

'Studying while working helped me in my studies, in the sense that I was able to grasp theoretical concepts more easily because I could relate them to my work. Even though combining work and studying is no easy task, I believe that once you are able to manage your time it becomes an advantage.'

Hein Chetcuti, BSc Information Systems and Management graduate

Profile: Hein Chetcuti | BSc Information Systems and Management graduate

'I chose to study for a University of London degree because the University of London is recognized worldwide as one of the best universities.

Studying while working helped me in my studies, in the sense that I was able to grasp theoretical concepts more easily because I could relate them to my work. Even though combining work and studying is no easy task, I believe that once you are able to manage your time it becomes an advantage.

I am currently an information systems specialist at Malta Freeport Terminals. Having the degree certainly helped me attain this post.

I have plans to start an MSc in International Business with the University of London, with the aim of becoming an ICT consultant in the near future.

I think the moment when I found out my final results and that I had achieved a degree with First Class Honours remains one of my best memories.'

Hein is an information systems specialist at Malta Freeport Terminals.