

“Global Public Policy” International Summer School

LSE-Fudan Research Centre for Global Public Policy

Institute for Global Public Policy, Fudan University

Preface

Join us this summer in Shanghai!

This year, LSE-Fudan Research Centre for Global Public Policy (LSE Centre hereafter) and the Institute for Global Public Policy (IGPP hereafter) offer the first summer school with a theme of global public policy. Our summer school program is designed for international and Chinese students who are interested in global public policy and China’s emerging role in globalization. Students will attend lectures delivered by globally-renowned scholars from LSE, connect with students from all over the world, and immerse themselves in the unique Shanghai culture.

Program Highlights

- ✓ Two courses taught by world-renowned professors from the London School of Economics and Political Science.
- ✓ A unique opportunity to study at one of China's top universities and learn about globalization, global governance and public policy
- ✓ An international classroom experience, with students from different countries and backgrounds
- ✓ An opportunity to explore Shanghai, China’s center of commerce, finance and innovation

Course Schedule

This year, we are delighted to offer TWO intensive and intellectually-stimulating summer courses covering two key areas of global public policy. Both courses are taught by world-renowned professors from the London School of Economics and Political Science.

Course A “Chinese Media, Global Contexts: Convergence and Conflicts”, delivered by Prof. Bingchun Meng, focuses on the transformation of China’s media and communication industries in the context of digitization, globalization and rising geopolitical tensions. Ms. Ting Wang, a PhD candidate of the School of Journalism who specializes in media study, is the tutor of this course.

Course B “International Development and China”, delivered by Prof. Alvaro Mendez and Prof. Chris Alden, focuses on China’s Belt Road Initiative which exerts paramount influences on global development. Dr. Yunxiong Li, an assistant professor of IGPP and an expert in international development study, is the tutor of this course.

Each course lasts for two weeks: Monday July 03 2023-Friday July 14 2023. Course A is offered in the morning (9:00-12:00) and course B is offered in the afternoon (14:00-17:00). Each class consists of a two-hour lecture delivered by the course instructor and a one-hour tutorial session moderated by the tutor.

Course information

Course A: Chinese Media, Global Contexts: Convergence and Conflicts

Teaching schedule: Taught on-campus 9:00-12:00 from Monday to Friday, July 03 to July 14 2023

Instructor: Professor Bingchun Meng,
Department of Media and Communications of LSE

Bingchun Meng is a Professor in the Department of Media and Communications at LSE , where she also co-directs the LSE-Fudan Global Public Policy Research Centre. Professor Meng is currently the Director of LSE PhD Academy and Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) Doctoral Training Partnership (DTP). Her research interests include gender and the media, political economy of media industries, communication governance, and comparative media studies. Her book The Politics of Chinese Media: Consensus and Contestation was published by Palgrave in early 2018. She is currently working on another monograph under contract with Columbia University Press about AI industries in China.

Tutor: Ms. Ting Wang,

PhD candidate of the School of Journalism,
Fudan University

Ting Wang is a PhD candidate of the School of Journalism, Fudan University. In 2021-2022, she was a visiting scholar in the Department of Anthropology at Harvard University. She specializes in the ethnographic study of communication. Her research interests are media, music, communication, ethnicity, ritual, religion, and ideology. Her publication has appeared on Journalism & Communication, Chinese Communication Review, etc.

Content:

Chinese media and communication industries have been undergoing profound changes in the last few decades. Chinese government prioritizes the communication industry as a key sector driving the economic growth. This course provides critical analysis of the key aspects of the transformation, focusing on the political economy of media and communication industries as well as the mediated politics underpinning stories and texts. It will unpack the operation of media and communication industries at the intersection of politics, business and culture. It will also explore the tensions and conflicts around meanings and narratives at the conjuncture of China's economic growth, social stratification and geopolitical repositioning.

Expected goals and achievements:

By the end of the course, students shall be able to demonstrate understanding of the key issues below, as well as developing the analytical perspectives and building in-depth empirical knowledge to formulate independent and coherent views on the relevant debate around these issues.

- What are the contemporary features of the organization and operation of media production and distribution?
- How do the institutional relations and political economic contexts shape the production of media content?

- What are the key tensions around the political, the commercial and the cultural aspects of media and communication products?
- What is the structural transformation that media and communication industries in China have been going through and how that is related to the broader political economy and social transformation?

Assessment:

In-class participation; final exam.

Content:

This course focuses on China's Belt Road Initiative (BRI) and how China is leveraging its preponderance of material power in pursuit of global leadership through the implementation of 'development as grand strategy' that places special focus on developing regions. China's economic position, coupled to an astute use of finances flowing from its neo-mercantilist policies, has enabled it to become the leading trading partner and a significant investor in the developing world (or Global South). Moreover, through the onset of the BRI, the Global South is increasingly figuring in China's expanding security interests and soft power provisions. Understanding how dynamics in this relationship are impacting upon a host of global and contemporary issues (BRICs, multilateralism, peacekeeping, the environment) is crucial to the shape of the 21st century.

Expected goals and achievements:

- Demonstrate understanding of why and how China initiates its international development (like the Belt Road Initiative) in pursuit of global leadership.
- Understand the benefits and challenges during China's international development.
- Identify how China's international development influences other countries on a number of global issues, such as environment and peacekeeping.
- Explore what roles agencies, from policy elites to local communities, may play during China's international development and consider how they contribute to a better development.
- Analyze China's international development with empirical cases.

Assessment:

In-class participation; quiz/coursework; final exam.
