Director's Message

In thinking about the cover theme for this year's Annual Report, there was no shortage of choices. From the Supreme Court's decision to overturn Roe v Wade, to the House Select Committee's televised hearing on the January 6 Capitol Attack, to the Democrats' stunning performance in the 2022 midterm elections, it was an eventful year for the United States. Yet if there is one development that stood out on the world stage, it is the steady deterioration in US-China relations.

This critical bilateral relationship has figured prominently in the Centre's programming this year. The centrepiece is our speaker series on the future of US-China relations that brings high profile experts from the US, China, Europe and elsewhere to talk about the growing rivalry and its geopolitical, economic and political implications.

This year we also launched an exciting new initiative on America's role in world politics in collaboration with Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service. It is called the Lloyd George Study Group on Global Governance. This multiyear effort is bringing together leading scholars from different regions of the world to address complex challenges such as climate change, economic insecurity, and the populism that is facing rich and poor countries alike.

In September, the Centre welcomed Professor Laura Pulido as its first LSE Centennial Professor. Professor Pulido holds the Collins Chair at the University of Oregon, and in addition to the Phelan US Centre, she is affiliated with the Department of Geography. Next year, we look forward to hosting Professor Jeffrey W. Legro, Professor of Political Science and Executive Vice President and Provost at the University of Richmond, to the Centre.

We have also welcomed new LSE faculty affiliates and added new members of staff. Our PhD summer grant programme and undergraduate research assistantship programme continue to flourish, attracting large numbers of students. We have also launched a new essay competition for LSE master's students, which this year is themed around climate change politics in the United States.

Looking back on our programming, I am reminded of how much our success depends on the many talented and dedicated individuals who staff the Centre. I want to thank them, along with our students and alumni, who together do so much to make the Phelan US Centre such a stimulating, inclusive intellectual community and platform for global exchange.

Professor Peter Trubowitz

Director, Phelan United States Centre

About the Director

Peter Trubowitz is Professor of International Relations at LSE and Associate Fellow at Chatham House. He writes and comments frequently on world affairs and American politics. His published work includes Geopolitics and Democracy: The Western Liberal Order from Foundation to Fracture (Oxford University Press, 2023), Politics and Strategy: Partisan Ambition and American Statecraft (Princeton University Press, 2011) and Defining the National Interest: Conflict and Change in US Foreign Policy (University of Chicago Press, 1998).

An award-winning teacher, Professor Trubowitz has lectured on world affairs to universities worldwide as well as to government bodies, think-tanks and private companies.

A frequent television guest on Bloomberg, CNBC and other international media outlets, he has undertaken research supported by grants and fellowships from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the John M. Olin Foundation, the Ford Foundation, and the Social Science Research Council, among others.

Before joining LSE, he was Professor of Government at the University of Texas at Austin. He has held visiting positions at Harvard, Princeton, Universidad de Chile, Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) in Mexico City, and Beijing Foreign Studies University, where he was the J. William Fulbright Distinguished Lecturer in American Foreign Policy.

The Wenger Distinguished Lecture

The Phelan US Centre's Wenger Distinguished Lectures examine the role of the US in the global economy. Expert speakers including academics, business leaders and policymakers offer insights on subjects ranging from international trade to law and institutions.

Waning Globalisation

The world is trending away from globalisation. Brexit, the rise of protectionism in the US, and calls for reshoring or friendshoring are recent manifestations of this trend. Pinelopi Goldberg, Elihu Professor of Economics at Yale University and former Chief Economist of the World Bank Group, discussed the causes of the retreat from globalisation, and its implications for growth and inequality.

Lloyd George Study Group on Global Governance

The world is confronting mounting great-power rivalry at a time when domestic economic and political developments pose potent challenges to stable governance from within. International competition is moving into technological and digital spaces, and globalised challenges such as climate change, pandemics, migration and supply chain disruptions rise in urgency. To address these challenges, in 2022, in collaboration with Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service, the Phelan US Centre launched the Lloyd George Study Group on Global Governance.

Linda Thomas-Greenfield (centre), United States Ambassador to the United Nations, attends a meeting of the United Nations Security Council on the subject of effective multilateralism through the defence of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations at UN headquarters in New York, 24 April 2023.

Consisting of 10 core members, with broad regional representation globally, the study group focuses on global governance, broadly defined. Its mandate is to analyse and debate the shape of the emerging international system, how to adapt existing international institutions and policies to a rapidly changing landscape, and what new structures and arrangements might be needed to advance global governance.

The study group will gather twice a year over the course of three years. We anticipate that this effort will lead to individual and joint publications on how to reform the existing network of international institutions (eg, the UN, WTO, World Bank) to meet the planetary challenges of climate change, global health, and increased poverty and inequality.

The Lloyd George Study Group on Global Governance held its first meeting at Georgetown on 17-18 November 2022, with the emerging structure of the international system as its topic.

Meeting participants discussed the implications of great-power rivalry, rising nationalism and economic inequality for global governance, and how changes to existing global institutions and practices can help provide better governance.

Image: Hamza Turkkol/Stock

The second meeting of the Lloyd George Study Group on Global Governance was held at LSE on 1-2 June 2023.

The meeting explored political capacities for global governance inside key countries and regions, and examined how state fragility, economic insecurity, and populism, nationalism and other ideological forces are shaping the possibilities for international cooperation in the near and long term. This meeting was accompanied by the LSE public event Global Governance in an Age of Fracture on 1 June 2023.

This initiative honors British Prime Minister David Lloyd George and his role in guiding the First World War to a close and forging a new post-war order. It is co-financed by the Phelan US Centre and the Lloyd George family gift to Georgetown.

US – China Seminar Series

Beginning in 2021, the Phelan US Centre Seminar Series on US-China Relations has hosted expert speakers on important topics relating to the US-China relationship. These seminars have three broad themes: Geopolitics and strategic competition; Global supply chains, multinational enterprises and trade politics; and Technological innovation and domestic institutions.

Climate Change Projects 2022-23

This year the US Centre has launched several important initiatives aimed at exploring climate change from a US perspective.

Climate Change: America and the World Podcast

Beginning in April 2023, the US Centre released a six-part podcast series, Climate Change: America and the World, which explores the effects of climate change from an American perspective. The podcast features academic experts and practitioners who discuss and explain the global role and responsibility of the US in climate change. The series includes conversations on topics ranging from climate reparations to the future of the climate change debate in America, and takes a deep dive into the ways climate change impacts the US and the world.

Image: FG Trade/iStock

Climate Change: America and the World episode topics and guest speakers:

Episode 1 – Climate Change and Global Responsibility

featuring Christopher Callahan (Dartmouth University) and Professor Kathryn Hochstetler (LSE International Development)

Episode 2 – Climate Change, Migration and Refugee Creation

featuring Professor Sarah Bermeo (Duke University) and Professor Susana Beatriz Adamo (Columbia University)

Episode 3 – Climate Change and Global Security

featuring Professor Neta Crawford (University of Oxford) and Sherri Goodman (Wilson Center)

Episode 4 – Climate Change and Race

featuring Centennial Professor Laura Pulido (LSE Department of Geography and Environment and Phelan US Centre) and Jeremy Williams

Episode 5 – The Cost of Climate Change in America

featuring Dr Rebecca Elliot (LSE Department of Sociology) and Professor in Practice Swenja Surminski (LSE Grantham Research Institute on Climate Change and the Environment)

Episode 6 – The Future of Climate Change Politics in America

featuring Dr Rebecca Bromley-Trujillo (Christopher Newport University) and Beth Gardiner.

Syllabus Hub on Climate Change and Sustainability

With climate change one of the most important issues facing the US and the world, it is essential to build a base of knowledge about its impacts for the use of educators in universities and beyond.

In 2022, the Phelan US Centre was awarded a grant from the LSE Sustainable Projects Fund to create an interdisciplinary syllabus hub, supported by an Undergraduate Research Assistant, focusing on climate change and sustainability.

Our syllabus hub project is a repository of course reading lists from academics around the world, focusing on climate change and sustainability and the US. It will be a valuable academic resource for students, researchers, and academics everywhere.

In June 2023, after a year-long Centre-wide effort, we were awarded Platinum for Green Impact as part of LSE's Sustainability Engagement Programme.

Spotlight on Centennial Professor Professor Laura Pulido

In 2022-23 Laura Pulido, a leading scholar on race, environmental justice and cultural memory, was appointed Centennial Professor to the LSE Department of Geography and Environment and the Phelan United States Centre.

During her tenure as Centennial Professor, Professor Pulido has participated fully in the US Centre's programmes and projects. She has conducted research on climate refusal amongst the far right in the United States, a project supported by a US Centre Undergraduate Research Assistantship.

On 24 March 2023, Professor Pulido spoke at the event Monumental Denial: U.S. cultural memory and white innocence, which explored how US cultural memory represents processes of white supremacy and settler colonisation. The event was co-hosted by LSE's Department of Geography and Environment and the Phelan US Centre.

Professor Pulido was also a member of the judging panel for our Master's Students Climate Change Essay Competition, and a guest for Episode 4 of the podcast series, Climate Change: America and the World, speaking on climate change and race from a US perspective.

Professor Pulido is the Collins Chair and Professor of Indigenous, Race, and Ethnic Studies and Geography at the University of Oregon. Her most recent book is Development Drowned and Reborn: The Blues and Bourbon Restoration in Post-Katrina New Orleans (University of Georgia Press, 2017). Her honours include the Cullum Geographical Medal from the American Geographical Society, Distinguished Scholarship Honours and the Presidential Achievement Award from the Association of American Geographers, and Ford and Guggenheim fellowships.

Essay Competition for Master's Students

In February 2023, the Phelan US Centre launched an essay competition for master's students, who were asked to answer the prompt, What responsibility does the US have to the rest of the world on climate change? The competition was aimed at encouraging students to write for a wider, non-academic audience. The judging panel for the essay competition comprised Centre Affiliate Dr Rebecca Elliott, Centennial Professor Laura Pulido, and Centre Director, Professor Peter Trubowitz.

The winning essay, "The US must do more to combat carbon inequality in the global economy" by Oscar Parry (LSE Anthropology), received a £500 prize, while the runners-up, Jibran Raja (LSE International Relations) and Alia Yusuf (LSE School of Public Policy), each received a prize of £250. All three essays were published on the Centre's USAPP blog.

Oscar Parry presented his winning essay to members of the British-American Parliamentary Group, and MPs with an interest in climate change policy at the UK Parliament in Westminster.

Digital Content Innovation

This year, the Centre's digital platforms continued to support our mission to promote empirically grounded and policy-relevant scholarship on the US and its changing role in the world by providing a venue for academics, activists and policymakers to connect their research with a large, global audience. The Centre's podcast series, The Ballpark, and our daily blog, USAPP - USA Politics and Policy, have been additional outlets for the Centre's programming, including initiatives focusing on climate change, public events, and seminar series.

USA Politics and Policy (USAPP) blog

About LSE USAPP

Hosting more than 170 original posts and receiving over 1.2 million pageviews in 2022, the Phelan US Centre's regular blog, USAPP – USA Politics and Policy is a convenor of evidence-based commentary and research summaries on social science topics related to the United States. Researchers, academics, policymakers and practitioners work with the USAPP team to post articles that are accessible to a wide and international audience including policymakers, students, activists and civil society groups.

In 2022-23 USAPP completed its blog series The 2022 Midterms, began coverage of the 2024 presidential election, and launched a new series, Climate Change: America and the World, which complements our climate change podcast. USAPP supports other US Centre projects and outreach, including hosting the winning and runner-up essays in the Centre's Essay Competition for Master's Students. It has also been a venue for eight Event Report posts by master's students that summarise the main takeaways from the Centre's public events.

Reach and Impact

In 2022 the Centre's USAPP blog accounted for 12 per cent of all pageviews of LSE blog content, and 29 per cent of US-based blog readers. As a source of rigorous commentary and findings from academic research, USAPP is both widely accessible and highly respected. It has been cited in policy reports from The White House, the US Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and the Office of Justice, and the governments of Massachusetts and Washington DC.

In 2022-23 USAPP articles were cited by media outlets including The Guardian, The Independent, Forbes, The New York Times, The Chicago Tribune, Vox and Five Thirty Eight.

The Ballpark podcast

About The Ballpark

In 2023, The Ballpark podcast launched a new six-part series, Climate Change: America and the World. Featuring academic experts and practitioners such as Professor Neta Crawford (University of Oxford), Centennial Professor Laura Pulido (LSE Department of Geography and Environment and Phelan US Centre), Dr Rebecca Elliot (LSE) and Swenja Surminski (LSE), the series explores and explains the global role and responsibility of the US in climate change and examines how climate change impacts America and the world. Episode topics include the relationship between climate change and loss and damage, migration and refugee creation, race, global security, the costs of climate change adaptation in the US and globally, and the case for climate reparations.

This year we have significantly increased our Extra Innings segments, including interviews with speakers from our US-China seminar series and public events, and episodes promoting the work of US Centre Affiliates. Guest interviewees in podcasts published in 2022-23 include the former US Ambassador to Ukraine, Marie Yovanovitch, Professor Glenn Loury (Brown University), Professor Jessica Chen Weiss (Cornell University), Professor Rana Mitter (University of Oxford) and Professor Charles Kupchan (Council on Foreign Relations and Georgetown University).

The Ballpark and supporting the student experience

We have also expanded The Ballpark's student focus this year, publishing interviews with former participants in the Centre's Undergraduate Research Assistant programme, including student research assistants and faculty leads. Extra Innings segments have featured interviews with our PhD Summer Research Grant recipients, offering them both an outlet to promote their research and the opportunity to reach a wider non-academic audience.

Student Programmes

Supporting the student experience at LSE is a critical part of the Phelan US Centre's work. In 2022-23 our Undergraduate Research Assistantship and Centre PhD Summer Research Grants have continued to support LSE students, including early career scholars, to carry out interdisciplinary research that addresses the challenges facing the US in a global context.

Undergraduate Research Assistantships

Now in its sixth year, the Centre's popular Undergraduate Research Assistantship programme has allowed LSE students to work with our Centre Affiliates on academic research or an applied project. During 2022-23, 11 undergraduate students provided support to academics on literature reviews, collating and processing data, and interrogating archival resources. The Centre's Centennial Professor, Laura Pulido, was paired with an Undergraduate Research Assistant, and a further Undergraduate Research Assistant supported the work of the Centre's new Syllabus Hub on Climate Change and Sustainability.

Centre PhD Summer Research Grants

In 2022-23, the Phelan US Centre's PhD Summer Research Grant Scheme entered its fifth year. These grants support students pursuing innovative research on topics related to the Centre's mission of promoting internationally oriented scholarship on the US. The grants encourage the development of early career scholars at LSE by providing them with resources to support research activities such as data collection, field work, and surveys. This year the Centre has further supported PhD students with sessions on writing for a wider audience and taking part in podcasts to promote their research.

Research Grants in 2023

1. Contextualizing Universalism: Trade Union Benefit Provision in the US and the UK at the turn of the 20th Century
Maya Adereth,
Department of Sociology

2. Investigating Regulatory Capture of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration
Robin Forrest,
Department of Health Policy

3. Effects of Exposure to Online Polarization on Generalized Trust
Tiffany Lau,
Department of Government

4. Do Social Media Create Bias in Democratic Deliberation?
Nick Lewis,
Department of Government

5. Consumers' Demand for Digital Privacy
Xinchun Ma,
Department of Finance

6. Political Ideology and Innovation
Marta Morando,
Department of Economics

7. Quantifying the Importance of Legal Assistance for Social Welfare Problems: A Comparative Perspective
Juliet-Nil Uraz,
Department of Social Policy

The grant allowed me to add contextual richness to my work – having been on site to conduct a portion of the work – that I otherwise could not have incorporated.

Lindiwe Rennert,
PhD Grant Recipient, 2021-22

Aside from research assistance, I would also say that the grant exposed me to peer PhDs in other departments. Their work made me rethink the framing and methodology of my work.

Matthew Purcell,
PhD Grant Recipient, 2021-22
