policy, Fourth Edition, Blackwell, 2012.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 8000 words) in the ST.

Students in the third year must submit their essay to the Undergraduate Administrator in the first week of ST. The exact date and time will be notified in the LT. It should be typewritten. Precise details on format and presentation will be issued by the Department at the beginning of the third year of study. Candidates may be called for an oral examination if the Examiners wish to satisfy themselves that the essay is the candidate's own work.

Political Sociology

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Robin Archer, S283, and Dr Michael McQuarrie, S379

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Social Policy and Sociology and BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: Political Sociology concerns the way in which political and social factors interact to produce the societies in which we live. This course aims to discuss some central empirical and theoretical questions in the field. The course begins by examining classic debates about the relationship between the development of the state and democracy on the one hand, and the rise of capitalism and liberalism on the other. We will then examine the impact that social cleavages like class, religion, race and gender have on parties, elections and other political institutions in a number of different countries. We will also examine the strength and political impact of both labour movements and other important social movements. And we will examine why similar countries can develop very different social and economic policies. In addition we will examine some large scale historical changes like revolutions, democratisation, the impact of colonialism, and globalisation. Throughout the course we will also consider some of the main theoretical approaches that are used in the study of political sociology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 4 hours of classes in the ST.

Course content: This course will provide students with a first understanding of research design issues and a dynamic introduction to research methods through practical exercises in the context of London's social life.

By the end of the course students will:

- understand the key role of research design for conducting original empirical social research. In particular, taking into account relevant extant literature, they will develop a research question of their own interest and identify appropriate research method(s) to address it.
- Have engaged with practical research strategies and methods including the design of questionnaires, conducting structured and semi-structured interviews, ethnographic observation, and documentary and web based sources in the context of London.
- Have a sense of the urban sociology of London and a first-hand experience of its potential for exploring contemporary social issues.
- Be able to analyse different kinds of data, using quantitative methods, grounded theory, and visual analysis.
- Be able to assess the different methodological strategies employed on the basis of measurement concepts such as reliability, validity and generalizability.
- Understand the ethical issues involved in social research.
- Have developed a research proposal which will inform and strengthen their dissertation design.

Teaching: 25 hours of workshops in the MT. 25 hours of workshops in the LT.

Formative coursework: There are two pieces of formative assessment which will be marked and on which you will get feedback in the Michaelmas Term (MT).

Indicative reading: A good introductory textbook is Angela Dale and Jennifer Mason, Understanding Social Research: thinking creatively about method (2011): see also A Bryman, Social Research Methods (4th edn 2012). Other useful textbooks are R H Hoyle, M J Harris & C M Judd, Research Methods in Social Relations (7th edn 2002); D A de Vaus, Surveys in Social Research (5th edn 2001).

Assessment: Essay (20%, 1500 words) and presentation (20%) in the LT.

Research proposal (60%) in the ST.

Two hard copies of each assessment, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S200, no later than 16:30 on the submission day. The first assessment, a qualitative interview transcript and 1,500 word essay (20%), is due by the first Thursday of Lent Term. The second assessment, a group presentation (15 slides maximum) based on the agreed group survey (20%), will be carried out in Lent Term. Each group presentation will be marked in class by both the course convenor and the group GTAs, who will then discuss and moderate marks after all the group presentations took place. Marks will take into account the work done by each group in the previous six weeks (questionnaire design, survey data collection and data analysis) as well as the clarity of the presentation itself. The third assessment, a 2,000 word research proposal (60%), is due by the second Thursday of Summer Term. An additional copy of each essay is to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day each assessment is due. Attendance at all workshops and submission of all set coursework is required.

The Sociology of Race and Ethnicity

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: TBC

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Optional Course for BSc Sociology for 2nd and 3rd years and the Diploma in Sociology.

Course content: The course provides an introduction to theoretical, historical and contemporary debates around race, racism and ethnicity. It firstly explores the main theoretical perspectives which have been used to analyse racial and ethnic relations, in a historical and contemporary framework. It then examines in more detail the areas both theoretical and lived within our contemporary social and political climate where analyses of 'race', racism, culture, belonging and identity are urgently needed, focusing primarily on Britain, Europe and the US. Topics include: race and ethnicity in historical perspective; race, class and gender multiculturalism; diaspora and hybridity; whiteness; mixed race; race, disease and contamination; race and the senses; race and popular culture; urban multiculturalism and the street; race, riots and youth culture; community cohesion; Muslim identities; asylum and new migrations; the Far Right and the white working class.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Reading logs in addition to formative essay.

Indicative reading: L Back & J Solomos (Eds), Theories of Race and Racism (2nd Edition, Routledge 2009); M Bulmer & J Solomos (Eds), Racism (OUP 1999); M Banton, Racial Theories (CUP 1998), J Solomos & L Back, Racism and Society (Macmillan 1996), R Miles, Racism after Race Relations (Routledge 1993); J Bulmer & J Solomos (Eds), Racial and Ethnic Studies Today (Routledge 1999); H Mirza (Ed), Black British Feminism (Routledge 1997); K Owusu (Ed), Black British Cultural Studies (Routledge 1999); D T Goldberg, Racist Culture (Blackwell 1993); P Gilroy, There Ain't No Black in the Union Jack (Hutchinson 1987); J Donald & A Rattansi (Eds), Race, Culture and Difference (Sage, 1992); J Solomos, Race and Racism in Britain (3rd edn), (Palgrave, 2003); P Hill Collins, Black Feminist Thought (Routledge 1991); CCCS, The Empire Strikes Back (Hutchinson 1982); B Hesse (Ed), Un/Settled Multiculturalisms (Zed 2000); A Sharma, J Hutnyk & A Sharma (Eds), DisOrienting Rhythms (Zed 1996), D T Goldberg (Ed), Multiculturalism: A Critical Reader (Blackwell 1994); D McGhee, The End of Intolerant Britain? (Open University Press 2005); D. Solomos (eds) Sage Handbook of Race and Ethnic Studies (Sage 2010)

Assessment: Exam (30%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (45%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Other (25%) in the LT.

Exam will be held during the Summer Term exam session. Two hard copies of each assessment of 2000 words, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S200, no later than 16:30 on the submission day. The first assessed literature review is due on the second Friday of Lent Term and the second assessed essay is due by the third Friday of Summer Term. An additional copy of each assessment is to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day each essay is due.

Attendance at all classes and submission of all set coursework is required.

Digital Technology, Speed and Culture

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Judy Wajcman S203

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Sociology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Course content: This course aims to give students a detailed understanding of sociologically informed approaches to the social studies of science and technology. It will consider how macro theories of post-industrial society (from Bell to Castells) have conceptualised the role of technology in social change. It will then look at the development of STS as a field that highlights the constitutive role of objects and artefacts in social relations. In other words, it will reflect upon sociology's traditional neglect of the social life of things or materiality. These broad themes will then be elaborated substantively. First, by considering the role of technology in reconfiguring time, speed, space and mobility. Second, by considering power relations and social inequalities embedded in digital technologies, such as the Internet and mobile phones. Third, by treating technology as a culture that shapes gender identities, such as those that find expression in the virtuality of cyberspace. The course will draw on examples from a variety of domains including information and communication technologies, robotics, cyborgs, sex, and weapons.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to prepare one essay per term of 1500 – 2000 words and at least one presentation per term.

Indicative reading: Hackett, E. et al (2008) The Handbook of Science and Technology Studies (MIT Press)

MacKenzie, D. and Wajcman J. (1999) The Social Shaping of Technology (MIT Press). Suchman, L. (2007) Human-Machine Configurations (CUP)

Turkle, S. (2011) Alone Together (Basic Books)

Wajcman, J. (2004) TechnoFeminism (Polity Press)

Zittrain, J. (2008) The Future of the Internet (Allen Lane)

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the ST.

Attendance at all classes and submission of all set coursework is required.

SO302

Sociological Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Juan Pardo Guerra S278 and Prof Bridget Hutter S217

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Sociology. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Course content: The project is to be in the form of an essay on a sociological topic to be approved by the Department of Sociology. The purpose is to allow the student to study in depth an interest of his or her own choosing. Many approaches are possible in the work for the essay, but there are three main variants: original fieldwork, secondary analysis, and literature review.

Selection of topic

The topic must be within the general field of sociology and should fall within the range of competence of a member of the staff, normally a member of the Sociology Department. However, it need not be chosen from those areas of sociology which are at present taught within the Department. Students may follow up a theme suggested to them by their coursework, but the topic must allow the material and arguments to be developed in greater depth than is possible in the lectures and seminars for the course.

Arrangements for supervision

The Project Workshop, which meets formally during the first and second terms, is convened by Prof Hutter (MT) and Dr Pardo-Guerra (LT), who will also make themselves available for individual consultations with students during office hours. Students should consult their academic advisors throughout the year in order to self-assess progress and resolve general issues related to their projects. The role of the academic advisor is not to give detailed instruction, but to suggest ways of tackling or limiting a topic, lines of enquiry and preliminary reading; their suggestions are not intended to be seen as exhaustive or definitive. How far the student can use and develop the help that he or she is given is, to a large extent, what the examination of the essay is concerned with. The third year academic advisor should not help with planning or writing the essay in detail, but may read and comment critically on an outline or a draft section if the student submits one.

Teaching: 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: See 'Assessment Particulars' below.

Assessment: Research project (80%) in the ST.

Presentation (10%) in the MT.

Class participation (10%).

Assessment Particulars:

The course involves three modes of summative assessment: a presentation, a 10,000 word dissertation, and class participation. The course also involves two formative assessments aimed at guiding students' research projects. The first formative assessment consists of a 2,000 word research project due by 4:30 on the fifth Friday of MT. The project should specify 1) a research question, 2) a brief theoretical literature review, 3) a brief introduction to the empirical case, 4) a research design, 5) a project schedule. The research project is linked to an assessed 15 minute presentation that will take place in weeks 6-10 of MT. The presentation is 10% of the final mark. Students are also required to submit a formative progress report of no more than 1,500 words on the second week of LT. The progress report must include a summary of fieldwork conducted to date, a revised work schedule, and a discussion on possible challenges that the student may face in the future in relation to the dissertation. Students are also required to submit a sociological project of not more than 10,000 words in length; it may include tables and diagrams as appropriate. Two hard copies, typescript, must be submitted to the Sociology Administration Office, Room S200, by 4.30pm on the second Friday of ST, with a third copy posted to Moodle. Accidental loss of data or text on a computer will not be accepted as a reason for non-submission. The sociological project represents 80% of the final mark. In addition to the presentation and the written project, the course also assesses class participation. Students will be asked to comment and/or summarise readings, or discuss issues related to their individual projects. Each student must present/substantively contribute to class discussions on no less than three occasions throughout the year. These presentations will represent 10% of the final mark.

Course content: The course provides an overview over the area of family sociology, drawing predominantly on literature about Britain and other Western societies. The course focuses on recent and ongoing transformations of families, family relationships and family life. Throughout the course various theoretical approaches will be considered. Issues related to gender, ethnicity and migration will be cross-cutting themes of the course. Indicative topics are: family structures and family relationships; childhood, adolescence, partnership formation, childlessness, motherhood, fatherhood, divorce, post-divorce families, intergenerational ties, family violence, family and work, family and social inequality.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: At least one class presentation and two formative essays (1,500 words each).

Indicative reading: Beck, Ulrich & Beck-Gernsheim, Elisabeth (1995): The Normal Chaos of Love. London: Polity Press. Giddens, Anthony (1992): The Transformation of Intimacy. Sexuality, Love and Eroticism in Modern Societies. Oxford: Polity Press. Hochschild, Arlie (1990): The Second Shift. Working Parents and the Revolution at Home. London: Piatkus. Scott, Jacqueline, Treas, Judith & Richards, Martin (eds) (2004): The Blackwell Companion to the Sociology of Families. Oxford: Blackwell.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 2500 words) in the ST.

Exam will be held during the Summer Term exam session. Two hard copies of the assessed essay, with submission sheets attached to each, to be handed in to the Administration Office, S200, no later than 16:30 on the first Wednesday of Summer Term. An additional copy to be uploaded to Moodle no later than 18:00 on the same day.

Elementary Statistical Theory

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Economics, BSc in Economics and Economic History, BSc in Economics with Economic History, BSc in Mathematics and Economics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance and BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with ST103 Statistical Methods for Social Research or ST107 Quantitative Methods (Statistics).

Pre-requisites: A-level Mathematics

No previous knowledge of statistics is assumed.

Course content: The course provides a precise and accurate treatment of introductory probability theory, statistical ideas, methods and techniques. Students will also be exposed to the MINITAB statistical package. Descriptive statistics including some exploratory data analysis. Probability: axiomatic probability, conditional probability, Bayes' Theorem, independence, combinatorial methods. Random variables: discrete and continuous random variables, expectation and variance, joint and conditional distributions, the moment generating function. Important distributions of statistics, including the Binomial, Poisson, Uniform and Normal distributions. Sampling distributions of statistics and the Central Limit Theorem. Concepts of statistical inference; Point estimation: method of moments estimation, least squares estimation and maximum likelihood estimation; Interval estimation; Testing statistical hypotheses: one-sample tests and two-sample tests; Inference for correlation coefficients and variances; Rank-based nonparametric tests and goodness-of-fit tests; Contingency tables; Linear regression analysis: model estimation, hypothesis testing, and prediction; Regression and ANOVA with Minitab.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 8 hours of classes, 9 hours of workshops and 8 hours of help sessions in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes, 10 hours of workshops and 10 hours of help sessions in the LT. 3 hours of lectures, 3 hours of classes and 2 hours of workshops in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be given weekly exercises on which they are to work and then are handed in to class teachers for marking and advice. The exercise material will form the basis of the workshops and classes.

Indicative reading: All course materials made available via Moodle, including notes to accompany the lectures, but this can be supplemented with additional background reading. Recommended supplementary text is: Larsen R. J. and Marx, M. L. (2011) An Introduction to Mathematical Statistics and Its Applications (5th edition), Prentice Hall (earlier editions are also fine).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST107 Half Unit Quantitative Methods (Statistics)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Social Policy and Economics. This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Environmental Policy with Economics, BSc in Geography with Economics, BSc in Government and Economics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Philosophy and Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

This course cannot be taken with ST102 Elementary Statistical Theory.

Pre-requisites: A-level Mathematics

Course content: The elementary statistical tools necessary for further study in management and economics with an emphasis on the applicability of the methods to management and economic problems. An introduction to statistical concepts. Centre and spread of a distribution. Probability, conditional probability. The Binomial, Poisson and Normal distributions. Covariance and linear combinations of random variables. Random sampling, sampling distributions. Efficiency, biased and unbiased estimators. Confidence intervals for means and proportions, and difference in means and proportions, the Student's 't' distribution. Hypothesis tests, power and p-value. Correlation and Regression. Fitting a line, least squares estimation. Sampling variability of the estimates. Confidence intervals and tests. Predicting response variable, p-value.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 4 hours of lectures and 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Weekly example sheets will be set and students are expected to submit solutions to the class teacher each week.

Indicative reading: All course materials made available via Moodle, including notes to accompany the lectures, but this can be supplemented with additional background reading. Recommended supplementary text is: Newbold, P., W.L. Carlson and B.M. Thorne (2012) Statistics for Business and Economics. (Eighth edition), Pearson (earlier editions are also fine).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST108 Statistical Methods for the Social Sciences

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Cron COL.2.04

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

The course is designed for students without a strong background in Mathematics, e.g. without A level Mathematics, and is suitable for students who wish to learn basic statistical methods for analysing social science data. This course cannot be taken with ST102 Elementary Statistical Theory, ST107 Quantitative Methods (Statistics) or ST103 Statistical Methods for Social Research.

Pre-requisites: A grade B in GCSE Mathematics or equivalent. No background in statistics is required.

Course content: A basic foundation in elementary statistical methods, theory and statistical reasoning. Basic use of computers to analyse data. Probability, random variable theory and distributions. Normal distribution, sampling concepts and sampling distributions. Estimation, significance tests and confidence intervals, one and two-sample methods. Linear regression, correlation. Test for proportions, simple contingency tables. Basic decision theory.

Teaching: 14 hours of lectures, 8 hours of classes and 2 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of classes and 2 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Indicative reading: Notes will be provided and form the basic reading material. Pointers will be given to further reading.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Continuous assessment (30%) in the MT and LT.

ST201 Statistical Models and Data Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jose Pina-Sánchez COL 2.03.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance and BSc in Management. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Also available to students who have studied statistics and mathematics to the level of MA107/ST107 Quantitative Methods. Not to be taken in conjunction with ST203 Statistics for Management Sciences (Full unit).

Course content: A second course in statistics with an emphasis on problems of practical importance and statistical analysis using computers. Principles of modelling: data preparation, mathematical and statistical models, linear and non-linear models. Simple linear regression. Multiple regression: assumptions, transformations, diagnostics, model selection. Logistic regression: odds ratios and likelihood. Introduction to time series: smoothing, seasonal adjustment, autocorrelation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Moodle quizzes

Indicative reading: S. Albright, W. L. Winston & C. J. Zappe, Managerial Statistics; D. H. Hildebrand and R. L. Ott Statistical Thinking for Managers

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (20%) in the LT.

Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konstantinos Kalogeropoulos COL.6.10 and Dr Matteo Barigozzi COL.7.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, BSc in Mathematics and Economics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) and Mathematical Methods (MA100). Students who have not taken these courses should contact Dr Kalogeropoulos

Course content: The course covers the probability, distribution theory and statistical inference needed for third year courses in statistics and econometrics.

Michaelmas term (Dr Erik Baurdoux): Events and their probabilities. Random variables. Discrete and continuous distributions. Moments, moment generating functions and cumulant generating functions. Joint distributions and joint moments. Marginal and conditional densities. Independence, covariance and correlation. Sums of random variables and compounding. Multinomial and bivariate normal distributions. Law of large numbers and central limit theorem.

Lent term (Dr K Kalogeropoulos): Functions of random variables. Sampling distributions. Criteria of estimation: consistency, unbiasedness, efficiency, minimum variance. Sufficiency. Maximum likelihood estimation. Confidence intervals. Tests of simple hypotheses. Likelihood ratio tests. Wald tests, score tests.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of seminars and 10 hours of help sessions in the MT. 20 hours of lectures, 10 hours of seminars and 10 hours of help sessions in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 4 pieces of coursework in the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: G C Casella & R L Berger, Statistical Inference (primary reading); R Bartoszynski & M Niewiadomska-Bugaj, Probability and Statistical Inference (stresses comprehension of concepts rather than mathematics, complimentary reading only); J Jacod & P Protter, Probability Essentials (for further reading, a more advanced text on probability, using measure theoretic concepts and tools, still very accessible).

Not to be taken with: ST201 Statistical Models and Data Analysis, or ST205 Sample Surveys and Experiments

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Quantitative Methods (Statistics) (ST107) and Quantitative Methods (Mathematics) (MA107).

Course content: A second course in statistics encompassing a wide range of practical issues from the design of surveys and data collection to building models and making inferences. Computer packages used throughout.

There are two lecture courses. ST203.1: Statistical Models and Data Analysis (Mr Jose Pina-Sánchez). Principles of modelling: data preparation, mathematical and statistical models, linear and non-linear models. Simple linear regression. Multiple regression: assumptions, transformations, diagnostics, model selection. Logistic regression: odds ratios and likelihood. Introduction to time series: smoothing, seasonal adjustment, autocorrelation.

ST203.2: Sample Surveys and Experiments (Professor Chris Skinner). Sampling methods for social surveys. Survey design and estimation. Nonresponse and measurement error. Design of experiments and observational studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of classes and 2 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 16 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: S L Lohr, Sampling: Design and Analysis. (2nd Ed. 2010)

Actuarial Investigations: Financial

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angelos Dassios COL6.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).

Course content: The application of compound interest techniques to financial transactions. Describing how to use a generalised cash-flow model to describe financial transactions such as a zero coupon bond, a fixed interest security, an index-linked security, cash on deposit, an equity, an interest only loan, a repayment loan, an annuity certain and others. The time value of money using the concepts of compound interest and discounting. Accumulation of payments and present value of future payments. Expressing interest rates or discount rates in terms of different time periods. Real and money interest rates. The calculation of the present value and the accumulated value of a stream of equal or unequal payments using specified rates of interest and the net present value at a real (possibly variable) rate of interest, assuming a constant rate of inflation. Compound interest rate functions; definitions and use. Equations of value with certain and uncertain payments and receipts; conditions for existence of solution. Describe how a loan may be repaid by regular instalments of interest and capital; flat rates and annual effective rates. Calculation of a schedule of repayments under a loan and identification of the interest and capital components of annuity payments where the annuity is used to repay a loan for the case where annuity payments are made once per effective time period or  $p$  times per effective time period and identify the capital outstanding at any time. Discounted cash flow techniques and their use in investment project appraisal; internal rate of return, discounted payback period, money-weighted rate of return, time-weighted rate of return, linked internal rate of return. The investment and risk characteristics of fixed-interest Government borrowings, fixed-interest borrowing by other bodies, shares and other equity-type finance derivatives. The analysis of compound interest rate problems; the present value of payments from a fixed interest security where the coupon rate is constant and the security is redeemed in one instalment, upper and lower bounds for the present value of a fixed interest security that is redeemable on a single date within a given range at the option of the borrower, the running yield and the redemption yield from a fixed interest security, the present value or yield from an ordinary share and a property, given simple (but not necessarily constant) assumptions about the growth of dividends and rents, the solution of the equation of value for the real rate of interest implied by the equation in the presence of specified inflationary growth, the present value or real yield from an index-linked bond, the price of (or yield from) a fixed interest security where the investor is subject to deduction of income tax on coupon payments and redemption payments are subject to the deduction of capital gains tax.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to one set of problems.

Indicative reading: R Norberg, Basic Life Insurance Mathematics; J J McCutcheon & W J Scott, An Introduction to the Mathematics of Finance, Heinemann; Institute of Actuaries, Formulae and Tables for Actuarial Examinations. Core reading notes obtainable from the Institute of Actuaries.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST227 Half Unit

Survival Models

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kostas Kardaras COL6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102).

Course content: An introduction to stochastic processes with emphasis on life history analysis and actuarial applications. Principles of modelling; model selection, calibration, and testing; Stochastic processes and their classification into different types by time space, state space, and distributional properties; construction of stochastic processes from finite-dimensional distributions, processes with independent increments, Poisson processes and renewal processes and their applications in general insurance and risk theory, Markov processes, Markov chains and their applications in life insurance and general insurance, extensions to more general intensity-driven processes, counting processes, semi-Markov processes, stationary distributions. Determining transition probabilities and other conditional probabilities and expected values; Integral expressions, Kolmogorov differential equations, numerical solutions, simulation techniques. Survival models - the random life length approach and the Markov chain approach; survival function, conditional survival function, mortality intensity, some commonly used mortality laws. Statistical inference for life history data; Maximum likelihood estimation for parametric models, non-parametric methods (Kaplan-Meier and Nelson-Aalen), regression models for intensities including the semi-parametric Cox model and partial likelihood estimation; Various forms of censoring; The technique of occurrence-exposure rates and analytic graduation; Impact of the censoring scheme on the distribution of the estimators; Confidence regions and hypothesis testing.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 3 hours of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to two sets of problems.

Indicative reading: S Ross, Stochastic Processes; R Norberg, Risk and Stochastics in Life Insurance; The Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT4. For full details of the syllabus of CT4, see http://stats.lse.ac.uk/angelos/guides/2004\_CT4.pdf.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST300 Half Unit

Regression and Generalised Linear Models

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Wai-Fung Lam COL. 6.09

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) and Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202).

Course content: A solid coverage of the most important parts of the theory and application of regression models, generalised linear models and the analysis of variance. Analysis of variance models; factors, interactions, confounding. Multiple regression and regression diagnostics. Generalised linear models; the exponential family, the linear predictor, link functions, analysis of deviance, parameter estimation, deviance residuals. Model choice, fitting and validation. The use of a statistics package will be an integral part of the course. The computer workshops revise the theory and show how it can be applied to real datasets.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT.

Indicative reading: D C Montgomery, E A Peck & G G Vining, Introduction to Linear Regression Analysis; D C Montgomery, Design and Analysis of Experiments; A J Dobson, An Introduction to Generalised Linear Models; P McCullagh & J A Nelder, Generalized Linear Models; A C Atkinson, Plots, Transformations and Regression; A C Atkinson & M Riani, Robust Diagnostic Regression Analysis; JJ Faraway, Linear Models with R; JJ Faraway, Extending the linear Model with R. Related items from the Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT6. For full details of the syllabus of CT6, see http://stats.lse.ac.uk/angelos/guides/2004\_CT6.pdf.

Assessment: Exam (85%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (15%) in the LT.

ST302 Half Unit Stochastic Processes

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Umut Cetin COL.6.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202).

Course content: A second course in stochastic processes and applications to insurance. Markov chains (discrete and continuous time), processes with jumps; Brownian motion and diffusions; Martingales; stochastic calculus; applications in insurance and finance. Content: Stochastic processes in discrete and continuous time; Markov chains: Markov property, Chapman-Kolmogorov equation, classification of states, stationary distribution, examples of infinite state space; filtrations and conditional expectation; discrete time martingales: martingale property, basic examples, exponential martingales, stopping theorem, applications to random walks; Poisson processes: counting processes, definition as counting process with independent and stationary increments, compensated Poisson process as martingale, distribution of number of events in a given time interval as well as inter-event times, compound Poisson process, application to ruin problem for the classical risk process via Gerber's martingale approach; Markov processes: Kolmogorov equations, solution of those in simple cases, stochastic semigroups, birth and death chains, health/sickness models, stationary distribution; Brownian motion: definition and basic properties, martingales related to Brownian motion, reflection principle, Ito-integral, Ito's formula with simple applications, linear stochastic differential equations for geometric Brownian motion and the Ornstein-Uhlenbeck process, first approach to change of measure techniques, application to Black-Scholes model. The items in the course content that also appear in the content of ST227 are covered here at greater depth. However, ST227 is not a pre-requisite for this course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to two sets of problems.

Indicative reading: R Durrett, Essentials of Stochastic Processes; T Mikosch, Elementary Stochastic Calculus with Finance in View; Institute of Actuaries core reading notes.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST304 Half Unit Time Series and Forecasting

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matteo Barigozzi COL.7.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Mathematics with Economics. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: 2nd year statistics and probability

Course content: The course introduces the student to the statistical analysis of time series data and simple models. What time series analysis can be useful for; autocorrelation; stationarity, basic time series models; AR, MA, ARMA; trend removal and seasonal adjustment; invertibility; spectral analysis; estimation; forecasting; introduction to financial time series and the ARCH model.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: C Chatfield, The Analysis of Time Series; Brockwell & Davis, Introduction to Time Series and Forecasting; Brockwell & Davis, Time Series: Theory and Methods.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST305 Actuarial Mathematics (Life)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Luciano Campi COL.7.10

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) and Survival Models (ST227).

Course content: An introduction to the theory and techniques of life insurance and pensions. Standard single life insurance products; endowments, annuities, and assurances. Extensions to multi-state policies and general benefits and premiums; two lives and more general multi-life functions including the joint life status and last survivor status, the multiple decrements model (competing risks), and the disability model, level and variable payments including increasing and decreasing assurances and annuities. Discrete and continuous time payments. Aggregate and select intensities. Actuarial notation for life contingencies and expected present values of standard products. Principles and techniques for determining premiums and reserves. The principle of equivalence. Thiele's differential equation and its generalizations. Variances and higher order moments of present values. Numerical methods. Woolhouse's formula relating present values in continuous and discrete time.

Relationships between payments of annuity type and payments of assurance type. Notions of prospective and retrospective reserves and relationships between them. Administration expenses, gross premiums and gross reserves. With-profit contracts, surplus and dividends, various forms of bonus (cash bonus, terminal bonus, added benefits), interest rate guarantees, unit-linked insurance, defined benefits, defined contributions, salary-related benefits. Techniques for assessing profitability. Elements of population theory applied to life insurance. Heterogeneity, selection phenomena; intensities dependent on policy duration and state duration. Risk classification.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 10 hours of lectures, 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to two sets of problems.

Indicative reading: R Norberg, Basic Life Insurance Mathematics; The Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT5

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST306 Half Unit Actuarial Mathematics (General)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Angelos Dassios COL.6.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) and Stochastic Processes (ST302).

Course content: An introduction to actuarial work in non-life insurance. Decision theory concepts: game theory, optimum strategies, decision functions, risk functions, the minimax criterion and the Bayes criterion. Loss distributions with and without limits and risk-sharing arrangements; suitable, moments and moment generating functions, the gamma, exponential, Pareto, generalised Pareto, normal, lognormal, Weibull, Burr and other distributions suitable for modelling individual and aggregate losses; statistical inference. Risk models involving frequency and severity distributions; the basic short-term contracts, moments, moment generating functions and other properties of compound distributions. Reinsurance treaties; proportional, excess of loss, stop-loss, deriving the distribution, moments, moment generating functions and other properties of the losses to the insurer and reinsurer under all the models above. Ruin theory for continuous and discrete models. Fundamental concepts of Bayesian statistics; Bayes theorem, prior distributions, posterior distributions, conjugate prior distributions, loss functions, Bayesian estimators. Credibility theory; Bayesian models. Experience rating models and applications. Claims reserving: run-off triangles. Monte-Carlo simulation and applications in insurance.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Compulsory written answers to one set of problems.

Indicative reading: Notes are given out in the lectures. The Institute of Actuaries, Core reading Subject CT6.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

ST307 Half Unit Aspects of Market Research

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Probability and statistics to the level of ST107.

Course content: The main ideas and applications of market research techniques. Problem formulation and research designs for market and opinion research. Random sampling and statistical inference. Quota sampling. Survey stages and sources of error. Data collection methods. Attitude measurement. Market models, advertising and public opinion research. The analysis of market research data.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are given weekly exercises to work on for discussion in class.

Indicative reading: Malhotra, N.K., D.F. Birks and P.A. Wills (2012) Marketing Research: An Applied Research (Fourth edition), Pearson (earlier editions are also fine)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

ST308 Half Unit Bayesian Inference

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Konstantinos Kalogeropoulos COL.6.10

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Accounting and Finance, BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Mathematics with Economics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Mathematical Methods (MA100) and Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102). ST202 is also recommended.

Course content: Statistical decision theory: risk, decision rules, loss and utility functions, Bayesian expected loss, Frequentist risk. Bayesian Analysis: Bayes theorem, prior, posterior and predictive distributions, conjugate models (Normal-Normal, Poisson-Gamma, Beta-Binomial), Bayesian point estimation, credible intervals and hypothesis testing, Bayes factors and model selection. Comparison with Frequentist approaches.

Implementation: Asymptotic approximations (Laplace approximation, Monte Carlo methods, stochastic simulation), Markov Chain Monte Carlo (MCMC) simulation (Gibbs sampler, Metropolis-Hastings algorithm). Computer tools (R, WinBUGS). Illustration via applications in Regression (Linear, ANOVA, Multiple, Generalized Linear Models), Hierarchical/ Multilevel Models and Time Series.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of computer workshops in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Optional problem sets and computer exercises.

Indicative reading: P.M. Lee, Bayesian Statistics. An introduction. J.O. Berger, Statistical Decision Theory and Bayesian Analysis.

D. Gamerman, H. F. Lopes, Markov Chain Monte Carlo: Stochastic Simulation for Bayesian Inference

A. Gelman, Bayesian data analysis.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (20%) in the ST.

ST312*Applied Statistics Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Mr Jose Pina-Sánchez COL 2.03.

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Actuarial Science, BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is not available as an outside option nor to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102) or Research Methods for Social Policy (SA201).

Course content: Tabulation, Graphical representation. Students will produce a project involving a critical investigation and collation of statistical data on a topic of their own interest.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures in the MT. 6 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: Office of National Statistics, OECD, WHO.

Assessment: Project (90%) and presentation (10%) in the ST.

ST327*Market Research: An Integrated Approach

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr James Abdey COL.7.09 and Mr Karsten Shaw

Availability: This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics, BSc in Management Sciences and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit and to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed one of the following: Elementary Statistical Theory (ST102), Statistics for Management Sciences (ST203), Learning and Quantitative Data (MG205), Analytical Methods for Management (MG202), or equivalent. Not to be taken with ST307.

Course content: Main ideas and techniques used in marketing and opinion research. Statistical methods applied to market research data. ST327.1 Research Methods: Problem formulation and research designs for market and opinion research. Sample theory and methods. Survey stages and sources of error. Data collection methods. Attitude measurement. Market models, advertising and public opinion research. The analysis of market research data using statistical methods of multivariate analysis, including cluster, discriminant and factor analysis. ST327.2 Case Studies: Students use the information and techniques gained from ST327.1 to carry out a co-operative Market Research Case Study. Individual write up of the Case Study forms part of the assessment.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 8 hours of classes and 1 hour of classes in the MT. 6 hours of lectures, 1 hour of classes and 6 hours of classes in the LT. 1 hour of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are given weekly exercises to work on for discussion in class

Indicative reading: Malhotra, N.K., D.F. Birks and P.A. Wills (2012) Marketing Research: An Applied Research (Fourth edition), Pearson (earlier editions are also fine)

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (25%).

Presentation (15%) in the LT.

The assessed work is split into two parts; a group presentation and an individual case study

ST330*Stochastic and Actuarial Methods in Finance

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Pauline Barrieu COL 6.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the BSc in Actuarial Science. This course is available on the BSc in Business Mathematics and Statistics and BSc in Statistics with Finance. This course is not available as an outside option. This course is available to General Course students.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Probability, Distribution Theory and Inference (ST202) and Stochastic Processes (ST302).

Course content: Applications of stochastic processes and actuarial models in finance. Utility theory. Stochastic dominance and portfolio selection. Measures of investment risk. Mean-variance portfolio theory. Single and multifactor models. The Capital Asset Pricing Model. The efficient market hypothesis. Stochastic models for security prices and estimating their parameters. Option pricing: general framework in discrete and continuous time, the Black-Scholes analysis and numerical procedures (binomial models and Cox-Ross-Rubinstein models). The term structure of interest rates: the Vasicek, the Cox-Ingersoll-Ross and other models. Introduction to credit risk.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Written answers to set problems will be expected on a weekly basis.

Indicative reading: N H Bingham & R Kiesel, Risk Neutral Valuation; A Cerny, Mathematical Techniques in Finance: Tools for Incomplete Markets; J Hull, Options, Futures & Other Derivatives; R Jarrow & S Turnbull, Derivative Securities; D Luenberger, Investment Science; Institute of Actuaries core reading notes, Subject CT8.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Executive Global MSc in Management

These regulations apply to students entering in or after the 2014-15 academic year.

A 17 month programme. Students take eight compulsory half unit courses (four units in total) and three non-assessed courses in Leadership (MG454), Getting Things Done With Research (MG444) and Foundations of Management 2 (MG457).

Paper Course number and title

Year 1

1	MG440	Managerial Economics (modular) (H)
2	MG441	Foundations of Management (modular) (H)
3	MG443	Organisational Behaviour (modular) (H)

Year 2

4	FM475	Financial Management (modular) (H)
5	MG445	Marketing Strategy (modular) (H)
6	MG446	Strategy, Organisation and Innovation (modular) (H)
7	MG447	Foreign Direct Investment and Emerging Markets (modular) (H)

Executive Global Masters in Management - Progression Rules

Candidates who attain at least a Pass grade in each of the first year papers (MG440, MG441 and MG443) will be eligible to proceed into the second year.

A student who does not meet this criterion must resit all failed/deferred papers in accordance with the resit process detailed below. If, following the resit attempt, a student:

- has attained at least a Pass grade in each of the first year papers, he/she will be eligible to proceed into the second year.
- has attained at least a Pass grade in at least one of the first year papers, he/she will be eligible to proceed into the second year:
  - at the discretion of the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners; and
  - subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners (GSBE).
- Has failed all of the first year papers, he/she will not be eligible to proceed into the second year, as he/she will no longer be able to successfully complete the programme according to the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).

The marks of any student who fails up to two papers over the course of the programme will be subject to the penalty rules stipulated at paragraph 5.2 of the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).

Executive Global Masters in Management - Resit Process

A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion).

For first year courses, where the individual assessment takes the form of an assignment or take home exam, once grades have been ratified, the faculty member responsible for the failed first year course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible and before the beginning of the second year. Results for resits and any subsequent progression will be agreed by the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course.

For second year courses, once grades have been ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners and it is determined that an award cannot be made, the faculty member responsible for the failed second year course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible. Results for resits and subsequent classification will be agreed by the Chair of the Sub-Board of Examiners and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course. Resits for second year courses will result in delayed Graduation.

Executive Global MSc in Management

These regulations apply to students entering in or before the 2013-14 academic year.

A 17 month programme. Students take eight compulsory half unit courses (four units in total) and three non-assessed courses in Leadership (MG454), Getting Things Done With Research (MG444) and Foundations of Management 2 (MG457).

Paper Course number and title

Year 1

1	MG440	Managerial Economics (modular) (H)
2	MG441	Foundations of Management (modular) (H)
3	FM475	Financial Management (modular) (H)

Executive Global Masters in Management - Progression Rules

To be eligible to proceed into the second year, candidates must attain at least a Pass grade in each of the first year papers (MG440, MG441, FM475 and MG443). If a single paper is failed, the student may proceed to the second year at the discretion of the faculty director and subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners, by undertaking a resit in the failed paper following the guidelines stated below. If a student receives a bad fail or more than one fail in year one, the decision about progression will be at the discretion of the Faculty Director together with the relevant faculty member for that course and subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. The award and classification of the degree is determined by the marks attained in all papers. The School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units) shall be applied.

Executive Global Masters in Management - Resit Process

A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only

(on one occasion). Re-sits for in class exams will be arranged as early as possible as soon as the grades have been ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners. Where the individual assessment takes the form of an assignment or take home exam, once grades have been ratified by the Sub-Board of Examiners, the faculty member responsible for the course will set the new paper and deadline for re-submission to take place as soon as possible and before the beginning of the second year. Results for resits and any subsequent progression will be agreed by the Faculty Director and will be subject to ratification by the Graduate School Board of Examiners. If a student does not attend a re-sit or re-submit an assignment/exam by the deadline set, they will be deemed to have failed the course.

Executive LLM

1. The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Masters Programmes in the online Calendar apply to the Executive LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the Executive LLM take priority.
2. In order to obtain the Degree, students must complete eight Executive LLM courses (see list below). Students must complete the requirements as a part-time student over a period of four years, or with the approval of the Programme Director within a period of six years. The minimum period within which the Degree can be completed is three years.
3. Alternative exit points are available to students who are not able to complete the Degree. An LSE Diploma in Legal Studies is available on completion of six courses and a Certificate of Legal Studies on the completion of four courses. There is no minimum period for completion of the alternative exit points of Certificate of Legal Studies or Diploma in Legal Studies.
4. Courses should be chosen from the list below and are subject to availability as not every course will be offered each year. Subject to the availability of teaching staff, it is intended that every course be offered at least once within the four year degree period. No other courses at LSE or elsewhere may be taken as part of the Executive LLM programme.

Intensive Teaching

5. The Executive LLM courses will be taught in short intensive week-long sessions, which will typically be taught in the first half of April, September and December. Each course will provide between 24 and 26 hours of contact teaching time. Teaching will normally run from Monday to Friday. However, in the exceptional event where a course cannot be taught on the set weekday/s (e.g. due to last minute teacher illness), teaching may be extended to the Saturday and Sunday morning of that week. Accordingly, students are expected to book trains or flights for the day before teaching commences and should, where possible, book return trains or flights on the Sunday afternoon or evening following the completion of the course.
6. Where there is student demand we may elect also to offer some courses in two intensive weekends. The two weekends will not be more than four weekends apart. Where courses are offered in the intensive weekend format the same course will also be offered in week-long intensive format at least once every four years.

Payment of Fees

7. All Executive LLM offer holders will be required to pay a Registration Fee of £500 within 14 days of receiving their offer of admission. The registration fee is non-refundable. Only on receipt of the registration fee, may students register onto the programme. Registered students are then required to pay a per course tuition fee in advance of their chosen course date, to secure their place. Students will only be permitted to attend a module if payment is received in time. Fee payment deadlines can be found at: lse.ac.uk/intranet/LSEServices/financeDivision/feesAndStudentFinance/Paying%20fees/Executive%20programmes.aspx#llm
8. The registration fee of £500 is non-refundable. If you withdraw from the course before starting a session or are unable to attend a session for which you have registered, all module fees will be credited to a module in a later session. You must inform the Programme Manager if you are unable to attend a module you are registered for. In exceptional circumstances, at the Director's discretion, the funds paid for that session will be refunded. Changes in fee levels may occur over the course of the programme. The student will remain liable for any difference between the fees chargeable at the later session and the fee credit from the module which the student withdrew from. Module fees are non-refundable, and will not be credited to another session, if you have attended classes but withdraw before the assessment.

9. It is our intent to offer each advertised module at least once during the four year degree period. This may not always be possible due, for example, to teacher illness or resignation. It is possible that a module may need to be cancelled at short notice, such as where the teacher is unavailable or participant numbers are very low. If this happens, students will be given the option of taking another module during the same session or, alternatively, the fees paid towards that module will be held in credit for your next chosen module/session or refunded if preferred. Students will be informed of the withdrawal of a module no later than two weeks prior to the commencement of the module.

Assessment

10. All Executive LLM courses are assessed by either take-home examination or 8,000 word extended essay.
11. To comply with the Department's writing requirement at master's level, all students are required to write one extended essay of 8,000 words as the assessment for one of their courses to obtain the Degree, the Diploma or the Certificate. Students are not permitted to take more than two courses assessed by extended essay to obtain the Degree or the Diploma or more than one course assessed by extended essay to obtain a Certificate.
12. Extended essays must not exceed the set word limit and must be submitted by a set deadline. Students must provide evidence of original work or a capacity for critical analysis. Students will be required, at the time of submission of their work, to sign a statement on plagiarism. An oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine.
13. The take-home examinations will be set two months after the completion of the intensive teaching. The date of the examination will be provided at the date courses are available for selection. They will be uploaded and submitted electronically.
14. All students are required to write an extended essay of 8,000 words as the assessment for one of their courses to obtain the Degree, the Diploma or the Certificate. Students are not permitted to take more than two courses assessed by extended essay to obtain the Degree or the Diploma or more than one course assessed by extended essay to obtain a Certificate. The extended essay topic will be set by the course teacher. The student may propose essay topics and ideas to the teacher.
15. All students will be required to be online during the examination period in case there is any need to contact them.
16. Students will be able to re-sit a course examination once. A re-sit examination will be set as soon as possible after the student is notified of the failure. At the Programme Director's sole discretion in lieu of a re-sit or deferred examination the student may be required to submit an 8,000 word essay. In the Programme Director's sole discretion where the student has already completed the maximum of two 8,000 word essays, the Director may require the student to submit an additional (third) 8,000 word essay. Where due to re-sits or deferrals the student has taken three 8,000 word essays any re-sit or deferred examination must be by take-home exam.
17. Any student who fails an exam twice in the same course will not be able to proceed to complete the Executive LLM programme. Students will not be able to proceed to take further courses if at the first sit and the re-sit examination are both bad fails or if the failure is not a bad fail but the student has failed another course following the re-sit. If such a student has already successfully completed 4 courses or 6 courses prior to such a failure, the student will be awarded a Certificate of Legal Studies or Diploma of Legal Studies.

Registration

18. The maximum period of registration on the programme is six years. Therefore completion of all the degree requirements (or Diploma, Certificate) must be within a six year period.

Course Completion Rate

19. Students will be expected to take one to two courses per year. Any student who fails to take a course for a two year period will be asked to provide reasons for the failure to complete courses. Any student who following such a request either fails to provide a response to the Programme Director or fails to complete a course in the year following the giving of these reasons, may be deregistered from the programme.

Executive MSc Political Economy of Europe - Progression from Y1 to Y2 and Resit Rules

1. Students who attain at least a Pass grade in each of the first year courses will be eligible to proceed into the second year.
2. Students who attain a Fail grade in a course of 0.5 unit value, but attain at least a Pass in the remaining 1.5 units will be eligible to proceed into the second year. Such students will be able to resit the failed course (only on one occasion) at the next available opportunity alongside their second year courses.
3. Students who attain a Fail grade in courses to the value of 1.0 unit, but who attain at least a Pass in the remaining 1.0 unit will only be permitted to progress at the discretion of the Sub- Board of Examiners who will consider their overall performance and may recommend that the student cannot progress until they have successfully completed a resit in their failed course(s). Where a student is permitted to progress, they will be able to resit the failed course (only on one occasion) at the next available opportunity.
4. Students who attain a Bad Fail grade in any course or who attain a Fail grade in courses to the value of 1.5 units will not be eligible to progress and will need to undertake resits at the next available opportunity. If, following the resits a student has failed to improve their grade, he/she may not be eligible to proceed into the second year, if he/she will no longer be able to successfully complete the programme according to the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).
5. The marks of any student who fails up to 1.0 units over the course of the programme will be subject to the penalty rules stipulated at paragraph 5.2 of the School's Scheme for the Award of a Taught Master's Degree (four units).

Executive Master of Public Administration

20 month programme. Students must take courses to the value of 8 half units as set out below. Alternative exit points are available to students who are not able to complete the degree. An LSE Diploma is available on the completion of six courses and an LSE Certificate on the completion of four courses.

To be eligible to progress into the second year, students should attain at least a Pass grade in each of the first year papers. If a single paper is failed, the student may proceed to the second year and resit the failed paper along with the second year papers. The Sub-Board of Examiners may, at its discretion, consider an application to progress to the second year of the degree from a student who has fallen marginally short of this requirement.

MA Area Studies

Academic or full-year programme depending on courses selected (either three courses and a dissertation or four courses).

Candidates offering a dissertation will not be permitted to proceed to its submission unless they have satisfied the examiners in the written papers, which are usually taken in May/June. The dissertation is submitted in September.

Lecture/seminar lists and Course Guides for these degrees will mainly be found in the information on Masters degrees in the departments concerned.

The School cooperates in the teaching for certain branches of the MA Area Studies degree offered by the University of London.

** Students taking this course can apply for a place on FM457 MATLAB for MSc Students, a non-assessed computer course.

*** Students must seek permission from the Department of Finance to take this course. They will be required to complete an online form about their background in mathematics, statistics and economics. The forms will be reviewed and approved or rejected, or a student may be asked to provide more information.

**** Students may not take MA415, MA416 or MA417.

MSc in China in Comparative Perspective

Full-year programme. Students must take one compulsory course, select optional courses to the value of two units, and write a dissertation, as shown below. Attendance at seminars and at non-assessed tutorials is compulsory. Students intending to use this degree to convert to a discipline in which they hope to qualify to do a research degree, should choose all their options (papers 2 and 3) in that discipline. At least one option should be a general introduction to that discipline (e.g. paper 2 courses) and others can be found on the departmental website the student is interested in. Otherwise students select courses from paper 3 (these courses expect students from this MSc) or they can choose other options not listed below. In either case, the student must email the teacher responsible for the course, backing up their request to join it.

MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (two-year Programme)

Students without a strong background in both economics and mathematics are required to take the MSc programme over two years, starting with attendance on the September Course EC400. The first year of the programme is governed by the 'Regulations for Diplomas'; students who successfully complete the examinations at the end of the first year will be awarded a Diploma in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics. In order to progress to the second year, which is governed by the 'Regulations for Taught Masters Degrees', students must gain marks of 60% or higher in each examinable course at the end of their first year. The Sub-Board of Examiners may, at its discretion, consider for progression candidates who fall marginally short of this requirement. However, students gaining the Diploma in a re-sit attempt are not eligible for progression onto the MSc, nor are students entitled to re-sit first year examinations already passed in order to achieve the progression standard.

You are expected to attend the course teaching on the half-unit that you chose to write your dissertation on. FM404, FM440, FM447 and FM472 are taught during the daytime only. To take these courses students must be able to attend teaching during the day.

Supplementary criteria for progression from the first to the second year of the MSc Finance (part-time)

To be eligible to proceed into the second year, candidates must attain at least a Pass grade in the two compulsory courses: FM422 and FM423. If a candidate fails (but does not 'Bad Fail') one compulsory course, the Board may exceptionally allow progression to the second year. Exceptional progression will be at the sole discretion of the Board. If a candidate fails both of these compulsory courses they will not be allowed to progress to year two. If a candidate has a 'Bad Fail' in one or both courses they will not be allowed to progress to year two.

A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion) and at the next normal opportunity. The School may consider an application for repeat tuition in any failed courses from a student. Results obtained at re-sit shall bear their normal value.

MSc in Global Politics

The MSc includes a core course, 'The Politics of Globalization' (paper 1) which all students must take. It draws on specialist knowledge from across the LSE's Politics staff to offer a comprehensive introduction to the changing structure of the global order, and the contemporary challenges of global politics. The rest of the MSc allows considerable choice of options whilst seeking to blend a global focus with more detailed thematic or regional knowledge. Students can also choose the Global Civil Society stream, in which case they must take a second core course, Global Civil Society, and additional options as detailed below. All students must write a 10,000 word dissertation.

PLEASE NOTE: Due to staff sabbaticals and research leave, the School cannot guarantee that all the courses listed below will be available.

LLM

The general regulations for MA and MSc Degrees and the Code of Practice for Taught Masters Programmes on the online Calendar apply to the LLM programme except in the event of inconsistency when these regulations for the LLM take priority.

In order to obtain the degree, students must complete courses (see Course list below) to the value of four full units, which will normally comprise eight half unit courses. One of these eight half units will be the compulsory half unit Legal Research Skills course, which will be assessed by a 10,000 word dissertation. This stand-alone dissertation will provide the element of extended writing for all LLM students. Students will be required to sign a statement on plagiarism when submitting this dissertation. Students can complete the LLM course requirements in either one full-year programme, or as a part-time student in two years, or by extended part-time study within a maximum of six years. Courses should be chosen from the list below. Subject to availability and with the permission of the Programme Director of the LLM, one complementary course from other Master's courses at the School may be selected to replace one from the list below to the total equivalent of one half unit. Exceptionally, and subject to the same conditions courses to the total value of one full unit may be selected to replace two courses from the list below.

Part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Part-time students must take courses to the value of two units in their first year and courses to the value of two units in their second year.

Extended part-time students must satisfy the same requirements as those applicable to full-time students. Students must take courses to the value of one unit in the first year and successfully complete this. Students who successfully complete four units within a period of six years will satisfy the requirements for the degree.

Students registered before 2013-14

The LLM programme regulations for students entering in or after 2013-14 differ from those in force in previous years. This reflects a move to half unit courses in 2013-14. Students registered before 2013-14 are covered by the regulations which were in operation at the time of their initial registration on the programme. For earlier editions of the regulations please refer to the page for previous academic sessions lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar/PreviousAcademicSessions.htm. This page contains links to reference copies of programme regulations for years 2009-10, 2010-11, 2011-12, 2012-13 and 2013-14. If continuing students have any queries on these matters they should consult their Academic Adviser.

Examination

Students will be examined in courses to the total value of four full units.

An oral examination may be held if the examiners so determine. For courses assessed by written examination (which will be the norm on the LLM apart from the Legal Research Skills course), the examination will normally be held in May or June. Questions may be set on recent legislation and current proposals for law reform within the scope of the syllabus. No materials may be brought into the examination room except in accordance with the regulations for the particular course.

Degree certificate

Students who successfully complete the LLM examination may elect to have one of the following titles attached to their degree certificate if, in the opinion of the Programme Director of the LLM, the title reflects the course of study followed by the student. The possible titles are listed below with the courses attached to those areas listed with them. If no such election is made, the LLM degree certificate will state 'LLM' without further specification.

SUPPLEMENTARY CRITERIA FOR PROGRESSION FROM THE FIRST TO THE SECOND YEAR OF MSc MANAGEMENT

To be eligible to proceed into the second year, candidates must attain at least a Pass grade in the six compulsory courses (MG431, MG434, MG458, MG459, MG461 and MG462). If a candidate fails one core course up to the value of 0.5 units, they will not be permitted to progress unless the fail can be compensated by a mark of Merit standard in another of the core courses to the same unit value. If a candidate fails more than one of these compulsory courses they will not be allowed to progress to year two. If candidates fail any of their optional courses taken in year one, they will be allowed to progress to year two provided they have no Bad Fail marks. A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion) and at the next normal opportunity. The School may consider an application for repeat tuition in any failed courses from a student. Results obtained at re-sit shall bear their normal value.

Please note that under regulation 6.2 of the classification scheme, if a candidate has met the requirements for the award of a degree having re-sat failed courses, s/he can only be recommended for the award of a Pass degree unless, in the judgement of the examiners, the initial failure(s) was at least in part a direct result of medical and/or extenuating circumstances.

SUPPLEMENTARY CRITERIA FOR PROGRESSION FROM THE FIRST TO THE SECOND YEAR OF MSc MANAGEMENT

To be eligible to proceed into the second year, candidates must attain at least a Pass grade in the six compulsory courses (MG431, MG434, MG458, MG459, MG461 and MG462). If a candidate fails one core course up to the value of 0.5 units, they will not be permitted to progress unless the fail can be compensated by a mark of Merit standard in another of the core courses to the same value. If a candidate fails more than one of these compulsory courses they will not be allowed to progress to year two. If candidates fail any of their optional courses taken in year one, they will be allowed to progress to year two provided they have no Bad Fail marks. A student shall normally be entitled to re-sit any failed courses only (on one occasion) and at the next normal opportunity. The School may consider an application for repeat tuition in any failed courses from a student. Results obtained at re-sit shall bear their normal value.

Please note that under regulation 6.2 of the classification scheme, If a candidate has met the requirements for the award of a degree having re-sat failed courses, s/he can only be recommended for the award of a Pass degree unless, in the judgement of the examiners, the initial failure(s) was at least in part a direct result of medical and/or extenuating circumstances

Regarding Economic History (EH) courses only: it may be possible to take further options among EH courses with the agreement of the course teacher responsible and the Academic Coordinator of the Double Degree. One of the above may be replaced by a further course from other LSE departments (subject to agreement with tutor and teacher responsible for the course).

- 5 Compulsory Language Requirement Students can fulfil the language requirement of the dual Master's degree in three different ways:

1) By taking two years of language training while at Columbia and the London School of Economics.
2) By taking, and passing, two translation exams. (Both translation exams must be taken at Columbia. See sample translation exams on the CU History Department website).
3) By taking, and passing, one translation exam and studying a language for one year, either at Columbia or at the LSE Language Centre.

Notes Students can also take HY447 Hacking the Archive (in 2014/15), a non-assessed course taken in addition to the required four full-units as detailed above.

AC410 Not available in 2014/15

Management Accounting, Strategy and Organisational Control

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wim Van Der Stede OLD 2.18 and others.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor, if they have sufficient academic background knowledge and if places permit. This course cannot be taken in conjunction with AC411 Accounting, Strategy and Control.

Course content: This course provides an advanced overview of current developments in the thought and practice of management accounting, strategy, and organisational control. The course consists of two modules.

Organisational and strategic aspects of management accounting and control systems

This module focuses on the organisational and strategic aspects of management accounting and, in particular, the design of planning and performance measurement systems. It provides an insight into current theoretical and practical developments in management control. Management control is an essential function of management to ensure that the organisation's objectives and strategies are carried out effectively; good management control increases the probability of organisational success. This module focuses on the use of results controls, that is, those that involve measurement and evaluation of financial and non-financial performance. The module explores the key decisions that must be made in using results controls, such as choices of performance measures, performance standards and targets, and performance-based incentives. Limitations of traditional financial performance measures are discussed, such as their tendency to make managers excessively short-term oriented, which leads into related issues of corporate governance.

An economics, information systems and context-specific perspective on management accounting and control systems

Continuing on the organisational control theme from Module 1, the first part of this module focuses primarily on inter-organisational controls and the difficulties involved in organisational control of fluid, inter-organisational settings and configurations, such as joint-ventures and various types of alliances, often involving global alliance partners.

The second part of this module then shifts to, and focuses on, the design of costing systems, one of the important tasks of the management accountant. For managers using information from such costing systems in their decision making, it is important to understand the mechanisms by which these data are collected. This module discusses what it is exactly that costing systems try to approximate, which methods are available, what can go wrong in the costing of products and services, and how we can most effectively and efficiently improve the costing approaches. As such, there is an emphasis on cost information for decisions and strategic cost analysis.

Further detailed choice of subjects will be determined by those lecturing on the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: A variety of types of assignments are given for class discussion including exercises and case studies. Many classes examine complex cases with advance case preparation and in-class participation being an absolute requisite. Two pieces of written work, or equivalent, per term are assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists will be given out at the start of each part of the course. Illustrative references include: K Merchant and W Van der Stede, Management Control Systems: Performance Measurement, Evaluation, and Incentives (Prentice Hall, 2012).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

AC411 Half Unit

Accounting, Strategy and Control

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wim Van der Stede OLD 2.18

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM) and MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor if they have sufficient academic background knowledge.

Course content: This course provides an advanced overview of current theoretical and practical developments in the area of organisational control, which is an essential function of management to ensure that the organisation's objectives and strategies are carried out effectively. Good management control increases the probability of organisational success.

The course focuses on the use of results controls; that is, those that involve measurement and evaluation of financial and nonfinancial performance. This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Martin Giraudeau OLD 5.02, Dr Tommaso Palermo KSW 3.07 and Dr Andrea Mennicken OLD 3.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Economy, Risk and Society, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management, Organisations and Governance, MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor.

Course content: This is an advanced course focusing on the organisational and institutional settings within which risk is managed.

The first five lectures deal with key issues in organisational responses to risk and uncertainty, including the impact of disasters and accidents and the growing formalisation and standardisation of risk management practice. The second five lectures will deal with specific topics where values of accountability and governance intersect with organisational risk management practices. The overall purpose of the course is to provide students with a critical appreciation of the management of risk as an organisational and social process. The course is necessarily cross-disciplinary, drawing on scholarship within accounting, organisational sociology and regulation studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Two pieces of written work will be assessed during the term but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: No single book covers the entire course.

Key readings include: Bebchuk & Fried, Pay Without Performance (Harvard, 2004); Coffee, Gatekeepers: The Professions and Corporate Governance (Oxford, 2006); Hutter & Power (eds) Organizational Encounters with Risk, (Cambridge, 2005); Power, Organized Uncertainty: Designing a World of Risk Management (Oxford, 2007); Turner & Pidgeon, Man-Made Disasters, (Butterworth/Heinemann, 1997); Vaughan, The Challenger Launch Decision, (Chicago, 1997); Short & Clarke (eds) Organizations, Uncertainties and Risks (Westview, 1992); Weick & Sutcliffe, Managing the Unexpected: Assuring High Performance in an Age of Complexity (Jossey-Bass, 2007).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Financial Reporting, Capital Markets and Business Combinations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vasiliki Athanasakou OLD 2.20 and Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Management and MSc in Management (CEMS MIM). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor if they have sufficient academic background knowledge. This course cannot be taken in conjunction with AC420 Financial Reporting in Capital Markets.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of financial accounting at undergraduate level is presumed.

Course content: A number of financial reporting issues and topics are covered. It is likely that they include but are not restricted to the following: accounting for value creation with special emphasis on cash flows and revenues, business combinations, corporate disclosure, capital markets efficiency, and corporate governance. Most topics are covered from an International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) and/or United States Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (US GAAP) perspective.

Teaching: 18 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: The formative assessment consists of two pieces of course work that students will hand in. This will be a combination of essay/discussion type questions and some numerical calculations. The questions will be representative in nature and difficulty of the exam which will also be a combination of discussion and numerical questions. The questions to be handed in for formative assessment will be based on specific readings and numerical examples covered in class and lecture and will ensure that students have gained mastery over the course material and are comfortable with its quantitative aspects. In addition to individual feedback the written work will also be discussed in class, and solution hints and discussion points posted on Moodle.

Indicative reading: Throughout the course we rely on a range of academic articles, case studies, text book chapters, practitioner and popular press articles, company financial statements, and excerpts from accounting standards to illustrate the various concepts, treatments, and principles. Examples of readings: Beyer A, Cohen DA, Lys TZ and Walther BR 'The financial reporting environment: Review of the recent literature', Journal of Accounting and Economics 2010 50, 296-343; Kothari, SP (2001), 'Capital Markets Research in Accounting', Journal of Accounting and Economics Vol 31, pp 105-231; Farber DB (2008) 'Restoring Trust after Fraud: Does Corporate Governance Matter?' The Accounting Review 80, pp. 539-561; selected chapters from David Alexander, Anne Britton, and Ann Jorissen, International Financial Reporting and Analysis, 5th edn, Thomson.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour and 45 minutes) in the main exam period.

The first 15 minutes will be reading time.

Financial Reporting in Capital Markets

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vasiliki Athanasakou OLD 2.20, Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07, Prof Peter Pope OLD 5.04 and Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions and MSc in Law and Accounting. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted if they have knowledge of financial accounting acquired at undergraduate level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor. This course cannot be taken in conjunction with AC414 Financial Reporting, Capital Markets and Business Combinations.

Course content: Corporate financial statements are a key source of information about the economic activities of a firm. This course is intended to enhance the student's ability to relate economic events to financial statements and disclosures. It also seeks to aid in developing a coordinated set of concepts and principles to serve as a framework for analysing a wide variety of financial reporting issues. The goal is to enable students to understand the mapping between underlying economic events and the information in financial statements, and how this mapping affects inferences about the economic activities and position of the firm. The course also explores the regulatory environment and political climate, and how these link with the introduction of new standards and their underlying theories. Students are encouraged to relate economic events to diverse practices in financial statements, and to think critically of ongoing controversies and debates.

The course objectives are achieved through teaching a variety of financial reporting issues and topics including the following:

standard setting with respect to the conceptual frameworks; accounting for business combinations; accounting for value creation with special emphasis on cash flows statements and revenue recognition; capital markets efficiency; corporate disclosure; and corporate governance. Most topics are covered from an International Financial Reporting Standards and/or United States Generally Accepted Accounting Principles perspective.

The course also covers a number of theoretical perspectives such as deductive approaches, based on the notion of financial accounting as the measurement of economic income and value (including applications to current accounting controversies); economic approaches, regarding corporate financial reporting as an information system, including signalling and disclosure, and studying the demand for and supply of accounting information in a market setting and its stock market impact; and regulatory approaches, examining the nature of and case for and against the regulation of corporate financial reporting. Illustrations are provided on how these theories are used in standard setting and in valuation. Detailed choice of subjects will be determined by those lecturing on the course and many vary to some extent from year to year. Knowledge of basic accounting is assumed.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: The lecturers set exercises, essays or case studies for class discussion each week. Many of these involve reading key papers and other writings in the financial accounting literature and illustrating their effects numerically. Four pieces of work, based on these assignments, are collected for formative assessment.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are handed out at the start of the course, and will be largely based on papers in academic journals. Relevant books covering specific parts of the course are: Keith Alfredson, Ruth Picker, Janice Loftus, Kerry Clark, Victoria Wise, Matt Dyki, Applying International Financial Reporting Standards, 2nd edn, Wiley, 2009; Beaver WH, Financial Reporting: An Accounting Revolution, 3rd edn, Prentice-Hall, 1998; Scott W, Financial Accounting Theory, Prentice Hall, 1997; Watts RL & Zimmerman JL, Positive Accounting Theory, Prentice-Hall, 1986; David Alexander, Anne Britton, and Ann Jorissen, International Financial Reporting and Analysis, 5th edn, Thomson.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours and 15 minutes) in the main exam period.

The first 15 minutes is reading time.

and external accounting practices are both a function of specific economic and political interests, but are also shaped by social and political aspirations. The role of accountants and other agents will be addressed.

The course will emphasise the inter-relations between technical, organisational and institutional issues. While some technical accounting knowledge will be helpful, it is not essential and each lecture will provide the necessary technical foundations.

Indicative topics, listed along the lines of “Foundations” and “Risk Management, Accountability, and Corporate Governance” include: Foundations-Reporting, Calculation and Disclosure; Transnational Regulation and Standardisation; Accounting and the Notion of “Entity”; Audit and Assurance: The Audit Society; Organisational Boundaries, Structure and Control; Accountability, Incentives and Performance; Accounting for Sustainability; Organisational Failure. Risk Management, Accountability and Corporate Governance-Disasters, Accidents and Errors; Organisations and the Management of Uncertainty; The Risk Management Process; Mapping and Communicating Risk in Organisations; Organisations, Security and Resilience; Corporate Governance: Board Functioning, Gatekeepers, Executive Compensation, Regulation.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to produce two pieces of written work per term. This may take the form of either an essay, or the analysis of a case, and may also include in-class presentation and team-based work. This work will be assessed, but the grades will not count towards the overall course assessment.

Indicative reading: Chapman, Cooper & Miller (eds.), Accounting, Organizations and Institutions (Oxford, 2009); Hopwood & Miller (eds.), Accounting as Social and Institutional Practice (Cambridge, 1994); Power, The Audit Society (Oxford, 1999); Roberts, The Modern Firm (Oxford, 2004); Power, Organized Uncertainty: Designing a World of Risk Management (Oxford, 2007); Hutter & Power (eds.), Organizational Encounters with Risk (Cambridge, 2005); Hood, Baldwin & Rothstein, The Government of Risk (Oxford, 2000); Coffee, Gatekeepers: The Professions and Corporate Governance (Oxford, 2006); Bebchuk & Fried, Pay Without Performance (Harvard, 2004)

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

Accounting, Organisations and Institutions

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Hall OLD 2.11A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This course is not available to other students except in special circumstances and with the written permission of the Course Director.

Pre-requisites: There are no specific pre-requisites and the course does not require a background in accounting. Pre-session training in the form of various intensive sessions prior to the start of term will be offered for those who need a brief ‘technical’ preparation for the Programme.

Course content: The object of the course is to provide students with an advanced understanding of the changing role and position of accounting practices in organisations, both public and private, and societies more generally. Students will be exposed to advanced thinking about how accounting practices are much more than a collection of routine techniques but are shaped by their institutional contexts, have behavioural consequences and can represent different values. We will focus on how efforts to design internal

MSc Accounting, Organisations and Institutions: Pre-session course

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Hall OLD 2.11A

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course would normally be available to MSc Accounting, Organisations and Institutions students only. The purpose of the two pre-sessionals is to acquaint students without any prior, or little, background in accounting to two core areas within accounting: Financial Accounting and Management Accounting. Students with some prior background in accounting may find the sessions to be useful as a “refresher”.

Course content: Session 1: Introduction to Financial Accounting and Auditing Session 2: Introduction to Management Accounting

Teaching: The two sessions are held over two days before the start of MT.

Formative coursework: Study materials for the pre-session will be made available by means of selected handouts

Assessment: There is no assessment.

Valuation and Security Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pascal Frantz OLD 3.07 and Dr Elena Beccalli

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Law and Accounting, MSc in Management and Regulation of Risk, MSc in Management and Strategy and MSc in Risk and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Other students may be admitted to the course if they have a reasonable knowledge of financial accounting or finance acquired at undergraduate or equivalent level, and only with the agreement, in writing, of the MSc (Accounting) Course Tutor.

Pre-requisites: It is advantageous for students to have knowledge of financial accounting and finance (asset pricing).

Course content: The aim of this course is to introduce students to security analysis and valuation from both theoretical and empirical perspectives. Students are furthermore provided with an opportunity to apply their skills by valuing, in small groups, from the point of view of a "sell-side analyst", a firm's equity of their choice using technologies based on the present values of free cash flows and economic value added. The course should appeal to students interested in investment analysis and fund management.

The course is presented in three parts. The first part, financial analysis, focuses on past and present performance evaluation, which is used by financial analysts to generate expectations about future performance (prospective analysis). The second part, security valuation, focuses on the determination of intrinsic security prices, which, in efficient markets, reflect prospective performance. The third part, returns to fundamental and technical analysis, provides empirical evidence on returns to trading strategies based on either financial analysis or past stock returns.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 9 hours of seminars and 3 hours of workshops in the LT.

Students will present their corporate valuation projects during the LT workshops.

Indicative reading: Lectures are based on Beccalli E and Frantz, P, Valuation and Securities Analysis, 2012. Other books recommended include Penman S, Financial Statement Analysis and Security Valuation, McGraw-Hill, 2012, as well as Palepu K, Healy B & Bernard V, Business Analysis and Valuation, South-Western College Publishing, 2012. For background reading for the corporate valuation project: Koller T, Goedhart M & Wessels D, Valuation: Measuring and Managing the Value of Companies, Wiley, 2010. The course also relies on journal articles published in the financial analysis and financial markets literatures.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Project (30%) in the lent term.

accounting component highlights aspects of reporting that are important to users of financial information. This includes frameworks of accounting regulation, the balance sheet, income statement and the cash flow statement, as well as an introduction to financial statement analysis. The management accounting component explores issues of accounting information and cost management, managerial decision making and performance measurement. It discusses also the interface between management accounting and technology, corporate strategy, e-business and marketing.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises, analyses of case studies, and essays. At least four pieces of written work will be collected for feedback during the course. Students are also required to participate actively in a variety of discussions and debates as part of the class activities.

Indicative reading: Illustrative references include: Weetman P, Financial Accounting: an Introduction, Prentice Hall, 2011; Bhimani A, Strategic Finance, Strategy Press, 2012; Bhimani A, and Bromwich M, Management Accounting: Retrospect and Prospect, Elsevier/CIMA, 2009; Bhimani A, et al, Management and Cost Accounting, Pearson, 2015.

Management Accounting, Decisions and Control

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Alnoor Bhimani OLD 3.08

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available on the Diploma in Accounting and Finance, MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Economics and Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management and Strategy, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation, MSc in Public Management and Governance and MSc in Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course may also be taken by MSc students who have not previously studied accounting subjects to a significant extent. Students in the MSc Accounting and Finance programme are not permitted to enrol in this course or in AC491.

Course content: Enterprises must today tackle markets that are affected by the “flattening” effects of globalisation and the extensive advances in internet-based technologies. They must seek success in the face of intense competition including the ever more sophisticated corporate strategies of their competitors. At the same time, the interface between business decisions and management accounting is regarded as becoming more complex and a more significant determinant of high corporate performance. This course provides students with an introduction to issues of accounting information and cost management, managerial decision making and performance measurement. It discusses also the interface between management accounting and technology, corporate strategy, e-business and marketing.

The course will cover:

- established managerial accounting concepts such as cost-volume-profit relationships, overhead cost allocations, activity based costing, the balanced scorecard, target cost management and quality costing; - the implications for accounting of flexible organisational technologies such as just-in-time systems, enterprise resource planning, computer integrated system and collaborative manufacturing; - operational, marketing and corporate strategy issues including cost management, e-business and internet-based business models; - organisational arrangements such as functional and multidivisional firms as well as strategic alliances, joint ventures and virtual enterprises; - comparative international management accounting systems; - accounting controls and organisational designs including responsibility centres, financial performance measurements, variance analysis, and incentives; - strategic accounting tools and practices.

The course will provide participants with:

- an understanding of strategic, market and technological links to management accounting and control practices; - the ability to apply cutting edge management accounting techniques within competitive business environments; - a knowledge of interrelationships between behavioural, organisational and cultural issues and management accounting systems.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises, analyses of case studies, and essays. At least two pieces of written work will be collected for feedback during the course. Students are also required to participate actively in a variety of discussions and debates as part of the class activities.

Financial Accounting, Reporting and Disclosure

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Bjorn Jorgensen OLD 2.17

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions. This course is available on the Diploma in Accounting and Finance, MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management, MSc in Management Science (Operational Research) and MSc in Management and Strategy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course may also be taken by MSc students who have not previously studied accounting subjects to a significant extent. Students in the MSc Accounting and Finance programme are not permitted to enrol in this course or in AC490.

Course content: This course provides students with an introduction to financial accounting, and highlights aspects of reporting that are important to users of financial information. The course covers the preparation of key financial statements and the frameworks of accounting regulation. The course will also cover accounting issues related to depreciation, goodwill, and intangible assets, equity, debt, and consolidation. Students will be introduced to financial statement analysis and research on the use of accounting information in financial markets.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce several pieces of written work, including accounting exercises and essays.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be made available at the start of the course. Illustrative text: Weetman P, Financial Accounting: an Introduction, 5th edn, Prentice Hall, 2011.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Students answer four questions (one compulsory question; two from four questions; and one out of two essay questions).

Dissertation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ane Miren Tamayo OLD 5.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Accounting and Finance. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students will normally elect to take this as an option in paper 3 or 4. Permission to select the long essay option must be obtained from the Programme Director by the end of the third week of MT. Students wishing to select this option must first identify and secure agreement from a member of staff who is willing to provide supervision for the dissertation. Approval for this option will not be granted if such an agreement is not obtained from an academic staff member.

Course content: The dissertation may focus on analysing the relevant literature and other source material on a particular topic and writing a critical survey or commentary, indicating clearly the main problems and their nature, or investigating and reporting on a selected problem, either by some small-scale empirical research, or by using information derived from secondary sources.

The dissertation must identify relevant issues, sustain reasoned argument, and draw supportable conclusions. It must be arranged in an organised manner and include a full bibliography.

Teaching: There is no teaching associated with the dissertation, but students who select this option are encouraged to attend the dissertation workshop sessions organised by the Teaching and Learning Centre.

Arrangements for supervision

Students writing a dissertation will be supervised by a member of staff who will not necessarily be their normal supervisor. Students are responsible for identifying an appropriate member of staff to supervise their dissertation essay, and for ensuring the member of staff agrees to provide supervision. As a general rule, supervisors of dissertations will not comment on the work after a discussion of the first draft.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Two typewritten copies of the dissertation must be submitted to the MSc Programme Manager, due by 31 May. The dissertation should be double-spaced, on A4 paper, with a maximum word limit of 10,000 words, not including Appendices. Mark penalties will apply if the word limit is exceeded.

This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course covers selected topics in the anthropology of religion, focusing upon relevant theoretical debates. In the Michaelmas term, the focus will also be on understanding through specific ethnographic and empirical case-studies, the ways in which lived religious practice, and the understanding of religion, get constituted inside and outside 'Western' and modern contexts. We will also pay attention to cases in which (as in all post-colonial settings, and in relation to so-called fundamentalisms) 'Western' and the 'non-Western' definitions are emerging in interplay with each other, including their relation to understandings of modernity and the secular. Some classic topics in the anthropology of religion are also considered, such as ritual, belief, and sacrifice. In the Lent term, we will consider topics such as shamanism, cargo cults, initiation, witchcraft and sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

AN404

Anthropology: Theory and Ethnography

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07 and Prof Adam Kuper

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective and MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The main aim of this course is to examine the relationship between theory and ethnography in modern social and cultural anthropology; the course focuses mainly on the development of anthropology before circa 1970 (with an emphasis on the British School) during the MT, and after that date during the LT. The course starts with the influence on social anthropology of classic social theorists Durkheim, Marx, and Weber. It covers topics such as the origin of the concept of the social sciences as a distinct branch of knowledge, and of key concepts within that paradigm (for instance, 'kinship' or 'religion') functionalism/structural functionalism; methodological individualism; conflict and the critique of functionalism; class consciousness and ideology, ethnic group and social stratification; and 'elective affinities' between cultural predispositions and economic action. The significance of these foundational concepts for an understanding of current anthropology and key stages in its development is also a focus of the course. The second term covers topics which may include structuralism; Bourdieu, Sahlins, practice theory; theories of culture and interpretive anthropology; postmodernism and ethnographic critique. The precise emphasis and distribution of topics may vary from year to year.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework consists of participation in weekly seminars, and the opportunity to work on formative essays with the student's academic tutor, as per normal departmental arrangements.

Indicative reading: A. Callinicos 2007 Social Theory; a historical introduction; A. Kuper, 2005, The Reinvention of Primitive Society: transformations of a myth; H. L. Moore and T. ## AN405

The Anthropology of Kinship, Sex and Gender

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD 6.11 and Dr Nicholas Long OLD 6.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Gender, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an examination of the cultural frameworks and social aspects of kinship systems, gender roles, personhood and human sexuality, analysed through ethnographic examples from diverse cultures. It aims to equip students with the analytical tools to engage in theoretical debates concerning core concepts such as 'kinship', 'marriage', 'gender', 'sex', 'the person', and the relationship between 'nature' and 'culture'. The course charts the history of anthropological debates on kinship, relatedness, sex and gender, and familiarises students with a range of contemporary approaches to these themes, placing ethnographic materials into a critical dialogue with recent developments in gender theory, queer theory, the anthropology of colonialism, psychoanalysis, evolutionary theory, and cognitive anthropology.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare material for discussion in the seminars. Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

AN419 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Christianity

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The ethnography of local Christianities in the light of differing cultural and social situations including colonial conditions. The relationship between Christianity and the discipline of anthropology. The course examines a number of anthropological and historical studies of local forms of Christianity, from a range including local forms of Catholicism, Mormonism, contemporary and historical Protestantisms including American Protestant forms and 'heretical' and other unorthodox Christianities. The course asks why anthropologists shied away from analysing Christianity long after studies of other world religions, such as Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism, had become widely established. It looks at the relationship between Christianity and the history of anthropological thought, and locates the place of Christianity in the writings of Mauss, Durkheim, Foucault and others, in order to defamiliarise the religion which Europeans and Americans especially often take for granted. Issues examined may include the nature and experience of belief, conversion and the appropriation of Christian doctrines by local populations, the problems of writing about religion, Christianity and the state, the nature of religious confession, Christian texts, and Scriptural reading practices, Christian objects and materialities, Christianity and women's religious and social experience (from Medieval women mystics to women priests), inquisitions and heretical beliefs, priests and alternative forms of mediation with divine power, miraculous saints, incorrupt bodies and 'non-eaters' and changing ideas about death, Heaven and Hell. Where possible, the course will include a student fieldwork weekend and forms of reflection and reporting on that experience. Please check with the course teacher in any given year whether this is planned as part of the year's programme.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars. Students are asked to participate in the fieldwork trip in years when this is available (please note that costs will be kept to a minimum and consideration will be given in any cases of financial hardship). Fieldnotes and other materials will be prepared by fieldtrip participants.

AN420 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Nicholas Long

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will introduce students to selected theoretical and ethnographic issues in the history and contemporary life of Southeast Asia (including Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, The Philippines, and Vietnam). The alleged distinctiveness of Southeast Asian gender relations, political leadership, and experiences of self and emotion have led to ethnographic studies of the region making major contributions to the anthropology of the state, sovereignty, globalisation, gender, identity, violence, and mental health. By providing a strong grounding in regional ethnographic materials, this course will equip students to critically evaluate such contributions and to consider possible further contributions that studies of Southeast Asian might make to anthropological debates. The course will also examine how anthropologists have responded to the interpretive challenges presented by selected aspects of Southeast Asia's social and political life, such as the legacies of mass violence (e.g. the Cambodian genocide, the Vietnam War, or Indonesia's massacre of suspected communists), its ethnic and religious pluralism, and the impact of international tourism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Film screenings will also take place throughout the Lent Term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars.

The Anthropology of Industrialisation and Industrial Life

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jonathan Parry A505

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course deals with anthropological perspectives on the industrialization process, on industrial life and industrial work, examined in relation to relevant theoretical debates and with reference to selected ethnographies. The themes touched on are likely to include the way in which local understandings of modern machine production are laid down on the template of pre-existing cultural assumptions and cosmological ideas; the rural-urban nexus linking neophyte proletarians with peasant villages; the extent to which traditional forms of social structure and inequality are reproduced in the modern factory; the modern factory as an ethnic 'melting-pot' and as an agent of the 'secularization' and 'disenchantment of the world'; shop-floor organization, cultural and organizational factors affecting the intensity of labour, and the extent to which factory production requires new concepts of time and new kinds of work discipline; the social organization of the industrial neighbourhood; gender relations in factory and neighbourhood; the extent to which industrial workers in 'the Third World' represent an 'aristocracy of labour', the contrast between workers in the organised sector and the unorganised sector, and the conditions under which the industrial workforce emerges as a class 'for itself'; trade-union activism; resistance to and collusion with management; local discourses about industrial pollution and environmental degradation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars.

The Anthropology of Melanesia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W Scott, OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course provides an introduction to the culture area in the Southwest Pacific Ocean known as Melanesia through an examination of classic and contemporary ethnography of Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands, Vanuatu, New Caledonia and Fiji. In the 1880s a hereditary Fijian priest named Dugamoi claimed to have acquired supernatural powers through initiatory out-of-body experiences and prophesied the imminent transformation of the Fijian social order: soon the European colonial rulers would become subject to Fijians and Fijian chiefs would serve the commoners. The wealth of Europeans – cloth, tinned goods, and other manufactured items – would all flow spontaneously and prodigiously to Fiji. In 1919 the 'Vailala Madness' inspired the followers of Evara on the south coast of what is now Papua New Guinea with expectations that the spirits of their ancestors were about to arrive in a huge steamer bearing abundant supplies of flour, rice, tobacco, and knives and transferring control of trade in these goods from whites to blacks.

In the 1940s, Tsek instructed the people of the island of Espiritu Santo (in present-day Vanuatu) to prepare for the advent of cargo-laden Americans by killing their livestock, burning their villages, going naked, and living in communal antinomian anticipation of a new world order.

Collectively labelled 'cargo cults', such religious and political movements have, since the middle of the twentieth century, become iconic for many of the geographic and cultural area known as Melanesia. By tracking the classic ethnographic construction, late twentieth-century critique, and recent reassessment of this category, the course offers a thematically-centred survey of key themes in the anthropology of Melanesia.

Questions and topics considered include: what is 'Melanesia'?

Is 'Melanesia' still a useful concept? The place of Melanesia in the history of anthropological theory; cosmologies, mythologies and religious practices; spatiality and emplacement; leadership and community formation; knowledge and secrecy; exchange; gender, race, personhood, and sociality; colonial histories; custom politics; indigenous Christianities; decolonization, nationalism and ethnogenesis; and Melanesian modernities.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in seminars.

The Anthropology of Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Katy Gardner OLD 5.07

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course explores how anthropologists have evaluated, criticised and contributed to development. Focussing on both 'Big D' development (schemes of improvement or projects) and 'little d' development (change which occurs as the result of economic growth or modernisation) the course shows how anthropological insights have been used to change practices from within as well as critique development from the outside. From anthropological work which seeks pragmatic engagement to that which deconstructs development as an oppressive and power laden discourse, the course aims to give students a broad background to the field. Topics covered include the role of the state, participation and farmer first approaches; gender and development; development as discourse and 'aidnography'; neo liberalism and global capital; corporate social responsibility; markets and micro credit; and the relationship between 'tradition' and modernity. Throughout, the course will draw upon a broad range of ethnographic examples.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare discussion material for presentation in the seminars.

Anthropology of Learning and Cognition

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD 6.11 and Prof Charles Stafford OLD 6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will start by examining the contribution that the study of human psychology can make to anthropology. After discussing why anthropologists should pay attention to psychology and why psychologists should pay attention to anthropology, we will examine a range of psychological findings (for example, on infants' knowledge of the physical and mental world) and their relevance to anthropology. Throughout, the course will focus on the relationship between mechanisms of cultural transmission, both informal and institutional, and what anthropologists have called 'culture' and 'society'. We will look at the way universal human capabilities develop and are used during different stages of life to create unique cultural understandings. Topics covered include 'innateness', 'theory of mind', informal and formal education, emotions, expertise, and the nature of different types of beliefs. We will consider how themes of this kind - elaborated in cognitive anthropology and in cognitive science more generally - lead to a reconsideration of classic anthropological concerns, including kinship, religion, politics and economics.

Anthropology and Human Rights

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The tension between respect for 'local cultures' and 'universal rights' is a pressing concern within human rights activism. For well over two decades, anthropologists have been increasingly involved in these discussions, working to situate their understandings of cultural relativism within a broader framework of social justice. This course explores the contributions of anthropology to the theoretical and practical concerns of human rights work. The term begins by reading a number of key human rights documents and theoretical texts. These readings are followed by selections in anthropology on the concepts of relativism and culture as well as other key frameworks, such as identity and violence. Students will then be asked to relate their understandings of human rights to the historical and cultural dimensions of particular cases, addressing such questions as the nature of humanity, historical conceptions of the individual, colonialism and imperialism, the limits of relativism, and the relationship between human rights in theory and in practice. Case studies focus on Africa and Latin America.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Anthropological Fieldwork Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W Scott, OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is for MSc Social Anthropology (Research) students preparing their detailed research proposal prior to embarking on fieldwork and other forms of empirical research.

Course content: The course aims to give you a thorough understanding of what is involved in carrying out ethnographic fieldwork, and what kinds of knowledge it can and cannot generate. It focuses both on the classic fieldwork methods used by anthropologists in the first half of the 20th century, and on more recent methodological developments and techniques that correspond to transformations in the nature of the social. It examines the realities of turning research ideas into realistic plans, in the context of your chosen area of fieldwork. The first half of the course deals with general ethnographic methods. These include participant observation; field notes and the organization of data; visual methods; ethics and anthropological 'codes of ethics'; interviews; written ethnography, ethnographic knowledge, and problems of representation; critical approaches to existing ethnographic texts; place, multi-sited ethnography, the local and the global; research into family, kinship and the genealogical method; archives and how to use documentary material; fieldwork methodology and the research proposal. In the second half of the course, students present drafts of their projects and think through associated methodological and ethical issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students are required to write and present a paper in the LT.

Assessment: Students' progress is monitored throughout the course by the teachers responsible. The work undertaken for this course is expected to feed directly into the preparation of your Research Proposal (AN443): The formal examination of the Proposal constitutes the assessment of the course.

AN442

Supervised Reading Course and Fieldwork Preparation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Members of staff of the Anthropology Department (students' supervisors).

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The programme of supervised reading aims to give students a detailed knowledge of the regional ethnographic literature relevant to their proposed research project, as well as providing them with a firm grounding in the theoretical literature relevant to their research objectives. The programme also aims to aid students in the practical organization of their field research (eg organizing language training, obtaining research permits and academic affiliations) through their supervisors' personal guidance. The programme of supervised reading will be specific to each student. It will be agreed with his/her supervisors at the beginning of the academic year and it will be closely reviewed during the course of the academic year.

Teaching: Students should expect to meet with at least one of their supervisors at 2-3 weekly intervals during term time, and to submit essays relevant to the preparation of their Research Proposal (AN443).

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write essays for their supervisors throughout the academic year.

Assessment: Other (100%).

Students' progress will be monitored by their supervisors through verbal discussion of the submitted written work. The work they undertake for this course is expected to feed directly into the preparation of the Research Proposal (AN443) and will be formally examined through it.

AN443

Research Proposal

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Members of staff of the Anthropology Department

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: All students must prepare a formal Research Proposal of 8,000-10,000 words (excluding references) for submission to the Department on or before the deadline in September. The proposal is written under the guidance of their supervisors (as set out in AN442), and will normally draw on material studied as part of the Anthropological Fieldwork Methods seminar (AN441). It will be expected to demonstrate knowledge of the regional ethnography, and theoretical and methodological literatures, relevant to the proposed research.

Assessment: Research proposal (100%).

AN444 Half Unit*Investigating the Philippines - New Approaches and Ethnographic Contexts

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD6.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available to MPhil Anthropology students where recommended by their supervisors, normally as part of the pre-fieldwork preparation year. This course may be taken as an outside option by master's students from other departments, as the regulations permit. It may also be taken by MPhil students from other departments as the regulations permit and with the agreement of the lecturer.

Pre-requisites: Graduates taking this course will normally have taken or be taking a foundational course in anthropology. However, topics may be of interest to those in several disciplines. Exemptions may therefore be sought from the lecturer, e.g. for students external to the department, who wish to explore what anthropology can bring to bear on their own fields.

Course content: This course offers the chance to look at the ethnography of one country in more detail than is usual for regional courses. It considers topics taken from the ethnography of the lowland and highland Philippines, with a focus on exciting new high quality writing, drawing on the recent renaissance in Philippine Studies. The course will balance works by expert non-Filipino ethnographers with the new writing of 'native ethnographies' by Filipino scholars resident both in the Philippines themselves and in the US.

The course will be framed within the colonial, religious and social history of the archipelago, and will consider both new interpretations of Philippine history, and topics on contemporary social issues, as well as using classic works on the Philippines. Teaching each week will normally be organised around the reading of one outstanding ethnography, allowing students to look closely at particular cases. Topics in any year are likely to be drawn from the following list (although obviously only ten topics can be offered in one year); Migration, 'mail-order' brides, and the Philippine diaspora; New religious movements: Philippine colonialism and the processes of conversion: Healing, spirit possession, midwifery and local medicine: The contemporary Catholic Church; Violence in the Philippines; Ecology, landscape and environmental politics: Kinship and its transformations; Gender, Philippine queer theory and Philippine transvestitism: Ritual, drama and local performance traditions: Philippine architecture and material culture.: Philippine cinema: Colonial politics, tribal politics and issues of self-representation: Magic, sorcery and "anitismo"; Tourism, symbolic economies and the impact of international capitalism.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students may be required to prepare discussion material for seminars.

Indicative reading: Detailed reading lists are provided at the beginning of the course, these are a selection: Michell Rosaldo, Knowledge and Passion; Vicente Rafael, Contracting Colonialism; Fenella Cannell, Power and Intimacy in the Christian Philippines; Sally-Ann Ness, Where Asia Smiles; Heather L Claussen, Unconventional Sisterhood; M F Manalansan, yes"> Global Divas: Filipino Gay Men in the Diaspora; Vicente Rafael, White Love and Other Events in Filipino History; Nicole Constable, Maid to order in Hong Kong; Albert Alejo, Generating Energies in Mount Apo.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Two-hour examination in ST (100%) for MSc students. MPhil/PhD students may be asked to complete an essay on a topic from the course, as advised by their supervisors.

AN447*China in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Steinmuller OLD 5.06A, Prof Stephan Feuchtwang SHF 3.01 and Mr James Johnston KGS 1.06

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Places are limited and priority is given to MSc China in Comparative Perspective students.

Course content: The main object of the course is to help students develop ways of putting the politics, economy and social life of China into a framework in which they can compare and juxtapose it with other major examples. Students will bring whatever theoretical approaches they have already learned and are continuing to learn in the disciplines they bring to the course. They will be expected to demonstrate and explain how they are using them as well as to listen to other approaches and disciplinary perspectives. The topics for each week are as follows: 1. Introduction; 2. The Imperial Bureaucracy; 3. Great and Little Tradition; 4. Long-term history and political economy comparisons; 5. Economic and demographic transitions; 6. Chinese Religion; 7. Nationalism and the Modern State; 8. Revolution and Maoism; 9. Socialism; 10. Postsocialism; 11. The Countryside; 12. The City; 13. Family and Gender; 14. Property rights; 15. Consumerism; 16. School and ideology; 17. Civil society; 18. The Rule of Law; 19. Democracy and Political Reform; 20. Transnational China.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 6 hours of lectures and 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Those who have registered for this degree (but not those who take this as a unit in another degree) will attend tutorials in groups of three to five every two weeks, starting in week 2. For these tutorials, students will write four essays, two in Michaelmas Term and two in Lent Term. These essays will not be assessed for the degree.

AN449*Ethnography in Relation to Other Research Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Rita Astuti OLD6.11 and Prof Charles Stafford OLD6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/ PhD in Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course considers research practices across a range of social and natural sciences in order to explore methodological issues which are specifically relevant to ethnography. In particular, it focuses on the relationship between evidence and the kinds of inferences and conclusions which are drawn by researchers in different fields. In each section of the course, case-studies taken from different disciplines will be considered in relation to the research practices of ethnographers. The disciplines covered may include: cognitive science & developmental psychology; philosophy; medical science and epidemiology; history; sociology; economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Weekly presentations in seminars from weeks 2-4, for which indicative grades will be given.

Indicative reading: R. Astuti et al, Constraints on conceptual development; J. Henrich et al, Foundations of human sociality; R. Lucas, Lectures on economic growth; L. Ross and R. Assessment: Presentation (20%), presentation (20%), presentation (20%) and essay (40%, 2500 words) in the MT.

Students make three presentations in seminars (each presentation is worth 20% - 60% in total); an essay of 2,500 words (40%).

AN451 Half Unit*Anthropology of Politics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Deborah James OLD 6.06

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Comparative Politics, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A background in the social sciences, preferably in anthropology.

Course content: This course focuses on the notion of power and its cross-cultural application. Using Marxist, Weberian, and Foucauldian approaches it explores how power travels through different socio-cultural contexts, paying attention to issues such as domination and resistance, patron-client relations, the mafia, revolution and violence. A recurring theme throughout the course concerns the state. How should the state be studied anthropologically? Processes of state formation and disintegration, nationalism in its various guises, and state-society relations will be reviewed in order to understand how European, post-colonial, and post-socialist societies are governed.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will undertake collaborative discussion duties during seminars for which they will receive formative feedback. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

Indicative reading: Anderson, B, 1991 [1983], Imagined communities: reflections on the origin and spread of nationalism; Asad, Talal, 1973, Anthropology and the Colonial Encounter; Barth, F, 1965, Political leadership among Swat Pathans; Blok, Anton, 1988, The Mafia of a Sicilian Village 1860-1960: a study of violent peasant entrepreneurs; Evans-Pritchard, EE and Fortes, M, 1940, African Political Systems; Evans-Pritchard, EE, The Nuer; Gledhill, John, 1994, Power and its disguises; Hansen, T B and Stepputat F (eds), 2001, States of Imagination: Ethnographic Explorations of the Postcolonial State; Leach, Edmund, 1954, The Political Systems of Highland Burma; Mbembe, A, 2001, On the Postcolony; Navaro-Yashin, Yael, 2002, Faces of the state: secularism and public life in Turkey; Vincent, J, 2002, The Anthropology of Politics.

AN455 Half Unit*Statistics and Causal Analysis for Social Anthropologists

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Radu Umbres

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Social Anthropology (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to provide anthropology students with proficiency in using and interpreting quantitative data with readily available software. It is for those new to quantitative analysis, and designed to complement ethnographic methods of analysis. The following areas are addressed: descriptive statistics; hypothesis testing; exploratory statistical data analysis; statistical inference and measures of association. The objectives are to equip students to understand some basic principles of statistical analysis and sampling methods, to apply them appropriately in their own research, to read critically anthropological texts in which these methods are applied or referred to. Particular attention will be paid to the connections between statistical analysis and causal explanation, and the complementary use of quantitative and qualitative methods. Specific statistical tests will be taught, but most emphasis will be placed on understanding the reasoning behind them. Practical work will be based on a range of anthropological data sets with different substantive and technical features, and will include discussion of possible applications to students' own research plans, including the practicalities of data gathering, and hands-on training in the use of Excel and SPSS. Week 1: - Designing field studies and sampling schemes. Week 2: - Designing questionnaires. Week 3: - Processing data; creating spreadsheets, tables and graphs, descriptive statistics. Week 4: - Probabilities and hypothesis testing. Week 5: - Correlation and regression. Week 6: - Reading week, no class. Week 7: - Multiple regression. Week 8: - Univariate measures of group difference, Mann-Whitney U-test, Kruskal-Wallis. Week 9: - Contingency tables and odds ratios. Week 10: - Logistic regression. Week 11: - Final Exam

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Introductory session MT. Weekly lectures LT, weekly seminars LT. Note that teaching takes place within UCL term times, which may be slightly different from LSE's.

Assessment: Continuous assessment (50%) and in class assessment (50%) in the LT.

There will be a practical assignment given each week, which will be due by the next class meeting. Practical assignments (50%) can be worked on during the practical session, and TA assistance will be available during this practical. Answers to each practical will be made available on the Moodle page after each submission deadline (no late submissions accepted). There will be a final examination (50%) during the last class meeting in the form of a series of practical exercises done and submitted in class.

Anthropology of Economy (1): Production and Exchange

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gisa Weszkalnys OLD 6.08 and Dr Laura Bear OLD 6.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A background in the social sciences, preferably in anthropology.

Course content: This course examines 'the economy' as an object of scholarly analysis and a domain of social action. We start by asking how scholars measured, described, modeled, and predicted its behaviour. What forms do economic institutions take cross-culturally? How were these institutions transformed as a result of their incorporation into a wider capitalist markets, state systems, and development initiatives? For example, we will examine the central place of households within capitalist economies, largely overlooked by mainstream economic analyses, and the role that money can play in both dividing and uniting human societies. The course will familiarise students with fundamental aspects of the field and with core concepts used in economic analysis, such as production, consumption, exchange, property, alienation, scarcity, and value. But we will also try to break open the standard frames of the debate by highlighting, for example, the place of nature in the capitalist expansion, and how economic life is not just life in the ordinary. What progress have anthropologists made in understanding fluctuations, booms and busts? What can ethnography tell us about how people cope with crises, individually and collectively, and what the future may hold? Throughout the course, students will become familiar with the key concepts of economic anthropology with reference to selected ethnography and gain a solid understanding of relevant theoretical debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will do presentations during seminars for which they will receive formative feedback. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

Anthropology of Economy (2): Development, Transformation and Globalisation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Laura Bear OLD 6.09

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society, MSc in Regulation, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A background in the social sciences, preferably anthropology.

Course content: The course addresses topics in the anthropology of globalisation. Scholars in a wide range of disciplines have sought to understand the new forms of production, consumption, exchange and financial circulation that have emerged since the 1980s. Some emphasise post-Fordist methods of flexible production and neo-liberal elite projects. Others focus on trans-state processes of globalisation. For other theorists shifts in state policies such as austerity, decentralised planning, public-private partnerships and the deregulation of financial markets are at the centre of analysis. Others address new forms of consumer society, popular desires for social mobility and transnational migration. Drawing from ethnographies and anthropological theory this course equips students to evaluate these arguments. Importantly it also revisits classic topics in economic anthropology from the perspective of present realities — for example production and intimate economies; formal markets in relation to informalised, violent economies; circulation in relation to financial debt and risk; and consumption and consumer citizenship.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students will do presentations during seminars for which they will receive formative feedback. They will also have an opportunity to write tutorial essays on topics from the course which will be formatively assessed.

Children and Youth in Contemporary Ethnography

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Catherine Allerton OLD 6.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: For much of its history, and with some notable exceptions, anthropology has paid little serious attention to children. However, recent years have seen a growing interest in both 'childhood' as a historical and social construction, and in children's engagement with their own social worlds. This course aims to introduce students to emerging ethnographic work on children and youth, in order to explore both its theoretical and methodological challenges. Ethnographic studies will cover a wide range of societies and regions, including anthropological work on children and childhood in the US and UK. The course will begin with an investigation of children's place in anthropology, including early anthropological work on 'Culture and Personality' and 'child socialisation'. The course will then move to consider a variety of topics that have been the focus of recent ethnographic study. These may include: children's play, childhood identities and kinship, education and schooling, youth cultures and globalization, children's work, street children and children's competencies in contexts of crisis, including war.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of film screenings in LT. 1 hour revision session in ST.

Formative coursework: In addition to preparing discussion material for seminars, students will normally write one tutorial essay for the course. Students will be supplied with a mock exam paper.

Anthropology and Media

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Matthew Engelke OLD6.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and Fudan), MSc in Global Media and Communications (LSE and USC), MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course introduces students to anthropological analyses of media, including books and other printed texts, photography, radio, television, film, and the internet. Although 'the anthropology of media' is often understood to be a relatively new subfield, there has been a long-standing interest in media technologies within the discipline. There is also an important manner, from an anthropological point of view, in which 'media technologies' have to be understood not only as these cultural artefacts (radio, film) but also the more elementary senses they express (hearing, sight, etc). We therefore investigate media both as a broad conceptual category and as specific technologies of communication. The course begins with a historical overview of anthropologists' investigations of media technologies, broadly construed. We then move on to consider ethnographic case studies of media in context. Examples may include: photography in India, radio in Zambia, television and cassette circulation in Egypt, mobile phones in Jamaica, book groups in England, and 'indigenous video' in Brazil and Australia. Throughout the course the case studies are framed in relation to some of the key theoretical debates that have shaped media studies in anthropology and related disciplines since the 1930s. Some attention is also given to the methodological problems involved in studying media, especially the extent to which it challenges the possibility of conducting fieldwork by participant observation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay will be submitted to the course teacher.

The Anthropology of Post-Soviet Eurasia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD6.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course discusses recent anthropological literature on the former Soviet Union, focusing on issues such as religion, nationalism, and everyday economics. It will use an ethnographic lens to look at some of the most salient processes occurring in the former Soviet world. We will start by looking at what "really existing socialism" meant for people's everyday existence during the Soviet period, and how Soviet politics influenced popular ideas of culture and identity. Next, we will examine the varying ways in which inhabitants of the region reconfigured political, economic, and ideological landscapes following the collapse of the Soviet Union. Drawing from ethnographies of Siberia, central Russia, Ukraine, Central Asia, and the Caucasus, the course will provide an overview of debates on religious renewal, nationalism, conflict, economic life, and lifestyle. The course argues that this relatively new field of anthropological research offers fresh and inspiring perspectives on long-standing anthropological debates.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will have an opportunity to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

AN463 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Borders and Boundaries

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mathijs Pelkmans OLD6.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: How do territorial borders influence human behaviour and thinking, and how, in turn, do citizens manage and manipulate such borders? These questions have become pressing in the current age of globalization and intensifying trans-national connections. The fall of the Iron Curtain and the disintegration of the USSR are but a few of the changes that have rendered ideas of borders as the self-evident limits of notions of society and culture problematic. At the same time, increased porosity of borders may make cultural differences more salient in everyday social and symbolic practice. Moreover, because of the tenuous relations between border dwellers and the state, border studies highlight blind spots in our understandings of concepts as society, identity, culture, ethnicity, and nation. As such, the study of borders links up with central anthropological questions. Whether dealing with ideas about purity, dynamics of inclusion and exclusion, or the (partly artificial) separation of modern society into "spheres," boundaries are being drawn, enlivened, and contested.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students taking this course will be encouraged to submit a tutorial essay for this course to their personal tutors. For non-Anthropology students taking this course, a formative essay may be submitted to the course teacher.

Understanding Religion in the Contemporary World

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07 and Dr Matthew Engelke OLD 6.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will consider the distinctive definition and understanding of 'religion' within the social sciences. The course will introduce students to the classical social science sources on religion (including, but not limited to, Durkheim, Weber and Marx) and the particular problematics which their views on religion imply. There will be discussion of the different traditions of social scientific thinking about religion which flow from these foundational thinkers into current debates. Secondly, the course will focus on a range of empirical and ethnographic case studies, which illustrate some of the diversity of religious practice around the world, and some of the consequences which may flow from adopting particular definitions of what 'religion' is. One underlying theme in the course, will be the need to pay attention to ways in which the category and the domain of religion are redefined, or claimed to be redefined, in modernity, in relation to other domains of life including politics, kinship and economy. The focus will be on understanding through specific ethnographic and empirical materials, the ways in which lived religious practice, and the understanding of religion, may differ radically inside and outside 'Western' and modern contexts. We will also pay attention to cases in which (as in all post-colonial settings, and in relation to so-called fundamentalisms) 'Western' and the 'non-Western' definitions are emerging in interplay with each other. The first term considers key themes and theoretical topics in the anthropology of religion literature in the light of these framings. The second term, will include sustained case-studies drawing on current research within the LSE, and comparative thematic discussions. There will be a focus on contemporary issues in the study of religion including the organization of religion in a range of different societies, its relationship to broad social change including the rise of modernity/capitalism, global political-economy, and its codification in institutions such as the family, law, gender and the state.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Formative coursework will include 1) discussions and presentations during the dedicated seminar and 2) the writing of non-coursework essays which will be discussed in small-group tutorials within the anthropology department as described above.

AN467 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of South Asia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mukulika Banerjee OLD5.09

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course will aim to address issues of citizenship, inequality, political participation and democratic governance in rural and urban India. The course will cover both classic and current literature and weekly sessions will be organised thematically. We will start by looking at India's place in the world as a democracy and emerging economy and the many paradoxes that the country throws up - alongside some of the highest rates of economic growth, India also has one of the lowest performances on development indicators; despite 40% adult illiteracy, India has among the highest voter turnout rates in the world; despite local institutions having the least power compared to state level or the central government, ordinary people feel most invested in local elections; India remains largely rural yet India will hold the largest urban population in the world in less than ten years...and so on. In order to understand these paradoxes, it is essential that issues of caste and class be examined in some detail, through the anthropological literature produced on these topics over the past 60 years or so. The changing caste dynamics will be examined through everyday practices of discrimination, violence and endogamy as well as institutional innovations of affirmative action for jobs and education. Class relations have also dramatically changed with land reforms in rural India as well as a substantial middle class has emerged in urban India. Economic reforms introduced since the 1990s have altered modes of retail and consumption in both urban and rural India creating new inequalities and entrenching old ones. In the political arena, these changing practices and dynamics have led to a democratic upsurge from below, leading to a greater participation in the electoral process by members of the lower castes and classes of India.

All these issues and more will be addressed in this course through the rich corpus of anthropological literature on the subject alongside examples from India's vibrant media and popular culture.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in MT as well as film screenings (to be scheduled at the start of term). One revision session in ST.

AN468 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 The Anthropology of Schooling

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Stuart Thompson.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Law, Anthropology and Society and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students taking this course should have completed an introductory course in social anthropology, or in some other social science, unless granted exemption by the teacher.

Course content: This course looks at ethnographical and cross-cultural approaches to schooling, language and literacy, and critically examines key theoretical approaches from an anthropological perspective. We will begin by reflecting on students' own conceptions of education, situating these in terms of contemporary paradigms and debates. Next we will examine the efficacy of 'reproduction' and 'resistance' theories of education, and the spread of schooling as a crucial parameter of globalization. Attention will then be paid to schooling and attendant questions of identity, and the cultural production of the educated person. This is followed by a critical examination of bilingual education, racism in education, debates over 'literacy' or 'literatecies', and, relatedly, a critical examination of the language(s) of schooling and a radical re-deployment of Hirsch's notion of 'cultural literacy'. The course concludes with looking at higher education initially by attention to Bourdieu's Homo Academicus, and assessing how 'cultural capital' and the so-called 'audit culture' impacts on conditions of knowledge and involvement in university education.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Anthropology students doing this course will submit an essay to their academic advisors. Non-anthropology students will choose a topic in consultation with the course teacher, and submit a formative essay

The Anthropology of Amazonia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Harry Walker OLD6.14

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will introduce students to selected themes in the anthropology of Amazonia. It will provide a grounding in the ethnographic literature of the region while seeking to engage with current theoretical debates, highlighting their potential importance to the discipline of anthropology. Topics to be covered include history, myth and colonialism; indigenous social movements; sexuality and gender; cosmology and shamanism; trade and inter-ethnic relations; language and power; illness, well-being and death. Students will be encouraged to reflect on the broader relationship between ethnography and theory, to challenge common stereotypes of Amazonia and its inhabitants, and to explore ways in which the region has inscribed itself on the imagination of anthropologists and laypersons alike.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Ten hours of lectures and ten hours of seminars in the Lent Term. Film screenings will also be held throughout the term.

Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees will have the opportunity to prepare tutorial essays on the subject matter of the course and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting formative essays to the course teacher.

sorcery, cosmology, and human-nonhuman relations, primarily with reference to ongoing transformations of the indigenous traditions of Melanesia, Africa, Amazonia, Australia, and the circumpolar north. Recurring themes will be: transformations in the definition of 'religion' in relation to 'science'; the nature of rationality; and the extent to which anthropology itself can be either – or both – a religious and a scientific quest to experience the wonder of unknown otherness.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Discussions and presentations during seminars.

Anthropological Approaches to Value

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Graeber OLD6.10

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World and MSc in Social Anthropology. This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we will first take stock of the current anthropological theories of value in contemporary anthropology. After a critical appraisal of such theories, we will explore what an anthropological theory of value might actually look like. After a brief exploration of Kluckhohn's "values project", the formalist-substantivist arguments, and debates about the nature of the social role of money, up to the recent neoliberal resurgence in anthropological theory, we'll be looking at the contrasting legacies of Karl Marx and Marcel Mauss. Looking at these as two very different approaches to many of the same problems will provide enormous opportunities for creative synthesis. The course will include some fairly extended case studies (of Tiv fetishism, wampum, and anthropological studies of consumption), to investigate how useful all this theory can actually be in throwing new light on familiar problems.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Students registered for Anthropology degrees may submit formative tutorial essays on the course content and receive feedback from their academic advisors. Students who are not registered for Anthropology degrees will be given the option of submitting essays to the course teacher and receiving feedback on them.

Dissertation: Religion in the Contemporary World

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Fenella Cannell OLD 6.07

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: As for the Programme.

Course content: The dissertation will address a topic in the social sciences of Religion in the Contemporary World. This may be a library-based dissertation, but original archival or field research may be undertaken in consultation with the academic adviser. The topic should make central use of concepts in the study of religion in the social sciences drawn from approved courses on the programme, particularly from the core course, and should demonstrate a good understanding of those concepts and their implications. The dissertation may draw on empirical topic areas suggested by the taught core and option courses of this programme, but must demonstrate an element of originality in analysis, content or both. The dissertation will normally contain an inter-disciplinary element which may be in the combination of material, the combination of critical, analytical or theoretical concepts, or both. Guidance on standards of presentation etc will be given in the MSc handbook, and will conform to the current standard laid down for the dissertations in MSc social anthropology.

Teaching: A small group tutorial in both MT and LT. A dissertation workshop in ST.

Formative coursework: Small group tutorials, individual mentoring, discussion of abstracts: please see Programme Proposal. Presentations and class discussions in all programme courses will also contribute towards the formative preparation for the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September. The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words including text and footnotes (but excluding bibliography and appendices). Three bound copies and an electronic copy, with the 5-digit examination number on the front, must be submitted to the Departmental Office on or before 1st September (or, if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after September 1st).

AN498

Dissertation- MSc China in Comparative Perspective

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Steinmuller OLD.5.06A

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in China in Comparative Perspective. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Presentations by students on a topic they choose, with their dissertations in mind, using the discipline(s) in which they have been taught. The topic must contain comparative materials and it should have been discussed with and approved by the teacher responsible prior to presentation.

Teaching: Students attend a one-hour dissertation workshop at the end of Lent Term. After deciding on a topic during the Lent term, in consultation with their academic advisers (and other members of staff where appropriate), students submit a one-page abstract in the first week of the Summer term. Each student attends a one-on-one dissertation tutorial with his/her academic adviser in the ST. During these, abstracts will be evaluated and commented upon. Students continue to consult their academic advisers during the Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Literature Reviews, draft outlines, and a one-page dissertation abstract.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words).

The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words including text and footnotes (but excluding bibliography and appendices). Three bound copies must be submitted to the Departmental Office and one electronic copy has to be uploaded to the LSE Moodle system on or before 1st September (or, if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after September 1st).

AN499

Dissertation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Michael W. Scott OLD 6.16

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Social Anthropology and MSc in Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation must demonstrate an adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical literature and ethnographic context. It should attempt to consolidate a theme introduced during the course, developing a sustained research focus on one specific issue in anthropology, using ethnography as appropriate. For the MSc Social Anthropology, the problem should be framed with reference to literature from within the discipline of anthropology (drawn from mainstream journals or ethnographic texts). For the MSc Anthropology and Development and the MSc Anthropology and Development Management, the topic should span the fields of both Social Anthropology and Development Studies - it may cover, but need not be restricted to, the area of overlap, i.e. the anthropology of development as narrowly defined. For the MSc Social Anthropology (Learning and Cognition), the dissertation should draw not only on specifically anthropological literatures and engage with anthropological themes, but also make judicious use of non-anthropological literature from cognitive science, and therefore from related disciplines such as psychology and/or philosophy.

Teaching: 3 hours of workshops in the ST.

After deciding on a topic during the Lent term, in consultation with their tutors (and other members of staff where appropriate), students submit a one-page abstract in the first week of the Summer term. Abstracts are circulated and students attend an AN499 workshop followed by a series of specific workshops for each of the four programmes. During these, abstracts will be evaluated and commented upon. Students continue to consult their tutors during the Summer term.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in September.

The dissertation must not exceed 10,000 words including text and footnotes (but excluding bibliography and appendices). Three bound copies and an electronic copy, with the 5-digit examination number on the front, must be submitted to the Departmental Office on or before 1st September (or, if this falls on a weekend, the first weekday after September 1st).

Development: History, Theory and Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof James Putzel CON.8.03, Dr Rajesh Venugopal CON.8.09 and Dr Kathleen Meagher CON.7.11

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Development Studies. This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Population and Development and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course integrates the concepts and perspectives of a range of disciplines to consider: major trends of development and change in modern history and interpretations of them in the social sciences; contemporary economic and social theory and their bearing on the policy and practice of development. In more detail: concepts of 'development' and historical evolution of paradigms of development thinking and policy. Role of states and markets in development/underdevelopment. Colonial legacies and path dependencies. State resilience and fragility. Political economy of growth, poverty and freedom. Review of key policy issues, most likely including: demographic change, social policy and poverty; international trade; industrial policy; agriculture and agrarian reform; foreign investment; development aid; governance and democratisation; security and development, climate change.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay with written feedback submitted in Michaelmas Term and at least two seminar presentations on literature (one in Michaelmas and one in Lent).

Indicative reading: The following are recommended basic readings for the course:

A. Kohli, State-Directed Development: Political Power and Industrialization in the Global Periphery (Cambridge, 2004)

A Sen, Development as Freedom (Anchor, 1999)

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (20%, 2000 words) in the LT.

DV407 Half Unit Poverty

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mahvish Shami CON.8.12

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course is an interdisciplinary analysis of poverty, where the focus is on poverty both as a dependent variable (what causes poverty) and an independent variable (what poverty causes). The course will draw from a variety of disciplines but will pay special attention to the political economy of poverty; however, no prior mathematical or statistical qualification is required.

The topics to be covered begin with an examination into the definition and measurement of poverty. We focus as well on the relationship between poverty and inequality, education, gender and human development, with special attention to the relationship between poverty, violence, and democracy. We also examine the origins of modern famines and whether democratization contributes to poverty reduction. We close with further thoughts on poverty reduction and the Millennium Development Goals.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: The course has two required purchase books, namely Amartya Sen, Development as Freedom (Oxford University Press, 1999) and Abhijit V. Banerjee and Esther Duflo, Poor Economics: A Radical Rethinking of the Way to Fight Global Poverty (PublicAffairs/Penguin, 2011). Other texts that will be useful include Sabina Alkire, Valuing Freedoms: Sen's Capability Approach and Poverty Reduction (Oxford University Press, 2005); Anirudh Krishna, ed. Poverty, Participation and Democracy: A Global Perspective (Cambridge University Press, 2008) and Amartya Sen, Poverty and Famines (Oxford University Press, 1981).

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 2000 words) in the ST.

DV409 Not available in 2014/15 Economic Development Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold and Prof Danny Quah

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course focuses on analytically and empirically rigorous analyses of economic policies in developing countries. Please note, for the 2013/2014 academic year the emphasis will be on macroeconomic policies for development and global trends. We review current theoretical debates and consider how the use of empirical evidence can help to inform our analyses. In particular, increasing data availability has meant that the effectiveness of development policies, in terms of improving welfare, reducing poverty and promoting growth, can now be analysed using a variety of quantitative techniques. By looking at how these approaches can be applied to a range of development issues, the course will provide an overview of new thinking on the design of public policy in developing countries. While a strong mathematical or statistical background is not necessary to follow the course, students will be expected to actively learn and engage with regression analysis and other econometric techniques. These skills are developed through the year with mandatory weekly problem sets and occasional in-class quizzes supplementing the lectures and readings. The course consists of one lecture on the interpretation of empirical regression analysis and the role of quantitative methods in policy evaluation, and a further 19 lectures on theory and policy issues of relevance to developing countries. Topics themselves may vary from year to year but may include determinants of growth; human capital accumulation; globalisation and the political economy of trade policy; the global evolution of income distribution, the middle income trap, the rise of China in the world economy, structural adjustment; and financial crises; economic geography of development; aid; debt relief; corruption; and environment and growth. Microeconomic topics have included health and education intra-household resource allocation; credit markets; social networks; and behavioural economics applied to the design of development policies. Seminars consist of student-led participatory in-depth analyses of best-practice theory and quantitative empirical research papers which students assess and critique. Seminars will also include introductory sessions to reading and interpreting quantitative analysis.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of lectures in the ST.

Indicative reading: The bulk of the course will be taught using journal articles. A reading list will be handed out by the lecturers at the beginning of their sessions. Useful reference texts include D Ray, Development Economics (1998) which will serve as the course text, W Easterly, The Quest for Growth; Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. In class assessment (30%) in the MT and LT.

DV410.1

Social Research Methods in Developing Countries

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Diana Weinhold CON. H710

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research) and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option. Students from other programmes may audit the course, but they may not take it for credit.

Course content: The course consists of ten two-hour lectures introducing students to the basic ingredients of modern social science research, with an emphasis on methods commonly employed in studies of development. In the process we will briefly cover quantitative and qualitative methods of investigation, including basic data collection and analysis, sampling and surveying, ethnographic methods and participant observation. Where appropriate, other aspects of development research such as those relating to gender and ethical issues will be considered.

Teaching: 40 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Research lectures in MT and LT (20 hours in each term terms) are shared with DV445 'Research Themes in International Development'. Please see the DV445 course guide for further details.

Indicative reading: R Ramanathan, Introductory Econometrics with Applications; A Deaton, The Analysis of Household Surveys: A Microeconomic Approach to Development Policy; B Pratt & P Loizos, Choosing Research Methods: Data Collection for Development Workers; M Bulmer & D P Warwick (Ed), Social Research in Developing Countries: Surveys and Censuses in the Third World; S Devereux & J Hoddinott (Eds), Fieldwork in Developing Countries; R Ellen (Ed), Ethnographic Research: A Guide to General Practice; M Agar, The Professional Stranger: An Informal Introduction to Ethnography; P Bardhan (Ed), Conversations between Economists and Anthropologists: Methodological Issues in Measuring Economic Change in Rural India.

Assessment: Online assessment (100%).

Students will complete on-line quizzes. Students are expected to achieve Passes on all quizzes before proceeding with the dissertation, DV410.

DV410

Research Design and Dissertation in Development Studies, Development Management and International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tim Allen

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research) and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will initially submit a dissertation title with a 150-250 word abstract on the last day of Week 4 of Lent Term. They then go on to write a more detailed research proposal towards the dissertation on a topic within Development Studies/Management/IDHE. This will be conducted under the supervision of a member of the International Development staff, through individual tutorials. The student research proposals will form the basis for discussion in dissertation workshops held during the second week of Summer Term. The research proposal will identify a key question for investigation, the theoretical and methodological framework to be employed in the work and a justification for why the topic is theoretically and empirically important, with reference to the literature. A tentative outline and preliminary bibliography will be included. Students will present their proposals for debate and discussion in dissertation workshops.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT.

Students will attend individual tutorial sessions with either Academic Advisers or other members of staff, as relevant to the topic during Michaelmas Term and Lent Term to identify a research topic and to design research proposals. The proposal must be approved by the assigned Academic Adviser. Dissertation preparation will also be addressed in the context of the DV410.1 lectures. Proposals will be evaluated, commented upon and approved by staff. Students will present their research proposals during dissertation workshops to be held in Week 2 of Summer Term. Attendance at the workshops is compulsory.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) in the ST.

Students will submit a research proposal of not more than 2,000 words at the start of ST. This will be evaluated, commented upon and must be approved before proceeding to write the dissertation. Students will submit a dissertation of not more than 10,000 words by midday on Thursday 28 August.

DV411 Half Unit

Population and Development: an Analytical Approach

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Timothy Dyson

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Research Methods, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students undertaking the MSc in Population and Development and students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit).

Course content: Using the demographic transition as its framework, the course examines different analytic approaches to the main interrelationships between population change and socio-economic development. It draws on a variety of theoretical and historical experiences to address and explore these interconnections. It aims to provide balance between theoretical understanding, knowledge of empirical evidence and basic causal processes, and implications for policy.

The course begins by providing an overview of the world's current demographic situation at both the global and the regional levels. It then addresses Malthusian and anti-Malthusian perspectives on the basic relationships linking population growth and economic growth. These contrasting perspectives are considered in the context of both historical and contemporary experience. The course then proceeds to assess demographic transition theories and their relationships to theories and processes of economic development, urbanisation and socio-structural change. Urban growth, migration, and urbanization receive special attention. The implications of population change for issues of employment, savings and investment are considered, as are issues relating to energy, food production and security, carbon emissions and climate change. Contemporary neo-Malthusian arguments, with their environmental components are also considered, as are issues relating to women's empowerment, democratization and population aging. Further details will be provided at the start of the session.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be given the opportunity to undertake a 'mock examination' essay. This will be graded and accompanied by written feedback within two weeks of its submission.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided.

However, relevant readings include: T Dyson Population and Development - The Demographic Transition, Zed Books 2010; T Dyson 'A partial theory of world development: The neglected role of the demographic transition in shaping modern society' in International Journal of Population Geography, 7, 2001; N. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

DV413 Half Unit

Environmental Problems and Development Interventions

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Timothy Forsyth CON.8.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit). This course is capped at 60 students.

Course content: This course is for MSc students who wish to study social and political aspects of environmental change and its implications for international development. The aim is to summarise the key current debates about 'environment and development' from perspectives of social and political theory with special reference to institutional theory, livelihoods, and inclusive policy interventions. The course is structured to analyse the challenges of making well-informed environmental interventions in the face of poverty and vulnerability, and then seeking practical solutions to these dilemmas. To begin with, the course considers the nature of environmental problems within a 'development' context, and what this means for environmental science and norms as applied in developing countries. Themes include assessing environmental science and expertise in development contexts, adaptation to population growth and resource scarcity; gender and environment; and vulnerability to 'natural' hazards. As the course progresses, it considers debates about policy interventions such as common property regime theory; theories of the state and environment (including resistance and social movements); community-based natural resource management and Sustainable Livelihoods; adaptation to climate change; forests; and urban environmental policy (these latter themes involve debates on multi-level, multi-actor governance involving the connections of local development and global environmental policy).

The course will also refer in passing to global environmental problems such as climate change and forest policy (especially in later lectures), but these themes are dealt with in more detail in the associated course, DV415: Global Environmental Governance, which may be taken in addition to this course.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. Students are not advised to buy a single textbook for this course but to read selectively and critically from various sources. The following books might be useful introductions. Adams, W.M. 2009 Green Development: environment and sustainability in a developing world. 3rd ed. London: Routledge. Forsyth, T. 2003. Critical Political Ecology: the politics of environmental science, London, Routledge.

2002 The Drama of the Commons: Understanding Common Pool Resource Management. Washington, D.C.: National Academy Press. L Schipper and I Burton (eds) The Earthscan Reader on Adaptation to Climate Change, Earthscan, 2008.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (20%, 1500 words) in the LT.

DV415 Half Unit

Global Environmental Governance

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Timothy Forsyth CON.8.05

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Public Policy and Administration and MSc in Regulation. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit). This course is capped at 45 students.

Course content: This course is for any MSc student who wishes to study the politics of global environmental policy from the perspective of environmental governance and international development. The aim is to summarise debates about 'global' environmental problems and to review the contributions of debates about 'governance' to political solutions. The main theoretical focus of the course is on understanding the evolution of environmental policy regimes at multiple scales and with multiple actors. Some of this draws upon debates within International Relations, but this course also considers literatures from other forms of environmental politics that consider the formulation, deliberation, and implementation at the sub-state level, and beyond the scope of formal treaties. Indeed, some of the most difficult political problems arise when trying to implement global policy at the sub-state scale, such as the clashes between local forest users in developing countries and international actors implementing 'global' climate and biodiversity policies.

To make the course focused, it will consider the three main topics of anthropocentric climate change, biodiversity, and the global regulation of forests. In addition, these topics will be analysed from the perspective of the role of states and inter-state agreements; business actors and non-governmental organisations (NGOs); the regulation of trade; and the evolution of financial assistance, including from the World Bank.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the LT.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for this course, but we recommend the following as a basic reading list:

DV418 Half Unit African Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Thandika Mkandawire CON. H802

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in African Development. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit).

Course content: The major concern of the course is with the political economy of African development, to examine processes of economic, political, social and cultural change in Sub-Saharan Africa. It provides critical analysis of key development interventions and processes. It seeks to combine general theoretical overviews with country case studies illustrating the variety of experiences and trajectories. It does not aim to provide a comprehensive coverage of development issues or of regions. Course content will vary from year to year, depending on the specialities of staff.

Attention is paid to legacies of the colonial encounter; the constraints and opportunities presented by African countries' positions in the global economy; the political economy of industrialisation and agrarian transformation, resource mobilisation; trade diversification; institutional reforms and state capacity.

Attention will also be paid to social policy with special focus on issues such as social social protection, cash transfers, Millennium Development Goals, horizontal inequality and conflict.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will write a 2,000 word essay chosen from class questions and in discussion with the course leader, to be submitted by the beginning of week 6 of Lent Term.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. The following readings provide an introduction to the course:

DV420 Half Unit Complex Emergencies

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof David Keen CON. H715

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development, MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course examines the consequences and causes of humanitarian disasters. It looks at the changing nature of civil conflicts, at the famine process, and at the benefits that may arise for some groups from war and famine. It examines some of the roots of violence in civil wars, as well as the information systems that surround and help to shape disasters.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will have the opportunity to receive feedback on formative work, in the form of a practice assessed essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first course meeting. A useful text, which is designed in large part around the course, is David Keen, Complex Emergencies (Polity, 2008). Other texts of interest include David Keen, Useful Enemies: When Waging Wars is More Important than Winning Them (Yale University Press, 2012); Stathis Kalyvas, The Logic of Violence in Civil War (Cambridge University Press, 2006); David Keen, Conflict and Collusion in Sierra Leone (James Currey, 2005); David Keen, Endless War? Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

DV421 Half Unit Global Health and Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Health, Population and Society, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Population and Development, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course is concerned with inter-relationships between emerging challenges to human health in the developing world and their socio-economic and political context. Both the causes of emerging health threats and their consequences are examined. The approach of the course is to discuss specific (re-) emerging health threats, and to critically assess their determinants and impacts, and policies and interventions to address their spread.

A wide range of topics is covered, including: the relationship between health, population and development; the demographic and epidemiological transitions; biological, behavioural, socio-economic, and environmental influences on health outcomes, especially the role of demographic change, conflict, famine, and climate change; the causes and consequences of the "Big Three": HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria; Neglected Tropical Diseases (NTDs); water and sanitation; and, non-communicable diseases; and, local and international health intervention efforts and policies.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to prepare at least one class presentation and submit one essay.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list will be provided at the first lecture. The readings for this course are from journals and select book chapters in the fields of public health and epidemiology, public policy, demography, and anthropology among others. Readings will also include case studies of disease control efforts in various countries and reports, papers and articles published by international organizations, think-tanks, and a variety of other sources.

Assessment: Exam (80%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (20%, 2000 words) in the ST.

DV423 Half Unit Global Political Economy of Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robert Wade CON. H707

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in Development

Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Management, MSc in Management (CEMS MIM), MSc in Media, Communication and Development and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is not available as an outside option.

Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit). The instructors reserve the right to limit enrolment on the course. At the instructors' discretion, enrolment may be denied to any student on the basis of a pre-quiz. The course is capped at 75 students.

Course content: The course examines the political economy of 'North-South' relations, focusing on how changes in international organizations and the international policy framework affect developing countries' economic trajectories and national-level strategies for interaction with the global economy. It covers the performance of the world economy as a whole; international systems of production, trade, and finance; the rules or regimes which govern interaction between economies, states and firms (regimes such as Bretton Woods, and the Post Bretton Woods dollar standard); and several international organizations (such as the World Bank and IMF). Along the way it analyses the major financial/economic crises of 1997-99 and 2007-continuing. In contrast to much writing in International Political Economy, it looks at these things from the perspective of the low and middle-income countries (in the spirit of the Swahili proverb, "Until lions have their own historians tales of hunting will always glorify the hunters"), and does not take for granted that the G7 states provide a generally benign ("win-win") environment for development in the rest of the world.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students have the option of writing one essay of 2,000 words.

Indicative reading: Core text: John Ravenhill (ed), Global Political Economy, 4th edition, OUP, 2014.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

international organizations play in global politics, establishes the theoretical spine for the course. We then examine governance in international sovereign debt and finance, public and private. We analyze the politics of debt relief for the poorest and most heavily-indebted countries, where most of the debt is owed to public creditors; and we analyze the politics of debt restructuring for middle-income countries where significant shares of the debt is owed to private/commercial creditors. The course then turns to the politics of international trade, investment, and intellectual property. This cluster of five sessions is organized around a dialogue between multilateral and regional frameworks for integration into the global economy. For this section of the course the World Trade Organization (WTO) serves as our principal point of reference. We examine the emergence of the WTO, both in terms of the substance of the Uruguay Round agreements and as an inter-governmental organization with its own set of procedures for agenda-setting, rule-making, and dispute-settlement. We then examine emerging arrangements for global governance in the areas of foreign investment and intellectual property. Finally, we focus explicitly on the resurgence of new, North-South, bilateral and regional trade agreements, focusing on the implications of such agreements for development and the factors that contribute to their proliferation. In concluding the course we assess alternatives for reforming global multilateral economic organizations, e.g. the World Bank, International Monetary Fund, and WTO. Then, taking a step back and reviewing the term's material from a "birds-eye view," we analyze contrasting trajectories of change in two development regimes, one regarding "industrial transformation" and mobility in the international division of labour, and another regarding "humanitarianism" and poverty reduction.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students have an opportunity to submit written work for formative assessment. Details of the exercise will be announced early in the term.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list is presented at the beginning of term.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (40%, 4000 words) in the ST.

Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development and its joint degrees (where their regulations permit).

Course content: This course examines the politics of the international economy. We analyze the overarching rules and regulations that structure the international economy, and thereby provide context for development policy; and we assess the role of a range of actors (e.g. governments, firms, non-state actors) in shaping and reshaping the international economic order. We are particularly interested in understanding the ways that developing countries respond to and participate in international regimes and organizations, and how changes in global economic governance affect opportunities for economic development. The first week, which synthesizes a variety of explanations of the role that

Managing Humanitarianism

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stuart Gordon

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in African Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Environment and Development, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights, MSc in International Migration and Public Policy, MSc in Political Economy of Late Development, MSc in Population and Development and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is not available as an outside option.

It is compulsory for students taking the MSc International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies (IDHE) combined with DV452. IDHE students should only register for DV452 as this incorporates their registration for DV428. All other students register for DV428.

Please note that in case of over-subscription to this course priority will be given to students from the Department of International Development's MSc Development Management, MSc Development Studies, MSc Development Studies (Research), MSc African Development and then its joint degrees (where their regulations permit).

Course content: The course looks at international, national and local responses to conflict and natural disasters. Building on an analysis of the causes, construction and consequences of humanitarian disasters, this course focuses on humanitarian actors (including aid workers, journalists, medics, government officials, soldiers, politicians and peace negotiators). It considers the principles and the politics of humanitarian action, exploring the overlaps and tensions between practices of humanitarian assistance and humanitarian intervention. How does humanitarianism relate to ideas about human rights and justice, or the politics of securitisation? Why do humanitarian organisations and governments respond to some crises and not to others? It also considers the critique of humanitarian assistance and the ways in which the UN and NGO communities have responded and sought to professionalise their activities. The course also looks at how recipients of humanitarian aid respond to these programmes, and in some cases subvert or transform them into quite different projects. Case studies will be drawn primarily from Africa, Central and South Asia and Latin America. However, there is also likely to be discussion of ongoing humanitarian emergencies, wherever they are located.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 38 hours of workshops in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

The course will be taught in the Michaelmas Term and will consist of 10 lectures of two-hours (lecture 1130 - 1300 on Fridays). Five to six voice of experience lectures of up to two hours (from 1800 on Mondays or Thursdays depending on speaker availability), and ten seminars of one-and-a-half hours (various days and times).

Formative coursework: Students will receive feedback on seminar group presentations and have the option to write a practice essay under take-home exam conditions, not exceeding 2,000 words.

Essay topics will relate to seminar discussions and lecture material covered to date. Students will receive an indicative grade and written feedback before the end of the term.

Assessment: Take home exam (100%) in the ST.

The paper will be released via the course Moodle site. Please note that as this is a three-day take-home examination, extensions for disabilities will apply in exceptional circumstances. Students who cannot commit to be available for the exam period may NOT register for this course.

DV429 Half Unit Global Civil Society

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Kaldor

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society). This course is available on the MSc in Anthropology and Development, MSc in Anthropology and Development Management, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Health, Community and Development, MSc in Human Rights and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Civil society has come to be considered as an essential element of contemporary global politics, taken either as a normative concept linked to the idea of democracy or as a descriptive concept that refers to the activism of NGOs, social movements, and global advocacy networks. This course provides students with the conceptual and empirical background that allows them to critically engage with the complex debate over global civil society and to assess the potential and the challenges of civil society activism in the context of our increasingly globalising world.

The first part of the course covers the historical evolution of the concept of civil society and the relevance of different interpretation of civil society to our global age. It will include Enlightenment thinkers such as Hobbes, Locke or Adam Ferguson, the Marxist and Hegelian tradition, ideas drawn from classical Islam, and contemporary ways of understanding the concept especially in the Central European revolutions of 1989 and the Middle Eastern revolutions of 2011. The second part of the course is more practical and covers the characteristics, repertoires and impacts of key global civil society actors, such as NGOs, social movements, nationalist groups, religious movements and global advocacy networks; the relevance of the media and Internet activism; as well as the role of global civil society on key issues such as the economic crisis, the War on Terror and democracy.

Our readings cover key texts on civil society and globalisation, NGOs, social movements, nationalist and religious movements and advocacy networks.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: One non-assessed essay (not more than 1,200 words) during term and at least one presentation.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be presented at the beginning of the term. A basic introductory text is: Kaldor, Mary (2003) Global Civil Society: An Answer to War Cambridge: Polity Press.

Assessment: Exam (40%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (60%, 5000 words) in the ST.

The course will be assessed by one 3-5,000-word-essay (60%) due on the first day of Summer Term. The assessed essay can be an extension of the non-assessed one. A two-hour unseen examination in Summer Term (40%).

DV431 Development Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jean-Paul Faguet CON. H806, Dr Mayling Birney CON. H810, Prof Edwin Brett CON. H812 and Dr Mahvish Shami CON.H817

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Anthropology and Development Management and MSc in Development Management. This course is available on the MSc in African Development and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Why are some countries rich and others poor? Why are some governed well and others badly? This course employs a political economy approach to examine the causes of development and non-development. It focuses on the different kinds of authority, incentives and accountability mechanisms that govern the relationships between managers and recipients in the institutions and organisations that people use to meet their political, economic and social needs. It reviews ongoing debates about the best ways of designing state agencies, private firms and NGOs in order to enable students to make practical judgements about institutional reform programmes by showing how centralised bureaucracies, markets, participatory and solidaristic agencies operate to provide essential services. It explores deep theories about the emergence of the state, and the different social, political and economic actors that work within it and vie to control it. And it examines how these forces interact to drive processes of change in different kinds of society, and especially in 'Late Developing Societies' that are attempting to make transitions to modernity by reviewing the literature that explain problems of state, economic and social failure and reconstruction in poor countries. The course is divided into four parts: (1) Analytical assumptions, (2) Government and governance, (3) Private Sector, and (4) Civil Society. On completing the course students should be able to: (i) use theory to solve practical development problems; (ii) identify and assess relevant case study material to inform the practice of development management; and (iii) critically appraise their own practical experience as workers in development organisations or consumers of their services. The course reviews literature dealing with the principles governing the institutions and organisations through which policies, programmes and projects are implemented. It examines the variety of functions they must perform; the structures they can assume; the incentive systems which motivate them and how they relate to differing political, economic and social conditions. It considers recent literature which re-evaluates the way these problems are understood, looking in particular at recent developments in economics, public sector management, social policy and organisational ethnography. It focuses on the role of hierarchy, competition and participation in providing different kinds of services in different situations and contexts. It provides an analytical basis for making judgements about institutional reform programmes by showing how different kinds of institutions and organisations, centralised bureaucracies, markets, participatory and solidaristic agencies operate to provide services in practice.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars and 4 hours of workshops in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 12 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

There will be an introductory 4 hour workshop on Wednesday afternoon of week 1, 18 two-hour lectures and 18 one-and-a-half hour seminars over the Michaelmas & Lent Terms. There are also special evening sessions specifically on practical and professional aspects of the consultancy projects, and a development policy debate. Students are expected to attend all these sessions. Lectures will focus on the theoretical debates driving current policy practice in the development community, while seminars will relate these to practical problems of implementation, drawing on case studies, class exercises, and the personal experience of participants. Seminars will discuss topics covered in the lecture, and will be conducted on the basis either of a student presentation or a class exercise. Students will also take part in and be assessed on the Development Management Project, a live consultancy exercise for real development agencies in consultation with International Development staff. Workshops will be organised to assist student groups to formulate their proposals and negotiate their projects with their commissioning agencies.

Formative coursework: In the Michaelmas Term students are expected to produce one 2,000 word essay on a topic agreed with an individual tutor.

Indicative reading: A detailed weekly reading list is provided at the first course meeting. Background readings include: Brett, E.A. (2009) Reconstructing Development Theory; Faguet, JP. 2012. Decentralization and Popular Democracy: Governance from Below in Bolivia. Oxford University Press; Stiglitz, J. 2002 Globalization and its discontents, Allen Lane, 2002; World Bank, World Development Report, 2004, Making services work for poor people, Washington, World Bank. Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period. Project (40%) in the ST.

Students are required to pass the final exam in the ST in order to pass the course. A fail in the exam can not be condoned by a pass in other elements of assessment.

DV432 Half Unit China in Developmental Perspective

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Jude Howell CON. H811

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in Social Policy and Development: Non-Governmental Organisations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course looks at China from a comparative developmental perspective, locating the discussion of China within the interdisciplinary field of development studies. It examines China's developmental trajectory since 1949, explaining the fundamental shift in developmental path from late 1978 onwards. It considers China's role in the so-called Third World, as a model of innovation, as a voice for developing country concerns and as an important aid donor. It reflects on China's recent achievements in reducing poverty and places these in comparative context.

The course considers the governance challenges posed by rapid economic reform, the attempts to reform the Party-state and to manage social tensions. It examines the social dimensions of rapid economic reform and the implications for social policies. It looks at the emergence of NGOs and other forms of civil society organising and considers changing state-society relations. Finally it considers China's role as aid donor and its emergence as a global economic and political power. The course will enable students to obtain an understanding of key developmental issues and discussions about China and to link these discussions to broader debates and theories in development studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 13 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST. In addition, one introductory seminar session.

Formative coursework: Students have the opportunity to receive feed-back on a formative essay of 1,500 words

Indicative reading: Harneit-Sievers, A., Marks, S., and Naidu, S., 2010, Chinese and African perspectives on China in Africa, Pambazuka Press; Jude Howell, 2003, Governance in China. DV433 Half Unit*The Informal Economy and Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kathleen Meagher CON.711

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Urban Policy (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Urbanisation and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Contrary to standard development thinking, the informal economy has expanded rather than contracted in the face of liberalisation and globalisation, and now creates more jobs than the formal economy in most developing countries. The sheer size of the informal economy, and its impact on poverty, social exclusion, governance and entrepreneurial development have brought economic informality back onto the development agenda. In a globalising environment, are large informal economies a poverty trap or an engine of growth? Do they stimulate entrepreneurship and popular empowerment, or promote criminality and exploitation? This course will explore the impact of economic informalisation on growth and governance in the global south. Using a comparative institutional approach, it will examine informal economies in a range of regional contexts, including Africa, the Middle East, South and East Asia, and Latin America, highlighting variations in activities, relations with the state, global integration and development outcomes. Key issues to be covered in the course include the impact of the informal economy on labour markets, weak states, gender empowerment, urban service provision, social enterprise, social policy, taxation and governance, and popular politics. Attention will be focused on the potential as well as risks of large informal economies in the face of contemporary development challenges, drawing on empirical evidence and comparative case studies from across the developing world.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

DV434 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15*Human Security

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Kaldor

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Conflict Studies, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Development Studies (Research), MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies and MSc in International Migration and Public Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. No more than 5 students, per academic year, can be accepted from programmes other than the listed programmes. Capped at 30 students, first come, first served in order of priority.

Course content: This inter-disciplinary course will introduce students to the concept of human security. Human security refers to the security of individuals and communities as opposed to the security of the state. It combines physical security and material security; freedom from fear and freedom from want. The course will introduce students to the debates about the concept and its relevance in the contemporary era. It will combine political, military, legal and economic approaches to human security implementation. The course will cover topics including: intellectual foundations and debates over the concept of human security; new and old wars; persistent conflict; just war thinking and whether it can be applied to human security; international humanitarian law and human rights law; humanitarian intervention and the Responsibility to Protect; international capabilities for human security; counterinsurgency, stabilisation, and statebuilding; transitional justice.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to undertake class essays as well as class presentations. Students will receive feedback on both.

Indicative reading: Mary Kaldor, New and Old Wars: Organised Violence in a Global Era, Polity Press, 2006; Shannon Beebe and Mary Kaldor, The Ultimate Weapon is no Weapon: Human Security and the New Rules of War and Peace, Public Affairs, 2010; Ruti Teitel, Humanity's Law, Oxford University Press, 2011; Marlies Glasius and Mary Kaldor, eds, A Human Security Doctrine for Europe, Routledge, 2005; World Development Report 2011: Conflict, Security, and Development, World Bank, 2011; Human Security Report 2005, University of British Columbia, 2005; Human Security Now: Report of the Commission on Human Security, Co-Chairs S Ogata and A Sen, United Nations, 2003; A Human Security Doctrine for Europe: The Barcelona Report of the Study Group on European Security Capabilities, Barcelona, 2004; G. DV435 Half Unit*African Political Economy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Catherine Boone

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in African Development. This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course explores Africa's changed place in the world at a time when the continent's economic prospects suggest some grounds for optimism. It will examine the economic consequences of different political forms that have shaped African history and may be emerging now. In the twentieth century, these forms were predominantly colonial and post-colonial states, but during the colonial period Panafricanism was the most inclusive political movement in the world. The course of 10 lectures begins with an overview of institutional change in the region. This leads into the debate over the transition from authoritarian structuralism to liberalisation, which is illuminated by regional or national cases. The challenge for Africans remains achieving political forms that guarantee democracy. The context for this includes a demographic explosion and rapid urbanization, while Africa's share of the world population rises inexorably. Some of the other issues to be explored are those of public health in Africa and transitional justice.

DV441

Development Policy and Management

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tasha Fairfield CON. 6.04 and Dr Joana Naritomi

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is also available as an outside option, where regulations and numbers permit but only with permission of the teacher responsible. Please note that students who are enrolled in another International Development core course, such as DV400 or DV431, are ineligible.

Course content: This course introduces students to current debates, strategies, policy recommendations, and political challenges in international development. The Michaelmas term features lectures from leading LSE experts on key subjects including poverty, environment, industrialisation, conflict, and the role of institutions and democracy in shaping development outcomes.

The Lent term examines a subset of these topics in greater depth, with particular attention to the issues of democracy, poverty, and inequality. This second half of the course emphasizes politics on the ground in developing countries. Who gets the policies they want, why, when, and how? Throughout, we will pay close attention to actors, interests, institutions, and power. Understanding the politics of policymaking is critical for development specialists and policy practitioners. Policies recommended by technical experts are not always politically feasible, and progress may require implementing second-best solutions. Moreover, approaches that work in one case may not work in another. Drawing on real-world examples from a range of policy domains including taxation and state-building, we will discuss strategies for enacting pro-development reforms that might otherwise be politically infeasible. Upon completing the course, students can expect to (1) be able to critically engage with the key debates in international development, (2) be able to identify political constraints that may impede implementation of pro-development policies, (3) apply collective action, institutional, and other political economy theories to explain 'real world' cases of development policy successes and failures, and (4) design strategies that can help make pro-development policies more politically feasible in a given country context.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 4 hours of seminars and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students receive feedback on formative coursework in MT based on individual written work and a 'development policy application' (DPA) project that will serve as practice for the assessed DPA in LT.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (20%, 1500 words) in the MT.

Presentation (20%) in the LT.

This course is assessed through a 1,500 word essay in MT (20%), a team-based development policy application in LT (20%), and a three hour exam (60%) in ST.

Research Themes in International Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tim Allen CON7.12 and Prof Danny Quah

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is only available to students taking DV410.1 and is therefore not available as an option. It builds on the weekly lectures/seminars given as a component of DV410.1.

Course content: The course will be structured around large research topics associated with the work of the International Development department such as Complex Emergencies, Control of Tropical Diseases, Assessments of Global Poverty, Dilemmas in African Leadership, the Economic Growth of China, etc. A set of readings will be proposed for each topic, with an orientation towards the publications of International Development staff. Themes and questions will change over time as according to developments in the literature and specific interests of staff teaching the course.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Formative coursework: Formative assessment will be a 3,000 word draft for discussion with the relevant member of staff.

Technical Change, Paradigm Shifts and Global Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Carlota Perez

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in Development Studies (Research). This course is available as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is an interdisciplinary course aimed at understanding how technical change modifies the windows of opportunity for growth and development as well as how technology and institutions influence each other. The course will be structured in three parts: Part one - Theory of technical change will provide a set of tools for analysing technology from a social science perspective, connecting the neo-Schumpeterian theories of technology and innovation with the theories of development. Part two - The impact of technical change on development will use that framework to explain why development opportunities are a moving target and why what may have been impossible in a particular period can become possible in another, thus requiring an evolutionary perspective of development strategies. Part Three - The mutual influence of technology and social institutions will examine the way in which social forces, movements and policies shape and are shaped by technology and the social innovation potential it provides.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Note: part of the teaching and the seminar guidance will be performed by guest professors. Mary Kaldor and Robin Murray

Formative coursework: Reading three or four papers for each lecture and submitting comments as requested in each case. Participating in the exercises and debates proposed in the seminars. Searching examples in the media of the issues being discussed. Participating in the discussion of their colleagues' exam presentations. Writing an essay during the Lent Term in order to receive comments with a view to improving the final essays. Giving presentations on chosen topics in the seminar sessions and participating in the discussion of colleagues' presentations.

Public Affairs, International Development and Gendered Violence

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Purna Sen

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Previous study of the social sciences or humanities is preferred.

Course content: The framework for this course will see economic, social and private aspects of development and public policy as reference points to examine silences, biases and analyses of sex and sexual violence. We will consider the sexually informed constructions of women's place in the home and in the public sphere, how development and public policy make assumptions about control over women's bodies, and the ways in which such are challenged or reinforced. We will look at war and conflict, humanitarian work and times of 'peace'. We will examine assumptions and judgements about (hetero)-sexuality, sexual control (by the self and by others) and how these have been drawn on by policy-makers and other actors, both in the public and domestic spheres. There will be discussions about the labour market and workplace, the household, family, marriage, reproduction and father-/motherhood and HIV/health. Violence – both physical and sexual – will be given attention. There will be time also on identity, religion and culture in relation to the grounding of concepts and expectations that infuse not only private life but also the thinking of policy-makers. The course will draw on relevant literature as well as the teacher's experience in the world of international policy and politics.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the MT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to write a short paper of 800-1000 words on the topic on which they will lead a class

DV448 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15

Political Economy of Development I

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lloyd Gruber CON.6.03

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This half-unit MT course explores why governments and organisations pursue the development policies they do. Whenever experts get together to debate development policy, attention usually focuses on what the relevant actors should be doing: Which policies should the leaders of developing countries be adopting (or discarding) to stimulate growth and reduce poverty? What kinds of strategies should policymakers in the industrialised world be implementing to help poorer countries develop? Much of the time, however, the people who hold positions of power in developing countries do not do what outsiders say they should. Instead they choose – and try as best as they can to institutionalize – policies that seem misguided at best, malevolent at worst. Students who take this course can expect to acquire a deeper understanding of the forces that can bias political and organisational actors toward development policies whose long-run effects are socially, politically, or economically suboptimal. Students will also be given opportunities to apply these conceptual insights to concrete cases of development management and mis-management. In sum, the course is designed for students who want more experience putting collective action, institutional, and other cutting-edge political economy theories to use in solving current development problems at different levels of government – global, national, and local – and across different sectors of the economy – public, private, and non-profit.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the MT.

A 'formative' Development Policy Application (DPA) question will be assigned in the first weeks of the course, and students will be encouraged, although not required, to submit individually-authored policy memos by the beginning of week 3. These memos will be handed back – with comments – shortly thereafter (by the end of week 4 at the very latest).

In addition, practice DPA presentations will be held (and, where possible, videoed) during special sessions arranged in week 3. The members of each DPA group will be given feedback on substance as well as presentational style during their week 3 seminars. Students will be encouraged to attend office hours to receive more individualized feedback.

7 Lloyd Gruber, "The Tertiary Tilt: Education and Inequality in the Developing World," World Development 54: 253-272.

Assessment: Essay (15%), presentation (15%) and take home exam (70%) in the MT.

All students will be required to take part in a Development Policy Application (DPA) project stretching over several weeks of the course. A specific – and current – issue of major importance to developing countries will be introduced in the first week of this exercise. Each student will then be asked to prepare an individually-authored policy memo on the topic. This memo will be worth 15% of the overall course mark.

In the second part of the exercise, students will be randomly assigned into small groups and begin preparing a jointly-delivered oral presentation outlining and defending their group's preferred policy. These presentations – which will count for an additional 15% of the overall course mark – will take place the following week.

An individually-authored essay (or set of essays) totalling a maximum of 4,000 words will be assigned at the end of the course. The essay question(s) will ask students to think creatively about the ideas and arguments presented to that point in the course, but will not require any outside research. This component of the assessment will count for 70% of the course mark.

DV449 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 Political Economy of Development II

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tasha Fairfield CON.6.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Building upon the theoretical material and applications introduced in the MT course Political Economy of Development I, this course emphasizes politics on the ground in developing countries. Who gets the policies they want, why, when, and how? Throughout, we will pay close attention to actors, interests, institutions, and power. Understanding the politics of policymaking is critical for development specialists and policy practitioners. Policies recommended by technical experts are not always politically feasible, and progress may require implementing second-best solutions. Moreover, approaches that work in one case may not work in another. Drawing on real-world examples from a range of policy domains including taxation and social spending, we will discuss strategies for enacting pro-development reforms that might otherwise be politically infeasible. The course will also introduce students to key issues in conceptualization and measurement by examining indices and indicators of governance and democracy that are widely used by development practitioners. Upon completing the course, students can expect to (1) be able to critically engage with the key debates in international development, (2) be able to identify political constraints that may impede implementation of pro-development policies, (3) apply collective action, institutional, and other political economy theories to explain

'real world' cases of development policy successes and failures, and (4) design strategies that can help make pro-development policies more politically feasible in a given country context.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 presentation in the LT and 1 essay in the LT and ST. Students will receive feedback on formative written assignments and formative presentations in seminars during the first weeks of the term that will prepare them for the assessed DPA at the end of the term.

Students will receive feedback on a mock exam early in ST as a formative exercise. The two-hour session in ST will serve as further preparation for the assessed exam.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 2 hours), essay (25%) and presentation (15%).

All students will be required to take part in a Development Policy Application (DPA) project stretching over several weeks of the course. A specific issue of major importance to developing countries will be introduced early in the term. Students will be assigned into small groups, and each group will pick a country of its choice for the project. The project is assessed through a group-authored policy memo and an accompanying oral presentation. The DPA will count for 40% of the course mark.

A cumulative, 2-hour final exam will be given in the Summer Term. The exam will count for 60% of the course mark.

DV450 Half Unit Bureaucracy and Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Adnan Khan 4.03A, 32LIF

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in Development Studies (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Some knowledge of economics, especially microeconomics, at the undergraduate or graduate level is highly desirable. However, some students who may not fulfil these requirements may still be admitted at the lecturer's discretion provided they can demonstrate that this course is a close fit for them given their background and ambition, and that they will learn the basics of economic theory on their own.

Course content: Course outline:

The first part of the course covers classic issues in personnel economics. It looks at recruitment into civil service and at screening of job applicants with imperfect information. It also covers incentives for candidates to signal ability and to invest in relevant skills. Finally it covers performance evaluation and the design of monetary and non-monetary incentives to elicit good performance. The second part of the course covers political economy of bureaucratic decision making. It analyses bureaucratic working using the principal-agent and game-theoretic frameworks. It discusses the role of formal and informal institutions in development policy, looks at constraints imposed by collective action and credible commitment and explores ways of recognising and building on opportunities for policy change. It also covers issues of bureaucratic accountability and corruption and concludes with a discussion of uncertainty and biases in decision-making with an exploration of policy choices with partial knowledge of policy outcomes.

The final part of the course covers evidence based policy formulation and explores under what conditions policy actors effectively use evidence to inform policy decisions and discusses ways of shifting the culture of policy making. Finally it demonstrates some cases where good evidence is produced, understood and acted upon to shape policy in critical ways, even in environments characterised by limited resources and weak governance.

Lecture 1: Overview and Recruitment

Screening job applicants with imperfect information, signalling and investing in skills

Lec 2: Job Design and Organisational Structure

Optimal Job Design, multitasking, centralisation vs. decentralisation, authority and responsibility

Lec 3: Motivation- public sector and pro-social motivation

Drawing on intrinsic motivation, identity formation

Lec 4: Performance Evaluation

Performance measurement and evaluation, career based incentives, design of incentives

Lec 5,6: Political Economy of Bureaucracy

Principal-Agent relationships, game theory, Political Economy Analysis, credible commitment, solutions to collective action problems, opportunities for change

Lec 7: Accountability and Corruption

Lec 8: Uncertainty and Biases in Decision-Making

Heuristics in decision-making, policy choices with partial knowledge of policy outcomes

Lec 9: Evidence Based Policy Formulation

What evidence is used for policy and why is it not used, Programme Evaluation

Lec 10: Case studies on use of evidence in policy

Tax Policy in Pakistan, Monitoring of Public Expenditures in Africa, etc

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay and 1 project in the MT.

Indicative reading: 1. Edward P. Lazear and Michael Gibbs, Personnel Economics

2. James Q. Wilson, Bureaucracy: What Government Agencies Do and Why They Do It

7. Relevant research papers by Ashraf and Badiera on Public Service Motivation; Ferraz and Finan on Public Sector Selection; Khan, Khwaja and Olken on Incentives for tax collectors; Reinikka and Svensson; Lant Pritchett; etc

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 2 minutes, reading time: 1 minute) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%) and project (25%) in the MT.

Half of the total assessment is assigned to a final exam, while the remaining half is allocated between an individual and a group assignment on each of which the students will receive written feedback as a part of the formative coursework.

DV451 Half Unit

Money in an Unequal World

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Nigel Dodd S277 and Prof John Hart

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies and MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This is a single term course consisting of 10 x 3 hours workshops for up to 30 Masters students. The course will introduce students to approaches to money from sociology, anthropology, development studies, geography, political economy and cultural theory. The course extends an ongoing dialogue between the course organizers, an anthropologist and a sociologist, and will draw on major theoretical approaches and historical studies to examine how money operates – its social organization and governance, its production in global and local financial networks. As a measure and symbol of economic inequality, money is both a problem for development and potentially a major part of its solution. Students will therefore investigate how new and alternative forms may help us to rethink and re-organize money and mount a sustained challenge to prevailing economic systems. The lecture-seminars will cover the following topics:

Week One: Capital in the global distribution of wealth

Overview of course: the organization of money and global capitalism; the world's monetary institutions; global, regional, national and local politics of money; world money, national currencies and the future of money.

Week Two: What is money and what do people do with it?

The social functions and meanings of money; special vs. general purpose monies; spheres of exchange; personal vs. impersonal money; earmarking; money and scales of value.

Week Three: The origins of money

Competing theories of the origins of money, barter vs. tribute; money and gift exchange; Simmel's theory of money; the state theory of money.

Week Four: Money as credit/debt

The social, institutional and cultural connections between money, credit and debt; banks and the production of money; money and the 'debt problem'; money as public debt.

Week Five: The rise and fall of national currencies

The geography and geopolitics of money; history and future of state currency; states, central banks and monetary governance; gold and international money; Bretton Woods and its aftermath; world money.

Week Six: The history and ethnography of finance

The concept of financialization; history of finance and the growth of managed money; finance, securitization and new forms of money (CDOs, derivatives etc.).

Week Seven: Community and complementary currencies

History of monetary reform, 'monetary utopianism' and alternative currencies; theory and history of LETS, Time Banks, labour money, microcredit, etc.

Week Eight: Digital commerce, e-money and mobile money

The digitalization of money; virtual money; history of digital currency; mobile money (M-Pesa); the Bitcoin phenomenon.

Week Nine: The Euro

Globalization and the future of world money; history of European monetary integration and the present crisis; the rationale for currency union and the prospects for other regional unions.

Week Ten: Money in the making of world society

General review. Is a human economy possible? Is money a central means to such an economy or its antithesis?

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 essay in the MT.

Humanitarian Consultancy Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stuart Gordon

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies. This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is compulsory for and only available to students enrolled on the MSc International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies (IDHE). This course is not available as an outside option. IDHE students sign up for DV452 and are then automatically enrolled into DV428, Managing Humanitarianism. Students will still need to enrol in a seminar group for DV428 on Moodle.

Course content: This unit is a core course for the MSc IDHE. Students work on a consultancy report in Michaelmas Term and Lent Terms and attend the taught element of DV428 Managing Humanitarianism in the Michaelmas term. Students will gain practical experience of dealing with current policy issues and best practice in the fields of humanitarian assistance or international development by working on a live consultancy team project for a real client and an historical case study of a major humanitarian emergency. The consultancies are based around an experiential learning format.

Students will be allocated to consultancy teams comprising between three and five people. Students are able to express preferences for particular clients but may not be allocated to one of these. Past project sponsors have included the UK Department of International Development (DFID), the ICRC, MSF, the Disasters and Emergency Committee (DEC), Christian Aid, the UK Stabilisation Unit and NATO.

The consultancy project begins in Michaelmas Term with client reports due at the end of Lent Term. The client report and final presentation form part of the assessment.

Skills Workshops - There will be a series of skills presentations and workshops in Michaelmas Term. There will be a mandatory workshop covering the topic of humanitarian evaluations in the Michaelmas Term (usually in the weekend between weeks 4 and 5). At the end of Michaelmas Term there is a progress board for each consultancy group.

Academic Component - The course includes a significant theoretical/academic component starting in Lent Term. This follows the same format as the DV428 Managing Humanitarianism course, consisting of 10 lectures of one and a half hours, 5-6 film/voice of experience/practitioner sessions of up to two hours and 10 seminars of one-and-a-half hours. For further details on the content, please refer to the course guide for DV428.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures, 15 hours of seminars, 12 hours of workshops and 15 hours of workshops in the MT.

MT Consultancy Skills Workshops: 4 x 3 hour sessions. The last of these takes place in at the end of Michaelmas Term and is in the form of a progress board for each consultancy group.

Workshop and feedback sessions take place Fridays (1300-1600) in weeks 2,3,4,6 and 10)

MT Managing Humanitarianism: (follows DV428): 10 x 1.5 hr lectures, 10 x 2 hr film sessions, 10 x 1.5 hr seminars. For further details on the content, please refer to the entry for DV428.

Formative coursework: Students will contribute to the Group inception, interim and final reports/presentations and will be given indicative grades for each of these.

Indicative reading: John Rowley and Frances Rubin, 'Effective Consultancies in Development and Humanitarian and Humanitarian Programmes' (Oxfam: Oxford: 2006); Michael Bamberger, Jim Rugh and Linda Mabry, 'Real World Evaluation: working Under Budget, Time, Data and Political Constraints' (Sage: London, 2012); Michael Quinn Patton, 'Utilization Focused Evaluation' 4th Edition (Sage: London, 2008); Michael Edwards and Alan Fowler, 'NGO Management' (Earthscan: Oxford, 2002); Eric James 'Managing Humanitarian Relief: An Operational Guide for NGOs' (Practical Action Publishing: Rugby, 2008)

Assessment: Project (35%, 6000 words) and presentation (5%) in the LT.

Essay (10%, 750 words) in the MT.

Take home exam (50%) in the ST.

35% group-based project (ideally 6,000 words but may be between 4-8,000 words depending on the client's preferences) submitted at the end of Lent Term.

5% group based presentation to clients at the end of Lent Term.

10% individual assessed essay (750 words) and individual contribution to a group presentation on an historical disaster case study submitted Friday of week 9 (Michaelmas Term).

50% unseen take home exam (as per the DV428 exam) in the ST.

Final client presentations are at the end of the Lent Term and are scheduled by the students in consultation with academic staff AND the clients. Students should be aware that presentations to clients MAY have to take place during the first week of Easter Vacation.

They will be informed as soon as possible, but should not make any travel plans until presentation dates are confirmed.

Students are required to pass the final exam in the main exam period in order to pass the course. A fail in the exam can not be condoned by a pass in other elements of assessment.

DV483 Half Unit

Information Technologies and Socio-Economic Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Shirin Madon CON.8.13

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in African Development, MSc in Development Management, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in International Development and Humanitarian Emergencies, MSc in Management of Information Systems and Digital Innovation and MSc in Media, Communication and Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This interdisciplinary course is about understanding the role played by Information and Communication Technology (ICT) towards achieving developmental goals. We begin by juxtaposing dominant theoretical assumptions about ICT and socio-economic change with different conceptualisations of development. Using this as a critical frame of reference, during the rest of the course we focus on a variety of current topics in the ICTD field such as global software outsourcing, e-commerce/ m-commerce, ICT and education, e-government, telecentres, health informatics and ICT and humanitarianism.

Teaching: 15 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour and 30 minutes of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Student-led discussion sessions take place during the course based on selected readings. Each of these sessions is normally led by 2 students and feedback is provided on the coverage of concepts and critical understanding demonstrated by the presentation.

Indicative reading: Avgerou, C. (2010) Discourses on ICT and Development, Information Technologies and International Development, 6, 3, pp. 1-18.

Brown, A. and Grant, G. (2010) Highlighting the Duality of the ICT and Development Research Agenda, Information Technology for Development, 16, 2, pp. 96-111.

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 3000 words) in the ST.

MPA Capstone Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lloyd Gruber plus others

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 6 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by an external organisation. Typical clients include public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations or think tanks and NGOs. The group will have from October to February to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT.

Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during MT.

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Office for Government Commerce Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Strategy Survival Guide (London: Prime Minister's Strategy Unit. July 2004); C. R. Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems, chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%) in the ST.

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances. 1) A presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. The presentation must take place by week 8 of the Lent term, on a date agreed with the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation after receipt of the presentation and project report. 2) A group project report will be submitted during the Lent Term. The main body of the report may not exceed 15,000 words and will be read by academic markers whose assessment will count for 60% of the final grade. Appendices to the project report may be included but would normally consist only of technical data or supplementary analysis. Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution to the group's work, to be submitted alongside the report. The reflection should be no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project. The reflections should not be included in the report submitted to the client. 3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

MPA Dissertation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lloyd Gruber

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Policy Paper

Course content: MPA students will write a dissertation of no more than 10,000 words on a topic of their choice to be agreed with their supervisor.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT.

Students will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide guidance on this piece of work. MPA Dissertation Workshops will be held to assist in the development of the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) in the ST.
Other (10%) in the MT.

1) A dissertation proposal consisting of the dissertation title, a short abstract, provisional table of contents and a 5 page synopsis/introduction will count for 10% of the overall dissertation mark. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their supervisor. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.

2) The full dissertation of no more than 10,000 words will account for the remaining 90% of the overall mark.

MPA Policy Paper

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Lloyd Gruber and Prof Patrick Dunleavy plus supervisors from MPA-owning departments

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: MPA students will write an individually-authored MPA Policy Paper on a topic developed in consultation with their MPA supervisor. The paper will analyse a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and proposes an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. Papers cannot exceed 6,000 words and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: A title, abstract, and MPA Policy Paper proposal (of no more than 750 words in total). Students will have these items returned, with comments, within two weeks of submission.

Indicative reading: David L. Weimer and Aidan R. Vining, Policy Analysis: Concepts and Practice, 5th ed. (Prentice Hall, 2010); Lisa Anderson, ed., Pursuing Truth, Exercising Power: Social Science and Public Policy in the Twenty-first Century (New York: Columbia University Press, 2005); Edith Stokey and Richard Zeckhauser, A Primer for Policy Analysis (Norton, 1978); Anthony E. Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words) in the ST.

Students are encouraged to work on their policy paper from MT onwards.

EC400

Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Margaret Bray 32L.4.27

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Economics (Track 1), MRes in Economics (Track 2), MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 1), MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (Research), MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics (Research), MSc in Economics and Management and MSc in Finance and Economics. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this pre-session course is to provide students with the essential mathematical, statistical, economic and econometric background for the core Economics courses of these programmes. The course starts with mathematics revision sessions and progresses to sections covering mathematics for microeconomics, mathematics for macroeconomics, and probability and statistical inferences. MSc Finance and Economics students do not take mathematics for macroeconomics. MSc Management and Economics students attend lectures on literacy in accounting instead of the mathematics for macroeconomics.

Teaching: Approximately 25 hours lectures and 36 hours classes during September.

Indicative reading: Students will be advised of recommended readings in the Summer.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 0 minute) as part of modular teaching.

Students will be required to complete a set of self-testing exercises during the course. At the end of the course, students will be examined in mathematics for microeconomics and macroeconomics, and in probability and statistical inferences. Students on MSc Management and Economics and MSc Finance and Economics are examined on two mathematics modules (revision mathematics and mathematics for microeconomics) and probability and statistical inferences. All other students are examined on mathematics modules (revision mathematics, mathematics for microeconomics and mathematics for macroeconomics), and probability and statistical inferences. Students wishing to continue studying Economics MSc-level courses must achieve an overall grade of 50% in EC400 with no one subject exam less than 40%. Students wishing to study MRes-level courses must achieve an overall grade of 70% with no one subject exam less than 60%. Application for EC400 must be made to the Dept of Economics by the end of June.

EC402

Econometrics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vassilis Hajivassiliou 32L.4.23, Prof Danny Quah TW1 10.01A and Prof Mark Schankerman 32L.4.30

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy and MSc in Economics and Philosophy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Students should have completed an undergraduate degree or equivalent in Economics and EC400 (Introductory course in Mathematics and Statistics).

Course content: The course aims to present and illustrate the techniques of empirical investigation in economics.

1. Regression models with fixed regressors (simple and multiple). Least squares and other estimation methods. Goodness of fit and hypothesis testing.
2. Regression models with stochastic regressors.
3. Asymptotic Theory and its application to the regression model.
4. The partitioned regression model, multicollinearity, misspecification, omitted and added variables.
5. Heteroskedasticity and Generalized Least Squares.
6. Measurement Errors and Instrumental Variables.
7. An example of the omitted variable problem. The omission of ability in the determination of the rate of return of schooling.
8. Estimating causal effects in panel data: Diff-in Diff estimator
9. Panel data and static models: fixed and random effect estimators, specification tests, measurement error
10. Panel data and dynamic models: Arellano-Bond estimator, generalised method of moments
11. Serial Correlation
12. Vector Autoregression
13. Unit roots and cointegration

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 8 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 10 hours of classes in the LT. 2 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises are provided each week and are discussed in classes. In order to have any chance of completing the course successfully, these exercises must be attempted. Special test exercises will be set at three points during the year. These will be carefully marked and the results made available.

Indicative reading: J Johnston & J diNardo, Econometric Methods (4th edn) or W H Greene, Econometric Analysis (6th edn), James D. Hamilton, Time Series Analysis (1994), J Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross Section and Panel Data (2002), J Angrist and J Pischke, Mostly Harmless Econometrics (2009)

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC406

Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Thomas Sampson

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in Public and Economic Policy. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Public Policy and Administration (LSE and Peking University) and MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The aim of this course is to reinforce the ability of students to use statistics and economics to evaluate policy questions. In many ways the course builds on the material covered in Quantitative Approaches and Policy Analysis (EC455) and Micro and Macroeconomics for Public Policy (EC440) and covers similar questions but at greater depth. At the beginning of the first term the course covers the key techniques to evaluate policy in more detail than in EC455. After this review of key regression techniques, the course covers a wide range of current public policy issues. Each lecture typically gives a brief introduction to a policy issue and then considers one or two recent empirical papers on this question in detail and draws out policy implications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete additional exercises, which will be marked, as formative assessment.

Indicative reading: There is no single textbook for the course. James H. Stock and Mark W. Watson "Introduction to Econometrics", remains a very useful reference. A substantially more advanced reference for background reading is Joshua Angrist and Jorn-Steffen Pischke "Mostly Harmless Econometrics". A full reading list with the readings for each topic will be made available at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC408

Introduction to Quantitative Methods for the MPA Programme

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gregory Fischer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Also available to other MPhil/PhD students with the agreement of the course tutor.

Course content: An introduction to basic mathematical and statistical concepts for use in MPA courses in economics and quantitative approaches. The course covers the following topics: Statistics: Discrete and continuous random variables, jointly distributed random variables, the Normal distribution, sampling and the Central Limit Theorem, properties of estimators, introduction to hypothesis testing. Mathematics: Linear functions, quadratic, logarithmic and exponential functions, the derivative of a function and rules of differentiation, unconstrained optimization with one variable, functions of several variables and their differentiation, unconstrained optimization with several variables, constrained optimization.

Teaching: The course runs over 8 days, during the two weeks prior to the start of the Michaelmas Term. In total, students will attend ten lectures and six classes during the two weeks of the course.

Indicative reading: Notes covering the course material will be made available at the beginning of the course. Two widely used introductory statistics books that can be used as background reading for the statistics part are Newbold, Carlson and Thorne Statistics for Business and Economics (6th edition) and Wonnacott and Wonnacott Introductory Statistics for Business and Economics (4th edition). However, there are also many other introductory statistics textbooks that cover the same material.

Two widely used introductory mathematics books that can be used as background reading for the mathematics part are Ian Jacques Mathematics for Economics and Business (5th edition) and Wisniewski's Introductory Mathematical Methods in Economics

(2nd edition). Also in this case there are a large number of excellent alternative textbooks that cover the same material. Those who want a more advanced treatment of the same material can use Simon and Blume's Mathematics for Economists, but this treatment is more formal than what we require for this course. We do not recommend buying a new textbook for this course, if you already own a textbook that covers similar material.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 1 hour) as part of modular teaching.

The course will be assessed with a one hour test at the end of week two. The test result does not count towards the MPA final degree, but will be used in advising students on suitable option course choices.

EC409E Half Unit

Public Policy in Practice Workshop III

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Joachim Wehner

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The policy workshop applies the analytical tools that are taught in the week-long modules of the Executive MPA to specific policy areas. Teaching is based on a series of case studies. The case studies are taught by specialists in a particular policy area and are complemented with group working sessions by the students and presentations by policy practitioners involved in the policy area.

Teaching: A three-day modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One optional mock policy exercise will be provided.

Indicative reading: Readings that are specific to each policy area will be distributed at the beginning of the course

Assessment: Essay (100%, 2000 words).

Assessment will consist of a 2,000 word reflective essay due 10 days after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC410 Half Unit

Public Economics for Public Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Spinnewijn 32L.3.24 and Prof Henrik Kleven 32L.3.16

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have taken EC440 Macro and Microeconomics (for Public Policy) or an equivalent course.

Course content: This is a course in theoretical and applied public economics using intermediate economic theory. Topics include issues of equity and efficiency and alternative theories of the role of the state. Models of public goods and externalities, including environmental policy. Who really pays taxes: issues of tax incidence and tax evasion. Income inequality, poverty alleviation and the role of welfare programmes in theory and in practice. Health and education policy. The effects of taxes and transfers on labour supply and migration; The optimal taxation of commodities and incomes. Current topics in public finance. The main institutional references will be to the UK and the US, but some attention will also be given to broader international experience.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.
Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 1 presentation in the LT.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC411 Microeconomics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Francesco Nava 32L. 3.20 and Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L. 4.19

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Economics. This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The aim of the course is to develop the basic tools for analysing problems of resource allocation used by economists working in research, government and business. The course deals with positive and normative problems. It aims to include modern developments without being overly mathematical, and to develop a capacity to apply economic concepts to real-world problems.

The first part of the course focuses on classical theories of market behaviour and strategic interaction. We begin by presenting foundations to utility maximisation, by analysing the optimisation problems of price-taking consumers and firms, and by modelling market interactions and the formation of prices in perfectly competitive markets. We then introduce models of decision making under uncertainty and game theoretic solution concepts. Novel developments in these fields will be discussed in lectures.

The second part of the course focuses on models of imperfect competition and information economics. We begin with an analysis of models of monopoly, oligopoly, product differentiation, and public goods. Then, we study markets with imperfect and incomplete information including search, adverse selection, auctions, signalling, screening, and moral hazard. Special emphasis will be given to economic applications.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: There will be mock examinations at the end of MT and the beginning of ST.

Indicative reading: The course will draw on a variety of texts, the main ones being: J G Riley, Essential Microeconomics, Cambridge; J R Green, A Mas-Colell & M D Whinston, Microeconomic Theory, Oxford.

More detailed readings will be given at the beginning of the course and some notes will be provided where textbook coverage is inadequate.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC413 Macroeconomics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Wouter Den Haan 32L.1.08A and Prof Alwyn Young 32L.2.20

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Finance and Economics and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The aim of the course is to give a wide-ranging survey of modern macroeconomics.

Growth in the global economy

The shifting global economy. Economic growth: neoclassical growth Endogenous technology, intellectual property rights.

Business Cycle and Asset Pricing Facts

Household behaviour: the life-cycle permanent-income model, precautionary saving, liquidity constraints, and empirical testing. Overlapping generation models: fiscal policy analysis, ricardian equivalence, government debt and social security reform.

Asset pricing models: the consumption-based capital asset pricing model and the static capital asset pricing model. Investment and Tobin's Q Monetary Policy in Theory and in Practice

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises are discussed in each class. There will be a one-and-a-half-hour mock examination at the end of the MT and another at the beginning of the ST.

Indicative reading: There are no texts that correspond exactly to the course. M Obstfeld & K Rogoff, Foundations of International Macroeconomics, MIT Press, 1996 and O Blanchard & S Fischer, Lectures in Macroeconomics. Useful background for more technical material is N Stokey & R Lucas, Recursive Methods in Economic Dynamics. Primary reading, however, will be journal articles. A full list will be available at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC421

International Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Swati Dhingra 32L 2.31, Dr Thomas Sampson 32L 2.34 and Dr Gianluca Benigno 32L 1.12

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: A graduate course in international economics consisting of i) the fundamentals of trade theory and its application to policy and ii) international macroeconomics.

Trade: Comparative advantage and the gains from trade. Theories of comparative advantage. Factor endowments, the international location of production, and patterns of international trade. Empirical tests of trade models. Trade and the labour market. Intra-industry trade. Firm heterogeneity and selection into trade. Foreign direct investment. General equilibrium trade policy.

International macroeconomics: Intertemporal trade and the current account balance. Dynamics of small open economies. The real exchange rate and the terms of trade. Uncertainty and international financial markets. Monetary model of exchange rate determination: flexible and sticky prices. Introduction to currency crises models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course. Some important items are: R Feenstra, Advanced International Trade: Theory and Evidence, Princeton, 2004; A Dixit & V Norman, Theory of International Trade, Cambridge, 1980; E Helpman & P Krugman, Market Structure and Foreign Trade, MIT, 1985; M Obstfeld & K Rogoff, Foundations of International Macroeconomics, MIT Press, 1996.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC421E Half Unit

Global Market Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Andrew Bernard

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (EC455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (EC440E).

Course content: This course focuses on the economic interdependence between countries in a global economy. The first part of the course examines the structure and geography of world trade and examines popular hypothesis such as the "global village" or "flat earth". The second part of the course analyses macroeconomic issues such as the magnitude and effects of international capital flows, the debate over fixed versus flexible exchange rates and the economics of a common currency

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Assessed essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC423

Labour Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Esteban Aucejo 32L 2.30

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: An advanced course in labour economics issues, including theory, evidence and policy. The aim of the course is to familiarise students with main theoretical and empirical issues in current labour economics, and to provide them with the tools for developing independent research interests. The course has a strong applied focus. For each major topic covered we will derive testable implications, provide insights into the research methodology, discuss the advantages and limitations of existing empirical work, and draw policy conclusions. Topics include: labour supply, labour demand, market power of firms and workers, wage determination, unemployment, minimum wage, compensating differentials, returns to schooling, discrimination, role of non-cognitive skills in the labour market, and immigration.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: One written assignment at the end of each term.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading is from journal articles. A detailed reading list is available at <http://econ.lse.ac.uk/courses/ec423/>

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

Monetary Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pontus Rendahl, room 32L.2.33; Dr Roman Sustek, Room 32L.2.19

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The course aims to develop the student's ability to undertake research in monetary economics by studying a number of current issues both theoretical and applied. We discuss alternative frameworks to examine the interaction between money, liquidity, public policy and the aggregate economic activity. Those approaches include reduced form approaches of money-in-utility, cash-in-advance, and dynamic sticky price models. We also discuss price level determinacy and alternative approaches such as fiscal theory of the price level. The substantive issues to be addressed include determination of inflation, optimal inflation rate, interaction between fiscal and monetary policy, transmission of monetary policy, liquidity traps, forward guidance, and quantitative easing. The course then proceeds to introduce students to the so-called dynamic stochastic general equilibrium models used for monetary policy analysis and the study of business cycles. The course concludes with a coverage of the basics of asset pricing theory in general equilibrium and the models of the yield curve.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be handed out by the lecturers at the beginning of their sessions.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC426

Public Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Johannes Spinnewijn 32L.3.24

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change, MSc in International Health Policy, MSc in International Health Policy (Health Economics) and Master of Laws. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: A graduate course in (i) the principles of public economics and (ii) selected topics in public economics. Principles of public economics Welfare analysis; concepts of fairness, equity and efficiency; social welfare. Policy design: social insurance, income taxation. Taxation; household and firm behaviour. Public goods, externalities and environmental policy. Behavioural public economics, including implications for welfare analysis and savings policy. Selected topics in public economics such as behavioural responses to taxation; empirical strategies in public economics; poverty, inequality and optimal low-income support; compliance problems; inheritance and wealth taxation; global public finance and fiscal governance; political economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Attention is also drawn to Issues in Taxation Seminar (Dr Leape and Dr Ian Roxan) LL900: eight Monthly, Sessional.

Indicative reading: Most of the readings will be in the form of journal articles, but some use will also be made of the following texts: A Auerbach & M S Feldstein (Eds), Handbook of Public Economics, Vols I-III, North-Holland; A B Atkinson & J E Stiglitz, Lectures on Public Economics, McGraw-Hill, 1980; G Myles, Public Economics, Cambridge University Press, 1995.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC427

The Economics of Industry

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Martin Pesendorfer 32L. 4.19

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: A graduate course in Industrial Organization, which aims to provide students with a working knowledge of current theoretical and empirical methods for industry studies. Applications of these methods are considered in industry case studies.

Topics include: Pre-requisites in Game Theory, An introduction to current developments in Oligopoly Theory. A formal analysis of conduct in concentrated industries (cartel stability, limit pricing, predatory pricing, etc), Demand estimation in homogenous and differentiated product industries, Production function estimation, Empirical techniques for oligopoly models and auction markets, Identification of conduct, Economies of Scale, R&D, Advertising, Vertical restraints. The topics will be discussed with detailed applications for selected industries and considering competition policy questions.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: Two books which provide a basic framework are J Tirole, Theory of Industrial Organization, MIT Press, 1989 and J Sutton, Technology and Market Structure, MIT Press, 1998. A full reading list will be supplied at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC428

Development and Growth

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gharad Bryan 32L. 3.10 and Prof Robin Burgess 32L.3.03B

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) and MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Students should have completed courses in intermediate level microeconomics, macroeconomics and econometrics.

Course content: This course will cover a number of topics at forefront of development economics. These include current methodological debates; the allocation of capital and labour across firms, space and sectors; structural change during the development process; finance; psychology and development; governance and accountability; conflict and civil war; motivation of civil servants; taxation and development; firms and markets; trade; infrastructure; energy and the environment; and climate change.

Development economics is, arguably, the fastest growing and most vibrant field within economics. The course will enable the students to apply their econometric and theoretical skills to what are some of the world's most pressing problems. The experience of applying their economic knowledge to these topics will generate analytical skills that can be used in a wide variety of applied settings.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Occasional written assignments will be expected throughout the MT and LT.

Indicative reading: Most of the reading is from journal articles which appear on reading lists distributed at the start of each part of the course. However, the following references may serve as an introduction to material included in the syllabus. Handbook of Development Economics, Volumes I and II edited by Chenery and Srinivasan, Volume III and IV edited by Behrman and Srinivasan, Amsterdam: North-Holland, 1994; D Ray, Development Economics, Princeton UP, 1998.

Assessment: Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%, 6000 words) in the ST.

EC440

Micro and Macro Economics (for Public Policy)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ethan Ilzetzki 32L 1.10 and Mr Gabriel Zucman

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is available on the MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An introductory graduate course providing an economics background suitable for high-level public policy-making. The emphasis is on acquiring sound models and methods suitable for appraising policy-making issues and applicable in a wide variety of contexts. The first term (MT) covers microeconomics and the second term (LT) covers macroeconomics.

MT: Microeconomics: Demand and Supply in Competitive Markets: Consumer Optimisation: Demand for Goods: Consumer Optimisation and Labor Supply: Firms' Optimisation, the Supply of Goods and the Demand for Labour: Monopoly: Uncertainty and Insurance: Markets and Asymmetric Information: Monopolistic Competition and Game Theory: Externalities in Consumption and Production: Public Goods.

LT: Macroeconomics: Understanding Macroeconomic Data; Long-run Economic Growth; Business cycles; Aggregate Demand; Money, Inflation and Monetary Policy; Stabilization Policy; Fiscal Policy and Government Debt; the Labour Market and Unemployment; Exchange Rates and International Economic Policy; the Financial System and the Macroeconomy.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete weekly problem sets. Some of these will be marked to provide indicative assessment.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Continuous assessment (30%) in the MT and LT.

Presentation (10%) in the ST.

EC440E Half Unit

Economic Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Gerard Padró i Miquel and Dr Ethan Ilzetzki

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites for this course.

Course content: The course is an introductory graduate course providing an economics background suitable for high-level public policy-making. The emphasis is on acquiring sound models and methods suitable for appraising policy-making issues and applicable in a wide variety of contexts. The course will cover both key microeconomic policy issues, such as externalities, public goods and principal-agent problems and macroeconomic issues such as unemployment, fiscal and monetary policies, international trade and finance and the determinants of long-run growth.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise. Data analysis exercises are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

Microeconomics for MRes students

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Michele Piccione 32L.4.07 and Prof Balazs Szentes 32L.4.05

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPhil/PhD in Finance, MRes in Economics (Track 1), MRes in Economics (Track 2), MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 1) and MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 2). This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option.

This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme) with the permission of the course proprietor.

Pre-requisites: A good undergraduate knowledge of economic theory and calculus is required.

Course content: The aim of the course is to:

- introduce the basic analytical tools that are necessary to conduct research in any field in economics.
- give the students a full understanding of the classic Microeconomic Theory and of the modern developments of Microeconomic Theory
- enable students to address a microeconomic problem by structuring it as a mathematical model and enhance the understanding of economic issues through the use of mathematical tools.

Topics include: Consumer theory, producer theory, general equilibrium, welfare, choice under uncertainty, game theory, economics of information, agency theory, contracts, topics in mechanism design.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 12 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set for each class. In addition, there will be a one-and-a-half-hour mock examination at the start of the LT and a three hour mock examination at the start of the ST.

Indicative reading: The main text is Mas-Collel, Whinston & Green, Microeconomic Theory, OUP.

Other sources include:

D Fudenberg & J Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press; D M Kreps, A Course in Microeconomic Theory, Harvester Wheatsheaf; H R Varian, Microeconomic Analysis (3rd edn), Norton; M J Osborne & A Rubinstein, A Course in Game Theory, MIT Press; G A Jehle & P J Reny, Advanced Microeconomic Theory, Longman.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC442

Macroeconomics for MRes students

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Ethan Ilzetzki 32L.1.10 and Prof Per Krusell 32L.1.18

Dr Shengxing Zhang

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Economics (Track 1), MRes in Economics (Track 2) and MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 1). This course is available on the MRes/PhD in Finance (Route 2) and MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is not available as an outside option. Available to students on MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme), subject to regulations, and with the permission of the course proprietor.

Course content: The course will cover topics in advanced macroeconomics with emphasis on fundamentals and applications to recent theoretical advances:

- i. Economic growth: Neoclassical Growth Model, Optimizing Behaviour in dynamic models under certainty, Endogenous Technological Change, Imitation and Convergence, Growth and Development Accounting, Appropriate Technology.
- ii. Search and Matching: The Matching Model, Efficiency Wages, Growth and Unemployment.
- iii. Dynamic Stochastic General Equilibrium Models : Real Business Cycles, applications to models of heterogeneous agents and open economy. Fiscal policy analysis.
- iv. Monetary Economics: models with credit frictions, sticky prices, search.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 12 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set for each class. In addition, there will be a one-and-a-half-hour mock examination at the start of the LT and the ST.

Indicative reading: A good general textbook that is mostly below the level of the course is:

D Romer, Advanced Macroeconomics, McGraw-Hill Advanced Series in Economics, New York, 1996.

For the growth part the main references are the textbooks by:

D. Acemoglu, Introduction to Modern Economic Growth, Princeton University Press, 2009; R J Barro & X Sala-i-Martin, Economic Growth, McGraw-Hill, 1997.

Other useful texts include:

L Ljungqvist & T Sargent, Recursive Macroeconomic Theory, MIT Press, 2000; N Stokey & R E Lucas, Recursive Methods in Economic Dynamics, Harvard University Press, 1989.

More economic applications, with some required readings can be found in:

M Obstfeld & K Rogoff, Foundations of International Macroeconomics, MIT Press, 2000; P Aghion & P Howitt, Endogenous Growth Theory, MIT Press 1998; C A Pissarides, Equilibrium Unemployment Theory, MIT Press 2000.

References for recent theoretical advances published in the journals will be given during the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC443

Econometrics for MRes students

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vassilis Hajivassiliou 32L.4.23, Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L.4.24 and Dr Marcia Schafgans 32L.4.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Economics (Track 1) and MRes in Economics (Track 2). This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students should have completed an undergraduate level course in econometrics and statistical theory. Linear algebra and multivariate calculus will be used frequently.

Course content: The first part [Inference, Classical- and Generalized Linear Regression] begins with methods of estimation and optimality, followed by an introduction to asymptotic theory. It proceeds with statistical inference and the trinity of classical testing (Wald, Likelihood Ratio, and Lagrange Multiplier). It then discusses the classical linear regression model and commences the discussion of violation of the classical assumptions by discussing the Generalized Linear Regression Model (heteroskedasticity and autocorrelation).

The second part [Generalized Regression Methods] provides a further discussion of violations of the classical assumptions including measurement error, omitted variables, simultaneity, missing data; non-linear regression models and instrumental variables. It proceeds to the Generalized Method of Moments and efficient estimation methods under conditional moment restrictions. It also covers the topics of quantile regression and bootstrapping.

The third part [Time-series, Panel-data, and Microeconomic Methods] begins with a discussion of Time-Series topics, including single equation theory for non-stationary variables; serially correlated errors with lagged dependent variables; unit roots; simultaneous equations for non-stationary variables; co-integration; and ARCH and GARCH models. It proceeds to Panel data methods such as fixed and random effects estimators and their extensions for applying to dynamic linear and non-linear panel data models. The next major topic presents models with Limited Dependent Variables. The final part [Specialized Econometric Methods] discusses simulation-based inference, nonlinear panel data, and duration models. Finally, it covers the topics of program evaluation, nonparametrics, kernel estimation, and differences in differences.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 12 hours of classes in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of classes in the LT. 3 hours of classes in the ST.

Formative coursework: Exercises are set for each class. In addition, there will be a one-and-a-half-hour mock examination at the start of the LT and a three-hour mock examination at the start of the ST.

Indicative reading: Lecture notes will be made available through the departmental website and in course-packs for each part of the course. Please note there is no set book for this course.

Recommended books are:

W H Greene, Econometric Analysis, 6th edn, Pearson Education; R Davidson & J MacKinnon, Estimation and Inference in Econometrics, Oxford University Press, 1993; P. Ruud, An Introduction to Classical Econometric Theory, Oxford University Press, 2000; T Amemiya, Advanced Econometrics, Harvard University Press, 1985; J Johnston, Econometric Methods, 3rd edn, McGraw Hill; G Judge et al, A Course in Econometrics, Wiley, 1988; G Maddala, Econometrics, McGraw Hill, 1977.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC453 Half Unit Political Economy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Stephane Wolton

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change and MSc in Political Science and Political Economy. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Students should have completed courses in intermediate level microeconomics, macroeconomics and econometrics.

Course content: An advanced treatment of Political Economy, covering theory, evidence and current issues. The course material will expand the capacity of students to think about policy relevant issues at the intersection between economics and political science, and will cover democratic and autocratic politics. Topics include election as information aggregation; politics as a principal agent problem; political economy and public finance; constitutional rules and policy outcomes; bureaucracy; media; special interest group politics; legislatures; political parties; direct democracy; state formation; rebellion and terrorism; democratization; international conflicts.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: At least one written assignment for handing in per term (assignment will include some work with data sets provided by the instructor).

Indicative reading: Most of the reading is from journal articles; lists will be supplied at the start of each term. Two books supply the basic framework: T Besley, Principled Agents? Selection and Incentives in Politics, Oxford University Press, 2005 and T Persson & G Tabellini, Political Economics: Explaining Political Outcomes, MIT Press, 2000.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Exam (50%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (50%) in the ST.

Assessment path 2

Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Students taking MSc Economics or MSc Econometrics and Mathematical Economics will be required to submit an extended essay at the beginning of the ST; for such students, the written examination and the extended essay will each count for half of the marks.

in developing countries. Topics at the forefront of development economics will be covered. These include political economy, trade liberalization, growth, access to finance, technology adoption, education, health, infrastructure, property rights, land reform, gender, environment, mass media and political accountability. The emphasis will be on combining theory and data to evaluate the effectiveness of policies in these different areas.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students to complete weekly exercises based on course readings with one of these exercises being marked in a given term.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be distributed at the start of the course.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC454E Half Unit Development Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Burgess LRB.R524 and Prof Oriana Bandiera LRB.R526

Availability: This course is available on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Empirical Methods for Public Policy (EC455E) and Economic Policy Analysis (EC440E).

Course content: The main focus of this course is on acquiring the necessary theoretical and empirical skills to engage in the rigorous analysis of public policies in developing countries. Topics at the forefront of development economics will be covered. These include political economy, trade liberalization, growth, access to finance, technology adoption, education, health, infrastructure, property rights, land reform, gender, environment, mass media and political accountability. The emphasis will be on combining theory and data to evaluate the effectiveness of policies in these different areas.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock essay opportunity will be provided.

Indicative reading: A reading list will be distributed at the start of the course.

Assessment: Essay (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. Essays are due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC454 Development Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Robin Burgess LRB.R524 and Prof Oriana Bandiera LRB.R526

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in International Development. This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management and MPA in Public and Economic Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: An introductory graduate course providing the necessary development economics skills for high level public policy making. The focus is on acquiring the necessary theoretical and empirical skills to engage in the rigorous analysis of public policies

EC455 Quantitative Approaches and Policy Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jeremiah Dittmar and Dr Gregory Fischer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management and MPA in Public and Economic Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: The course has no formal pre-requisites. A familiarity with basic statistical concepts and basic calculus are very useful. These topics are reviewed during the pre-session course of the MPA programme (EC408). Students not participating in the pre-session course need to provide evidence of comparable prior knowledge.

Course content: The course introduces students to the quantitative evaluation of public policies with the help of regression based evaluation methods, cost-benefit analysis and computable general equilibrium modelling. The first six weeks of the course introduce students to basic multiple regression analysis including hypothesis testing, modelling of non-linear relationships, and dummy variables. From week 7 of MT the course covers a number of regression based evaluation methods to assess the casual effectiveness of policy interventions. These include the use of randomized experiments, natural or quasi-experiments, panel data, difference-in-differences estimation, instrumental variables, matching and regression discontinuity designs. The final part of the course provides an overview over cost-benefit and cost-effectiveness analysis and an introduction to the use of computable equilibrium models to assess policy interventions.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will complete weekly problem sets. Some of these will be marked to provide indicative assessment.

Indicative reading: Particularly useful textbooks are James Stock & Mark Watson, Introduction to Econometrics; and Jeffrey Wooldridge, Introductory Econometrics. The material in the textbooks will be complemented with recent research papers and chapters from other books. A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Exam (60%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Coursework (30%) in the MT and LT.

Presentation (10%) in the ST.

EC455E Half Unit

Empirical Methods for Public Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Daniel Sturm and Dr Gregory Fischer

Availability: This course is compulsory on the Executive MPA. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but recommended advance readings will be distributed ahead of the course. A familiarity with basic statistical concepts and basic calculus are very useful.

Course content: The course introduces students to the quantitative evaluation of public policies. The focus of the course is on practical applications of techniques to test the effectiveness of public policy interventions. The course begins with an overview over the key benefits of randomized experiments in the evaluation of public policies. Next the course covers a number of techniques that are widely used in the evaluation of public policies, including difference-in-differences regressions, regression discontinuity approaches, matching and concludes with a brief introduction to cost-benefit analysis.

Teaching: A one-week modular teaching block.

Formative coursework: One mock examination will be provided.

Indicative reading: A full reading list will be distributed at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Project (50%, 2000 words) and online assessment (50%).

Please note that online examinations take place on the third Friday after module teaching concludes. The project will consist of a 2,000 word data analysis exercise due on the sixth Friday after module teaching concludes. Further details will be provided at the Executive MPA programme induction.

EC475

Quantitative Economics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof John Van Reenen 32L.2.06A and Prof Mark Schankerman 32L.4.30

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students are expected to take EC400 in September and achieve the requisite standard.

A knowledge is expected of econometric theory and applied econometrics corresponding to Principles of Econometrics or Methods of Economic Investigation. Students must be prepared to read journal articles with a difficult mathematical and statistical content.

Course content: The course will focus on going through modern quantitative papers which demonstrate the application of econometric techniques to modelling the behaviour of individual economic agents (households and firms) and economies. The first half of the course will focus on techniques to understand causal inference and treatment effects as well as the differences in income across nations. The second half of the course will focus on papers in the empirical literature on productivity, innovation and intellectual property rights, illustrating the challenges of identification in both structural and reduced form models. The lectures will cover a wide range of topics in applied micro-econometrics with a view to illustrating the interplay between models, data and methods.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: Articles in economic journals will be assigned at the start of Michaelmas and Lent terms. The course will also draw on methodological topics covered in Wooldridge, Econometric Analysis of Cross Section and Panel Data (2nd edition, 2010), and Angrist and Pischke, Mostly Harmless Econometrics (2009).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC476

Contracts and Organisations

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Ronny Razin 32L 4.01

Availability: This course is available on the MPhil/PhD in Accounting, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics, MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme) and MSc in Environmental Economics and Climate Change. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The aim of the course is to provide a comprehensive introduction to the economics of moral hazard and adverse selection in strategic settings. The course covers the static theory of moral hazard and incentive contracts (static principal-agent models, moral hazard in teams and multi-task incentive contracts) and the dynamic theory of incentive contracts (efficiency of long-run relationships, short-term versus long-term contracts and renegotiation). The course also covers static mechanism design and self-selection contracts (revelation principle for Baynesian-Nash and dominant strategy equilibria, static screening contracts) with applications to non-linear pricing, optimal auctions and regulation, the theory of mechanism design with multiple agents (multiple agents screening and common agency), career concerns and reputation, political economy of institutions, and dynamic mechanism design.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; a list of references will be provided at the start of the course. The following textbooks provide a treatment of part of the material presented in the course: Jean-Jacques Laffont, The Economics of Uncertainty and Information, MIT Press; D Fudenberg & J Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press; Jean-Jacques Laffont & Jean Tirole, A Theory of Incentives in Procurement Regulations, MIT Press; Bernard Salanié, The Economics of Contracts: A Primer, MIT Press.

Assessment: A three-hour written examination in the ST. Non-EME students will be assessed as follows: A three-hour written examination in the ST (50%) and a 6000-word extended essay due at the beginning of the ST (50%).

Econometric Analysis

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Taisuke Otsu 32L 4.25

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available on the MRes in Economics (Track 1), MRes in Economics (Track 2), MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Statistics, MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics), MSc in Statistics (Financial Statistics) (Research) and MSc in Statistics (Research). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: This course gives an advanced treatment of the theory of estimation and inference for econometric models. Part (a) Matrix background; asymptotic statistical theory: modes of convergence, asymptotic unbiasedness, stochastic orders of magnitude, central limit theorems, applications to linear regression. Part (b) Parametric and nonparametric regression, generalized method of moments, instrumental variables, limited dependent variables, bootstrap, nonparametric identification.

Teaching: 30 hours of lectures and 10 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the MT. 30 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; a list of references will be provided at the start of the course, and lecture notes and relevant articles will be circulated.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC485

Further Topics in Econometrics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Francisco Hidalgo 32L 4.20 and Dr Tatiana Komarova 32L 4.24

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics and MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The aim of the course is to introduce the student to topics at the frontier of econometric research of importance both at a theoretical and empirical level. The course consists of four series of ten lectures on specialised topics in econometrics. These lectures change from year to year. Presently they include: long memory time series; non-parametric and semi-parametric estimation; bootstrap methods in econometrics; panel data models.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures in the MT. 20 hours of lectures in the LT.

Indicative reading: No one book covers the entire syllabus; lists of references will be provided and lecture notes circulated.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC486

Econometric Methods

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Pasquale Schiraldi 32L 4.22

Mr Alessandro Gavazza, 32L 4.21

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economics and Management. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course aims to present the theory and practice of empirical research in economics. Beyond the theory, the course will put a substantial amount of effort in having the students work with Stata and other econometric software in analyzing actual data sets, reproducing and criticising results in previous work and learning the actual practice of econometrics as undertaken by the best applied economists, both in general (in MT) and specifically within the IO field (in the LT). Topics include: (MT) Ordinary Least Squares, hypothesis testing, omitted and added variables, measurement error, the role of controls, and functional form. Panel data, fixed and random effects. Instrumental Variables. An introduction to the analysis of time series. The emphasis of this part is on the identification of causal effects, and applications in microeconomics (Labour Economics, Public Policy, IO, etc) are presented throughout. In LT you will learn the applications of many of these techniques to econometric questions in Industrial Organization, organizational economics and management.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures and 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to complete answers to problem sets on a week by week basis.

Indicative reading: MT: James H. Stock and Mark W. Watson, Introduction to Econometrics; reading lists of chapters and journal articles will be supplied at the start of each term.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC487

Advanced Microeconomics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Erik Eyster 32L.4.29 and Prof Leonardo Felli 32L. 4.02

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Finance and Economics (Research). This course is available on the MSc in Applicable Mathematics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics, MSc in Econometrics and Mathematical Economics (2 Year Programme), MSc in Economics and MSc in Economics (2 Year Programme). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit. Students on MSc Economics will need additional approval of lecturers.

Pre-requisites: Students must have completed Introductory Course in Mathematics and Statistics (EC400).

Course content: The aim of this course is to: (i) introduce and develop the analytical tools of graduate level Microeconomics with a special emphasis on mathematical models; (ii) provide the students with a firm grounding in classical Microeconomic Theory as well as its modern development. Topics include: Consumer theory, producer theory, general equilibrium, welfare, choice under uncertainty, game theory, oligopoly, economics of information, topics in mechanism design, topics in behavioural economics.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Problem sets will be discussed in class and one marked assignment will be given in MT and LT. There will also be mock examinations at the end of the MT and at the beginning of ST.

Indicative reading: The main texts are A Rubinstein Lecture Notes in Economic Theory, Princeton University Press and Mas-Colell, Whinston & Green, Microeconomic Theory, OUP. Other sources include: D M Kreps, Microeconomic Foundations I: Choice and Competitive Markets, Princeton University Press; Fudenberg and Tirole, Game Theory, MIT Press.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

EC4B3

MPA Capstone Project

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gregory Fischer LRB. R537

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: Students will undertake a group project (in teams usually of 3 to 6 people) relating to a public policy problem faced by an external organisation. Typical clients include public sector bodies, companies operating in the public management or public policy sector, international organisations or think tanks and NGOs. The group will have from October to February to work on an issue defined by the client organisation, investigating and developing a workable solution to the problem.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT.

Each Capstone group will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide overall guidance on the project's development and assistance with client liaison. Other members of staff may also advise as required.

Formative coursework: Feedback will be provided on presentations of work-in-progress during MT

Indicative reading: Useful preliminary reading: Charles E. Lindblom and David K. Cohen, Social Science and Social Problem Solving (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); Martha S. Feldman, Order Without Design: Information Production and Policy-making (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1989); Ray Pawson, Evidence-based Policy: A Realist Perspective (London: Sage, 2006); Office for Government Commerce Common Causes of Project Failure (London: OGC, 2004); Strategy Survival Guide (London: Prime Minister's Strategy Unit. July 2004; C. R. Cook, Just Enough Project Management (McGraw-Hill, 2004); J. E. McGrath and F. Tschan, Dynamics in Groups and Teams: Groups as Complex Action Systems, chapter three in M. S. Poole and A. H. Van de Ven (eds) Handbook of Organizational Change and Innovation (Oxford University Press, 2004).

Assessment: Project (100%, 15000 words) in the LT.

The project work is conducted in teams, and the assessment is based on a collective group mark for each component except in exceptional circumstances. 1) A presentation and submission of the project report to the client organisation. The presentation must take place by week 8 of the Lent term, on a date agreed with the client organisation. 20% of the marks are assigned by the client organisation after receipt of the presentation and project report. 2) A group project report will be submitted during the Lent Term. The main body of the report may not exceed 15,000 words and will be read by academic markers whose assessment will count for 60% of the final grade. Appendices to the project report may be included but would normally consist only of technical data or supplementary analysis. Additionally, each group member must write a personal reflection on their contribution to the group's work, to be submitted alongside the report. The reflection should be no more than 600 words, and should include specific details of the student's contributions to the project. The reflections should not be included in the report submitted to the client. 3) The final 20% of the marks are allocated by the Capstone supervisor on the basis of the group's performance in terms of (i) scoping and project development (including coping with difficulties) and (ii) group working and self-management as a team.

MPA Dissertation

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Gregory Fischer

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Policy Paper.

Course content: MPA students will write a dissertation of no more than 10,000 words on a topic of their choice to be agreed with their supervisor.

Teaching: 2 hours of lectures in the MT.

Students will be allocated a supervisor, who will provide guidance on this piece of work. MPA Dissertation Workshops will be held to assist in the development of the dissertation.

Assessment: Dissertation (90%, 10000 words) in the ST. Other (10%) in the MT.

1) A dissertation proposal consisting of the dissertation title, abstract, contents page and a 5 page synopsis/introduction will count for 10% of the overall dissertation mark. Students may only change their topic thereafter with the agreement of their supervisor. Students will be given feedback on their proposal.

2) The full dissertation of no more than 10,000 words will account for the remaining 90% of the overall mark.

EC4V8 Half Unit

MPA Policy Paper

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Patrick Dunleavy and Dr Lloyd Gruber plus supervisors from MPA-owning departments

Availability: This course is available on the MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Columbia), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Hertie), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and NUS), MPA Dual Degree (LSE and Sciences Po), MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy and MPA in Public and Social Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

Students may not take this course and an MPA Dissertation

Course content: MPA students will write an individually-authored MPA Policy Paper on a topic developed in consultation with their MPA supervisor. This paper will analyse a concrete policy problem in a specific setting and proposes an evidence-based solution or course of amelioration. Papers cannot exceed 6,000 words and should be clearly and directly written, suitable for consideration by policy-makers.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures in the MT.

Formative coursework: A title, abstract, and MPA Policy Paper proposal (of no more than 750 words in total). Students will have these items returned, with comments, within two weeks of submission.

Indicative reading: David L. Weimer and Aidan R. Vining, Policy Analysis: Concepts and Practice, 5th ed. (Prentice Hall, 2010); Lisa Anderson, ed., Pursuing Truth, Exercising Power: Social Science and Public Policy in the Twenty-first Century (New York: Columbia University Press, 2005); Edith Stokey and Richard Zeckhauser, A Primer for Policy Analysis (Norton, 1978); Anthony E. ### Historical Analysis of Economic Change

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tamas Vonyo CMK.C316 and Dr Debin Ma CMK.C.314

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The course provides basic awareness of central themes and key methodological and theoretical issues in economic history; introduces students to important analytic tools used by economic historians, with an emphasis on their practical application in economic history research; and examines major ways in which economic historians collect, analyse and interpret evidence. The training is expected to inform dissertation work. The course covers two main areas. 1) Theory and Research: this section introduces theoretical approaches to major issues in economic history, and considers the practical application in historical analysis of concepts from economics (primarily) and related disciplines. The specific topics evolve but an illustrative list includes: processes of economic growth; economic development; culture and economic behaviour; the rational-choice institutionalist paradigm; imperfect information and incentive structures; modern macro-economic ideas (especially on money and finance); welfare outcomes. 2) Historical Methodology: this section introduces methodological issues in combining social science frameworks with historical materials. It considers problems of knowledge and explanation in economic history, and introduces quantitative and qualitative approaches to obtaining, analysing and interpreting evidence.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 9 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students are required to make one class presentation and also to submit one paper on an additional topic during the term.

Indicative reading: D. North, Institutions, Institutional Change and Economic Performance (1990); A. Greif, Institutions and the Path to the Modern Economy (2006); K. Pomeranz, The Great Divergence: China, Europe and the Making of the Modern World Economy (2000); R. ### Research Design and Quantitative Methods in Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Olivier Accominotti CMK.C216

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global History and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: This course is concerned with how economic historians have used quantitative methods and with how researchers design and structure a research project. In terms of quantitative methods the emphasis is on the applied and practical rather than the theoretical and will range from the use of simple summary descriptive statistics to multiple regression. The course will start with a consideration of broad issues in research design, this might include, for example, models, narrative and case studies. The rest of the course will then be concerned with quantitative issues, the problems of analysing and interpreting quantitative historical evidence. It will consider topics such as sampling and statistical distributions, correlation, simple and multiple regression, specification problems, hypothesis testing, logit and probit analysis, non-parametric tests, and modern time series analysis, although the content may vary slightly from year to year. The course will also provide students with training in using an econometrics software package. An important component of the course is the deconstruction of historical articles that have used quantitative techniques.

Teaching: 10 hours of seminars and 20 hours of computer workshops in the MT. 2 hours of computer workshops in the ST. MT only. Three hours per week. One-and-a-half hours computing session, one-and-a-half hours classes weekly.

Formative coursework: Students are required to do weekly exercises and to submit one paper during the term.

Indicative reading: C H Feinstein and M Thomas, Making History Count (2002); P Hudson, History by Numbers (2002); C H Lee, The Quantitative Approach to Economic History (1977); G Hawthorn, Plausible Words (1991).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

India and the World Economy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tirthankar Roy C315

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global History, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: From the eighteenth century, the South Asia region played an important part in international transactions in goods, people, and money. The world economy, in turn, shaped potentials for economic growth in the region. The aim of the course is to impart an understanding of the global factors that shaped economic change in the South Asia region in the 18th through the early-20th century. It will also deal with the principal ways in which South Asia contributed to economic change in the rest of the world. The political context of globalization, especially imperialism and colonial policies, will be considered. The course will be divided into a set of topics, which together cover a large ground, but a selection from which will be discussed in the class. Lectures and seminars will centre on the readings assigned to each topic.

Topics to be covered: Introductory: India and the world economy in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries - how each shaped the other; textiles in eighteenth century India: scale - organization - impact on global consumption and innovation - trade and territorial politics; nineteenth century market integration: de-industrialization and the artisans; nineteenth century market integration: Agricultural exports, land rights, and the peasantry - Trade and famines; Government finance in colonial setting: The drain controversy - public debt; overseas migration in the nineteenth century: Who went where, how many, and why - private gains and losses - social effects: slavery and indenture, women, nature of work and skill-formation - labour and non-labour migrants compared; foreign capital and industrialization; balance of payments and the monetary system; overview: Globalization and economic growth.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2-hour meetings weekly, with a flexible combination of lectures and seminars.

Formative coursework: Students will be required to write one paper during the course and to make class presentations

Indicative reading: G. Balachandran, ed., India and the World Economy 1850-1950 (2003.); A. Banerji, India's Balance of Payments, (Bombay, 1962); D. ### International Migration, 1500-2000: from slavery to asylum

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Christopher Minns CMK.C420

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global History, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia), MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines major issues in international migration over the last 500 years. The course will consider free and coerced migration in the early modern period, the emergence (and eventual decline) of mass migration in the later 19th century, and the rise of "managed" migration in the post World War II period. The course will examine the economic foundations of indentured servitude and slavery in the early modern period, and the interactions between these two types of labour. The contribution of economic and demographic forces to the rise of mass migration on destination and source labour markets, the determinants of immigrant destination choice, and the interplay between migration and exogenous crises in Europe. In the post World War II environment, the focus will be on the political impact of mass migration on developing economies in the present day. In this part of the course, we will consider how historical episodes of migration can inform the present day.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Indicative reading: D Baines, Emigration from Europe (1991); G Borjas, Heaven's Door: immigration policy and the American economy (1999)*; T Boeri, G Hanson, and B McCormick (eds), Immigration policy and the welfare state (2002)*; D Galenson, White servitude in colonial America: an economic analysis (1981)*; T J Hatton and J G Williamson, The age of mass migration (1998); T J Hatton and J G Williamson, Global migration and the world economy: two centuries of policy and performance (2005)*.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Chinese Economy in Transition: 1850-1950

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Debin Ma C314

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global History and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Course content: This course provides a broad but selective survey of over 100 years of economic change in China leading towards the rise of the new Communist regime in 1950. With emphasis on the importance of ideological and institutional changes, the course gives in-depth coverage of some major debates and case studies on historical turning points such as the opening of China in mid-19th century, the collapse of Qing in 1911, economic transformation during China's Republican period. The course showcases the critical relevance of a long-term perspective on understanding both the constraints and capacity of Chinese economy to respond to past and future challenges and offers unique historical perspectives on the origin of Chinese modernization as well as the grand economic transformation during the past three decades.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce 2 essays in the MT.

Indicative reading: Naughton. B., The Chinese economy, transitions and growth (MIT Press); Rawski. ### African Economic Development in Historical Perspective

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Leigh Gardner CMK.C322

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MRes in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global History, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Africa's recent economic growth has prompted a new optimism about the ability of African countries to catch up to wealthier countries in Asia and Latin America. Viewed over the longer term, however, the current period of growth seems less exceptional. Earlier periods of growth have ended with reversals which have limited overall improvements in per capita income. This course will examine periods of growth and crisis in African economic history over the last millennium. Students will examine the key factors which underpinned 'boom' periods in the past, and those which led to their collapse. At the same time, it will examine how events in the past have continued to influence the growth trajectories of African countries over the long run. The course will conclude by re-assessing the current boom in historical perspective. Readings will include both new research on Africa's economic history as well as historical documents from the periods in question. The inclusion of primary sources on the reading list will allow students to build research skills while engaging with key questions about African economic performance. Students will be encouraged to take a critical approach to the readings and the methods and sources used in existing research. Topics addressed will include African economic geography, slavery and the slave trade, Africa's place in a globalizing and industrializing world, colonial institutions, and structural adjustment.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

2-hour meetings weekly, with a flexible combination of lectures and seminars.

Formative coursework: Students are required to make one class presentation and submit one paper during the term.

Theories, Paths and Patterns of Late Development

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tamas Vonyo CMK.C.316 and Dr Debin Ma CMK.C.314

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course provides basic awareness of central themes and key methodological and theoretical issues in economic history; introduces students to important analytic tools used by economic historians, with an emphasis on their practical application in economic history research; and examines major ways in which economic historians collect, analyse and interpret evidence. The training is expected to inform dissertation work. The course covers two main areas. 1) Theory and Research: this section introduces theoretical approaches to major issues in economic history, and considers the practical application in historical analysis of concepts from economics (primarily) and related disciplines. The specific topics evolve but an illustrative list includes: processes of economic growth; economic development; culture and economic behaviour; the rational-choice institutionalist paradigm; imperfect information and incentive structures; modern macro-economic ideas (especially on money and finance); welfare outcomes. 2) Historical Methodology: this section introduces methodological issues in combining social science frameworks with historical materials. It considers problems of knowledge and explanation in economic history, and introduces quantitative and qualitative approaches to obtaining, analysing and interpreting evidence. The classes to follow the lecture will focus on how economic history as a discipline that helps explain the distinct growth trajectories of 'late-developing' countries, inform modern approaches to development policy and practice, and current controversies about obstacles to development.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. Two-hour lecture (that is joint with EH401) and a weekly one hour seminar in MT.

Formative coursework: Students will produce one written paper (3,000 words) and are expected to collaborate in joint presentations.

Indicative reading: Key texts: A. Gerschenkron Economic Backwardness in Historical Perspective (1962); A. Amsden Asia's Next Giant (1989) and Beyond Late Development (2003); H-J Chang (ed.) Rethinking Development Economics (2003); J. Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

EH419 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15 Research Topics in Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will reflect current faculty research work, dealing with topical research questions and materials (primary and secondary historical materials). The particular topics available each year will be announced at the start of the academic year.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2-hour meetings weekly in LT, with a flexible combination of lectures and seminars.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two written papers.

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list will be provided at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Assessment path 1

Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Assessment path 2

Essay (100%, 3000 words).

The method of assessment will be announced at the beginning of the course (either a two hour exam in ST, or a 3,000 word essay).

EH422 Topics in Quantitative Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tamas Vonyo CMK.C.316 and Prof Juan Roses Vendoiro STC.S.483

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

The course is particularly appropriate for those students who are considering following a quantitative economic history PhD thesis in the future.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled for this course are expected to have completed the equivalent of undergraduate courses in econometrics and intermediate economic theory.

Course content: The course is organised on a topic basis, with subjects chosen to illustrate particular theoretical, quantitative or methodological issues. Such topics could include: long run comparative economic growth; human capital issues in economic history; the macroeconomics of the inter-war years; the political economy of trade; industrial economic history; technological change; quantitative approaches to the evolution of markets; the new economic history of institutional change; analysing historical welfare issues. The aims are to: examine the techniques used by economic historians and to assess their validity and whether they help to further our understanding of the particular historical issue to which they have been applied; and to teach students how to evaluate the relevance of historical hypotheses and the historical applicability of models from economic and other social scientific theory. Students are able to investigate in detail the analysis contained in important journal articles using appropriate computer packages.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

20 two-hour lectures/ seminar in the MT and LT; some of this Teaching will take the form of computing workshops.

Formative coursework: Three or four papers or presentations during the session

Indicative reading: M Bordo, A Taylor, J Williamson (2003), Globalization in Historical Perspective; Y S Brenner, H Kaelble & M Thomas (eds) (1991), Income Distribution in Historical Perspective; Clark, G (2007), A Farewell to Alms; R Findlay, K O'Rourke (2009), Power and Plenty; N Ferguson (2009), The Ascent of Money; M Obstfeld, A Taylor (2004), Global Capital Markets; C Feinstein, P Temin, G Toniolo (1997), The European Economy Between the Wars; B van Ark & N Crafts (eds), Quantitative Aspects of Postwar European Economic (1996).

Assessment: Exam (70%, duration: 3 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (30%, 3000 words).

EH423 Half Unit Japan and Korea as Developing Economies

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Janet Hunter S484

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global History and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course will focus on selected issues of economic development that are of importance in contemporary debates and theories, and see how these issues were played out in Japan and Korea from the late 19th century to the latter half of the 20th century. The main themes discussed will be: natural endowments and climatic impact; changes in the agricultural sector; the growth of market production; issues of state policy; economic institutions; colonialism and imperialism; integration into the international economy; income levels and consumption; gender and development; culture and economy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Twenty hours of lectures/seminars in the Michaelmas Term and two hours of revision seminars in the Summer Term.

Indicative reading: A.H.Amsden, Asia's Next Giant: South Korea and Late Industrialisation (1989); Y-I.Chung, Korea Under Siege, 1876-1945: Capital Formation and Economic Transformation (2006); P.G.Francks, Japanese Economic Development (2nd. edition, 1999); C.H.Lee & I.Yamazawa (eds.), Economic Development of Japan and Korea (1990); C.Mosk, Japanese Economic Development: Markets, Norms, Structures (2008).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

EH424 Half Unit The British Economy in Global Perspective, 1000-2000

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Stephen Broadberry C320

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global History and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course aims to provide an overview of the growth and development of the British economy over the second millennium within an international comparative perspective. The material covered will draw on my research covering three main areas: (1) the long run growth of the British economy covering the medieval and early modern periods as well as the modern period, drawing upon a new set of historical national accounts, and placing British experience within an international comparative context. (2) Britain's place in the Great Divergence of productivity and living standards between Europe and Asia, focusing in particular on comparisons between Britain and India, but also drawing on the cases of China and Japan (3) Britain's productivity performance since the mid-nineteenth century in comparison with the United States, Germany and other countries, examining sectoral as well as aggregate performance.

1. Overview: Britain in the Global Economy, 1000-2000
2. English Economic Growth, 1270-1700: A Historical National Accounting Approach
3. British Economic Growth, 1700-1870
4. Britain and the Great Divergence: Wages and Prices
5. Britain and the Great Divergence: Cotton Textiles
6. Britain and the Great Divergence: Historical National Accounts
7. How did the United States and Germany overtake Britain?
8. Manufacturing and the Productivity Race
9. Services and the Productivity Race
10. Britain and Asia since 1870

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Two-hour meetings weekly in LT, with a flexible combination of lectures and seminars.

Formative coursework: Two pieces of written work are to be submitted for the course. The first is a short 1500 word essay, as detailed in an accompanying document. The second is a mock examination, written over the Easter vacation.

Indicative reading: A full reading list is available as an accompanying document. Selected illustrative readings are as follows:

Broadberry, S., Campbell, B., Klein, A., Overton, M. and van Leeuwen, B. (2010), British Economic Growth, 1270-1870, <http://www2.warwick.ac.uk/fac/soc/economics/staff/faculty/broadberry/wp>.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

EH426 Half Unit

Quantitative Topics in Economic History I: Cross-section and panel data

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Tamas Vonyo CMK.C316

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled for this course are expected to have completed at least introductory undergraduate courses in statistics and/or econometrics and economic theory. The course will begin with a revision of the main quantitative approaches but will not provide a comprehensive training in econometric methods or computer applications.

Course content: The course will provide an overview of quantitative approaches in economic history mainly using cross-section and panel data. The course will examine the use of quantitative techniques through practical exercises and critical discussion of their application in recent literature. Techniques discussed will include multiple regression analysis, regression diagnostics, instrumental variables, limited dependent variables, sample selection corrections, and panel data analysis. The course is organised on a topic basis, with subjects chosen to illustrate particular theoretical, quantitative and methodological issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

Formative coursework: An individual presentation and a reading report.

Indicative reading: There is no mandatory textbook for this course, but the brief overview of quantitative methods during the first four weeks will follow Wooldridge, J.M. (2009), Introductory Econometrics: A Modern Approach, International Student Edition. Useful background readings include J.L. Van Zanden, The Long Road to the Industrial Revolution: The European Economy in a Global Perspective, 1000-1800 (Leiden, 2009); K.H. O'Rourke and J.G. Williamson, Globalization and History: The Evolution of a Nineteenth-Century Atlantic Economy (Cambridge MA, 1998); C. Goldin and L.F. Katz, The race between education and technology (Cambridge, MA, 2008); D. Greasley and L. Oxley (eds.), Economics and History: Surveys in Cliometrics (Oxford, 2011).6.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

EH427 Half Unit

Quantitative topics in economic history II: time series and economic dynamics

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Joan R. Roses, S483

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled for this course are expected to have completed EH426 or the equivalent of undergraduate courses in econometrics and intermediate economic theory.

Course content: The course will provide an overview of quantitative approaches in economic history using primarily dynamic panel and time series. The course will examine the use of quantitative techniques through practical exercises and critical discussion of their application in recent literature. Techniques discussed will include the GMM estimator, discrete choice and hazard models, analysis of unit roots in panels and time-series and vector autoregressions. The course is organised on a topic basis, with subjects chosen to illustrate particular theoretical, quantitative or methodological issues.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

Formative coursework: Two presentations during the term; fortnightly quantitative exercises.

Indicative reading: Baltagi, B.H. (2013), Econometric Analysis of Panel Data, 5th Edition; W H Greene (2012), Econometric Analysis, 7th edition; Crafts, NFR and G. Toniolo, eds. (1996), Economic Growth in Postwar Europe since 1945; Kehoe, T. and E. Prescott, eds. (2001), Great Depressions of the Twentieth Century.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

History of Economics: Making Political Economy into a Social Science

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Morgan CMK.C222

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Global History, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course aim is to understand how the nature of economics changed from the verbally argued accounts of political economy and moral philosophy in the 18th century to become a technical social science by the end of the 20th century.

The course will explore the long-term changes over two hundred years in how economists came to know things about the economy by examining the history of their notion of the laws of economics, their analytical practices, and the evidence they used. Primary texts, chosen from a variety of European and American authors, will provide material for the study of these changes. Secondary literature will provide theoretical resources from history and philosophy of science to help analyse, understand and assess these changes in the nature of economics as a science.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT.

20 hours over MT, mainly 2-hour seminars, with an occasional lecture within that time slot. (Those students without previous study in the history of economics may wish to attend the lectures for EC311).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two pieces of written work (around 2000 words each) during the term.

Indicative reading: The main domain of the course material is explained in "Economics" in T.M. Porter and D. Ross The Cambridge History of Science, Vol 7, The Modern Social Sciences, pp 275-305 (Cambridge University Press). Henry Spiegel's The Growth of Economic Thought (various editions, Duke University Press) provides a general background text for the history of economics. Full reading lists will be given out at the beginning of the course.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the LT.

EH429 Half Unit

History of Economics: Ideas, Policy and Performativity

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Mary Morgan CMK.C222

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Economics and Philosophy, MSc in Global History, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Philosophy of the Social Sciences. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Students can take this course independently of EH428.

Course content: The course aim is to understand how economics has been used to change the world. The course will bring together the long tradition of analysis of economics as a policy science with more recent ideas about the performativity of economics. It will draw on the literatures of economic history, history of economics and sociology of accounting and finance to explore the aims and methods used in economics to influence the economy. The focus of study will be on particular episodes from 20th century history in which economics features as a technical art (e.g. the transition from colonial to independent economies; the Soviet and Cuban revolutions; and the reconstruction of depressed and damaged economies).

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT.

20 hours over LT, mainly 2-hour seminars with an occasional lecture within that time slot. (Those students without previous study in the history of economics may wish also attend the lectures for EC311).

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two pieces of written work during the term.

Indicative reading: Reading lists will be given out at the beginning of the course. Henry Spiegel's The Growth of Economic Thought (various editions, Duke University Press) provides a general background text.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 3000 words) in the ST.

Economic Development of East and Southeast Asia

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kent Deng CMK.C213

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Development Studies, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global History, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics, MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: There are no pre-requisites: knowledge of Asian history of the relevant period and region would be an advantage.

Course content: The course deals with conditions and paths of economic development in East Asia (excluding Japan) and Southeast Asia in the past centuries. The first part of the course looks at the debate on Asian economic history, endowments available, and institutions technology and economies that evolved independently in Asia to support a large population with reasonable standards of living. The second part of the course examines reasons for the lack of indigenous modern growth in Asia, conditions and timing of miracle growth of the Asian Tigers, ASEAN and Mainland China after World War Two, and impact of such growth of the world economy.

Topics covered include: traditional economic patterns in the region by the 17th century; the impact of the early European maritime traders; the impact of the later Europeans traders backed by industrialisation; attempts and success of the Western colonisation; resistance to the change from the core area in East Asian Mainland. Reforms and modernisation in Asia; Asia and globalisation.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

20 seminars of two-hours each in the MT and LT. Written essays are circulated in advance.

Formative coursework: Two essays (3,000 words each) are expected during the course. The first is due at the end of the 9th week (in the MT) and the second, the 17th week (in the LT).

Indicative reading: A detailed reading list and topics for seminars is distributed at the beginning of the course. Preliminary readings include: A Booth, 'The Economic Development of Southeast Asia: 1870-1985' Australian Economic History Review, 31 (1); G Snooks et al Exploring Southeast Asia's Economic Past (1991); I Brown, Economic Change in Southeast Asia (1997); Kenneth Pomeranz, The Great Divergence (2000); J M Hobson The Eastern Origins of Western Civilisation (2004); P. ### Great Depressions in Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Albrecht Ritschl C514

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Knowledge of economics at the level of second-year undergraduate macroeconomics is recommended.

Course content: Fundamental stylised facts on the post-1929 depression. The monetarist paradigm and its offshoots. The financial accelerator view. The role of the Gold Standard: a view from Europe. Labour market/supply side interpretations. A revival of the Keynesian position? Other recessions compared: 1920, 1947.

The aim of this course is to:

- (i) introduce students to the history of the Great Depression of the 1930s, with comparisons to other deep recessions in economic history;
- (ii) provide students with a basic knowledge of the main theoretical interpretations and their relative merits
- (iii) give students a preview of the analytical techniques used in interpreting the historical evidence.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

10 x two-hour seminars in MT.

Formative coursework: Reading assignments will be discussed in class and one 3,000 word marked assignment will be set in the MT.

Indicative reading: Bernanke, Ben (2000), Essays on the Great Depression, Princeton: Princeton University Press; Eichengreen, Barry (1992), *Golden Fetters. ### Latin American Development: Political Economy of Growth

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Colin Lewis STC.S486

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MRes in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global History, MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia), MSc in Political Economy of Late Development and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course examines the principal phases of growth in Latin America since 1900, exploring economic structures, social outcomes and the political arrangements associated with distinct 'development projects'. The first part of the course considers debates about endowments, institutions and the role of the state, and principal theories, including early twentieth-century liberalism, structuralism and dependency, neo-liberal ideas associated with the Washington Consensus and distinct radical approaches of the early twenty-first century. The remainder of the course is organised chronologically, focusing on phases of commodity export-led growth, 'populist' import-substituting industrialisation, 'authoritarian modernisation', democratisation and stabilisation, and responses to current challenges of globalisation and international boom and crisis.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of seminars in the ST.

Indicative reading: C. Abel & C.M. Lewis (eds.) Exclusion and Engagement: social policy in Latin America (2002); E.V.K. FitzGerald & R. Thorp (eds.) Economic Doctrines in Latin America: origins, embedding and evolution (2005); P. Franko The Puzzle of Latin business and economic development are advantageous.

Course content: This course explores the evolution and variation of the conditions under which business has operated in different parts of the world. It concentrates on but is not exclusively concerned with the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It is not an "MBA" course, in that it does not look at the specific decisions of specific firms, but rather looks at the environments in which industries have operated in different periods and places in history.Teaching: 4 hours of lectures, 6 hours of lectures and 8 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the LT.

The course is taught in the autumn term. Students receive 10 hours of lectures, 8 one hour classes, and a two hour revision session.

The lectures will consist of two two hour lectures in weeks one and two, and then 6 one hour lectures in weeks three to eight. The eight classes will take place in weeks 3 to 10. The two hour revision session will take place in the middle of the spring term.

Formative coursework: Students are expected to produce one essay during the term and to sit a mock examination paper over the Christmas vacation.Indicative reading: Readings include, S Broadberry, Productivity Race; Y Cassis, Big business: European Perspective; J Kay, Foundations of Corporate Success; N Lamoreaux & D Raff (Eds), Co-ordination and Information; M G Blackford, The Rise of Modern Business in GB, US and Japan; R Reich The Work of Nations; O Williamson 'The Modern Corporation: Origins, evolution, attributes' Journal of Economic Literature 1981; Porter, M The Competitive Advantage of Nations, Harvard Business Review 1990, CK Harley 'Substitution for prerequisites: endogenous institutions and comparative economic history' in R Sylla and G Toniolo Patterns of European Industrialisation: the nineteenth century.Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.EH466 Half Unit Not available in 2014/15

An introductory session introduces the key themes and context. Over the next nine weeks we examine the major subjects in the economic and social history of labour in the early modern period and how they developed up to the early 19th century. Issues covered will include (but not be limited to): how was work organised? How were skills acquired? What kinds of work did women and children do? How did work differ in town and countryside? Did the intensity of work change? What political identity and impact did workers have? The course discusses the range of European experiences, but has a particular focus on developments in Britain, where labour first faced industrialisation.Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Epidemics: Epidemic Disease in History, 1348-2000

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Patrick Wallis CMK.C414

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MRes in Quantitative Economic History, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in Global History, MSc in International and World History (LSE & Columbia) and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course analyses the impact of epidemic disease on human societies and economies from the Black Death to the present. It examines arguments and evidence about epidemics' relationship to economic, social, demographic and political change - such as the role of the black death in initiating economic growth in Europe, of epidemics in allowing the conquest of the Americas, and cholera in leading to social tensions and even revolution in 19th century Europe. It will also explore the development and implementation of medical, political and social responses to epidemics. Epidemics are crises that test the capacity of societies to manage disaster and that divide communities along lines of wealth, race and blame. We will explore the characteristics of social responses to disease, the development of local and state capacities to manage crises, and the patterns of resistance that this elicited from those affected. Case studies will focus on epidemics in Europe, Central America, and Asia, but reference may also be made to the experience of other regions, in order to achieve a more global picture.

Essay in Quantitative Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Max-Stephan Schulze C422

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The topic of the Essay is chosen by the students in close consultation with their supervisors. The purpose of the essay is to introduce students to the practice of historical research through the completion of a small, self-contained project that involves the use of quantitative methods in the analysis of historical change.

It builds on competencies acquired in the core economic history and economics courses of the MSc. It must demonstrate the ability to formulate and motivate a research question, reflect adequate knowledge of the relevant literature in economic history and economics, make effective use of appropriate quantitative methods, and show critical capacity in the interpretation of the evidence and findings. Selection of title:

The title must be approved by the student's supervisor. An agreed provisional title and an outline of the Essay must be submitted by week 3 of Lent Term.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be four Essay sessions in Michaelmas Term for all students on the programme and meetings with supervisors during the course of the year.

Formative coursework: Students must submit a one page summary and draft work for comment by week 9 of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Essay (100%, 6000 words).

The essay should be no longer than 6,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Submission on a date to be specified. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length. The Essay counts for a half-unit in the four-unit MSc programme. The relevant marking criteria are set out in the Notes for Students.

Research Paper in Quantitative Economic History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Max-Stephan Schulze C422

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The Research Paper builds on the research training provided through the core courses of the MSc Quantitative Economic History and the MRes Quantitative Economic History, augmented by the optional economic history courses taken by students during the MRes. The topic of the Research Paper is chosen by the students in close consultation with their MRes supervisors who, normally, will be their prospective PhD supervisors. The Research Paper will present the results of an original enquiry into a clearly defined historical problem and use appropriate methods of quantitative analysis. It must demonstrate the ability to employ relevant concepts from economics and/or the wider social sciences effectively, an understanding of and critical engagement with the relevant economic history literature, an appreciation of the nature of historical explanation and analysis, and the ability to identify, collect and critically examine relevant quantitative information. Apart from it being an integral core component of the MRes programme, the Research Paper also serves as a first step towards the production of one of the three publishable papers envisaged for the students' prospective paper-based PhD thesis. Selection of title: The title must be approved by the student's supervisor. An agreed provisional title and an outline of the Research Paper must be submitted by week 3 of Lent Term.

Teaching: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on choosing a topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department (in the form of a document) and, individually, from their supervisors. There will be four Research Paper sessions in Lent Term for all students on the MRes and meetings with supervisors during the course of the year. Students are expected to submit a one page summary and a substantial draft for comment by week 9 of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date. This draft work forms the basis of the paper which students have to present at the MRes Quantitative Economic History workshop held in the last week of the Summer Term.

Formative coursework: Students must submit a one page summary and a substantial draft for comment by week 9 of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Assessment: Research project (100%).

The Research Paper should be no longer than 10,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Submission on a date to be specified. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length. The Research Paper counts for one full unit in the four-unit MRes programme. The relevant marking criteria are set out in the Notes for Students.

Research Prospectus

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Max-Stephan Schulze CMK.C422

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MRes in Quantitative Economic History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The Research Prospectus is a detailed, c. 5,000 words long outline 'map' of the prospective PhD thesis. It serves to demonstrate the feasibility of the thesis and, in conjunction with the results achieved in the examinable components of the MRes programme (including the Research Paper), as an indicator of the student's readiness for further graduate work in economic history at PhD level. The Prospectus is non-examinable but subject to approval by a departmental board prior to progression into the PhD programme.

The Research Prospectus is expected (1) to set out the research questions and motivation of the three publishable papers students intend to produce in their prospective PhD thesis, (2) to demonstrate the thematic connections between the three papers, (3) to outline the conceptual/ theoretical frameworks and empirical approaches to be used, (4) to identify the main (data) sources to be exploited, and (5) to delineate the relevant historical and historiographical contexts of the thesis. Insights from the student's ongoing work on the Research Paper (EH473), as a first step towards the production of one of the three papers, are expected to inform the Research Prospectus.

Teaching: Students are expected to work on the Research Prospectus throughout the year and in close consultation with their supervisors who, normally, will be their prospective PhD supervisors.

Assessment: The Research Prospectus is not formally assessed. However, it needs to be approved by the departmental Prospectus Review Board prior to progression to the PhD programme. Submission to the departmental Prospectus Review Board on a date in Summer Term to be confirmed.

The Economic History of War

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Max-Stephan Schulze C422 and Mr Dudley Baines E488

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research) and MSc in Global History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Students enrolled on this course are expected to have completed the equivalent of undergraduate survey courses on European history. Knowledge of introductory undergraduate level economics is a distinct advantage.

Course content: This course explores the economic history of war(s) from the late Middle Ages to the 20th century within a comparative framework. Key themes examined include: long-term preparation for war - from bullionism to autarchy; state formation and deformation; organising warfare - from Renaissance condottiere to security firms; resource mobilisation - finance, material inputs, human capital; resource allocation - production and consumption; human and economic consequences of war; post-war reconstructions. The historical cases studied include the Hundred Years War, the Thirty Years War, the European wars of the 18th century, the Napoleonic Wars, the American Civil War, the First and Second World Wars.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

There are no lectures on this course. Teaching will consist of 20 seminars of two-hours each in MT and LT; one revision session in ST. There will be pre-circulated papers for the seminars.

Formative coursework: Three 2,000 word essays and one class presentation

Dissertation in Global History

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tirthankar Roy

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective and MSc in Global History. This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The subject of the dissertation should relate broadly to one of the global history taught courses taken by the student. It should be a critical survey of a well-defined problem in the literature. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of appropriate literature in Global History and an ability to handle problems of evidence and explanation. The title must be approved by the student's supervisor. A provisional title should be agreed by mid-LT.

Arrangements for supervision:

EH481 gives essential training for the dissertation. Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on the choice of topic and how to tackle it, both from the Department and, individually, from their tutor and from the teacher of the most relevant taught course. There will be meetings during the course of the year. The student must submit a one page summary and draft work for comment by Week 9 of the Summer Term. Supervisors will not normally provide comments on drafts submitted after that date.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures in the MT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 6000 words) post-summer term. The dissertation should be no longer than 6,000 words, excluding tables, references and bibliography. Marks will be deducted for late submission or excessive length.

Pre-Modern Paths of Growth: East and West Compared, c1000-1800/1900

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Kent Deng C213

Dr Alejandra Irigoin CMK.C313, Dr Lars Boerner STC.S482

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in China in Comparative Perspective, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation and MSc in Global History. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: This course surveys long-term processes of growth and development in pre-modern Europe, China and Japan. The course raises fundamental questions about the nature of pre-industrial societies and economies. First, it asks if stagnation and poverty were normal conditions in pre-industrial societies and growth an aberration. What kind of growth and development did 'Malthusian' societies experience? Second, it addresses debates over European industrialisation. Why was Britain first? Was British success from the late 18th century the result of unique social, institutional, or cultural features? Was it the outcome of a centuries-long, cumulative process of change, that relied as much on inputs from the rest of Europe as much as specifically domestic features? Or was it the result of a 'fortunate conjuncture'? Third, it makes an in-depth comparison of three major geo-economic regions (Europe, China and Japan) over seven centuries. It discusses recent research that suggests that parts of pre-modern Asia were as developed (in terms of living standards, agricultural productivity, commerce) as the more advanced regions of modern Europe, and asks if there were more than one 'premodern paths of growth'. In the MT we focus on Europe; during the LT, on China and Japan. The approach throughout is thematic. Themes include: agriculture, population, urbanisation, technology, urban and rural industry, economic effects of legal, political and constitutional structure; political economy and taxation; warfare; trade and market integration, causes and effects of European expansion.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the MT. 10 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

2-hour meetings weekly, with a flexible combination of lectures and seminars in MT and LT.

Formative coursework: All students are expected to write four essays: one by the end of the fifth week of the MT, one by the end of the ninth week of the MT, one by end of the fifth week of the LT, and one by the end of the ninth week of the LT.

EH487 Half Unit International Economic Institutions since World War I

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Professor Nicholas Crafts, E488

Availability: This course is available on the MA Global Studies: A European Perspective, MSc in Accounting, Organisations and Institutions, MSc in Economic History, MSc in Economic History (Research), MSc in Global History and MSc in Political Economy of Late Development. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: The course analyses the evolution since World War II of the roles of international institutions designed to manage world trade and the international monetary system paying particular attention to the IMF, the World Bank, the GATT and WTO. The analysis of the post-war world is set against the background of the trade wars and breakdown of the Gold Standard in the inter-war period prior to the establishment of these institutions.

The approach is chronological with attention being given both to efficiency and equity aspects of the institutional arrangements. Inter-war developments are examined in terms of the absence of co-operation and a hegemonic power with an emphasis on the costs of the Great Depression and the results in terms of the reversal of earlier globalization trends. The Bretton Woods era of a new financial and trading architecture is discussed in terms of an evaluation of the success of the new institutions against the background of their initial job descriptions and of the much better world economic performance in the period. The changing rationales for the IMF and the World Bank and challenges to the GATT in the difficult economic environment of the 1970s and 1980s are examined. The debates of the time and implications for the continuation of the post-war return to globalization are both considered. Finally, the questions of the likelihood and Content of further liberalization of trade and capital flows under WTO and IMF auspices are discussed in the context of an Assessment of what is genuinely new about late 20th compared with late 19th century globalization.

Teaching: 20 hours of lectures and 10 hours of seminars in the LT. Taught during the LT. 2-hour meetings weekly, with a flexible combination of lectures and seminars in which student papers will be presented and discussed.

Formative coursework: Students will be expected to produce two written papers during the course.

Indicative reading: A Krueger, 'Whither the World Bank and the IMF?', Journal of Economic Literature (1998); O Kirshner (Ed), The Bretton Woods-Gatt System Retrospect and Prospect after 50 Years (1996); B Eichengreen, Globalizing Capital (1996); M Thomas (Ed), The Disintegration of the World Economy between the World Wars (2 vols) (1996); S Ostry, The Post Cold War Trading System (1997); H James, International Monetary Co-operation since Bretton Woods (1996); M Bordo, B Eichengreen & D Irwin, 'Was There Really an Earlier Period of Globalization Comparable to Today?', Brookings Papers on Economic Activity (1999); P Kenen (Ed), Managing the World Economy (1994).

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

an enquiry into a carefully defined problem in the field, whether by a critical survey of existing literature, or by the use of primary evidence. It must demonstrate adequate knowledge of relevant theoretical and empirical literature in Economic History and Development Studies, and an ability to handle problems of evidence and explanation.

Supervision: EH414 Theories, Paths and Patterns of Late Development gives essential training for the dissertation. Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on the choice of topic and how to tackle it, both in the form of a document from the Economic History Department and individual advice from their respective supervisors. There will be meetings during the course of the year. The student must submit a draft by the last Monday of that term. The draft will form the basis of a paper which the student must present to a dissertation workshop held later that week. Verbal feedback will be provided by teachers and fellow students. The student will also receive detailed written comments on this draft.

Teaching: 6 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the LT.

Assessment: Dissertation (100%, 10000 words) post-summer term. The dissertation should not exceed 10,000 words, excluding tables, references, and bibliography. The title must be approved in advance by the student's supervisor. The dissertation will not be returned to the student, who should therefore make a copy before submission.

EH496-7 Dissertation- MSc Economic History (Research)

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Tirthankar Roy CMK.C315

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Economic History (Research). This course is not available as an outside option.

Course content: The dissertation must draw upon the research training provided through the core courses for the MSc (Research) and the generic courses taken by the student, and present the results of an original enquiry into a carefully defined problem. Students are expected to show an ability to draw on relevant social scientific concepts, an understanding of the advanced literature in one or more areas of economic history, and of the nature of historical explanation and analysis. Where appropriate, students are also expected to show the ability to use relevant quantitative techniques for data collection and analysis. The dissertation is intended as preparation for a research degree. Students expecting to continue on the MPhil/PhD programme within the Department may write their MSc dissertation on a different topic from that on which they plan to research at MPhil/PhD level.

Selection of title: The subject and title of the dissertation must be approved by the student's tutor.

Teaching: 8 hours of lectures in the MT. 2 hours of lectures in the ST.

Arrangements for supervision: Starting in the first term, students will receive advice on how to choose a topic, and how to tackle it, both from the Department and, individually, from their tutor and from the teacher of any relevant taught course. There will be meetings during the course of the year. The student must submit a draft of the dissertation by the last Monday of the ST. This draft will form the basis of the paper which the student must present to a dissertation workshop held later that week, at which verbal feedback will be provided to teachers and fellow students. A nominated member of staff will also offer written comments on this draft providing it is submitted by the designated time.

Basic Economic Concepts for European Political Economy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Vassilis Monastiriotis COW 2.05

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Political Economy of Europe and MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is not available as an outside option. Students from other programmes within the European Institute can also request to follow the course. This course is for students with little economic background.

Course content: This is a Moodle-based course offering a series of instructional videos / recorded lectures (and related reading material / study guides) on some basic economics concepts and theory that are relevant to discussions concerning the political economy of Europe that students will come across in their other courses during their MSc degree. The course is not assessed and there is no formal instruction and contact time with teachers. The material is designed so as to be accessible to students with no previous knowledge of economics but students with some basic economics knowledge will also benefit from it. Example topics include: current account and budget deficits ("twin deficits"), inflation and unemployment ("Phillips Curve"), trade liberalisation and tariffs ("gains from trade"), competitiveness and unit labour costs ("internal devaluation"), and others.

Teaching: This is a Moodle-based course with no formal teaching.

Indicative reading: J Stiglitz & J Driffill, Economics, Norton, 2000 (or later editions); P Krugman & M Obstfeld, International Economics, Addison Wesley, 2003.

Assessment: There is no examination for this course.

EU420 Half Unit European Law and Government

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Jan Komarek COW 1.04

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy) and Master of Laws. This course is not available as an outside option.

Pre-requisites: A solid knowledge of the role and functions of EU institutions is required.

Course content: Law seems to function as a programming language: only specialists know how to “speak” it. This is true especially for the EU, which is often accused of using law to obscure the policy choices made from the citizens that are affected by such choices. At the same time, law is so systemically engrained in the EU’s set-up that it is increasingly difficult to understand what the EU is and does, let alone criticise it or suggest alternatives, without a grasp of the role of law in the integration process. This course’s objective is to connect the legal and political science perspective on governance in the EU, and provide those with none, or a very limited, background in law with the tools to better understand the state of the Union.

The course provides an overview of how the EU is governed and – at the same time – of how it governs its citizens. You will come out of it with a detailed understanding of how the EU institutions work, how EU law is adopted at the European level, and how the EU interacts with governments on the national level. It challenges you to critically think about the interaction between law and politics; and the interaction between the EU and its Member States. The course both covers the institutional perspective, highlighting the role of the different institutions in the Union, and also focuses on those substantive issues that are currently topical in the EU – such as fundamental rights or the euro-crisis.

At no other time in the development of the EU has the interaction between law and government so fundamentally affected the direction of the integration process. The coming years will very probably see fundamental changes to the Union’s structure; which are informed as much by political dynamics as by legal mechanisms. This course prepares you to fully understand those changes – and allows you to analyse critically both their normative content and institutional structure.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

Formative coursework: One unassessed essay (2,000 words).

Indicative reading: C Bickerton, European Integration: From Nation-States to Member States (Oxford University Press 2012); G de Burca and J Weiler (eds), The Worlds of European

EU421 Half Unit Policy-Making in the European Union

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Eiko Thielemann CON. 3.14

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in Environmental Policy and Regulation, MSc in European Social Policy, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Media and Communications (Media and Communications Governance), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Administration and Government (LSE and Peking University), MSc in Public Management and Governance, MSc in Public Policy and Administration, MSc in Public Policy and Administration (Research) and MSc in Social Policy (European and Comparative Social Policy). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: A solid knowledge of the role and functions of EU institutions is required.

Course content: This course offers the theoretically informed study of the EU policy-making across a selection of key issue areas. The principal aim of the course is to provide a detailed knowledge of how national and EU institutions interact in European policy making. To achieve this, the course is divided into two parts. The first introduces principal theories of policy making along three core policy dimensions: agenda setting, decision making and policy implementation. In the second part the conceptual insights gained will be used to analyse a number of substantive policy areas. These will typically include: the single market, social and environmental policies, cohesion policies, Common Agricultural Policy, Economic and Monetary Union, Justice and Home Affairs and EU foreign policy.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the LT. 1 hour of lectures and 1 hour and 30 minutes of seminars in the ST.

EU424 Half Unit

The Idea of Europe

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Simon Glendinning COW 1.07 and Prof Maurice Fraser COW 2.12

Availability: This course is compulsory on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities and MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available on the MSc in European Studies (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Religion in the Contemporary World. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: Europe has never been indifferent to its own meaning and significance. In this course we explore some key ideas in the developing movement of a distinctively European self-understanding and identity. The course will introduce and critically explore the classic idea of Europe as not just a specific geographical region or regional economic power but as the 'spiritual leader' of a global mission, a 'vanguard' for human civilisation. Although our studies will focus on themes and texts which have informed this kind of "Eurocentric" perspective we will keep in view that Europe today has reached a point at which it is no longer so comfortable with the idea of the global authority of the 'European spirit'. Among other topics we examine the origins of Europe in Ancient Greece and Christendom; the idea of the territorial and historical ends of Europe; the distinction between 'civilisation' and 'barbarism'; the emergence of European rationalism; and the development of the idea of universal human rights.

Teaching: 10 hours of lectures and 15 hours of seminars in the MT. 1 hour of lectures in the ST.

There are two mock exam sessions in the Lent Term. The first session is the exam itself, the second session is to provide feedback.

Formative coursework: Two 2,500 word unassessed essays

Indicative reading: Norman Davies, 'Introduction' to Europe: A History; Anthony Pagden (ed) The Idea of Europe; Roger Scruton, The West and the Rest; Immanuel Kant, 'Perpetual Peace' in his Political Writings; G.W.F. Hegel, The Philosophy of History; Isaiah Berlin, The Crooked Timber of Humanity; Hannah Arendt, The Origins of Totalitarianism.

Assessment: Exam (100%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in Empires, Colonialism and Globalisation, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in History of International Relations, MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union, MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po) and MSc in Theory and History of International Relations. This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

This is a capped course (30 students). Students are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course.

Course content: This course is in two halves: the first will explore the idea of The West, culturally and philosophically; the second will explore the architecture, policies and governance of the contemporary transatlantic relationship. The course will begin by examining The West's central role as a descriptive and normative concept across intellectual disciplines. It will locate its many definitions in their respective cultural and geographical contexts and will examine the claims for an unique and irreducible content which can account for The West's enduring significance in changing geopolitical contexts, notably since the end of the Cold War. The course will consider The West as a foundational idea in the humanities - specifically the emergence of a self-consciousness through the liberal arts and the Western Canon of literature and philosophy; the concept of 'high culture'; the idea of a university; and the importance of criticism, innovation and self-consciousness. The West's position within the grand civilisational narratives will be analysed, including those of decline (Spengler, Toynbee, Freud), triumph or resolution (Bell, Fukuyama), conflict (Huntington), and universal mission (liberal interventionism, neo-conservatism, soft power). The course will describe and critically evaluate the claims of anti-western ideologies such as pan-Islamism, pan-Asianism, 'Negritude', Russian eurasianism and Eastern Orthodoxy, along with the political expression which these have taken, including in the Non-Aligned Movement. It will also examine the continuing coherence of The West as a normative community in light of contemporary claims of radical incompatibility of European and American value systems. The second half of the course will assess the coherence of The West as a geopolitical actor in the post-War period, in the context of centripetal forces such as the opposition to communism, the establishment of collective security through the Atlantic Alliance and growing economic interdependence; and centrifugal forces such as strategic or tactical divergences (Suez, Vietnam, Balkans, Iraq), economic tensions (industrial and agricultural subsidies, GMOs, hormones, climate change), and attitudes to international norms and multilateral institutions. Finally, the course will review the institutional architecture of the transatlantic relationship in light of the contemporary debates about collective security (future of NATO, burden-sharing, co-ordination in the UN); the US-EU institutional framework; commercial dialogue (TABD, EABC); and economic co-ordination (G20, G8, reform of IFIs). It will conclude by assessing the various proposals for a new 'Transatlantic Bargain'.

European Public and Economic Policy

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Marco Simoni COW. J103

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy. This course is not available as an outside option.

This is a capped course (15 students). Students are required to obtain permission from the teaching department to take this course.

Course content: This course offers the theoretically informed study of European Public and Economic Policy-Making. It covers concepts and theories on political and economic integration in Europe, as well as key empirical issues. It draws from two broad domains: European politics and governance, and European political economy, which are combined in a full unit course in order to achieve a comprehensive understanding of economic policy and public policy in Europe. As such, it will include classes on the politics and governance of the EU institutions, and the developments in the interaction between national governments and the EU level. This will include insights into the creation and functioning of the EU institutions, their competences, and key policy domains, such as the single market, EMU, justice and home affairs, and others. The politics component of this course is complemented by a thorough examination of key developments of European economic integration, and their interaction with national models of capitalism and welfare state. The course is organised in weekly lectures and seminars. Students will be challenged to combine different theories and approaches in order to tackle issues of particular relevance for the academic and policy debate in contemporary Europe, broadly understood. This will be carried out in class discussions, weekly exercises, essay questions and teamwork on case studies.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Europeanization: The Comparative Politics of Domestic Change

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Prof Kevin Featherstone COW 2.02

Availability: This course is available on the MPA in European Public and Economic Policy, MPA in International Development, MPA in Public Policy and Management, MPA in Public and Economic Policy, MPA in Public and Social Policy, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: How and why we experience European Union membership differently across our national political systems is becoming increasingly important in debates about the future of Europe. Crises of legitimacy, capability, and impact have been identified. Following this lead, this course compares and contrasts domestic responses to European integration, highlighting differences between policy mechanisms and sectors; institutional capacities and settings; and political (party and electoral) behaviour. The discussion and analysis is framed by the notion of 'Europeanization', to consider the linkages between the European and national levels.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Within these sessions the format will vary between lectures, seminar discussion and student presentations/projects.

Formative coursework: One 2,000 word essay.

European Integration from a Global Perspective

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Mareike Kleine COW 1.01

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Global Politics (Global Civil Society), MSc in International Relations, MSc in International Relations (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in International Relations (Research), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Pre-requisites: Advanced knowledge of European institutions and of theories of international cooperation and Comparative Politics.

Course content: Distances on a world scale are shrinking through the emergence and thickening of networks of connection - a process commonly referred to as globalization. The process is far from complete with some regions like Europe being highly integrated and other regions lagging behind. Partial but increasing globalization produces discord and requires effective governance beyond the nation-state, that is, processes and institutions, that guide and constrain the collective activities of groups. How does governance work? How can we design effective institutions? How do we ensure that these institutions remain legitimate? Is the European Union at the vanguard of globalization and a model that other regions or the world, as a whole, will come to adopt? Can Europe, in turn, learn from alternative forms of governance on the regional or global scale? The course engages recent positive and normative scholarship in European Studies, International Relations, Comparative Politics, and Political Theory on governance in and beyond Europe. Putting European integration in this global and comparative perspective promises to illuminate current public and scholarly debates about the depth, the geographic scale, the legitimacy and the future of European integration. We study these questions by posing four issues: the nature of globalization; institutions and processes; actors and scope; and democracy and distribution. For each of them, European integration will serve as the principal case study to be discussed in light of developments in the rest of the world.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the LT. 4 hours of seminars in the ST.

Formative coursework: 1) A research proposal (due in week 5) of not more than 1,000 words for the long essay. The proposal is worked out in close cooperation with the seminar teacher. 2) Seven short memos based on the assigned reading. This memo should not be more than one page of bullet points.

Indicative reading: Keohane, Robert O. 2001, Governance in a Partially Globalized World. ### The Philosophy of Europe

This information is for the 2014/15 session.

Teacher responsible: Dr Simon Glendinning COW 1.07

Availability: This course is available on the MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities, MSc in European Studies: Ideas and Identities (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Political Economy of Europe, MSc in Political Economy of Europe (LSE and Sciences Po), MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union and MSc in Politics and Government in the European Union (LSE and Sciences Po). This course is available with permission as an outside option to students on other programmes where regulations permit.

Course content: In this course we will read and discuss texts that draw the history of Europe into relation with philosophy. In its most classical form the assertion of this relation belongs to an understanding of Europe's history as inseparable from the project of a life predicated on reason. Europe, insofar as its cultural identity is caught up with the Greek ideal of scientific rationality, is not simply the place where philosophy was first elaborated and developed. On the contrary, Europe first arises as a place only in and through the elaboration and development of philosophy. Of course, philosophy is, historically speaking, a European phenomenon - although one which concerns above all the question, in principle open to anyone, of what it is to be a human being as such. Equally, however, Europe is itself a philosophical phenomenon - its identity inseparable from the idea of a project that concerns rational animality as such, and hence humanity as a whole.

The idea that Europe has a world-wide significance in virtue of its relation to philosophical thought is strikingly expressed in Kant's prediction of "a great political body of the future" emerging in Europe, a kind of league of nations, that will probably "legislate" - that is, at least serve as a guiding example - for all humanity. Indeed, the global "cosmopolitan existence" posited by Kant as the final end of world history is not just a philosopher's idea of humanity's collective political destiny: the very idea of a global human community is essentially philosophical. On this view, the (particular) history of the peoples of "our continent" has a relation to the (universal) destiny - the liberation or emancipation - of humanity world-wide. This is not because of the hegemonic political and economic ambitions of imperialist Europeans, but the world-wide movement of a cosmopolitan and humanist culture.

Starting with Kant's classic essay on "Idea for a Universal History with a Cosmopolitan Purpose" we will turn to the way in which Europe is understood and elaborated within the post-Kantian tradition: in Hegel, Marx, Husserl, Valéry, Berlin, Fukuyama, Derrida, and Habermas.

Teaching: 20 hours of seminars in the MT. 2 hours of seminars in the ST.

Each seminar will be based around the discussion of a short essay or text which everyone in the class will be expected to have read. The texts will typically be available either online or as a photocopy.

Formative coursework: One essay of 2,000 words.

Indicative reading: Immanuel Kant 'Idea of Universal History with a Cosmopolitan Purpose', in Political Writings; Edmund Husserl 'The Vienna Lecture', in The Crisis of European Sciences and Transcendental Phenomenology; Paul Valéry 'Notes on the Greatness and Decline of Europe', in History and Politics; Jacques Derrida, 'Of the Humanities and the Philosophical Discipline. The right to philosophy from the cosmopolitical point of view (the example of an international institution)' (online).

Assessment: Exam (75%, duration: 2 hours) in the main exam period.

Essay (25%, 2500 words) in the MT.
