Septembers's focus topic is Your First Week

YOUR FIRST WEEK

You have now successfully registered onto your programme, and have access to all the LSE has to offer. Other students will be registering this week on campus, so if you have already found your feet, don't be afraid to help out your new classmates, it's a great way to make new friends.

There may be things that you haven't yet managed to do, such as activating your IT account, opening a bank account, or getting a UK mobile phone.

Take a look at our guides to these tasks, and many more, here.

If you have come from another country, we also have some tips for dealing with culture shock here. Even if you are a UK student, you may have moved to London from somewhere very different, or are living away from family for the first time, so do remember that we have a range of support services intended to ensure that the whole student experience is as rewarding and enjoyable as possible.

For the rest of this week, you might want to check out some of the events being put on by the Student's Union - LSESU. Take a look at their 'What to do with your Welcome Week' blog post to get some ideas.

NOTES AND DATES FOR THE DIARY

Information about Registration and Welcome Week is up on the website – check out the Your first weeks pages for details.

If you are unable to attend your designated registration slot, make sure you let your department know. You will need to attend one of the late registration sessions - details will be posted on Late arrivals.

COURSE GUIDES AND READING LISTS

We are happy to announce that course guides for 2016/17 are now available online!

Before arriving at LSE, it is a good idea to browse the available options and make a note of your preferences. Using the online course guides, you can also view any suggested reading for each course.

Online course selection will open for browsing via LSE for You on 19 September, and then will open for selections on Friday 22 September – be sure to book onto your preferred options as soon as possible!

WELCOME GUIDE 2016/17

Prepare for arrival by downloading the Welcome Guide, which provides answers to common queries and concerns, including activating your IT account, opening a bank account, applying for council tax exemptions, and more!

NEW ARRIVALS

The team in the Student Services Centre (SSC) have put together lots of helpful information, to help make sure you are fully prepared for the start of your studies. Check out Your First Weeks page for more. You can also receive real-time updates on the registration and welcome period by following @LSE_SSC on Twitter and see what others are up to using #LoveLSE.

LATE ARRIVALS

We expect students to register on time, to ensure that your enrolment with LSE goes as smoothly as possible, and you do not have difficulty attending classes or entering the Library.

However, we do appreciate that there may be occasions when this is not possible and some late registration sessions are available; please see page 21 of your offer pack for details.

If you will be arriving late, you must inform your academic department as soon as possible. Your department will then be able to advise you on any vital information you have missed.

Please see guidance and tips for late arrivals online.

FIND OUT WHAT'S ON

There's plenty going on around the School during your welcome week, so now is the perfect time to plan ahead!

School Welcome Presentations are compulsory for new students, so make a particular note of these dates in your diary.

These sessions are different to those held in your academic department, so please also make sure you check your department's schedule for other events you should attend.

NEWS FROM AROUND LSE

Featured public lecture

The Wealth of Humans: work, power, and status in the twenty-first century

In his new book, The Wealth of Humans: Work, Power, and Status in the Twenty-First Century, which he will discuss in this talk, Ryan Avent addresses the difficult questions about the increasing abundance of labour and what this means politically, economically and socially for every one of us. The traditional solutions – improved education, wage subsidies, universal basic income – will no longer work as they once did. In order to navigate our way across today's rapidly transforming economic landscape, Avent argues that we must radically reassess the very idea of how, and why, we work.

Ryan Avent (@ryanavent) is a Senior Editor and Economics Columnist for The Economist, where he has covered the global economy since 2007. His work has appeared in the Guardian, New York Times, the Washington Post, the New Republic and the Atlantic. He has an economics degree from North Carolina State University, and an MSc in economic history from the London School of Economics and Political Science.

Professor Francesco Caselli is Norman Sosnow Professor of Economics at the London School of Economics and Political Science.

Vivienne Westwood to talk at LSE Resist Festival

Two free talks by fashion designer and activist Vivienne Westwood will form the centrepieces of a three day festival on the theme of resistance at LSE.

Vivienne will discuss power and money and how propaganda can be resisted through critical thinking, the collaboration of intellectuals and activists, and culture not consumption.
