

Greetings, future scholars of the LSE Department of Statistics!

We are thrilled to welcome you to our world-leading centre for teaching and research in Statistics.

Our internationally esteemed faculty members, who are at the forefront of research, will guide you through the exciting journey of enhancing your statistics knowledge. You will be studying in the city of origin of modern statistics, surrounded by a supportive community of academic and administrative colleagues, as well as a vast network of alumni who have achieved great success in various fields. You will have access to state-of-the-art learning facilities and will get to work with a diverse body of students who are all destined for successful careers. This is truly a unique opportunity to be part of a future-shaping academic community.

LSE is one of the finest institutions of its kind in the world and has a key position; geographically in terms of its location in Central London and geo-politically in term of its national and international standing. Our department is relatively small, and together, academic and administrative colleagues maintain an informal, friendly, and supportive atmosphere for our students.

The Department of Statistics Professional Services Team will support you every step of the way, so please look out for the important information they will send you over the coming months, and don't hesitate to reach out if you have any questions or concerns.

We're looking forward to welcoming you in person next autumn and starting this exciting journey together.

Yours sincerely,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'P. Baines', with a long horizontal flourish extending to the right.

Professor Pauline Barrieu

Head of the Department of Statistics

