

Managerial Accounting for Chinese students

Expanding LSE's engagement with China

Organised in cooperation with Suman Education International, LSE Custom Programmes' tailored course on Managerial Accounting and Financial Control brought together 42 students from 12 universities of Jiangsu province in China. The programme consisted of five half-days of lectures spread across two weeks, supplemented by facilitated self-study sessions to allow the students to conduct independent study and research at the LSE Library. It covered a wide range of topics across managerial accounting and financial control, including capital budgeting, investment appraisal and strategic considerations in accounting.

The students undertook a competitive selection process to qualify in terms of academic merit and language proficiency, and the course director, Professor Al Bhimani of the Department of Accounting, commented that 'the quality of the students was very high indeed'. Several of the students hope to apply for an LSE degree in the future.

'It was good to see so many hardworking and aspiring students being able to enrich their studies at home universities via this custom module,' commented Yury Bikbaev, Director of LSE Custom Programmes. 'We hope to grow this knowledge sharing engagement where LSE research and teaching excellence are made available to wider audiences of young people in China.'

Client feedback

'The feedback from our students praised the quality of teaching and learning resources, and the training facilities were also excellent. LSE were able to differentiate between Chinese and UK approaches to Managerial Accounting and Financial Control and deliver models and advice of best practice.'
