

LSE Literary Festival, 3rd March 2012

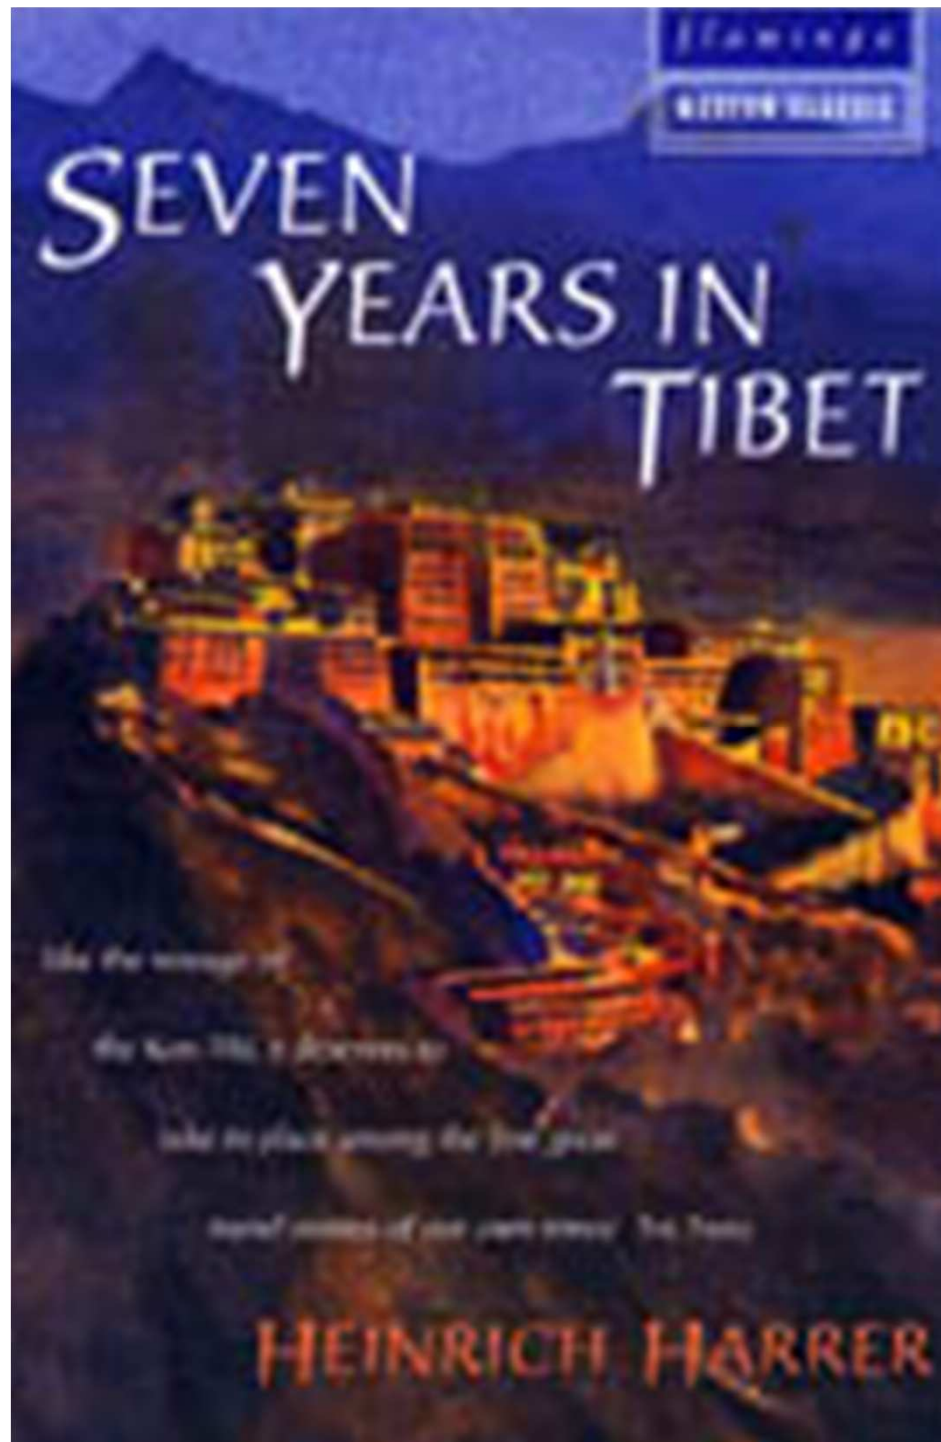

Tourist photography in Ladakh, North India

Alex Gillespie

a.t.gillespie@lse.ac.uk

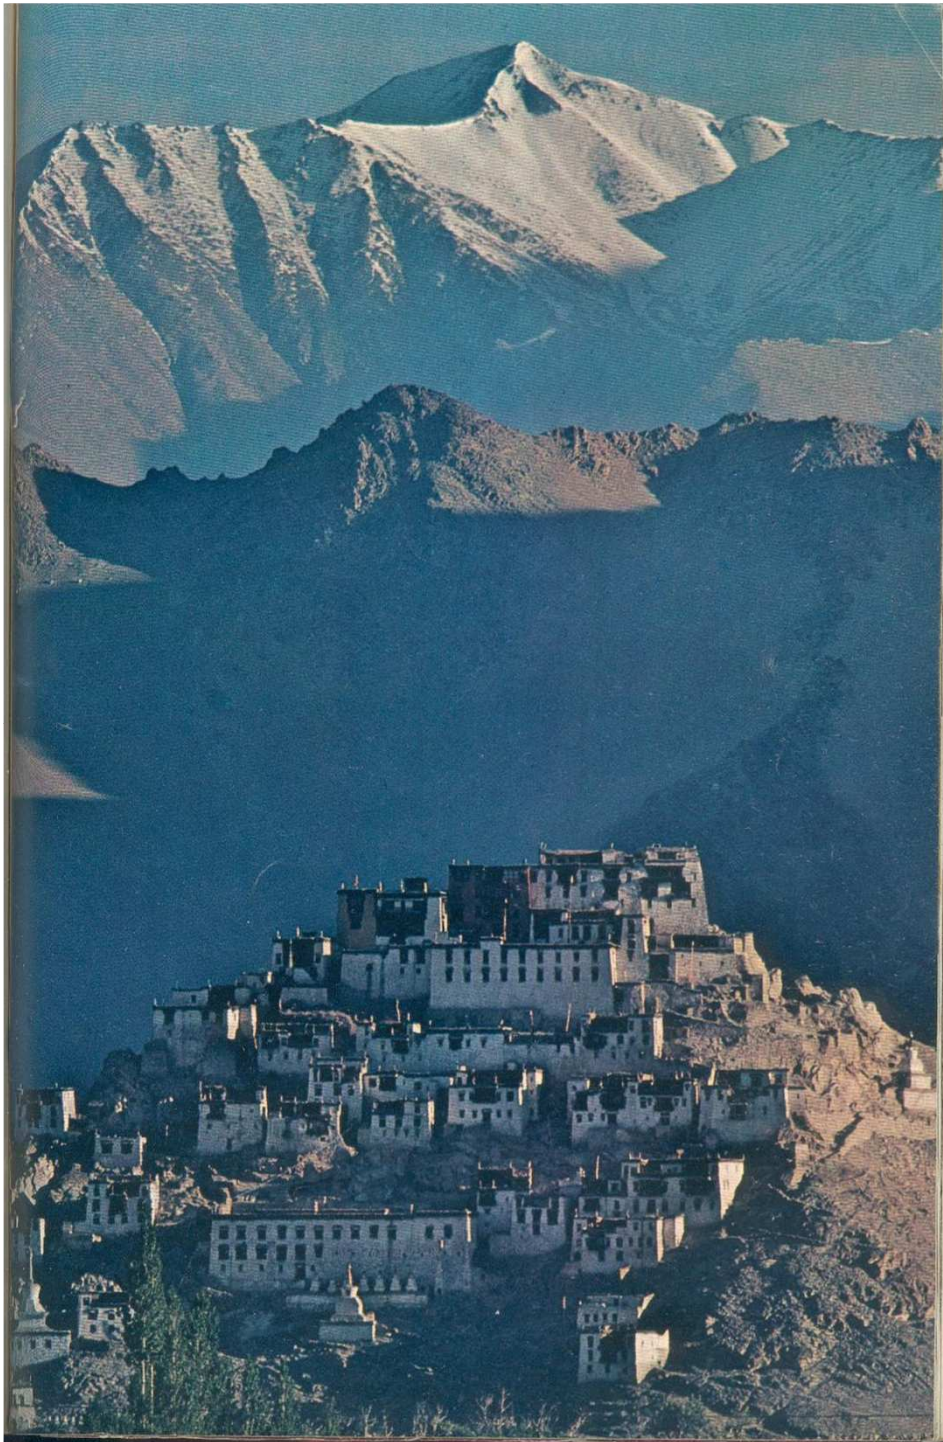

Lost Horizon (1937)

Seven Years in Tibet (1952)

Seven Years in Tibet (1997)

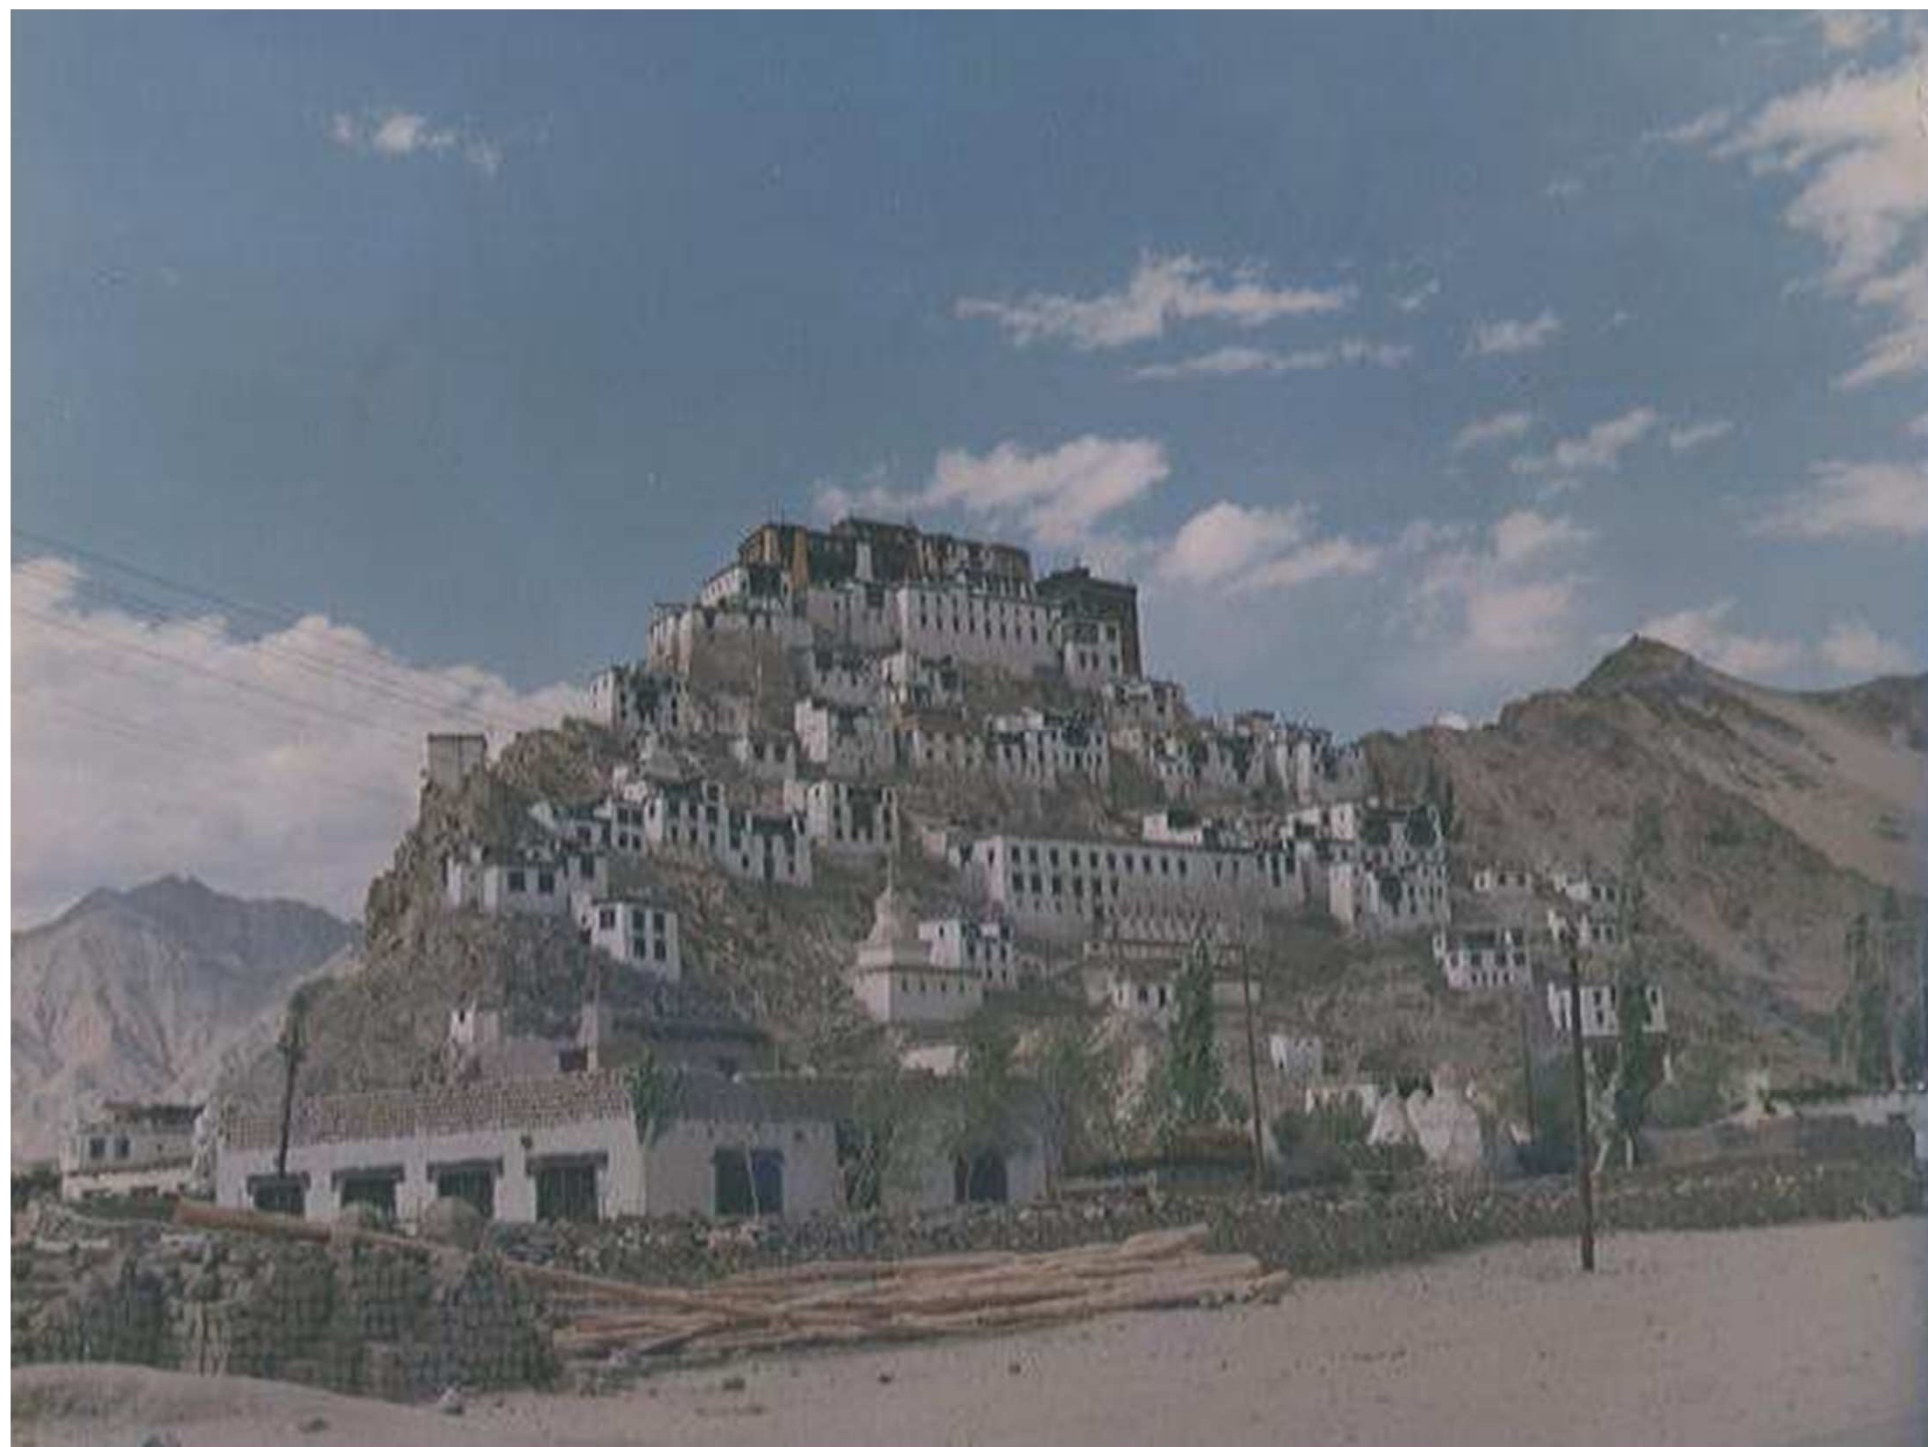

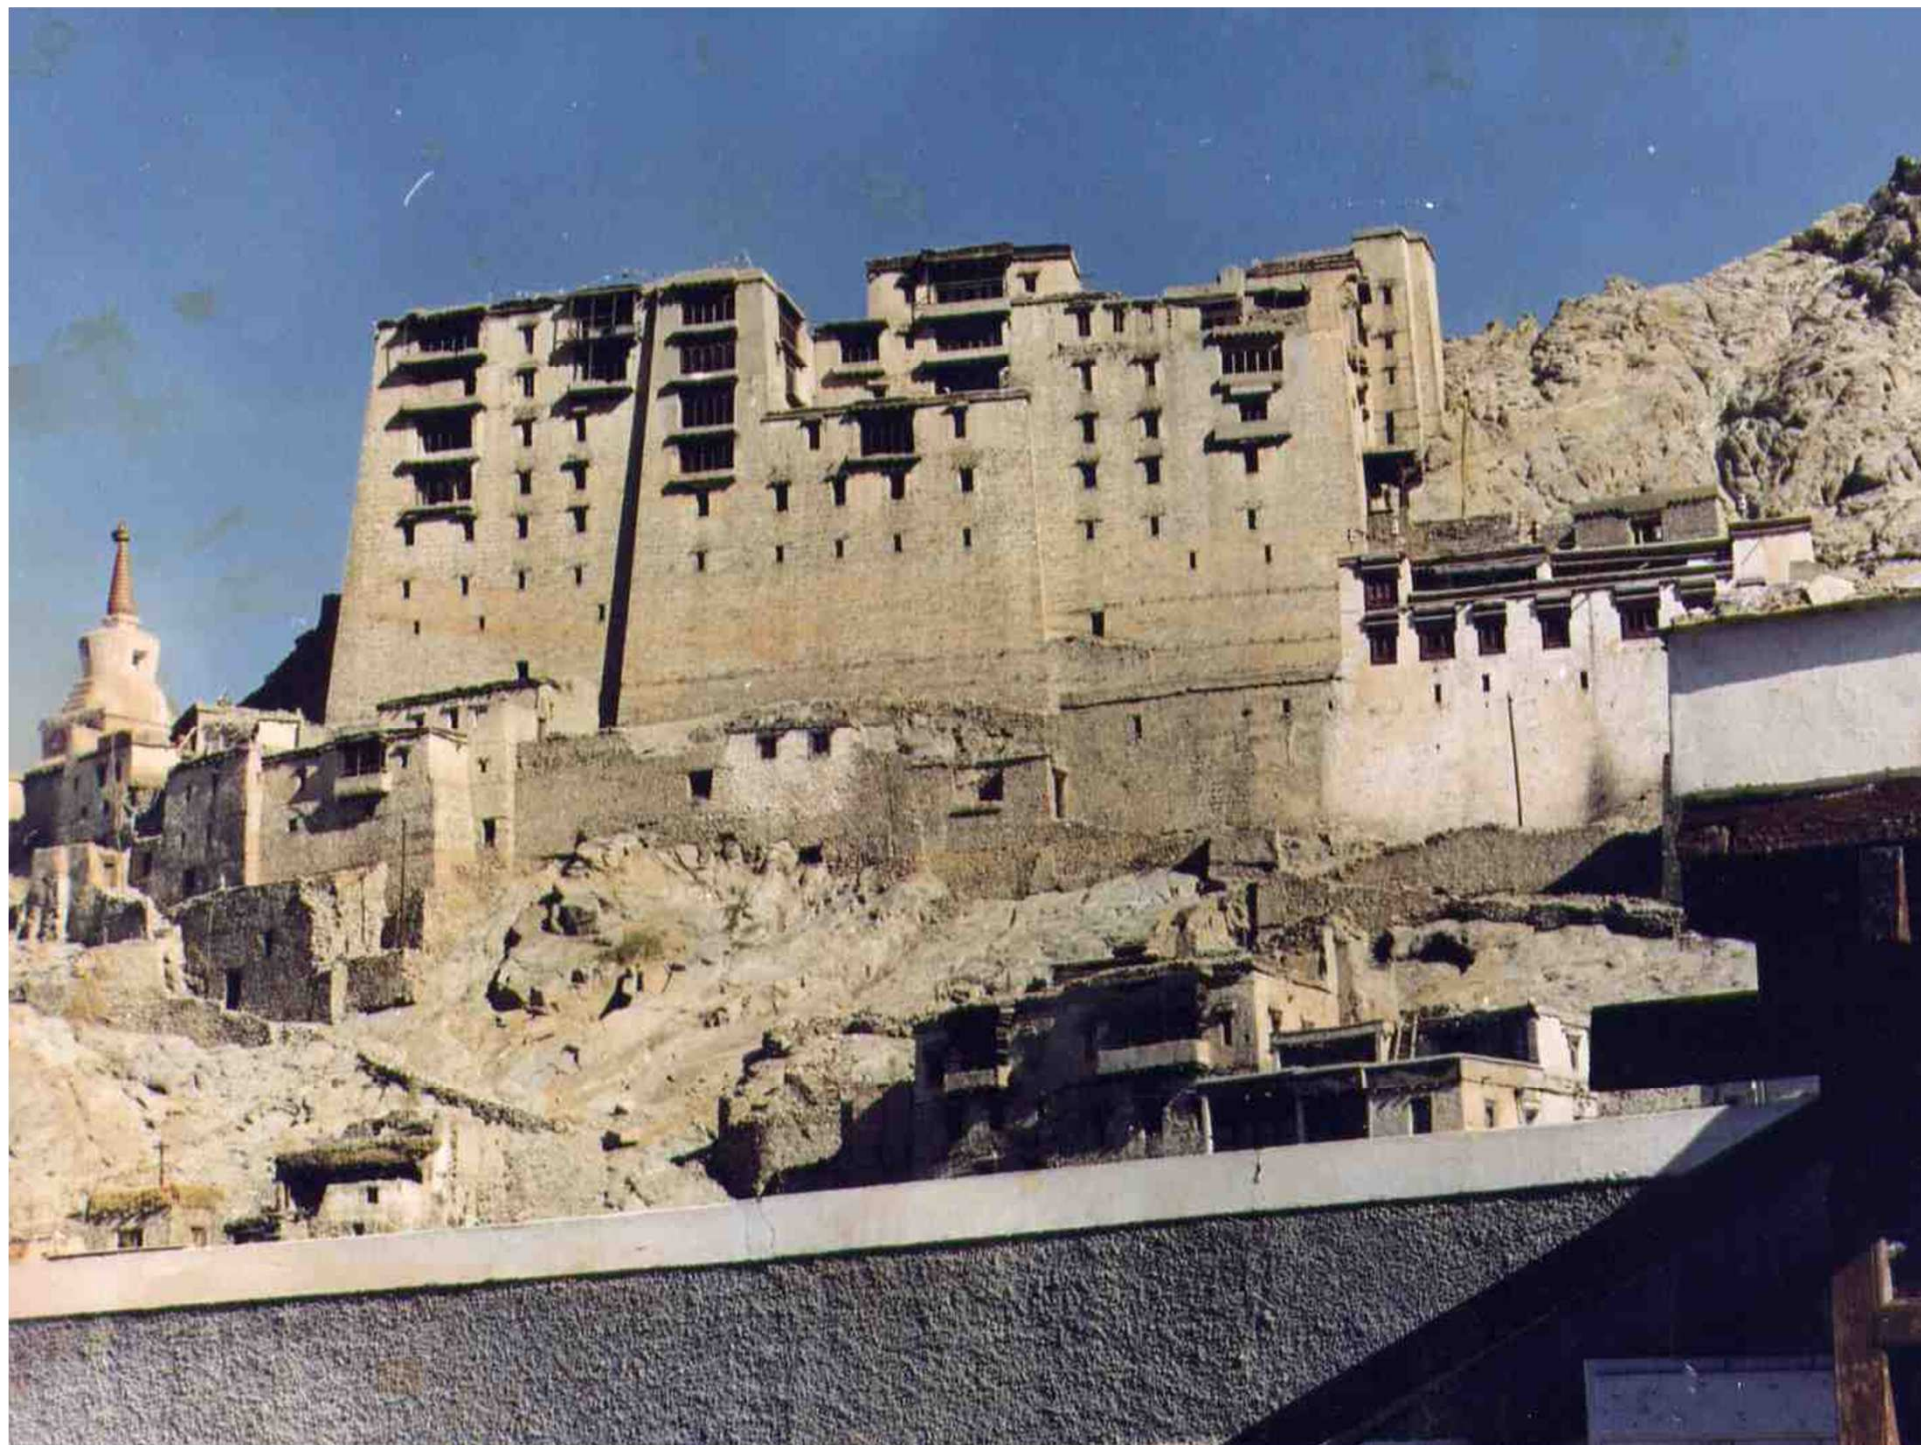

National Geographic
(1978)

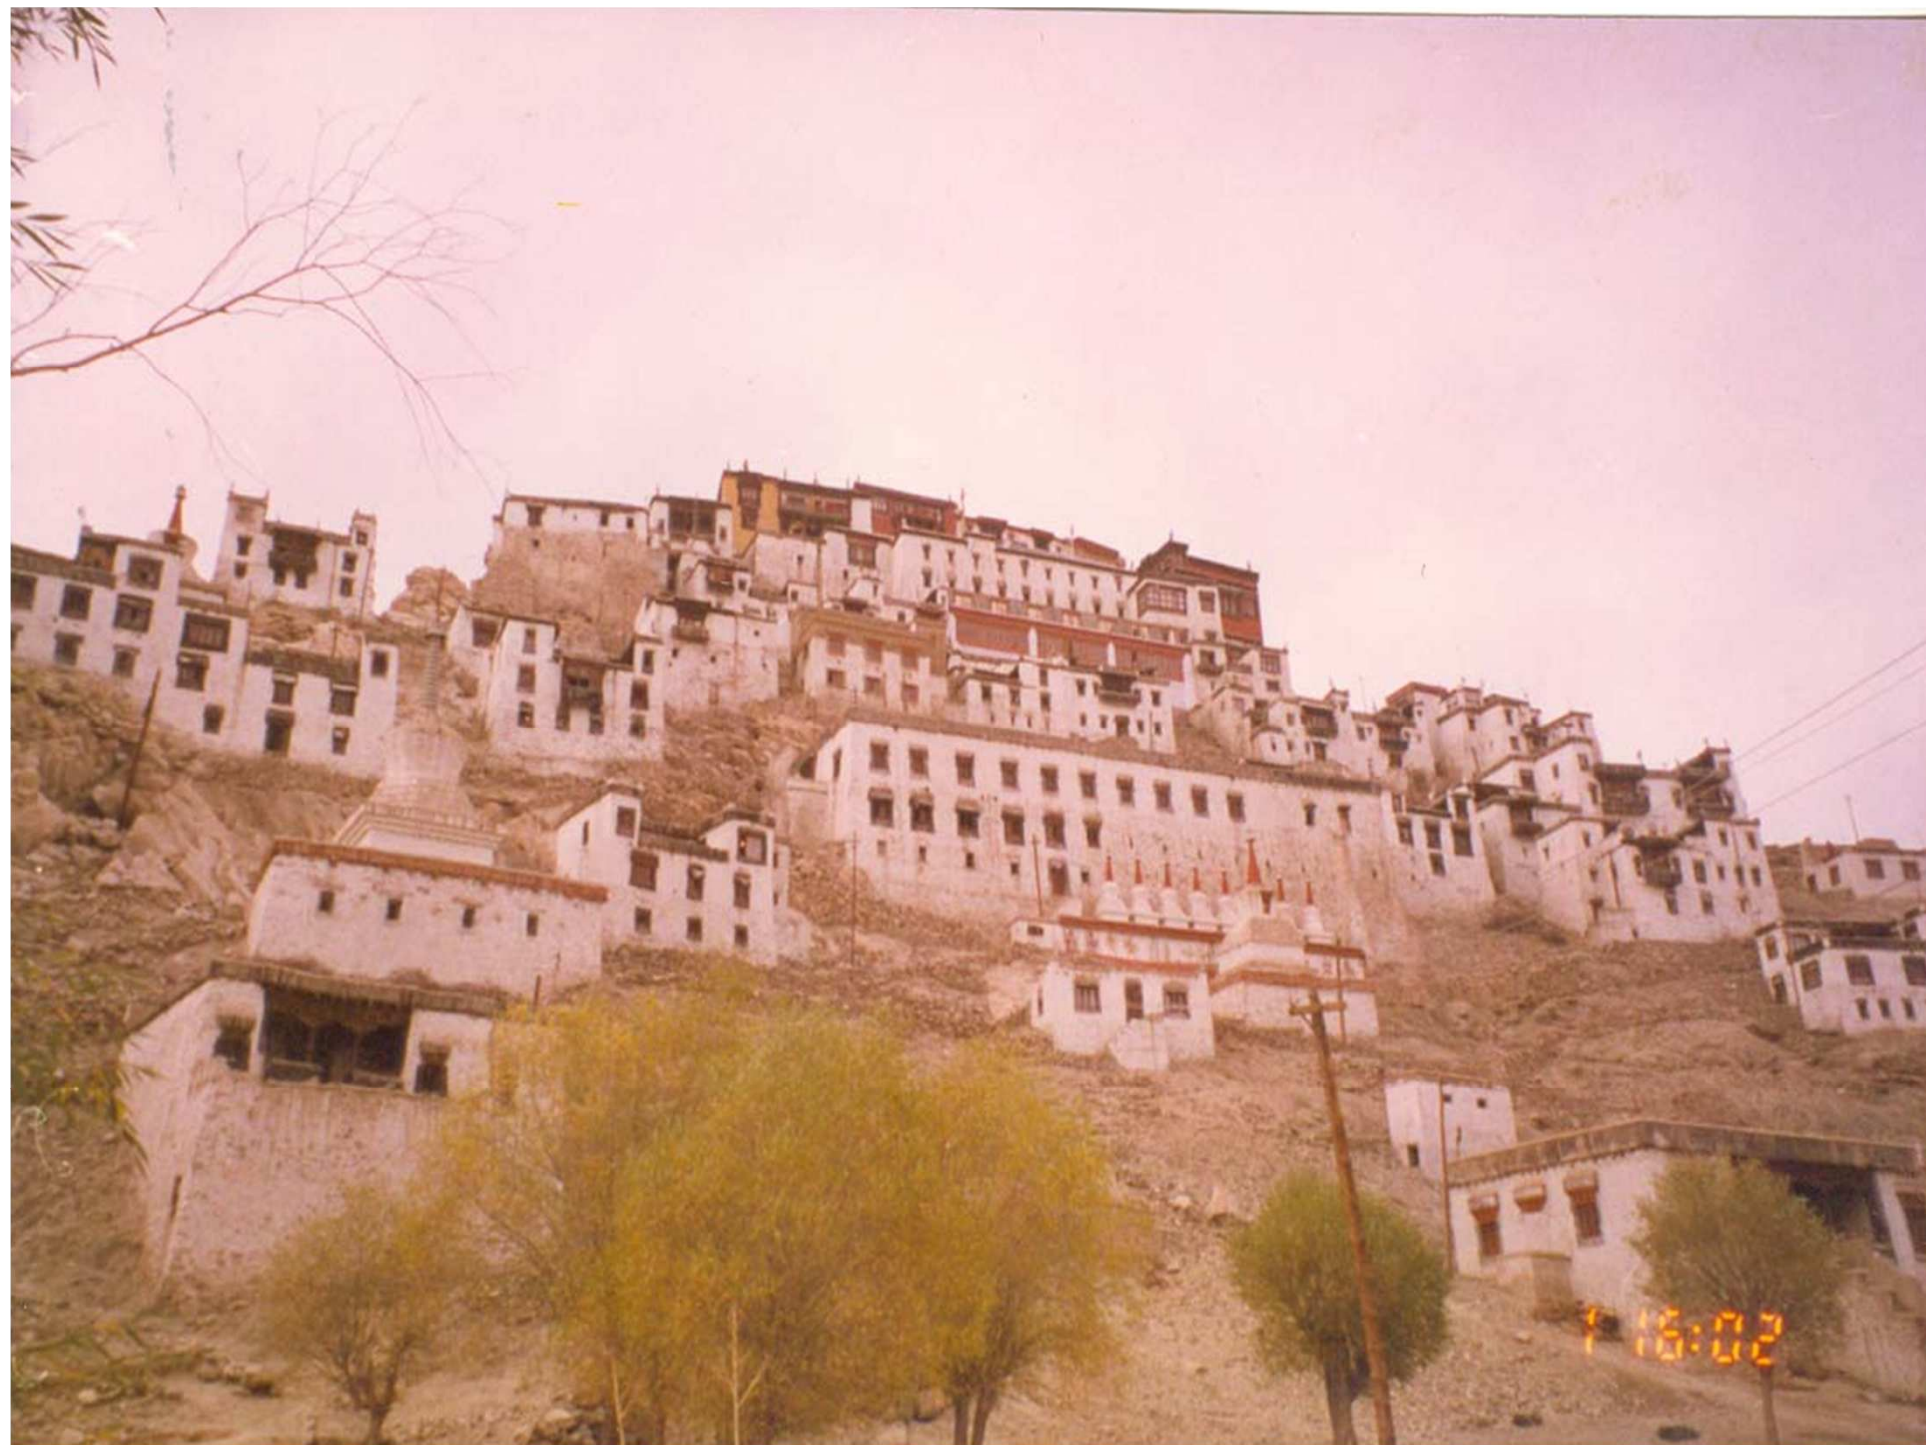

Ladakh - India

Thiksy monastery in Ladakh

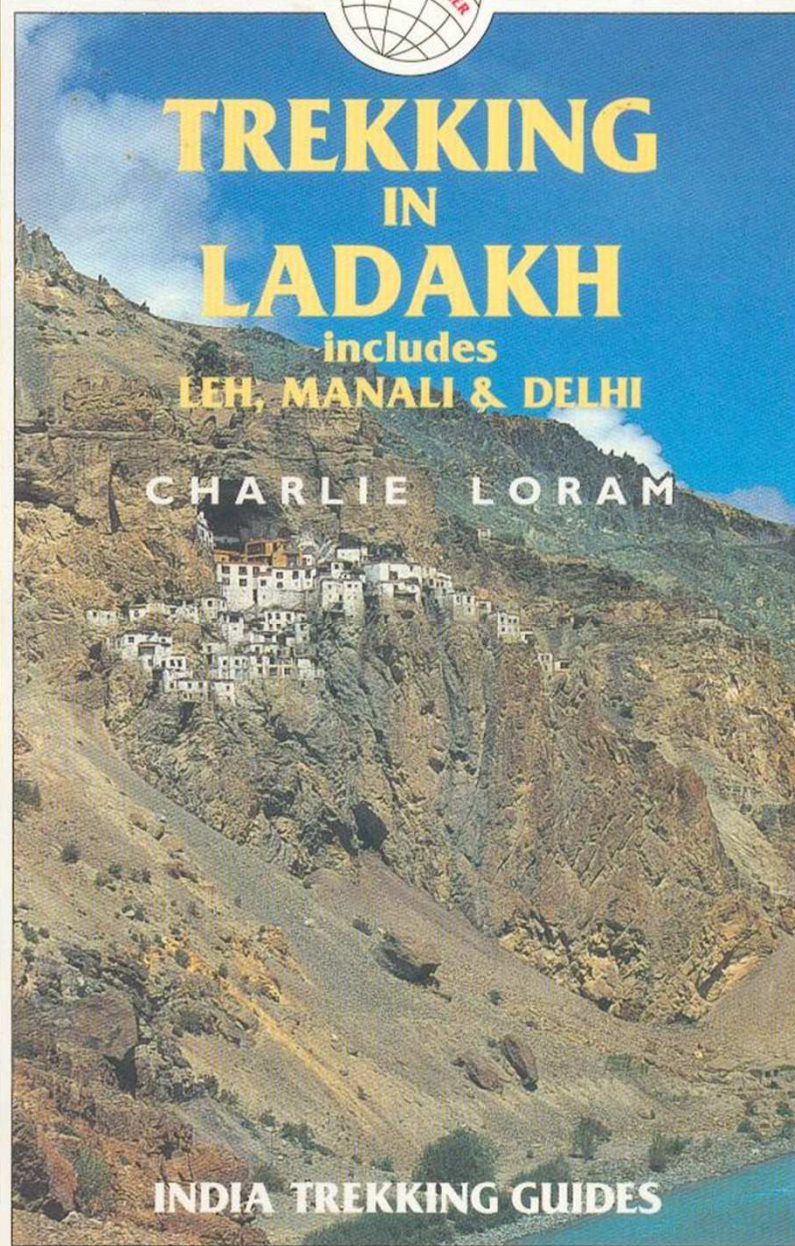

TREKKING IN LADAKH

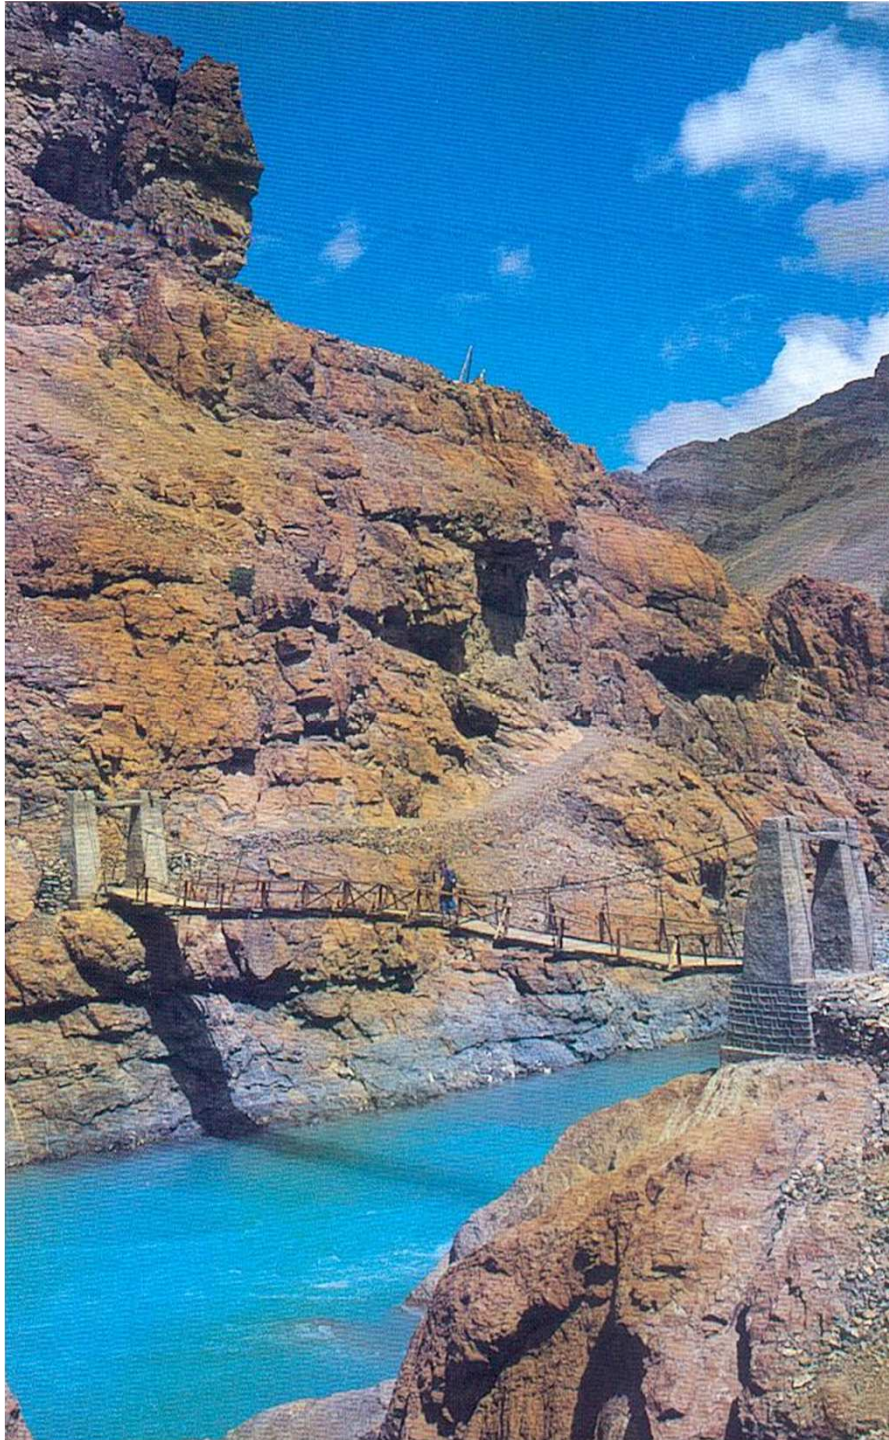

includes
LEH, MANALI & DELHI

CHARLIE LORAM

INDIA TREKKING GUIDES

Trekking in Ladakh (2004)

VOL. 153, NO. 3

MARCH 1978

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

LADAKH—THE LAST
SHANGRI-LA 332

THE CHANGE IN SPAIN 297

WONDERFUL EYES OF SCIENCE 360

THE FISH WITH BIPOCALS 390

EASYGOING, HARDWORKING
ARKANSAS 396

THE THOUSAND-MILE GLIDE 431

OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY WASHINGTON, D.C.

National Geographic (1978)

Seven Years in Tibet (1997)

Where are the photos of the people?

Barry: I try not to be, em, to take pictures of the people, though, em, I want to

Tom: I feel embarrassed to do it, because it is like, like making them feel freakish

Barry: It's like "look at the freaks there!" – that's just horrible for the people

Tourist Contradictions

Me: What pictures have you taken?

Marten: [...] Also of people, em, really sneaky, but em, but em, I'm sure they don't know, but it's different from shoving such a lens in someone's face from a metre distance

Me: But if you were going to photograph people, who would you choose to photograph?

Marten: The old women - of course - and old men

Me: Why?

Karen: Because they look nice,

Marten: Their characteristics (pause) but when you want to take a picture of an old woman, try to have a little relation with them, not like run through the country and take some pictures— like Japanese!

Tourist Contradictions

Me: What pictures have you taken?

Marten: [...] Also of people, em, really sneaky, but em, but em, I'm sure they don't know, but it's different from shoving such a lens in someone's face from a metre distance

Me: But if you were going to photograph people, who would you choose to photograph?

Marten: The old women - of course - and old men

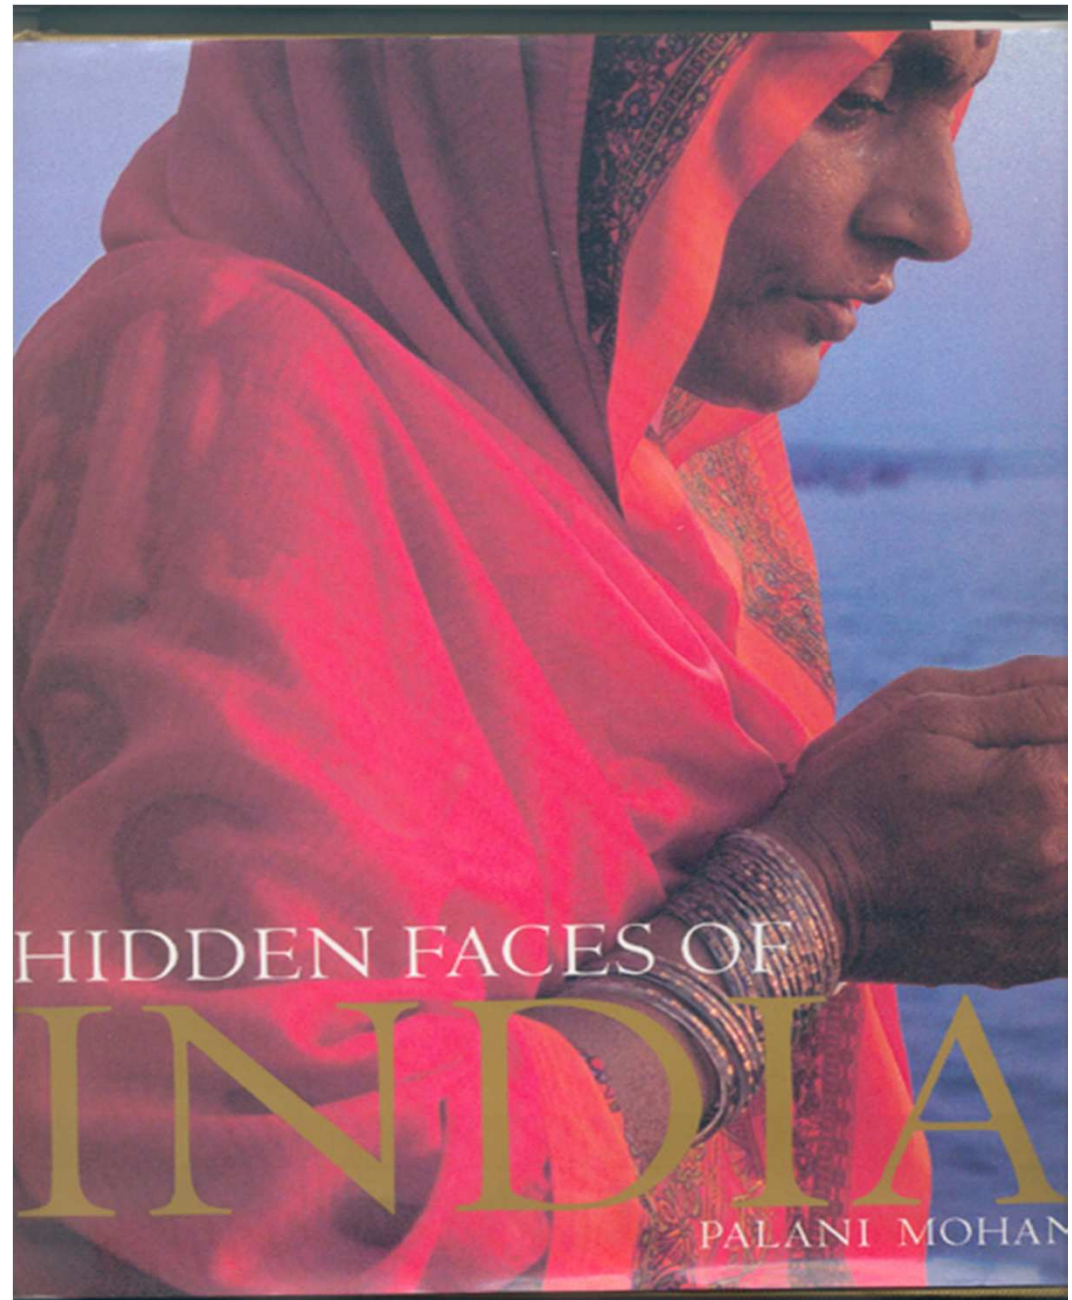

Me: Why?

Karen: Because they look nice,

Marten: Their characteristics (pause) but when you want to take a picture of an old woman, try to have a little relation with them, not like run through the country and take some pictures— like Japanese!

Picture Book: “Hidden Faces of India”

By: Palani Mohan

An image from “Hidden Faces of India”

Archers from the Ladakhi village of Skurbuchan travel to Leh for the annual festival.

