

Euroscepticism and the Future of European Integration

#LSEEurope

Tony Barber

Europe Editor of the Financial Times

Professor Catherine De Vries

Professor of Politics and Director of the Essex Centre of Experimental Social Science, Department of Government, University of Essex

Professor Simon Hix

Harold Laski Professor of Political Science, Department of Government, LSE

Chair: Professor Sara Hobolt

Sutherland Chair in European Institutions, European Institute and Department of Government LSE

Hosted by the European Institute

CATHERINE E. DE VRIES

EUROSCEPTICISM AND THE FUTURE OF
EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

OXFORD

LSE

Catherine de Vries

Oxford University Press

Thought Experiment

European Community for Coal and Steel

Founding Father
Jean Monnet

naar

European Union

First Reaction: Amazing!

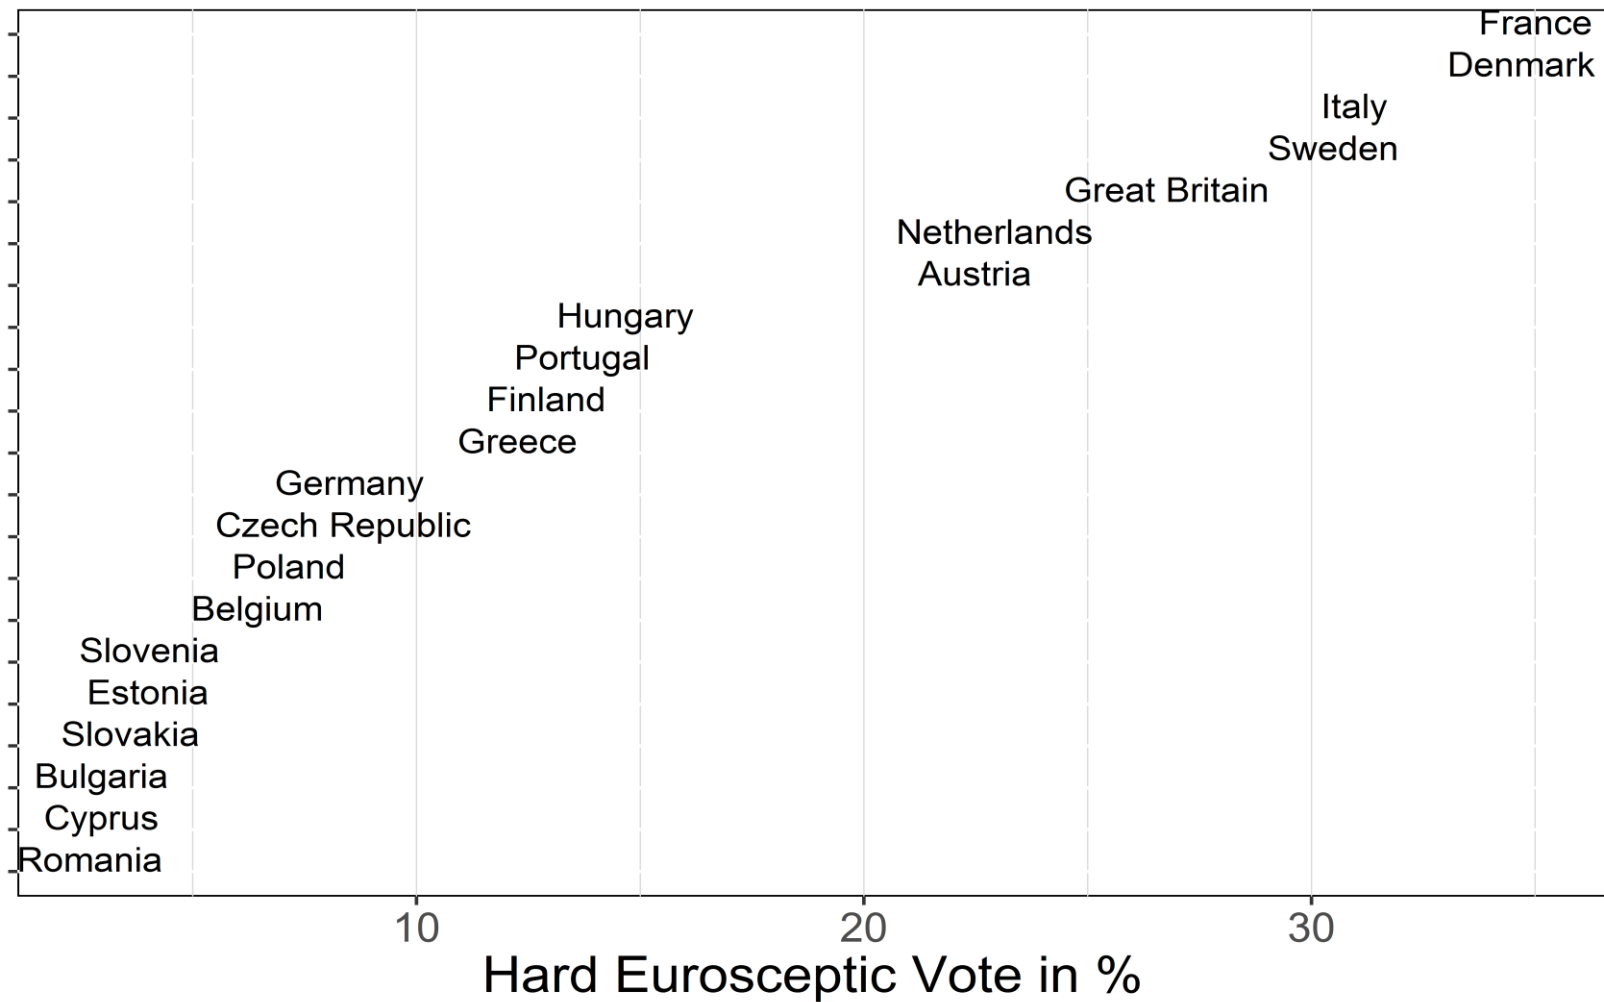

A parliament, a court & decades of peace

A Second Reaction: Oh No!

BREXIT

Key Findings

1. Euroscepticism as a luxury good: develops in contexts where people perceive exit options to be viable
2. There is no such thing as a ‘Eurosceptic’: consists of different types
3. Only certain types are worrisome for future: Exit sceptics, yet regime & policy scepticism provide route in (Brexit as a break?)
4. Euroscepticism reflect national experiences: structural imbalances in Union support regional fault lines
5. Public is paying attention: at a time where EU needs to deliver people (and political entrepreneurs) are watching

Dilemma & Solutions?

- How to deal with the heterogeneous demands at a time when proposals aimed at increasing cooperation and electoral democracy at the EU level to deal with this preference heterogeneity are difficult to achieve as they require Treaty change and thus risk domestic ratification failure?
- Solutions? No one-size-fits-all, but more flexibility & differentiation

