PRIZES & AWARDS

---

European International Studies Association Prize (2023) for best article published in European Journal of International Relations (for "The De-Institutionalisation of Power Beyond the State").

Citation: 'The article presents a path-breaking argument about the normative costs of informality in world politics. It renews our understanding of how and why power was institutionalized and what happens when it is de-institutionalized. The article shows clearly how informality erodes power's accountability and what this means for governance in general and for sovereignty in particular.'

Elected member, Academia Europaea (2023-) (link)

British Academy Brian Barry Prize for excellence in political science (2017) (for 'The Ethics of Political Alliance', British Journal of Political Science).

Citation: 'This is an original contribution to an area of reinvigorated scholarly debate, parties and partisanship. It effectively combines, after the manner of Brian Barry, normative and empirical work. It opens up entirely new avenues of research into the various justifications – both intrinsic and instrumental – for inter-partisan alliances.'

Finalist, American Political Science Association (APSA) Woodrow Wilson Foundation Award (2017) for the best book on government, politics, or international affairs (with Lea Ypi for The Meaning of Partisanship).

Harrison Prize (2015) for the best article published in Political Studies (for 'Emergency Europe').

Citation: 'The paper is written with exemplary clarity; it alerts us to a new phenomenon; and raises troubling questions about this normalisation of emergency politics and its effects on democratic politics.'

Annual Montreal Political Theory Manuscript Workshop Award (2015), with Lea Ypi (for The Meaning of Partisanship).

LSE Teaching Prize, February 2011.

Runner-up, Federal Trust European Essay Competition (2004), for 'The Political Bond in Europe'.

The Ford Scholarship (Oct. 1999) and Ford Exhibition (Oct. 1998) in Modern History, Trinity College, Oxford.
