Director's Message

Image: ©2015 Nigel Stead/LSE

This year the United States Centre marked its fifth anniversary. It seems like only yesterday that we were opening our doors. Over the past five years, the Centre has gone from being a start-up offering a new outside-in approach to understanding America and its place in the world, to an established go-to source in London and beyond for expert international analysis and commentary about the United States.

When we launched in 2015, some worried that international interest in the United States was on the wane. If there is one thing the Centre has demonstrated over and over – through our well-attended public events, popular student research internships, active daily blog and podcast presence, and faculty-led seminars and workshops – it is that the demand for rigorous, clear-eyed and independent analysis of the US has never been greater.

From the start, the Centre has benefited from the commitment of its world-leading faculty affiliates, the enthusiasm of its many student researchers from across the School, and the generous support of LSE alumni and friends. All have made it possible for us to develop and grow into a thriving research centre with deep connections across LSE.

We are especially pleased to mark our fifth anniversary by acknowledging the generous gift from the John and Amy Phelan Family Foundation to endow and name the US Centre. John has been a core supporter of the Centre from the beginning. This landmark philanthropic gift is a wonderful vote of confidence in the Centre and its future.

As Director, I have the pleasure of working alongside a team of talented and dedicated individuals who work day in and day out to make the Centre's promise a reality. Despite the challenges COVID-19 has presented, the team has continued to deliver on the Centre's core mission, finding new and innovative ways to drive forward our work through public lectures, faculty workshops and student internships.

Looking back over the past five years, there is much we can take pride in: our willingness to take up difficult, controversial subjects; our leadership in promoting faculty-student collaboration at the School; our commitment to civil discourse and diversity; our award-winning digital platform; and, last but not least, hosting over 120 speakers at LSE.

As we begin our next five years as the Phelan United States Centre at LSE, I want to thank everyone at the School – from faculty affiliates to professional staff and our colleagues in professional services divisions – who have helped make the Phelan US Centre the intellectually vibrant, inclusive community it is today.

Professor Peter Trubowitz

Director, Phelan United States Centre

About the Director

Peter Trubowitz is Professor of International Relations at LSE and Associate Fellow at Chatham House, the Royal Institute of International Affairs. His main teaching and research interests are in the fields of international security and foreign policy, with special focus on the United States. He has written widely about the ways domestic politics have shaped America's approach to the world since its founding, and about how geopolitics, globalisation and other international forces have influenced and shaped American political development and contemporary US politics.

Professor Trubowitz's scholarly publications include Politics and Strategy: partisan ambition and American statecraft (Princeton University Press) and the prize-winning Defining the National Interest: conflict and change in American foreign policy (University of Chicago Press), as well as articles in scholarly journals such as International Security, International Studies Quarterly and Perspectives on Politics and more popular titles including Foreign Affairs, International Affairs and The National Interest.

An award-winning teacher, Professor Trubowitz has lectured on international affairs to universities worldwide as well as to government bodies, think tanks and private companies. A frequent television guest on major international media outlets such as Bloomberg, CNBC and BBC, he has undertaken research supported by grants and fellowships from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the John M. Olin Foundation, the Ford Foundation, and the Social Science Research Council, among others.

Before joining the LSE, Professor Trubowitz was Professor of Government at the University of Texas at Austin. William Fulbright Distinguished Lecturer in American Foreign Policy.

Professor Trubowitz is currently working on a book, The Retreat of the West: globalism, nationalism and the liberal order (Oxford University Press), about the rise of anti-globalism in the West and what it portends for the future of the liberal world order.

Introducing John Phelan

The LSE US Centre is named in recognition of the commitment of John Phelan and his family to outstanding scholarship, teaching and public engagement.

“LSE’s unique capacity to convene the world by engaging audiences on campus and around the world captivated me when I was a student at the School and still resonates now. The US Centre exemplifies that approach today and I am delighted to be able to support its future.”

John Phelan (General Course in Economics, LSE 1985)

John Phelan’s relationship with LSE goes back to 1985 when he studied economics and international relations on the General Course – LSE’s study abroad programme – which he undertook while studying for his BA in Economics and Political Science at Southern Methodist University (SMU) in Texas. He received an MBA from Harvard Business School in 1990.

John is Co-Founding Partner and Chief Investment Officer of MSD Partners and MSD Capital, a private investment firm established in 1998 to exclusively manage the capital of Michael Dell, the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Dell Technologies, and his family.

John serves on multiple advisory boards, including the Board of Trustees of the Whitney Museum of American Art, the Spirit of America, and the Aspen Art Museum (as Chairman). He also serves on the Board of Dean’s Advisors for Harvard Business School, the Investment Committee for the SMU Endowment and LSE’s North American Advisory Board.

As longstanding supporters of the School, John and his wife Amy have given generous contributions to the US Centre’s popular public events lecture series, and funded more than 30 General Course, MSc and PhD scholarships at the School.

In April 2021, John gifted $10 million (USD) through the John and Amy Phelan Foundation to endow the US Centre and to foster its commitment to outstanding scholarship, teaching and public engagement on US affairs.

Centre Affiliate Conferences and Seminars

As part of our programme of scholarly research and engagement, in 2020-21 Centre faculty have held conferences and seminars, such as 2020's Race and Gender in US Politics in Historical and Contemporary Perspective series, and our 2021 conference on Single-Parent Families. These conferences and seminars bring together scholars from the US, Europe and LSE, and help train and professionalise postdoctoral fellows and PhD students at the School.

Digital Content Innovation

In 2020-21, the Phelan US Centre has continued to make connections with a wide audience via our far-reaching, innovative digital platforms. Through our daily USAPP blog, podcast series, explainer videos, and our award-winning digital project The State of the States, we provide a growing global community of hundreds of thousands of people with easily accessible and academically grounded commentary and analysis on the US and its role in the world.

USA Politics and Policy (USAPP) blog

About LSE USAPP

The LSE Phelan US Centre's USAPP blog

is our online platform where academics, activists, policymakers and others come together to discuss the current challenges facing the US. The blog's aim is to make social science research on topics from COVID-19 to political polarisation relevant by translating it for a wide audience including policymakers, students, activists and other interest groups.

Blog content consists of commissioned pieces based on recent academic journal articles or requests for comment on current events from experts in the US, UK and elsewhere; on current events; unsolicited submissions from academics and others; and reposts from other LSE blogs. In 2020-21, USAPP published 170 original articles, and cross-posted over 100 academic book reviews and other articles from other LSE blogs.

Since 2018, the USAPP blog has supported the research for, and the development of, the Phelan US Centre's award-winning digital project, The State of the States.

Reach and Impact

■ The USAPP blog is now widely seen as an authoritative source of accessible information and commentary on US politics and policy. In 2020-21, articles published on LSE USAPP were mentioned in media outlets including the Financial Times, Vice, The Washington Post, Bloomberg, The Conversation, The Hill, Bangor Daily News, Politico, Vox, City Observatory, The Daily Signal, and a United Nations report on drug policy. We are also aware of academics in the US and the UK using USAPP resources as part of their curricula.

The USAPP blog is supported by LSE's Knowledge Exchange and Innovation Fund (KEIF).

The Ballpark podcast

About The Ballpark

The Ballpark is the Phelan US Centre's regular podcast series which explains US politics, policy and society to a wide, non-academic audience. Since 2016, the Phelan US Centre has released 35 episodes of The Ballpark and 31 episodes of The Ballpark: Extra Innings, featuring event recordings, interviews with high-profile academics and experts on US politics and policy, and topic-based explainers.

As part of The Ballpark, the Phelan US Centre also produces the regular podcast series The State of the States. With eight episodes already released, and a new series planned for 2021, these podcasts take a deep dive into the policy and political issues facing specific American states.

Launched in March 2021, The Politics of Race in American Film podcast builds on the research of Dr Clive Nwonka, Centre Affiliate and LSE Fellow in Film Studies in the Department of Sociology. The four episodes released to date examine how racial politics in America are represented by its films, Hollywood cinema's role in how race is framed, and how this framing has contributed to broad, intersectional representations of racial inequality.

“An excellent podcast, really interesting debates and perspectives & I've now got a growing list of films to watch or re-watch!”

Explainer Videos

About our Explainer Videos

Ahead of the 2020 US presidential election, the Phelan US Centre commissioned three election Explainer Videos with the LSE's Film and Audio unit. These short videos covered the role of race and populism in the 2020 elections, and how the US government works.

Race in US elections

Melanie R. Brown, Atlantic Fellow for Social and Economic Equity at LSE's International Inequalities Institute, provides explanation and commentary on some of the key questions about race in America: its history, how it affects society today, and what needs to change.

How the US government works

Dr Thomas Gift of UCL, a former Phelan US Centre Visiting Fellow, provides explanation and commentary on some of the key questions about government in America: what the separate branches of government are, their responsibilities, and how they work (or do not work) together.

Populism in the US

Former Phelan US Centre Visiting Fellow Dr David Smith of the University of Sydney answers some of the key questions about populism: how to define it, where it originated, and how it affects US politics.

Production credit: James Rattee, LSE Film and Audio unit.

The State of the States

About The State of the States

An outgrowth of the Phelan US Centre’s USAPP blog, The State of the States project is an online portal that explores and explains politics and policy issues across all 50 states and Washington, DC. It’s a unique, free to use, apolitical resource aimed at students, academics, local government practitioners, and those working in charities and other non-governmental organisations.

Reach and Impact

■ In April 2019, The State of the States won a Guardian Universities Award in the digital innovation category. In 2020, spurred on by this success – and the need for the platform to become sustainable – the Phelan US Centre entered the project into the SUCCESS programme, funded by Research England, which aims to commercialise academic work.

The project was also subsequently funded by LSE Research and Innovation to create a new platform in the summer of 2021. This new platform will continue to focus on providing state politics and policy data, but it will also provide case studies of US state policy effectiveness, which users can interact with and comment on. These case studies will aid those working in US state government to do their jobs better by providing them with easily accessible examples and policy learning points.

New York

The Empire State

Though your first thought may be of the city that never sleeps, New York State is home to impressive parks. These include Niagara Falls State Park, the oldest in the US, as well as Adirondack Park, which is larger than Yellowstone, Yosemite, Grand Canyon, Glacier and Olympic Parks combined. However, if you want some greenery, look no further than New York City’s Central Park, which required more gunpowder to landscape than was used in the battle at Gettysburg. New York City has the highest population density of any American city, with over 26,000 people living in each square mile. It is a diverse city as well, and visitors may hear one of 800 languages while riding the subway, which extends 100 miles longer than New York State’s main highway. New York is one of 14 states where Democrats control the governorship and the state house and senate (also known as a trifecta).

Student Programmes

In 2020-21, the Phelan US Centre has continued to run programmes that enhance the experience of LSE students. Through our undergraduate and PhD-focused student programmes, we encourage US-related interdisciplinary research and support the development of early career scholars at LSE.

Undergraduate Research Assistantships

With the generous support of LSE alumni, the Centre's popular Undergraduate Research Assistantship programme allows students to collaborate with Centre faculty affiliates on their academic research. Students are paired with academics who require assistance in collecting or processing new data, gathering archival resources, conducting library research, or writing up blog articles.
