LSE Economics Teaching & Learning during the pandemic

Dr Dimitra Petropoulou

Undergraduate Programme Director

A close-up of a silver mesh microphone head on a black handle, positioned in the lower-left foreground. The background is a blurred red, suggesting rows of seats in an auditorium. A white speech bubble with a tail pointing towards the microphone is located in the upper-right area.

What was LSE Economics teaching & learning like with COVID-19?

A COVID-secure campus

Teaching and Learning in 2020-21

- Lectures and student support sessions were online throughout the year
- Classes in person or online during MT2020 and online in LT2021

Teaching and Learning in 2020-21

- Online lectures made interactive through the chat feature and polling
- Dedicated training and tablets for all Economics class teachers
- Opportunities to engage with other students e.g. study groups, new discussion platforms in core courses
- Engagement encouraged through new coursework
- More student support and contact hours e.g. Q&A sessions
- A challenging year, but a successful one; teaching evaluations very strong.
- Whatever the mix of in-person and online delivery in 2021-22, we will support students and teachers to offer a rich, unique learning experience.
