PS3086 Democracy and democratisation

General information

COURSE LEVEL: 6

CREDIT: 30

NOTIONAL STUDY TIME: 300 hours

Summary

This course considers various aspects of the conditions of democracy, the processes of democratisation, and the breakdown of democratic regimes.

Conditions

Prerequisites: If taken as part of a BSc degree, the following course(s) must be passed before this course may be attempted:

- PS1130 Introduction to modern political thought OR PS1172 Introduction to political science

Aims and objectives

The study of democracy and democratisation has three main aims. These are to consider:

- how democracy is defined and understood, and how far actual systems conform to democratic principles
- the main explanations of why political systems have moved from non-democracy to democracy
- whether or not democracy is a stable political system, and whether democratic systems run any serious risk of breakdown.

Learning outcomes

At the end of this course and having completed the essential reading and activities students should be able to discuss critically a range of issues relating to democratisation. Students should be able to:

- explain how democracy actually works in real world conditions
- explain how democracy relates to the non-elective institutions of the state
- discuss different ways in which democracy can work badly
- outline the essential arguments of comparative historical sociologists of democratisation, such as Moore and Rueschemeyer
- explain how some forms of non-democracy can make the transition to democracy
- assess theories of democratic breakdown in relatively poor countries and arguments for developmental dictatorship
- discuss why democracy has survived in wealthy countries.

Please consult the current EMFSS Programme Regulations for further information on the availability of a course, where it can be placed on your programme's structure, and other important details.
